Clearings 64, 76, and 77 appear to be enclaves a little within the Awara Bakka finage. Actually, from the very fashion

621 in which these finages were constituted, one must not expect to 613 find clear boundaries.
423 These 14 clearings are thus used exclusively by members
241 of the Dju lineage living in Asisi village. All but two are held [562] by women. /90/

It is interesting to study the kinship ties of the members of the lineage making their clearings in different zones. One might actually believe that there is a tendency toward individualization of sublineages, and that the descendants of a particular woman tend to hold exclusively the use of such and such a zone.

We see here that such is not the case.

In zone 1 (studied here), make their clearings: Tini (F1), Paana (G2), Féni (G3), very close relatives, but also Lènga (F36), Kukusa (F40), and Félicia (G41), whose relationship with the first-named is as distant as possible within the lineage: Félicia and Paana for example are relatives in the 12th degree.

The same thing is observed in other zones, as we shall see in the study of farming habitations.

621 Lands of the Awara Bakka lo (Asisi village). The finage of the 613 Awara Bakka lo is particularly interesting to study, for this lo
614 has a more complex structure. Study of the genealogy shows the 423 existence of three distinct fractions, which we have designated respectively as Aw.B.1, Aw.B.2, Aw.B.3. The Aw.B.1 and 2 fractions consider themselves as the same lineage in the strict sense (bɛɛ). On the contrary, fraction 3 can be considered as a separate lineage from the point of view of legal responsibility. Moreover, the members of the small Afi lineage, living with the Awara Bakka, also constitute a separate unit from the legal point of view. It is important to study whether that carries over into their territorial implantation.

We were not able to carry this study out exhaustively because the great mass of lands cultivated by the Awara Bakka are situated on the Surinam bank. The clearings summarized here are grouped in a zone called Ingi Udu; they are served by two landing places or dégrads, borrowed exclusively by the Awara Bakka.

19 are allotted to members of the 1st fraction;
2 " " to a member of the 2nd fraction;
2 " " to members of the 3rd fraction;
4 " " to members of the Afi lineage.

Thus one can deduce from this study that there is no tendency toward the making up of separate finages by the various fractions of the Awara Bakka lo. The members of the Afi lineage living in their midst have no tendency to group their clearings, either.

In fact, the inhabitants of a village, even issuing from different lineages, possess joint rights over the lands.

621 613 423 241 Out of 14 clearings examined here, all without exception are occupied by the members of the Dipélu II fraction in Asisi. This fraction is geographically separated from the other lineages of Asisi village, and has formed a separate finage; that has to do [578] with its relatively high effective force and the good relations among its members (the Afi lineage, with an analogous force but divided by disagreements, has not succeeded in forming a separate finage).

Only several clearings going back to the years 1947-50 could be identified.

000 /96/ The Social System Illuminated by the Study of Implantation on the Soil

128 Study of the clearings in the neighborhood of the farming villages gives exact information about the structure of the kin groups which cannot be obtained by direct interrogation.

423 --Transmission of rights over land within the lineage fraction having the same residence constitutes an imprescriptible legal 613 principle, to which one refers as the conclusive argument to 621 settle every dispute;

423 613 621 --The principle of matriloca! grouping is effectively applied in nearly all cases. The matrilineages have almost all formed, according to this principle, separate finages, on which their rights are well established; most of these lands appear to be of old formation;

423 613 621 571 --The lineage fractions which have separated themselves geographically from their original grouping have formed finages over which their members exercise exclusive rights. For example, out of the lands of the Dipélu II fraction settled in Asisi not a single case is reported of use by members of the main fraction of the lineage living in Kormotibo;

--The inhabitants of a village subject to one authority possess collective rights over the lands of that village and form a de facto community, even if they belong to different lineages. We have found two characteristic examples of this, Boniville and Asisi-Awara Bakka; by coming to live in a village and subjecting oneself to the authority of the head, one enters ipso facto into this community.

This custom is in contradiction with the principle of the exclusive rights of the lineage over the soil, but the contradiction is more apparent than real; it makes possible the integration, into a collectivity, of detached persons and small fractions incapable of forming a separate village.

The actual situation thus created is not at all permanent. If a lineage fraction wishes to separate itself either as a consequence of a disagreement or simply because its numbers have grown sufficiently, it always has the right to do so.

The fundamental principles of the basic rights of the Boni can thus be summarized thus:

"Rights over the soil are joint within the fraction of a lineage whose members live in the same village and are subject to the same authority; any scission of a lineage which has to do with the residence village entails a scission of rights over lands. The

423 emigrating fraction possesses exclusive rights over the /agricul-613 tural/ land /terroir/ it forms. But it does not lose, at least in 621 principle, its rights over its original land /terroir/."
571 The study of finages gives us still more important information concerning the exercising of rights of use:

241 /97/ Of 100 clearings examined, 81 follow the normal
423 process according to which the woman has her clearing made on 613 the land of her lineage (1). Of these 81 clearings, 14 had been

1. For the joint sector of Boniville, the inhabitants of the village were considered as users of rights without distinction of lineage.

made under conditions not made clear, 48 had been cut by the husband, 14 by a near relative (son, brother, exceptionally brother or son-in-law), five by the woman herself.

In only five cases it is, on the contrary, the man who brings his wife onto his lineage's land.

A little more frequent is the case of a man cutting a clearing for himself on his lineage's land.

Finally, the case in which, for reasons of convenience, a member of a lineage asks to work temporarily on the land of another lineage is met twice. Thus this is an extremely unusual practice.

182 Influence of the geographical environment on the social structure.
171 These observations are to be compared with the ones that can be [177] made about the Oayana Indians and the Indians of Guiana in general, living near the Refugee Blacks, in the same geographical environment and almost in the same way (let us recall that the Refugee Blacks borrowed the whole of their material culture from the Indians).

R 105 [361] The Oayana Indians are half nomadic, moving their villages every ten years on the average. They have neither a permanent center of peopling, a place of worship, nor a cemetery; they do not have ancestor worship, at least no concept involving a precise and permanent tie between the living, the dead, and the land.

R 114 182 [136] This state of things has been attributed by several authors to the geographical environment and especially to the ravages of the manioc ant; the manioc ant, swarming particularly in formerly cultivated zones, makes nomadism advantageous. From this would have resulted a social structure and a mode of living adapted to these special conditions.

B 114 769 182 The example of the Refugee Blacks shows conspicuously that these considerations, in spite of their undeniable interest, do not constitute an explanation of general scope; for the Refugee Blacks, the only social ties conceivable flow from ancestor worship; above all the imperatives of material life the individual feels as a primordial duty the act of attaching himself to the village of his ancestors, to the land they cleared off and which remains under their protection.

B 182 241 423 613 The difficulties inherent in the geographical environment have been easily surmounted or gotten around. Rather than vast zones with one single holder, each lineage divided its finage into sectors distant from one another. If these zones become temporarily unusable, the Boni go to create farming habitations on the upper course of the river, without ceasing because of this to reside habitually in the village of their ancestors; there results from this no other constraint but losing two weeks each year in going and coming on the river.

182 That this system is perfectly workable has been sufficiently 161 demonstrated by the regular expansion for two centuries of the 241 tribes of Refugee Blacks and by the good functioning of their 423 institutions.

Thus the basic instability of the Indians of Guiana cannot 182 be attributed to the influence of the geographical environment alone. It comes essentially from social and psychological factors.

/100/ STUDY OF FARMING HABITATIONS

128 We are now going to study the functioning of the farming habitations under the same aspects:

--Structure (composition of each one, kinship ties);

--Territorial implantation: nature and extent of rights over the land;

--Functioning.

241 Not all Boni have a farming habitation; about two-thirds 621 of them are satisfied with the lands they occupy near the residence 184 villages.

241 The farming habitations we are going to study more es-
621 pecially and which are situated between the mouth of the Inini 361 and Simayé Falls to the south, group about a hundred persons be-162 longing to the Dju, Lapé, Awara Bakka, and Papaïston lineages.
613 Another group of farming habitations situated a little south of Kormotibo, which we shall study briefly and only so far as their composition is concerned, bring together about 60 persons. Finally, other very dispersed farming habitations exist, belonging principally to the Kotika lineage, some in the Maripasoula region, others in the Abattis-Kotika Falls /region/.

241 On the whole, the Boni farming habitations cannot be com-
184 pared either as to importance or stability with the Djuka farming 621 villages which are placed at intervals on the middle course of the [361] Maroni, grouping 3,000 to 3,500 persons: this is easy to [162] understand: the Djuka, continually short of land, are obliged,

24 62 [184] under pain of losing their rights, to occupy the soil to the maximum. Besides, settled very far from their residence villages, they are led to creating more lasting establishments.

Among the Boni, farming habitations do not amount to much, built carelessly (to designate them one says kāpu (camp), and the groups who work there are not very stable.

423 241 [182] [184] However, the principles of establishment and functioning of farming habitations are exactly the same for the two tribes and result on the whole from the customary laws which, among the Refugee Blacks, govern the possession of land:

[425] [613] 1) When a man cuts a clearing in a zone which has never had any human establishment, he creates at the same time as a right of use for himself an imprescriptible real right for his lineage (bɛɛ) or more precisely for the fraction of the lineage living in the same village and subject to the same authority;

[428] [613] 2) This right is joint; at the death of an individual, anyone of that fraction of his lineage may occupy the lands he used to cultivate habitually. If there is a dispute, it must be settled within the framework of the lineage; /101/ /Fig. 17 appears here/ /102/

3) The extent of the zone over which this right is exercised is limited only by the zones over which other rights are exercised.

We have seen what mode of occupation of the soil resulted from these laws in the neighborhood of the "great villages." Here the distribution of lands among the farming habitations follows practically the same laws, whose effects are less rigorous, considering the very low density of occupation of the soil.

425 [361] 1) It is taken for granted that an isolated establishment in a quasi-deserted zone does not create lasting rights. If it happens to disappear, anybody may come to settle there after ascertaining from the first occupant that he no longer needs the place (such is the case with the very scattered establishments south of Simayé Falls up to Indian country; they do not create real territorial rights for the benefit of any lineage whatever.

425 2) On the contrary, from the time that occupation of a region becomes habitual, even by groups of small numerical importance, people pay attention to the attribution of the lands. [361] [613] Thus it is assumed that the west bank of the Lawa south of the Atikati habitation up to Simayé Falls has belonged, since the end of the last century, to the Lapé lo, which was occupying it in 1957 by the Paako, Samo, Pwen, Saléni, and Makélé habitations.

423 613 241 361 3) Within each zone the rights remain joint and anyone of the same lo may come to settle there. Thus the farming habitations move around, but within a definite sector. Thus for example Kwaku (Lapé) abandoned in 1954 his habitation situated in the lands of the Lapé lineage (it was too damp in the rainy season, he prefers to content himself with the lands of the "great village"). He does not lose his rights because of this. If he decides eventually to come back, he will settle anywhere in the zone attributed to the Lapé lo.

182 161 241 361 425 It goes without saying that if the population were more dense, such a principle would be difficult to apply and that serious disputes would arise. But this mode of occupation of the soil is perfectly suitable, in their present situation, for the tribes of the Refugee Blacks, for it allows them to practice, with a minimum of friction, the seminomadism which the geographical environment and especially the manioc ant impose.

241 361 423 The zones occupied by the farming habitations rarely have a single holder: most often they are divided into separate sectors on different parts of the river.

504 613 361 423 Actually, as we have seen around the "great villages," each lineage possesses a certain number of "dégrads," or landing places, from which paths radiate. Each "dégrad" is rigorously reserved for the members of a lineage. The occupants of a farming village radiate from around their landing place until they

613 meet the clearings of the people of another lineage; a de facto 423 boundary is thus created, which is henceforth respected.

621 On the other hand, several farming villages of one lineage 241 may have their clearings totally intriqués /entangled/ (this is 613 the case, for example, with the ones of the Antonu and Adiiso 423 habitations). This conforms to the rule of joint possession of the land within the lineage.

621 Organization. The group in a farming habitation is brought to-241 gether by mutual affinities, and has no hierarchy other than that 602 which springs from kinship ties: authority of the mother over her
592 daughters; authority of the "uncles" over the "nephews."
/103/ The grouping which conforms most to the matrilineal structure of the Refugee Blacks is made up of an old woman, her unmarried sons, her daughters and her daughters' daughters, their husbands coming to help at the time of the clearings but not belonging to the group. Often it is this old woman who directs the habitation, but often also it is an old uncle, her classificatory brother, who has worked with her for a long time. Sometimes this old woman has come to live with her daughters on the habitation founded by her husband.

103 Some of the habitations bear men's names, others women's 423 names. The name which prevails may be completely at variance 592 with the real rights exercised over the land (Ex.: name of Adiiso given to the habitation of his wife where Adiiso has no right at [613] all). That has no great importance in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks, the only important thing being collective possession of the land by the lineage.

621 For groups which are relatively numerous and brought to-241 gether more by mutual affinities than by kinship ties, the mini-622 mum of authority necessary for good feeling and the organization of the work is brought to bear by the founder. For example,

621 Atikati exercised authority by this right over the disparate group 622 around him, and at his death he bequeathed this function to his 241 sister Adyidya.

Likewise Antonu exerts undisputed authority over three [613] groups of the Awara Bakka lo settled at the mouth of the Inini, for it was he who took the initiative of creating an establishment at this place. If there is any dispute, it is he who will defend the rights of the Awara Bakka lineage.

622 The authority exercised by the founder of the farming habitation is not brought to bear in material living, which remains subject to the strictly individualistic principles of the Refugee Blacks. He cannot require anyone to help him make his clearings or do any work whatever on his behalf.

361 Farming Habitations of the Awara Bakka lo
241 (Antonu, Adiiso, Kakyé)
613 in the Neighborhood of the Confluence with the Inini

621 These habitations work soil whose first user was Antonu, of 241 the Awara Bakka lo (fraction 1), which is regarded as belonging [613] to that lineage. Antonu settled there in 1945 (he was finding that [423] there were too many people farming the lands near Asisi).

To insure his rights, Antonu put on his land two groupings
621 whose situations are very different:
241 1) In his own habitation he installed his wife Asakundu, and 592 around her he made up the work group commonest among the 423 Refugee Blacks: group formed by the mother, her sons
[476] daughters, the daughters' husbands coming to help at the time of the /104/ clearings. But it is important to note that this group has no right at all over the land: if Antonu and his wife ever separate, the wife's group will leave the habitation.

621 2) Nearby, he set up the habitation of his sister Irma 592 married to Adiiso (Dju). This village is improperly called Adiiso, 241 but Adiiso has no right at all there. In case of breaking with his [423] wife, he leaves the habitation.

3) Finally, Kakyé, an old woman of the Awara Bakka lineage, settled nearby with her daughters and son.

Structure and functioning of the Antonu habitation. This habitation comprised in January, 1957, disregarding children:

○ [△] Antonu (Aw. B. 1, E47);
○ Asakundu, his wife (L2, E55);
○ Kapééki (L2, F60) } Asakundu's daughters, married; ○ Angisa (L2, F61) }
△ Sindu (L2, F62), Asakundu's son;
△ Maliki (L2, F63), Asakundu's son;
○ Yundu, Kapééki's daughter, married;
△ Anato, Kapééki's son;
○ Agata, Akoni's daughter.

The wives of Maliki and Sindu who do not have any personal habitation come there to work, but they are not to be considered as members of the group. They have no hut.

Likewise, the husbands of Kapééki, Yundu, and Angisa 241 come to help temporarily at the time of the clearings.
621 Activity of the Antonu village in 1955-56:

Structure of the Adiiso habitation. This habitation actually belongs to Irma, Adiiso's wife, of the Awara-Bakka (1) lineage (E37), who was settled there by Antonu whose classificatory sister she is.

Working with Irma, disregarding children, are:

--Her husband Adiiso (Dju, F37);

--Her daughter Chitaïna (Aw.B.1, F43), married to Déési (L1, F45);

--Her son Lawa, unmarried;

--Her son Maïna, married.

Maïna's wife Mbéma, who has no other habitation, has her clearing made there, but she has no hut in her own right and is not a member of the group.

Habitation of the Dju Lo in the Neighborhood of the Mouth of the Inini

621 Structure of the Atikati habitation (Dju lo). Important habitation
241 founded by Atikati, of the Dju lo, possessing an extended finage
[613] fragmented into several blocks on both banks of the Lawa.

[423] This habitation has an abnormal composition, for Atikati
[476] worked there with his daughters, which is contrary to custom, and with friends.

622 Atikati directed the village with his old friend Bernardin (K1, D62), † in 1958, who was the son of a man of the Dju lo and had lived among the Dju since childhood.

621 The basic group of this habitation is made up of people
241 of the Dju lo. Since Atikati's death (1955), his sister Adyidya 613 (Dju, E19) has directed the village.

[622] Members of the Dju lo:

○ Adyidya } both without living children
○ Baawé (Dju, E13) }
△ Loko (Dju, F39)
△ Atikati worked with his daughters and granddaughter:
○ Wilèlmina (P1, F1);
○ Kumata (P1, G1), daughter of Wilèlmina.

To this group were added in 1957:

△ Bernardin (K1, D62), raised with the Dju;
○ Asumé (Dip. I, F2), daughter of △ Bernardin and ○ Mimen †.

[423] Finally, two Kotika women married to Djuka asked for permission to settle there and have their clearings cut there. But they have no right at all over the land:

621 571 183 The composition of this village is thus entirely aberrant from the point of view of /112/ custom, and founded entirely upon personal fellow feeling. But the customary rule is none 621 the less present in the thought of all: the founder being of the 613 Dju lineage, the land belongs to the Dju. The fact, for ex- 423 ample, that Bernardin (Kotika) and his daughters (Papaïston) have worked there for a very long time creates no right at all for either lineage.

[571] If dissensions occur in the group, those outside the Dju lineage must leave.

Habitations of the Papaïston lo in the Neighborhood of the Mouth of the Inini 621 Structure of the Sawen and Agodéba habitations (Papaïston lo).

241 Habitations occupying an extensive zone, attributed for at 613 least 60 years to the principal Papaïston lineage.
[476] Working with Sawen (P1, E7) are:
--His nieces Héléna (P1, F2) and Emilia (P1, F3);
--His nephew Aguundé (P1, F4).
Working with Agodéba (P1, E1) are:
--His sister (in the classificatory sense) Kamen (P1, E14);
--His niece (in the classificatory sense) Gou (P1, F8).
Moreover, a group is settled there centered on Toïna, Agodéba's wife, representing the last of the Bakabuchi lineage, almost extinct:

△ Toïna, Agodéba's wife;
/△/ Mangoto, Toïna's son;
Apuulobi.

[423] This group has no right over the land and would leave in the case of a break-up of the Agodéba-Toïna household.

These habitations occupy soil belonging to the Lapé lo since the end of the 19th century.

The Kwaku habitation has been abandoned since 1943, its occupants making their clearings around Loka.

Paako habitation. The Paako habitation is occupied only by two women, Paako (L1, E29) and her daughter Dona, who have their clearings made there by their husbands.

Chii habitation. Chii (L1, D24) directs the habitation where she works with her son Topo, her daughters Yaana, Madu, and Koko. The daughters' husbands come to help at the time of the clearings.

[578] Pwen habitations. As a consequence of dissensions, Pwen (L1, E33) lives all alone in this habitation.

Saléni habitation. It is directed by Saléni, an old woman of the Lapé lo (E25), who works there with her son Tingo, her daughters Kayé and Ananta.

[613] Structure of the Samo habitation called Pikin Tabiki (Lapé lo).

Habitation occupying another portion of the Lapé lo finage. Several Lapé men and women make their clearings there:

△ Tamu (L1, F32), who brings his wife Kaala (Dip. II) there
△ Fosé, his brother (L1, F33)
○ Mélita, his classificatory aunt (L1, E32);
○ Téké, Mélita's daughter (L1, F44)
○ Akomédi, Paako's daughter (L1, F34).

[183] The husbands of Mélita, Téké, Akomédi come to work at the time of the clearings but are not part of the group.

Farming Habitations downstream from Maripasoula

Several habitations are installed in the Kuyaku locality, very fertile region giving high yields of manioc (1).

1. This fertility is explained by the nature of the subsoil (sills of dolerite).

Ownership of the land: Dipélu II lo (Kormotibe village). Several habitations side by side:

613 423 ○ Béniti (Dju) † in 1955; habitation taken up again by her children and grandchildren: ○ Eliana, △ Doni, ○ Kulina, ○ Maria; ○ Tini (Dju);

○ Kotoïda (Afi lineage) † ;

△ Poopu, established there for a long time. He had abandoned the site in 1948; came back in 1952.

The composition of the groups is as follows:

1) ○ Béniti † (Dju, E5): her daughters Maria, Kulina, and Eliana. Béniti's hut has been taken up again by her grandson Doni whom she brought up.

2) ○ Tini (Dju, F1); habitation grouping Tini, Ata (Dju, F2), and their daughters.

3) ○ Kotoïda † ; habitation grouping Kotoïda († Oct., 1956) (Afi lineage), her brother Kenkina, her husband Empalé, her niece Samabun.

Other habitations:

Ma Efa (Papaïston), settled on Dipélu II lo lands upstream from Kormotibo (French bank) for about 30 years. Ma Efa (P1, D4) worked with her sons.

Gengé Tabiki (Dutch bank, upstream from Asisi village); small habitation founded by ○ Aliki (Dju, E23), with Lènga ○ (Dju, F36) and ○ Diana (Dju, E9).

Functioning of the Farming Habitations

Structure. Of the 13 farming habitations studied here, 12 have a structure conforming to the residence principle of the Refugee Blacks, implying the grouping of daughters and unmarried sons near the mother; only one has an abnormal structure:

591 Atikati (daughters living with their father, groups of friends having no rights over the land).

621
241 It seems that exceptions of this kind have always existed among the Refugee Blacks, but they are probably tending to be-591 come more numerous.
178 They do not appear to be due to a change of conception about family structure but to a development of individualistic tendencies. These groups of aberrant structure are particularly unstable.

361 Stability; changes of location. On this point there is no precise 241 custom. Certain farming habitations are old, such as those of Sawen and Atikati, which certainly date from the beginning of the century. Most appear to last from five to ten years. Others, like that of Kwaku, have had only an ephemeral existence.

361 The changes of location of habitations which have taken
241 place in this region since 1950 have very variable causes: /118/
166 /Fig. 20 appears here/ /119/

△ Dyakata (Dip. I)	left the region to live in the lower Maroni among the Paramaka for personal reasons.
○ Chili (Dip. I)	went to settle near Maripasoula. Gave up his habitation at Simayé Falls because of manioc ants.
△ Kwaku (L)	His habitation was too damp and the activity of the manioc ants too great. Henceforth lives all year in Loka.
[226] △ Akwadé (L)	Had no habitation, created one in 1954 near Simayé Falls. Was looking for a site favorable for fishing, from which he lives almost entirely.

On the whole, it can be estimated that the average duration of a farming habitation is about ten years. In these moves,

361 241 166 exhaustion of the lands does not seem to play any part: considering the sparseness of the population, one can either make new clearings out of primary forest or carry out any system of letting land lie fallow one wishes.

Most changes of location can be attributed to two causes of equal importance:

[136] [613] --The activity of the manioc ants; we have said that since about 15 years ago the principal soil of the Lapé lo, situated near Loka villages, has had to be totally abandoned as a consequence of exceptional activity of manioc ants. From this resulted the creation of several farming habitations on the soil of the Lapé lo studied here;

361 241 166 578 --Personal motives, among which comes first of all disagreement among the members of a group. For example ○ Kulina and ○ Bakamaman (Boniville, Dju) made their clearings until 1950 with their mother Béniti in her farming village in Kuyaku locality (to the south of Kormotibo).

In 1950 there was a quarrel. Kulina and Baïkom have made their clearings since that time at the habitation of their father Malobi (Lapé).

[768] It happens especially that upon the death of its founder a farming habitation disappears or changes composition entirely because disagreements arise.

361 241 166 Another cause of change of location of farming habitations is change of activity of their occupants. For example, a man grows old, he no longer finds paid work, he creates a habitation in order to take up fishing (Akwadé's case). When he reaches extreme old age, he abandons his habitation to move close to his relatives (case of Samalobi, first occupant of the lands cultivated nowadays by Antonu village). /Page 120 blank/

FAMILY CUSTOM

17
105 The family custom of the Refugee Blacks presents more unity than their beliefs. Contrary to the Blacks of Brazil and Haiti, among whom the influences of Dahomey and the Yoruba country have dominated, the Refugee Blacks of Guiana have borrowed the essential part of their family custom from the Agni-Ashanti culture area. One finds again especially such characteristic traits as the prohibition of inheritance of widows, customs relating to birth, isolation of the dead in cemeteries away from habitations.

But on several essential points:

- The marriage system.

--Institutions relative to death and mourning, and the central place given to them in the whole body of customary institutions.

The Refugee Blacks have separated themselves cleanly from the conceptions of their ancestors, and the conceptions they have elaborated may be in large measure considered as an original creation.

Beliefs. As soon as a woman is pregnant, her husband is subject to special obligations. He may not use a shovel nor drive nails. These operations which, among the Refugee Blacks, have as their primary purpose the digging of graves and the making of coffins, might be supposed to make the child die. Neither he nor his wife may cut their hair; he is subject to food interdictions, especially the maïpouri (tapir).

843 [827] Sexual relations continue during the whole pregnancy, for they are reputed to be indispensable for the formation of the mind of the child, which is thought to come from the father; also, for a man whose wife is pregnant there can be no question of abandoning her nor even of leaving for a long trip without the permission of the head of her lineage.

843 787 Forecasting of the birth. Divinatory rituals are carried out from the first months of pregnancy to forecast whether the childbirth will be easy or not. For that one goes to an old man who "knows" one of these remedies. There are several: one consists in making a small hole in the center of a cross outlined on the ground, pouring into it a decoction of magic-herbs kept secret, and putting an egg into it. The remedy-master then says: "If the childbirth is to be easy, the egg must be crushed as soon as my foot bears down /122/ on it." They state that sometimes the egg resists crushing: from this they deduce that the delivery will be difficult.

844 [789] [845] When the time for delivery arrives, concern is centered on the danger of maleficent human entities, ɔgi sani, which try to become incarnate in the child. The woman is shut up in the house, all of its exits are blocked off, and ɔbiaman are called to perform rites of protection all around the house. If delivery is difficult, that is attributed to the fact that one of these entities succeeded in getting into the house in spite of the precautions taken.

The ɔbiaman are called to "wash" the woman with the help of appropriate remedies.. Only in serious cases are men allowed to enter the house. As a general rule, during the first eight days only women related to the mother may enter. (Care is even taken as far as possible to get as midwife (mena) an old woman related to the mother.)

845 [621] Observation at Maripasoula, November 3, 1956. The wife of Baïna, boatman of the border-fixing mission, gave birth at Pikin Tabiki, small farming village where she works with her mother and the latter's husband. Baïna went to be present at the delivery.

It was very long and dramatic. According to Baïna, an ɔgi sani had entered the child's body, making him stiff and impossible to extract. As a last resort they called a neighbor, T..., known for having a good gita. He called his gadu who revealed an efficacious remedy, since after the body of the sick woman was bathed with the prescribed leaves, the delivery ended successfully.

846 [515] Since we were leaving on our trip, it remained to find someone to take his place in fulfilling one of the husband's duties: cutting the supply of wood for heating the water necessary for the hot douches /showers?/ the mother was going to be given several times a day for about three months. [465] He made an agreement for that with Kwata, his mother-in-law's husband, to whom he will pay about 1,000 francs.

851 613 [603] Presentation of the child. On the eighth day the maternal grandmother (or great-grandmother if she is still living) takes the child and gives it to another ancestress of the same lineage, stationed in front of the house. The latter presents it to the family. Then [769] the head of the lineage, without taking the child, goes to the [778] fraga tiki to make an offering of tafia, asking the ancestors to [782] protect it.

For example, for the birth of A... (Lapé Tabiki village), son of O Yundu (L2, G60), it was Asakundu, grandmother of Yundu and great-grandmother of the child, who came to take him in the house and gave him over to her sister Térésa (L2, E57) to present him to the family (see genealogical table of the Lapé lineage, fraction 2).

846 834 856 Interruption of conjugal relations after the birth. For three months after delivery the mother must stay away from men and even avoid touching them. Conjugal relations must be interrupted until the child begins to walk alone (eleven to 14 months). However, it is tolerated (but disapprovingly) that they be interrupted only for the time until the child begins to drag himself [842] on his knees /123/ (eight months). They cite the example of Baïna's wife who has puny children after pregnancies at too short intervals.

846 834 862 178 593 Actually, the interruption of conjugal relations tends to be reduced more and more, the women having condensed milk available and tending to reduce the duration of breast feeding.

Each woman acts as she wishes in this respect; the husband has no power to restrain her.

The Name

551 553 Existence of several independent names. Each Boni has two names, the gaã nɛm or big name, given by the father, and the pikin nɛm or little name, given by the mother.

These two names are given in totally independent fashion. Generally the pikin nɛm is given first; in former days they used to wait until the child was six to eight months old; nowadays it is given at the end of a few weeks. The head of the lineage does not intervene either in the choice or the giving of the name.

As a matter of fact, nearly three-quarters of the Boni are designated by one single name, either because the father and mother agreed to give the same name or because one of the two names fell into disuse.

To these two principal names may be added any number of names and cognomens given by the grandparents and later by friends or spouse; often one of the names ends by being given and supplanting the others, but in numerous cases the names are used concurrently; in general an individual is designated among his maternal relatives by his pikin nɛm, while the people of other villages designate him by his gaã nɛm or by a cognomen. It has happened to us many a time in the course of the same conversation to hear the same individual designated by two or three different names.

[125] [128] It goes without saying that this custom makes any census of the Refugee Blacks impracticable, for as long as one does not know individually the members of a lineage and their genealogy, it is impossible to understand anything.

Nevertheless, one must not see in this a defense reaction with respect to the European administration. The Refugee Blacks find it completely normal to have several names at a time, for they do not have the notion of the identity of a name with a person.

Thus one of our boatmen was Fintiman to his maternal relatives, Gobiyo to his father and part of his friends, Loamba to his paternal grandfather, and Nakiyu to his first wife.

551 553 Choice of names. Names are highly varied and their choice does not follow any fixed rule; it is in the exclusive domain of fancy.

A large number are constituted of simple onomatopoeia: Tyutyu, Dada, Dodo, Dudu, etc. (which may be applied indiscriminately to man or woman). Dodo's mother explained to us the reason for her choice: dodo was the refrain of an air which often sang in her head while she was pregnant. /124/

551 177 Again are pointed out:

--More or less deformed European names: Afayèl (Rafaèl), Modèl, Pasensi (Patience), Félisi (Félix), Sophie, Toïna (Antonia). Certain names are deformed European proper names; for example: Sota for Chotard (name of an official in Saint-Laurent);

551 --African names (Musa, Kodyo, Kofi, Akuba, Afiba, etc.), [177] most of them apparently coming from the west coast of Africa.

--Some Indian names: Omiikan, Païké. This last name [553] had been given to a young man of Asisi by his great-uncle in memory of an Indian chief with whom he was very closely connected;

--Names of plants, animals, or ordinary objects, either in taki-taki or in French:

Ex.: Kapachi (armadillo), Aguti (agouti, a rodent), Babun (red monkey), Kwata (South American spider monkey), Chii (seed), Maisi (maize), Tutu (bamboo), Sépina (épinards, "spinach"), Polimichi (small portable stove), Balansi (balance), Tambour /drum/, Kédé (chest, box), Mandolina (mandolin), Kokoti (tattooing), Guunkaala (blue bead), Klarinèt (clarinet), Alapu (arrow), Bisiklèt /bicycle/, Tomobil /automobile/, etc.;

[177] --European words whose meaning is more or less understood but which sound agreeable to the ears of the Refugee Blacks:

Ex.: Manifèst, Komisèr (commissioner), Nètwayé (nettoyé, "cleaned"), Machinn (machine);

551 --Kinship terms or terms of social relations, associated 601 often with a qualifier:

Ex.: Maman (mother), Baakamaman (black mother), May (mother-in-law), Pikin pay (little son-in-law), Pikin baala (little comrade), Bachi (master), Michi (young lady), Baakamichi (young black lady), etc.

551 --Expressions relating generally to the child's characteristics during its first months:

Ex.: Kundu mofu (little mouth), Kundu uman (short woman), Alébiédé (red head), Alobikyé (he likes to cry), Alobilafu (he likes to laugh), Koouman (cold woman), Amoyuman (pretty woman), Dansiuman (dancer), Hafukii (half dead), etc.;

551 --Names alluding to a virtue, but this is pure fancy;
577 we must not believe that they attempt in that way to make it enter the child. One sees Séyéuman (serious woman), Abété

551 [577] (the best), Poyman (strong man), etc.; along the same line names are often given such as Goutu uman (golden woman);

551 522 --Often, finally, the name is the contraction of a short sentence expressing a joke or a ridiculous association of ideas:

Agimianèm (give me a name), Nafiimoo (it is no longer for you), Afumidichi (that one is for me), Sanidialobi (thing he likes), Agoabuchi (he goes into the bush), etc.

Woochia is the contraction of sa u ɔ si ya? (what shall we see there?), expressing the surprise of a woman who was seeing herself pregnant for the first time after 15 years of sterile marriage.

/125/ In this kind of name, in several cases it is a question of a joke with respect to the child, for which he will have to suffer all his life.

Ex.: Amoyanéti (he is pretty in the night), name given to a child who was very ugly.

Poété (convict) is the pikin nɛm of B..., a man about 42 years old in 1957; he never clearly understood why his mother had given him that name which he could not get rid of, his comrades taking malicious pleasure in calling him by his pikin nɛm.

This bad joke had so much success that it was put into circulation two more times: in Boni country there are now two Poété and a /female/ Poétéuman!

551 553 [522] This example, associated with many others, shows the casualness with which the Refugee Blacks choose their children's names. We have been present several times at discussions concerning the choice of these names; they proceed in an atmosphere of crude farce. B..., with whom we have just been concerned, who had had to suffer from the name his mother had given him, called one of his nephews Canada because it is the country in which are manufactured Evinrude motors which he admired very much.

553 613 [178] [162] Transmission of names. It seems that in former times children were by preference given the name of one of their classificatory uncles in the father's lineage. This custom is still clearly observable, but its practice is not general. In fact, out of about 670 persons counted in the villages on the French bank, including about 250 children younger than 14 years, there are only 64, or less than 25 per cent who bear the name of an adult living or dead. These 64 cases are divided thus:

	Mother's Lineage	Father's Lineage	Other Lineages
Name taken from among the child's classificatory brothers and sisters.	0	3
Name taken from among the child's classificatory uncles and aunts.	3	37	11
Name taken from among the child's "grandfathers" and "grandmothers."	2	8

Of these 64 names, 44 /sic/ are taken from the father's lineage, only five from the mother's.

[551] This table is only good for a simple indication. In order to go farther it would have been necessary to study separately the name given by the father and that given by the mother, which we could not do (let us recall that 75 per cent of the individuals are designated by a single name; either the father and mother agreed on the same name, or one of the two names fell into disuse after the child's early years.

553 Let us remember simply that there is a clear tendency to choose the name from the paternal relatives of the child (1).

[171]

1. It is a general rule among the populations of Black Africa from whom the Refugee Blacks borrowed their main cultural traits, the patrilineal Fon and Yoruba as well as the matrilineal and patrilocal Agni and Ashanti. The persistence of this custom among the Refugee Blacks tends to strengthen the patrilineal and patrilocal tendencies which were persisting among them at the time when their institutions were developing.

551 Apparently they avoid giving the name of a very old person or one recently deceased.

553 In this transmission of the name there does not seem to be anything other than a mark of affection toward a relative. No bond is created between the child and the adult whose name he bears. Obviously there is nothing in the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks which requires the perpetuation of names and their transmission from the dead to the living.

[613] When they wish to give one of their children the name of a person of another lineage, they must ask permission of this person, who does not necessarily grant it (he may fear that his name might thus be borne later by a thief or a ne'er-do-well).

If he does give his permission it does not, strictly speaking, involve any payment, but he may be offered a small gift.

[613] There is no need of any authorization to take a name borne by a person of the lineage of the child's mother or father.

551 553 The only case in which custom governs the choice of name is that of twins.

Male twins are called Adam and Agosu.

Boy and girl twins are called Adam and Efa (2).

2. This is connected with a myth derived from the Biblical tradition, which we shall set forth later.

Female twins are called Chimba and Sisi.

Social Relations within the Lineage

429 604 [593] Guardianship. Until he is old enough to work, the child is placed under the responsibility of the mother and, one step farther away, that of the eldest of his classificatory uncles. To a lesser degree all the uncles have authority over the child; guardianship is collective.

The custom of the Refugee Blacks, hostile to any division of the lineage, does not recognize any right peculiar to the mother's brothers (still, in fact, they seem to be consulted by preference about matters of small importance). For serious matters, such as authorizing a marriage, the classificatory uncles meet and deliberate; they do not vote, strictly speaking, but the proved opposition of three or four of them causes the project to be abandoned. [584]

429 593 604 [836] It is to the mother that people will come to complain about the child, and not to the father. She it is who decides to refer the thing to the uncles if it is serious (example of Doni, 18 years old, who deflowered Elina, 15 years old. Elina's mother came to complain to Doni's mother. Doni's mother went to notify her older brother Fintiman, who took the matter in hand).

429 604 It is necessary to distinguish this principal guardianship, which is imprescriptible, from the secondary guardianship delegated by the uncles to the man or woman charged with bringing up the child. /127/

429 593 604 [858] Designation of the guardian. When a child reaches five or six years, the mother and the uncles decide who will be charged with his education and will become his guardian. The thought of the Refugee Blacks is that a child is much better educated if he is isolated and placed directly under the responsibility of an adult.

429 593 604 603 In order to decide who will bring up the child, they do not have a general meeting of the lineage. Everything is arranged among the mother and her brothers proper, the maternal grandmother, and the great-grandmother if she is still living. The child's classificatory uncles are consulted only if there are no uncles in the ordinary sense. Grandmothers have a preponderant influence in this decision as they do in all that concerns the child during his early years. The uncles' influence increases as the child advances in age.

429 There is no precise rule for the devolution of this guardianship, and nobody can take advantage of a right over the child.

[604] The guardian, male or female, carries out the responsibility of the education, but he can make no decision without asking the opinion of the uncles, whose decision is final. The guardianship can always be withdrawn.

This guardianship is exercised by one single person, man or woman.

429 593 It is very often the mother. In a large number of cases the mother raises her children, boys and girls, alone, with the cooperation of her husband, who often is not the father. Actually the husband has no rights over them. Whether the children

429 593 [586] are his or not, he maintains them indirectly by maintaining his wife. He has only precarious authority. Every connection with the children disappears in case of divorce.

429 603 Guardianship is often exercised by the maternal grandmother, by an aunt, or even by an older sister.

[604] [593] If the maternal grandmother (or the great-grandmother if she is still living) insists on bringing up a child, the mother cannot refuse; one sees a rather large number of cases of women who have only one child and have given it to their mother to raise; it is true that since they live together, it is not a great sacrifice for the mother.

429 603 888 [163] [165] Thus one sees women over 70 years old, having had ten children or so, bringing up three or four of their grandchildren. The ancestress of Asisi village, Kuluba († 1957), after having had 12 children, brought up about ten of her children and grandchildren during the course of her long existence; when she died in 1957 at 100 years of age, she was still raising a child, one of her great-grandsons 12 years old. Of course she had not been working any more for a long time and was fed by her family, as the child was. But it was she who held the power of guardianship over him.

429 593 If it is the father who is charged with the child's education, he takes him into his own maternal family. His sisters will help him to bring up the child as long as he needs the presence of a woman.

From then on the father will exercise guardianship corresponding to that which the mother usually exercises under the responsibility of the uncles.

Sometimes a man is seen bringing up a daughter. Generally speaking, if a man /128/ has had three or more children by one woman, it is considered normal for him to be given one to raise, but that does not constitute a right; he cannot demand anything.

593 One of the commonplaces of ethnographic literature is 152 the feeling of frustration that the father would experience in a
429 matrilineal system when he is separated from his children. Thoughts heard every now and then could allow one to believe in the existence of such a feeling among the Refugee Blacks. For example Baïna, of Asisi village, tells us one day with bitterness: "I have had eight children, all living, and I have been given only one to bring up." But this is only a pretense. No Refugee Black thinks seriously of bringing up the five or six children he has had in the course of his life by three or four [464] different women. Besides, this would be materially impossible for him, considering the mode of life of the Refugee Blacks and the necessity for the adult men to move ceaselessly in search [163] of paid work. For example, by encouraging Baïna to tell the basis for his thought, it was not difficult to understand that he would have liked to raise two or three of his eight children (born of four different women), the ones he loved for subjective reasons; the others scarcely interested him and it was all the same to him whether they were brought up here or there.

429 In reality the paternal feeling of the Refugee Blacks is a 152 rather subjective thing; raising a son or a nephew is the same in [601] their eyes. The same paternal feeling will develop, and in both cases they will say "my son" and "my father."

593 Mothers give their children to be raised with the greatest 429 of ease, especially within the lineage.

For example Eliana (Dju, F8), about 45 years old in 1957, [163] who had nine living children, was raising only four:

△	Alibi	1937	raised by his father Matapi (Asisi-Aw.B.);
△	Doni	1939	raised by his maternal grandmother Béniti (Dju, E5);
○	Aguba	1940	raised by Lènga (F36), Eliana's classificatory sister (tenth-degree kinship);
△	A...	1943	raised by his father Yusu (Papaïston);

429 ○ S... 1947 raised by Kulina, Eliana's sister by the same mother (Dju, E9);
○ S... 1947 raised by her mother and three young children raised by their mother.

[163] One sees unusual situations like that of Mimi (Boniville, Kotika), who gave her only child to her sister to raise and is bringing up another child in its place.

[163] In 1957, Téké (L1, F44, Loka village), who had seven living children, was not bringing up any of them.

△ C... 1945 raised by Mélita, Téké's mother (L1, E32);
△ A... 1947 raised by Akomédi (L1, F34), Téké's classificatory sister;
△ M... 1950 raised by Mélita;
△ C... 1952 raised by his father Baïna (Dip. II);
○ K... 1953 raised by △ Mato (Aw.B.1), her father Baïna's father;
○ F... 1956 raised by Mélita. /129/

Baïna, whom we have known for a long time, was incapable of giving the least explanation for his wife's strange behavior. Besides, he had given up a long time ago understanding the psychology of Boni women.

On the other hand, a certain number of women obstinately refuse to be separated from their children, deciding to raise [163] them all, girls and boys, by their own means. This was the case for example with Magdaléna (Kormotibo), a woman of intractable character, who raised her eight children herself at [828] the cost of the worst difficulties. In such a case, they say of the mother that she is a selfish woman and that she has a bad character, but there is no question of taking a child away from her by force. Nobody would risk that, no more her brothers or uncles than the head of the lineage. Only her mother could do it, and the women who behave thus have generally lost their mothers.

602

The conditions under which children are brought up throw a strong light on the thoughts of the Refugee Blacks relative to kinship and are worth a special study.

[125] In the course of an investigation carried on from October to December, 1957, we were able to record with precision under what conditions had been raised 311 persons distributed thus:

Male sex	born before 1936 (education finished) . . .	73
	born from 1936 to 1949 inclusive (education in process) (1)	88
Female sex	born before 1936 (education finished) . . .	72
	born from 1936 to 1949 inclusive (education in process)	78
	Total	311

1. Study of the case of children born after 1949 was of no interest because the definite assignment of their guardianship was not yet made at the end of the year 1957.

429 Recapitulation:

858 70% of the boys
613 85% of the girls are raised in the mother's lineage

27% of the boys
13% of the girls are raised in the father's lineage

3% of the boys
2% of the girls are raised by outsiders to both lineages.

429 It is important, moreover, to emphasize in what proportion 858 the children are brought up by women or men:

67% of the boys
86% of the girls are raised by women

33% of the boys
12% of the girls are raised by men.

429 This preponderant role of women in the education of the 562 children is one of the fundamental aspects of the social structure 571 of the Refugee Blacks. In fact, women consider that the children belong to them, and if they give some to men to bring up, it is (171) only as many as they wish to. This conception which is found to be widespread among the Blacks of America, in the West Indies as in Guiana, explains, much more than the frequency of divorces, the impossibility for them to make up patrilineages in the absence of coercion exerted upon the women.

429 Several important pieces of information may still be drawn from these tables:

429 178 1) They show the continuity and vitality of the custom of the Refugee Blacks. The proportion of boys and girls brought up by the mother, the paternal grandmother, the father, etc. is noticeably constant from one generation to the other. There is no tendency for the proportion of children raised by the father to increase; it even seems to decrease, which may be related to the increasing instability of marriages. In fact, in spite of European influences, no evolution is observed toward patrilineal structures among the Refugee Blacks.

429 613 591 2) The fact that part of the children are raised outside of their own lineage has few consequences for the unity of the group; for most of them, when their education is finished, come to settle down in one of the villages belonging to their lineage.

Of 88 men born before 1936, 28 were raised outside their lineage; 21 of them came back to it; only seven, or less than 8 per cent, settled down in other lineages.

Of 78 women born before 1936, 12 were raised outside their lineage, of whom only four, or 5 per cent, settled permanently outside their group.

868 462 Education of children. If the education of girls does not necessitate a difficult apprenticeship, it is not the same for boys; the sum of knowledge that /132/ a Refugee Black must possess to carry out effectively the techniques of his group is considerable. In particular, he must:

--Know more than 200 kinds of trees with their uses, the way to fell them, the way to work their wood;

--Be capable of constructing boats of at least 10 kegs (1,000 kilograms of load). This technique alone requires several years of apprenticeship;

--Acquire sufficient knowledge of carpenter work to build his house and that of his wife;

--Learn how to handle boats on the river and the techniques of transport boating.

868 To this traditional knowledge, which remains indispensable,
[501] has been added for the past several years substantial knowledge of mechanics, because the use of outboard motors is becoming more and more common; this knowledge is transmitted in empirical fashion as it has been acquired. It must be recorded that the motors go and that they are well kept up.

86 The system of education employed by the Refugee Blacks is surely effective; their children are excessively turbulent and very difficult when they are in a group. When they are divided up individually in the midst of adults, they are placed under the best conditions for learning the techniques and traditions of their group.

429 The person charged with the education of a child does not willingly entrust him to another and takes him along whenever 513 he moves. However, by concern for propriety, the woman guardian sends the children she is raising to sleep in other houses on the days when her husband comes to visit her. Boys go to sleep at the home of a brother, an uncle, a comrade; the same for girls who have not yet reached puberty; but it is not the same for girls who have reached puberty; they are subjected to strict supervision.

648 This is one of the reasons why the Boni find it repugnant to 871 put their children in school (French school of Maripasoula, 156 Surinam school of Kotika). Without wishing to tackle here this sad problem to its fullest extent, we must state that this teaching, entirely inappropriate and dispensed by teachers who look down on the Refugee Blacks, has results nearly similar to those observed generally in Africa, the main one being to make the children strangers to their own families and misfits in their own country. There is practically no example of a case where the Boni nation has benefited from having one of its children go to school: if the child succeeds, he leaves for Paramaribo and never comes back again. If he fails, he then has much more

C48 871 156 difficulty in learning the techniques of his group, for the years when the mind is most pliant have been lost in this regard; as for the knowledge acquired at school, it is so foreign to the life of the Refugee Blacks that at the end of a few years none of it remains except vague smatterings.

861 In general, the process of education employed among the Refugee Blacks is imitation of the adult. A child is rarely given a lesson as such. He sees something done, he tries on his own 868 initiative, and little by little he learns. For example, /133/ he sees his guardian make a boat; he is simply asked to go and get dry palm branches and to take away the chips; he hears the adults discuss the job as it goes on. At about the age of 12 or 13 he tries to make a first boat for himself with the help of an older comrade. He progressively acquires knowledge of this technique.

561 462 Boys begin to take part in farm work from the age of six or seven, principally weeding and planting. At about ten or eleven they begin to handle the machete and help to cut through the bush; at about 12 they begin to handle the axe and learn to fell trees. At 14 or 15 they begin to make small boats. An adolescent of 16 or 17 is in general capable of cutting a clearing for his mother or sister.

429 86 Most often the guardian takes his role very seriously, giving his main attention to teaching the child all that is necessary. If it is a woman, she asks her brothers to teach the techniques of boating and building.

866 461 434 [291] The principle is to develop very early a sense of responsibility in the child by making it progressively necessary for him to earn his living. The guardian does not furnish pocket money, and with the exception of a hammock every other year, no manufactured objects (children under 11-12 years not being clothed, he has almost no expenses for clothing). But he gives the child progressively chances to earn money by his work. From ten years on, the child begins to render some services: for example for the construction of a boat, he helps transport the dry palm branches intended for the burning. If the boat is being

866 made for sale, the guardian gives him a small sum out of the 461 money gained. At 14 an adolescent begins to satisfy nearly all 434 his own needs.

For example, from June to December, 1956, Tasa (14 883 years), son of Fintiman (Boniville) had earned about 13,000
465 francs:

June	helped his father build a large boat for the administration (45 days)	6,000
October	went to Saint-Laurent as auxiliary bossman .	3,000
December	helped convoy a boat of the border-fixing mission sent back empty to Maripasoula . .	4,000

882 His father, entrusted with his education, let him use this 868 money in his own way; he pointed out to us with pride that for the first time in 1956 his son had been able to satisfy all his own needs, but that it was important to keep him under a firm hand until he was capable of doing a man's work alone: for that, five or six years of apprenticeship would not be too much.

868 In fact, many times we had the chance to verify it, it is 561 in this prolonged apprenticeship that are developed the seriousness
[153] of mind and the technical skill so remarkable among the Refugee Blacks. At 20 years, most of them still do not know how to do [582] anything worthwhile, and it is scarcely before 25 or 27 that they [178] become capable of /134/ painstaking work; in this respect the present tendency of the young boys toward precocious emancipation (the marriage age of men is going down to 20 and even 18 years) runs the risk of having very unfortunate consequences for the future of the Refugee Blacks.

429 The person charged with the education of a girl exercises the powers of a mother toward her. It is she who authorizes
[582] her to marry, and by giving her the pangi, married women's garment, gives her symbolically her freedom as a woman. It is [583] to her that the first husband pays the price of the virginity of the girl.

429 Until very recent times the authority of the guardian had 561 remained very strong and was prolonged very late; he had the [861] right to strike his ward to make him obey, and he exercised his [582] powers until the time when, judging the child's education finished, he authorized him to marry, which formerly seldom happened before 25-27 years.

Fintiman (of Boniville), about 50 years old in 1958, tells that his father, entrusted with his upbringing, did not authorize him to marry before he was completely established as a carpenter and boat-builder, at about the age of 27. Until that age he remained subject to the most tyrannical authority; his father intended especially to forbid him to go out in the evening, and in order to carry on a clandestine affair he had to use nocturnal fishing expeditions as a pretext!

429 When a boy's guardian judges his education finished, he 884 helps him to build his house and gives him tools, a trunk containing clothes, and a hammock. Henceforward the boy must make his own way in life.

429 All during his lifetime he will continue to show the greatest 576 respect to the person who raised him and often, speaking of that
601 person, he will say: "my father" or "my mother."

601 When a Refugee Black says in the course of a conversation, "My father used to do this," he often means the man who brought him up; if he wishes to speak of his true father, he will say, "My own father who made me." Likewise when he says "My [128] grandfather," he usually means a great-uncle. This confusion
[114] makes research on family life risky as long as one does not
[593] possess any census by names; apparently it has led several authors into error, making them believe that among the Refugee Blacks the father brings up his children himself, when this is on the contrary the exception.

429 The guardian continues to have a certain power all his life over his ward become adult. He is the conciliator to whom one applies first if there is any complaint about his ward.

This power of conciliation is bequeathed by the guardian at his death, as is the guardianship itself.

593 613 152 Role of the mother. For the Refugee Blacks, the sacred tie is pre-eminently the one which attaches them to their mother and through her to the ancestors of the lineage. It is manifested with respect to the mother by a delicate and deep feeling of affection which applies also, less directly, to the close relatives on the maternal side and to all the members of the lineage. It is not [601] idly that within the lineage the men call one another brothers; the obligations /135/ they have toward one another are accepted by all with joy, and each tries his best to fulfill them, for he transposes to them the sentiment of love which he feels toward his mother.

114 562 593 The term matriarchy has often been used wrongly with regard to the Refugee Blacks, letting people believe that the woman exercises authority there; this is an error, the woman does not enter their councils and from a political point of view does not exist in their eyes; the woman has influence and authority only as mother, and over her own children.

593 The mother's authority remains very great over her sons after they have become men; none of them will undertake an important enterprise or leave for a long trip without consulting his mother; if she is absolutely opposed to the project, he will scarcely dare go on with it. We heard in December, 1952 a man of 45, M..., serious and intelligent, say to us with regret: "I would certainly go with you as far as Cayenne, but my mother does not wish it."

593 The same year, G..., man of about 50, particularly serious and hard-working, had saved up enough to buy an outboard motor; his mother, aged near 75 years, advised him absolutely not to make this purchase, claiming that he would be the object of jealousy and was risking being the victim of evil [765] spells; he gave up the project. He did not dare carry it out until 1957 after the mourning for his mother (dead in 1955) had been lifted.

To let one's mother be in need is considered a shame; if a mother has several sons, they divide up the purchases to be made for her benefit; each year one of them will cut the clearing intended for the mother; in exchange she will furnish couac and vegetables as long as her strength will allow her to work.

591 Ordinarily each of the sons, when he becomes 20 or 25 years old, builds himself in his village a house in which he lives alone. But it often happens that a man who has reached adulthood continues to live in his mother's house; for example, in 1952 in Loka village, Ayaubédé, about 40 years of age, was living with his mother Chii.

593 As for the authority of the mother over her daughters, it is [582] still much more strict and lasts all her life. The daughter may not marry without the authorization of her mother or of her [591] female guardian if she is not brought up by her mother. The married daughter has the use of a house that her husband built for her, but this house is situated near that of her mother. Since household life is intermittent and reduced to its simplest expression, she remains under the domination of her mother until the latter's death. Especially, she cannot travel without her permission.

593 In former times the authority of mothers over daughters 178 was tyrannical; they say that one might see an octogenarian mother requisition an old man's arm to strike her sexagenarian daughter who had disobeyed her. But nowadays this authority is battered [579] down by the development of individualism. From this results a growing dissoluteness in the girls and an increasing instability of unions.

593 428 The nature of the relations with the mother is shown by the custom of inheritance. /136/ If a man dies while his mother is still living, his belongings return to her. She may keep them or divide them among the members of the lineage.

593 Role of the father. The father has no power over the children, but in general he is respected by them and his sons make no important decision without asking for his opinion.

In the very frequent case where the guardianship of the children is entrusted to the mother, the father exercises a de facto authority as long as the family group lasts. But in case of its break-up he loses any right over the children.

In general the father loves his children very much, but in the way Europeans love their nephews, he avoids taking a hand too closely in their education, which is the responsibility of the uncles, who might invite him not to busy himself with family affairs.

593 429 591 But if the father has received the guardianship of one or several children, the situation is completely different. If the family group breaks up, he takes them along with him. Besides, as a general rule, even if he gets along well with his wife, he settles in his own village the children whose guardianship has been entrusted to him, close to his maternal family; henceforth it is he who will provide entirely not only for their maintenance but for their food; except for periods when the husband spends some time with them near his wife, the latter no longer has to feed them.

593 429 If the father has received the guardianship of a child, he can in turn delegate it under his responsibility to someone of his lineage. We have noted several examples of this practice. For example Afoondo (Aw.B.1, F56), about 23 years old in 1957, had been entrusted to his father Koniman (Lapé), who had himself turned him over to his own mother Awènkina.

593 The fact that some children are under the guardianship 429 of their father changes nothing about their position with respect
769 to ancestor worship and does not entail any payment or compen-
591 sation whatever on the part of the father. When the child has grown up he will be able to come back to live in his maternal kin group (which he does most often) or stay in his father's village. On this point there is no precise customary obligation.

593 The father plays an important role with respect to the 884 children when they reach manhood; he procures their ɔbia for them and transmits the knowledge and magical powers which he himself received from his father.

429 Inheritance of guardianship. At the death of the guardian, his 428 office is bequeathed in the same way as his goods and according to the same principle of dispersion of the inheritance. If he was raising several children, the guardianship of each one will be bequeathed individually.

For example Béniti († 1944) was raising OK... 1944, daughter of her daughter Baïkom, and OW... 1942, daughter of her son Fintiman and a woman of Papaïston village. She bequeathed the first to her daughter Kulina, the second to her daughter Baïkom settled in Loka village. W... thus found herself taken to a village which was neither that of her maternal nor her paternal relatives. Such cases are not rare. The child's uncles, who in principle could take back the guardianship, never seem to oppose, in practice, its being bequeathed. /137/

The spiritual power kept by the guardian over his ward after he becomes adult is bequeathed in the same manner. Thus, in the preceding example, Béniti († 1955) /sic/ bequeathed the spiritual tutelage she was keeping over each one of her adult sons and daughters whom she had raised herself, in part to outsiders to her lin[illegible]ge.

428

She bequeathed thus her guardianship over Fintiman (46 years) to the grand man over Klémenti (43 years) to Samalobi, the grand man's brother over ○ Kulina (38 years) to Samalobi over ○ Eliana (40 years) to the grand man.

But she bequeathed nothing concerning her last two children, ○ Baïkom (35 years) and ○ Maria (28) respectively brought up by △ Malobi, Béniti's husband, and by ○ Aliki, an old woman of the Dju lineage. It will behoove these two persons to bequeath, at their death, the spiritual tutelage over the girls they have raised.

It is for lack of a more appropriate word that we use the word "marriage" with respect to the Refugee Blacks; the word concubinage is unpleasant to use; nevertheless it fits better what the union of a man and woman represents in the thought of the Refugee Blacks as in their social life.

In the organization we have just described no stable and permanent tie between a man and woman is implied.

Actually the Refugee Blacks, with rare exceptions, appear to be incapable of associating a strong and lasting emotional tie with sexual union. They are unstable in this respect, always in search of new adventures and not settling on any one. Their unions are more inspired by material concern (getting the 831 necessary food) than by a sentimental motive. It is very rare to meet among them the appearance of sincere and lasting love for a woman; that is sometimes seen, but it is the exception.

562 It is not enough to say that they have few emotional feelings with respect to women. In the conversations heard in the evening around the campfires a deep contempt is expressed on this subject; they even speak of the Boni women as of a foreign and almost enemy nation; they consider them besides as half irresponsible. This attitude shows through in the custom concern-[684] ing adultery, which decrees that the lover be beaten but not the wife.

581 Among the Refugee Blacks marriage is in fact a contract of maintenance between a man and woman, which provides for the execution of such-and-such work by the one for the benefit of the other, and for the wife the obligation to be faithful.
[586] This contract can be cancelled unilaterally without any sort of indemnity. It does not directly involve the relatives of the [965] spouses; it involves them only in case of the death of one spouse, for the surviving spouse must /138/ put up with the subservience
[613] of mourning. It is principally for this reason that a marriage must be officially known by both lineages, and that a divorce must be proclaimed without delay.

582 Exogamy. Marriage is forbidden between persons of the same 613 lineage. In expressing this prohibition the Refugee Blacks
614 employ the word bee (lineage in the restricted sense) and not the word lo.

613 As we have seen in studying the situation of the various lineages, the various Boni kin groups follow different rules in this regard:

--The Dju lineage, which forms only one single group from the genealogical point of view, does not allow marriage between its members;

613 614 --The Lapé lineage is divided into two groups from the genealogical point of view, but marriage between these two fractions remains prohibited. The law of exogamy is rigorously respected within this group;

--The Kotika lineage, which tends by forgetfulness of the genealogy to split into three fractions, tolerates union between members of different fractions; in 1958 there were seven cases of this. On the contrary, union is not allowed between members of the same fraction;

--The Dipélu I lineage, whose genealogy is completely known, does not allow marriage between its members, although for several generations it has been cut into two distinct social units, L'Enfant Perdu and Apatu villages, entirely separated geographically and each possessing its own head;

--It is the same for Dipélu II, but marriage is permitted between Dipélu I and Dipélu II;

--The Papaïston lineage allows the possibility of union between the principal fraction and the small Papaïston 2 fraction. But there is no marriage between members of the principal fraction;

613 614 588 --The Awara Bakka lineage on the contrary tolerates unions not only between the members of its three fractions but also recently within the principal fraction:

○Kyéti (Aw.B.1, E30) and △Pitipiti (Aw.B.1, F3).

This situation is an object of scandal to the other groups, and it does not seem that we are present here at the beginning of a general transformation.

613 614 It is to be noted that the possibility of marriage is allowed between the members of groups presumed to be of the same origin but separated for a long time, like Dipélu I and Dipélu II.

613 614 In general, one can say that the law of exogamy is maintained firmly within the fractions which know completely their genealogy. Union between classificatory "brothers" and "sisters" belonging to different fractions remains always prohibited in principle, but as for all the institutions of the Refugee Blacks, the prohibition ceases to be observed if fear of suprahuman sanctions weaken. /139/

This is what explains the difference in attitude among the lineages. In the Awara Bakka lineage, people do not remember [784] that marriages between fractions may have been followed by maladies or misfortunes, and for this reason they are no longer feared.

In the Kotika lineage it was the same, but an event which took place in 1958 threw consternation. A young woman, Awini [789] (K1, E37, Boniville), died suddenly, and divination showed that [784] she had been struck down by the kunu for having married her [761] classificatory brother Sintamann (K3, E145, Boniville). However, they belonged to two different fractions and their common relationship was the farthest removed possible in the lineage (tenth-degree relatives).

1. This word appears to come from the Portuguese pecado, sin.

broad sense, is considered an offense against society and against religious law; it exposes the lineage to the vengeance of the gods who exercise the kunu on it. But in the thought of the Refugee Blacks, if incest unleashes the functioning of existing kunu, it [114] does not create new ones. What has been written on this subject by several authors seems inexact to us, at least for the Boni. [761] In the example put forth above Awini's death was attributed to the kunu brought to bear for a long time by the yɔ́ka of a man assassinated in former times by a member of the lineage.

684 Committing pikadu is one of the most serious offenses that 688 a Refugee Black can commit; of course, as in the rest of the moral prescriptions, no abstract principle is called on: the elders teach the children from their earliest years: "If you com-[613] mit pikadu, you will fall ill or die." The head of the lineage inflicts severe punishments on the guilty people to boot: for the man, to make a large number of planks with an adze; for the woman, to prepare and winnow as preparation for the next broko de several touques /cans/ of rice, a long and tedious job.

588 However, if in spite of insults and blows a man and woman of the same bee absolutely insist on marrying, people end up, for the sake of peace and quiet, by accepting the ac-
[769] complished fact. They go to the fraga tiki to make an offering [778] of tafia to the ancestors to ask them to forgive the offense
[782] committed. No reprobation extends to the children born of this union.

613 In the Awara Bakka lineage, which has practically re-588 jected the law of exogamy, the principle of a sanction remains [684] and there is a pretense of chasing the guilty ones across the village.

Not being able to use coercion and not having the right to expel a member of the lineage, captain and council can exert no material sanction.

613 The same notion of pikadu is attached to unions between 684 persons of the same patrilineage, although these patrilineages have no effective organization and exist only by the transmission of the fundamental interdiction, bwasi kina.

[819] Before concluding an official or even clandestine union, the man and woman make sure that they do not have the same bwasi kina and in such a case give up their project; that, even if they are from different tribes, for example a Boni woman and a Saramaka.

684 This prohibition is of a purely religious nature and does 688 not entail any social sanctions; those concerned are convinced 984 that in such a case a suprahuman sanction would strike them in the form of sickness or accident.

582 Prohibitions limiting marriage. Outside of the great interdiction, [613] pikadu, which is attached to unions within one matrilineage and one patrilineage, two prohibitions limiting marriage are found among the Refugee Blacks, which they express thus:

[595] --I cannot have two wives at the same time in the same lineage. For example I am forbidden to marry two "sisters"
[587] at the same time, but if I break with my wife, I may marry her classificatory "sister" or any other woman of the same lineage;

[835] --I may not have relations, even passing ones, with a
[587] woman who has been married to my brother by the same mother; in particular, if my brother has just died, I shall not be able to marry his widow.

The Boni are not capable of explaining the deep reasons for these interdictions, but they interpret them as purely social [684] and not religious prohibitions. The offender is simply threatened with being beaten.

[171] The first of these rules seems very widely accepted in Black Africa, as much in patrilineal societies as in a matrilineal system.

[171] The second of these rules is characteristic in the Akan (Agni, Baoulé) culture area and shows that the family custom of the Refugee Blacks is related much more directly to that of the Agni-Ashanti group than to that of the Dahomey.

184 One can note that this rule is exactly contrary to the 587 Saramaka custom, which obliges the widow to marry one of the 114 brothers of the dead man; this custom has been interpreted by several authors as coming from imitation of the levirate of the Jews, with which certain rebels were acquainted (it is known that among the slaveowners there were many Jews).

184 589 Whatever its origin, we should note that the Saramaka custom has no relation, as far as its legal content is concerned, to the levirate, nor to the inheritance of widows as it is practiced in numerous African societies. It does not correspond in any way to the transmission of a right over the widow, since this right does not exist; it probably results from the idea that the widow is better protected from the effects of the dead man's jealousy if she marries one of his brothers. Besides, she may [613] choose from among all his classificatory brothers, in the matrilineage as in the patrilineage, which assures her of a wide [586] choice. She can break this union without any compensation after some months of living together and resume complete liberty.

582 Statistics of marriages between kin groups. We have listed on the table opposite, the total unions for which we have been able to identify with certainty the kinship of the spouses, including those broken by divorce and death. Their total number is 411.

582 619 The table emphasizes the more or less great frequency of unions between /141/ /table appears here/ /142/ such-and-such kin groups, as well as the frequency of unions between Boni women and men of other tribes, DJUKA, PARAMAKA, and SARAMAKA.

Out of a total of 411 unions of Boni women one notes:

--327 with BONI (80%);
-- 50 with DJUKA (12%);
-- 21 with SARAMAKA (5%);
-- 5 with PARAMAKA (1%);
[648] -- 8 with Creoles from Surinam (2%):

The proportion of intertribal marriages (20%) is high; it results from the frequent presence on the Maroni of Djuka or Saramaka boatmen coming to carry on transport. The reciprocal is not true; marriages between Boni men and women 582 619 of other groupings are rare; that is because the Boni have almost no occasion to frequent the Tapanahoni, where economic activity is nil.

For 123 married men of the villages on the French bank there were in November, 1958, 11 unions with Djuka women, or 8 per cent. No marriage to Saramaka or Paramaka women existed.

582 613 The table confirms besides that marriages between members of different kin groups are entirely free and are not subject to any preoccupation with exchange or reciprocity. For example, out of 60 unions between Boni women of the Lapé lineage and Boni men, we have:

6	with men of the Dipélu I lineage
7	-- -- - - Dipélu II --
7	-- -- - - Papaïstone --
11	-- -- - - Awara Bakka --
4	-- -- - - Dju --
5	-- -- - - Dipélu I /Me/ --
20	-- -- - - Kotika --

(628) In fact, the geographical proximity of the villages has the most direct influence on unions.

582 613 628 For example a high proportion of women from Kormotibo (Dip. II) married men from Papaïston and reciprocally.

That comes from the fact that these villages are near each other and isolated from others. It is the same for Kotika and L'Enfant Perdu (Dip. I). In the small Afi lineage, divided between Kormotibo and Asisi-Awara Bakka villages, more than half the women are married to inhabitants of these two villages.

582 619 621 Certain personal affinities and habits of living have an indirect influence. For example, the Djuka boatmen passing through Boni country habitually stay in Asisi-Awara Bakka, because they are received in the homes of some of their own

619 people who have lived there for a long time. They strike up
62 relationships with the people of Asisi, and that favors new unions. This explains the high proportion of unions between the women of this village and the Djuka (13 out of 75). On the contrary, almost no marriages to Djuka are observed in Papaïston village, where no Djuka has settled permanently. /143/

584 The marriage proposal. The suitor is obliged to ask for the 613 assent of his own mother and his uncles (at the very least the 604 eldest of his classificatory uncles); in general he asks his father also.

[604] If two of his classificatory uncles are expressly opposed, the plan must be abandoned. But there is no possible sanction for disobedience.

The suitor does not make the proposal himself; after making sure of the agreement of the girl he sends two persons, one of his uncles or brothers and one of his sisters in the classificatory sense.

These envoys speak to the woman's mother and uncles assembled together. If they agree, they go to ask for the assent of the head of the lineage. The men and women of the woman's lineage drink together a liter of tafia brought by the [969] envoys. Before drinking, the doyen of the lineage pours a little of it on the ground while invoking the ancestors, asking them to perpetuate the accord of the household and to grant them health and fecundity. This ceremony is made on the spot and they do not go to the fraga tiki, for they would be afraid to present themselves again at the fraga tiki in case of a break-up; prayer said anywhere in the village is not binding.

The two envoys, man and woman, play a very precise role. The man represents the postulant (it is a sort of marriage by proxy).

585 613 The head of the lineage calls a classificatory sister of the girl. He takes her by the hand and leads her to the suitor's envoy, saying: "I give thee this woman."

Then he calls a classificatory brother of the girl. He leads him to the suitor's envoy, saying: "I give thee this man."

This second part of the ceremony is purely symbolic; there is no question at all that this man and this woman are marrying. Its purpose seems to be to show the perfect equality of the man and the woman in the marriage.

[969] The words pronounced in the invocation to the ancestors are: "We give (this) woman to (this) man; may they live together, may they not be sick, may they have children, children who live."

585 If it is a question of the first marriage of a young girl, the fiancé comes, aided by his friends, to build her a house. [583] He builds her a boat and buys for her what is necessary for domestic life. [429] When the person who is bringing up the girl judges the time to be ripe, she gives her the pãŋgi, garment of married women, authorizing thus the consummation of the marriage.

[613] [969] The husband who built the house asks the elders of his wife's lineage to come in front of the house to throw tafia, to ask the ancestors that the couple be fecund and live a long time in this house.

584 613 Here, for example, is how the marriage proposal to Chitaĩna (Aw.B.1, F43, Asisi village) by Déési (L1, F45, Loka village) proceeded in 1948.

To represent him Déési had sent his classificatory brother Tamu /144/ (L1, F32), older than he by about 15 years, and his classificatory aunt, Yaana (L1, E39). (See the genealogical table of the Lapé lineage.)

584 613 The envoys, after making it known the evening before that they were coming, presented themselves at 10 o'clock in the morning in Asisi-Awara Bakka village. Present were Irma, Chitaïna's mother; Alémin (Aw.B.1, E40), actual uncle; Antonu (Aw.B.1, E47), one of the oldest of the classificatory uncles; Namu (Aw.B.1, E48), classificatory aunt; and the girl's brothers and sisters by the same mother.

Tamu took the floor, unfolding Déési's merits and stating that he had serious intentions. The eldest of the uncles declared 585 613 acceptance. Chitaïna having fled according to custom, he took her young sister Boomi, who was only five years old, by the hand and led her to Tamu, saying, "I give thee this woman." Then he took Abéni, Chitaïna's older brother, by the hand and led him to Yaana, saying, "I give thee this man."

[769] Next, tafia was poured on the ground while the ancestors were invoked in favor of the /new/ household.

The liter of tafia brought by Déési was shared symbolically in the evening among all the village inhabitants including the Afi lineage there.

585 431 For the installation of the household, since there was no more room near Irma's house to build another, the latter gave one of the two houses she possessed.

584 602 [595] Here is still another example concerning the two wives of Fintiman (Dju, F6, Boniville village).

For his first wife Mimi (K3, E156, Boniville) he sent his brother and sister by the same mother, Klémenti and Eliana, who approached Mimi's mother and her classificatory uncle Lébiman.

Fintiman had previously made sure of the agreement of his own father Malobi (Dip. I, E50), who had brought him up, of his mother Béniti, and of his uncle Diolè (Dju, E1), the eldest of the classificatory uncles.

584 602 To ask for his second wife Bugi (Aw.B.1, F41, Asisi-Awara Bakka vge.) he had sent Dosu (Dip. I, E4, Boniville), his father Malobi's classificatory brother (although a very distant relative) and his younger sister by the same mother, Kulina, who made the marriage proposal to Bugi's mother and to her classificatory uncles Antonu and Mato.

582 178 [701] Age of marriage. In former times there was a very precise custom about this. Men were not authorized to marry before about 30 years of age, constituting until that age the immediately mobilizable armed force. Women were authorized by their mothers to marry only when they had reached complete physical development, or between 20 and 22 years. This was the safeguard of a society deprived of all medical help against obstetrical risk, particularly serious for very young women. When the fiancé had temporarily emigrated to earn his living, the marriage could be put off until the age of 25 years and more. [184] This late marriage of girls was still met with only a few years ago among the Djuka, more faithful to custom. There was on the average five to ten years of age difference between husband and wife. /145/

For about the past ten years, under the influence of the relaxation of family discipline, the marriage age has gone down considerably, as much for the man as for the woman. Nearly all the girls married during the last two years were from 15 to 17 years old. It can be stated that the average marriage age of girls is 18 years (1).

1. We are speaking here of the age at the time of the consummation of marriage.

582 About a third of the young men marry between 18 and 20; nearly all the others before 25.

However, part of the girls choose as husbands men appreciably older than they, so that the average age difference between husband and wife remains close to six years.

[587] As the man and woman advance in age, this average age
[162] difference of six years is maintained in the course of successive remarriages until old age. It decreases then only by the effect of demographic factors, the proportion of women in the higher age brackets being greater and greater.

162 Out of 37 women over 60 years of age in the Boni villages on the French bank, only 14 were married; all the others had been widows or divorcees for a long time.

582 Generally speaking, the custom of the Refugee Blacks used to consider as immoral the marriage of a very young girl to an old man, or of a very young boy to an adult woman. 588 The weakening of family morals is clearly demonstrated by 178 two events which happened during the summer of 1960. A boy of thirteen and a half, K... of Boniville, left his guardian to join an Assisi woman, A...., 20 years older than he and with a very bad reputation to boot; some months later his example was imitated /146/ by a boy of 14 who began living with a [684] woman of 29. Nothing like that had ever been seen, and [613] people inveighed against the scandal of it; but in both cases, guardians and lineage heads showed themselves incapable of making their authority respected by force.

882 Marriage of girls. It can still be said (although things are in [562] the process of changing rapidly) that girls, kweyi umã, occupy a place apart in the thought of the Refugee Blacks; the reprobation which embraces women does not extend to them. 882 People say that girls "have good manners," and in fact most 834 of them, although naked except for a little apron, have a re- [291] served attitude, a becoming bearing, which contrast with the attitude of the married women. To tell the truth, this virtue is not so much due to natural inclinations as to the strict [593] vigilance with which their mothers surround them. The mothers literally do not let them out of their sight and permit no man to speak to them out of their presence. "Until dawn, until the cock crows, she keeps vigil," says the song, alluding to the mother who watches over her daughter's virtue. If a girl [836] comes to lose her virginity without being properly married, [597] pɔti na ɔsu, "established in a house," it is a dishonor for her mother and her near relatives.

882 Whereas little girls before puberty are left free to come [858] and go, older girls are the object of constant surveillance.
They are always under the surveillance of one of their near [883] relatives specifically designated. If they have permission to go dancing in another village, they must present themselves upon arrival to an uncle, an aunt, an older brother who will watch over them all evening.

Sometimes they build for a girl a little house where she sleeps alone ... but she is double-locked into it for the night.

At nightfall, when their mothers are busy with the prepa-
[883] ration of the meal, the girls are sent to get water or to angle for fish; there is wavering in the surveillance, and seducers know how to profit by it.

[593] Until recent times girls were held by their mothers in [584] the bonds of a strict authority, and although engaged very young, they were not authorized to marry before reaching [582] complete physical development.

584 It often used to happen that a girl might be promised by her mother to a man from her first years (they still say, although that is no longer practiced, poti mofu na umã, "to put his mouth on a girl," meaning by that to have received a promise of marriage). This plan always used to remain subject to the girl's assent when she grew up and did not constitute a contract, strictly speaking; it did not involve any payment or compensa-[593] tion whatever. A girl could not be obligated to a marriage which was absolutely displeasing to her, but the mother's authority was great enough to make these marriages come about in most cases.

[431] If a girl had not been promised, the young man who wanted to marry her used to try to attract her attention during a dance and to exchange a few words with her. /147/ Later he would give her a paddle bearing symbols of fecundity and the representation of a house and a boat. If the girl accepted the paddle, he could propose to her officially.

583 A girl's marriage does not involve any dowry in the African sense of the term, but it involves payment of the price of virginity to the mother. This payment is made after consummation of the marriage (or after defloration if there has been a clandestine union). It consists of seven pieces of cloth, a demijohn of tafia, and various imported objects (the whole representing in 1958 about 8,000 francs, which is relatively small for the Refugee Blacks). It really has to do with the price of virginity, for nothing is paid back if there is a break-up. The man moreover gives the girl white beads /possibly "pearls" --Tr./, red cloth, and sweetmeats which constitute the payment of her akka.

[429] The price of virginity is paid to the person who has raised the girl, even if it is a man. This person divides it equally with the mother or, if the latter is dead, with the mother's sisters.

For example, for O Baïkom (D,u, F10), brought up by her father Malobi in Loka village, her husband Moomu (Kotika) paid the price of virginity to Malobi who shared it with his wife Béniti.

[604] [613] No payment is made to the uncles or to the head of the lineage.

836 The fact that a girl may carry on a clandestine affair and be deflowered without having been properly proposed to is con-
[599] sidered a shame for the mothe[illegible]ut if the seducer confesses and pays the price of virginity, honor is restored.

Defloration does not necessarily entail marriage, for the seducer does not always intend to take on the maintenance of a household.

If the girl is deflowered too young, her mother does not give her the pãgi and continues to forbid her to have sexual relations, for she fears that she may become pregnant. Now for 848 a girl, becoming pregnant without having concluded a contract
558 of maintenance with a man is an extreme shame, for that means she is not worth anything.

848 If the girl is pregnant, the man may not abandon her: that would make a great to-do between the two kin groups: he must stay with her at least until the birth of the child.

883 836 178 [582] Nowadays among the Boni things tend to happen completely otherwise than custom makes provision for. The general opinion is that girls can no longer be held down, that they escape more and more from the authority of their mothers; many of them begin to run wild at about 14 or 15, and people are obliged to marry them off precipitately at 15 or 16. It is difficult to say what the proportion of these hasty marriages is, but the recriminations heard on all sides on the subject of the shamelessness of girls give the idea that it is increasing. In the [582] villages on the French bank, out of nine girls married in 1958 [848] there were only four marriages concluded according to regulations; the five others had been arranged hastily either because the girl was pregnant (two cases) or because she had laid herself open to scandal. /148/

582 Nearly all girls married between 1952 and 1956 were 15 to 17 years old.

584 This is about how things happen:

A man who is attracted by a girl tries to exchange a few [537] words with her unknown to her mother. There are special forms for these declarations. One speaks in a low voice, very fast, using special formulas. This is how one of our boatmen, one evening in October, 1952, addressed young Lomé, age 15, of Boniville village, who had gotten away from her mother on the pretext of going to get water for us.

584 539 "Woman, I love thee, I wish to live with thee, I wish to marry thee. That which God put in me I cannot take away (1).

1. Which means: I cannot change, you must take me as I am.

584 539 I do not know whether thou lovest me, whether thou wilt answer yes or no; perhaps I am not so handsome as thou, but I cannot help loving thee. If thou lovest me, tell me clearly. I have come, I have attached my boat to a rock, I have wet my feet before reaching land (2)."

> 2. High-flown words to which no precise meaning can be attached; it is a kind of verbal music whose formulas vary infinitely.

"Come back tomorrow, come back, I cannot answer thee today, I cannot."

"I know for today, but not for tomorrow (3); yield to me,

> 3. One must understand: It is necessary to decide today.

be mine, I shall give thee the garment (4)."

> 4. The man lays down one of his garments at the home of the woman who has agreed to marry him.

584 Our departure on our tour the next day put an end to his attempts for the time being!

836 584 It often happens that the girl allows herself to be seduced; her mother soon learns of it from the village people. She flies into a passion, beats her daughter to obtain a confession without [558] which she can obtain nothing from the supposed seducer. It is an extreme shame for a mother not to receive the price of her

836 684 [558] daughter's virginity: the other women will make fun of her and as for the men, they will be unanimous in laughing cruelly at the new trick played on the women. Now certain girls refuse obstinately to confess, or they have already had several adventures, so that nobody succeeds in knowing the truth. After many recriminations and arguments the affair proceeds no further.

If it has been possible to identify the seducer with certainty, the mother, arming herself with a stick, goes from village to village to find him; his uncles intervene and end by settling the business by asking the mother to accept, since there is nothing else to do, the payment for virginity. This sum absolutely must be paid; if the young man were not able to do it, his uncles would pay it for him even if they have to turn against him ultimately. The mother accepts the payment, honor is safe.

583 In many cases the couple consider themselves as joined, at least temporarily; the man prepares, if he is hard working, to build a house for his wife. If he is not hard working, he simply promises to make one for her some day; in reality he has spared himself this great labor; the woman will have to wait for years unless her mother or one of her uncles dies, bequeathing her his or her house. /149/

836 684 Observation in Boniville in October, 1956:

A village woman comes to complain to Fintiman that his nephew and ward Doni has deflowered her daughter Elina, 15 years old, in July of the same year. She learned it indirectly, and the daughter expressly confessed it. Doni admitted the facts; he promised to pay the indemnity at the end of the border-fixing mission when he has received his pay. Elina continues to wear the kwey until further orders and does not show any embarrassment. Doni comes back in the evening. I hear Fintiman reprimand him, but only for form's sake: "Deflowering a girl when one does not intend to live with her is something which is 684 payment of her akka, namely two camisas, a string of white beads which she will wear on her left wrist, and a bottle of syrup which she will offer to her akka while drinking it. Doni does not bother to face the mother and does not intend to see the girl again; it is his sister Maria who will attend to the errand.

That done, the mother will accept the fait accompli and will not show her anger. She will wait for the payment.

584 One also hears talk rather often of the clandestine con-936 summation of a properly arranged marriage, the engaged couple wishing thus to force the hand of their guardians and obtain their freedom sooner.

587 Remarriage of widows or divorcées. It does not give rise to any payment, but the marriage proposal is made to the woman's uncles and the head of her lineage in the same form as for a girl. In such a case it is no longer a question of asking for an authorization (a man would have to have the worst reputation for the woman's lineage to refuse the marriage) but to obtain the benediction of the ancestors on the household. Moreover, it is [613] very important for the heads of both lineages to be notified of this marriage, for in case of the death of husband or wife the other will have to bear the weight of the mourning.

581 Women are guided in their choice by sensual attraction but largely also by self-interest. They take care to marry a man who has, as it is said among us, some future, a position. The owners of outboard motors do not fail to pass at reduced speed by the villages in order to be admired by the women.

Men who have a reputation for "working hard" (for work is the sole wealth in Boni country) are frequently chosen by girls even though they may have one or two wives already.

592 The household. Household life is a limited association, freely
593 agreed upon by two beings who live totally independent of each other, the emotional life of each remaining almost entirely centered upon his maternal family. It entails reciprocal duties:

--For the man, to build a house for his wife in her village, to construct a new boat for her every three or four years, to cut a clearing for her each year /150/ and help in planting it, to furnish her with imported commodities, cloth, salt, kerosene, tools, which she needs, as well as game and smoke-dried fish;

--For the woman, to farm the clearing and furnish her husband when he comes to visit her with couac and the vegetables
[462] necessary for his food. (The man, used to living as a bachelor, owns his own cooking utensils and most of the time prepares his meals himself.)

This system of intermittent conjugal life seems to assure the Boni a perfect balance at the same time that it permits them [562] to satisfy their taste for change. The men divide their life among work, visits to their different wives, hunting and fishing expeditions; their life is thus constantly renewed and they are protected against tendencies toward apathy and mental inertia.

In general, as long as the union lasts, the woman fulfills [241] exactly her obligations; although the yield from the clearing is [422] her property and the excess of the harvest is sold for her ex-
[434] clusive benefit, the man is assured of getting from her all the [591] provisions he needs. On the other hand, many men, through laziness, get out of constructing a house for their wives and the latter continue to live with their mothers. In the villages on the French bank about 20 such cases were observed in 1958.
591/ Several cases are even noted in which a woman, aged but still 592 having unmarried children, one or two of her daughters and their children are living together in one house. For example, in Asisi village, nine persons were living together in the very small house of their mother and grandmother Tini.

593 342 461 [198] Nothing marks better the small place the conjugal bond has in a man's life; imagine the torture which this forced living and crowding together represent for each of these women! The Boni of today, much richer than their ancestors and better equipped with tools, are singularly lazier in building houses; no longer is anyone seen to sculpture and decorate the façades lovingly; when a man, after many recriminations, decides to build a house for his wife, he is content most of the time now with a simple shelter with plaited walls, which does not require 30 days work.

595 As we have said, each man may take as many wives as he wishes, on condition that he can supply their needs; but in practice the maintenance of a household is so heavy a load that most men have only one or two wives; only one to our knowledge has three. In fact, it is contrary to custom to free oneself by paying for work which one must do for one's wife. We have never heard it said that a rich man (many of them have hundreds of thousands of francs in savings) paid money in place of a piece of work, or paid someone to do it for him. The furnishing of imported objects is particularly burdensome, especially cloth, kitchen utensils (Boni women are infatuated with aluminum objects), and occasionally jewels. The Boni conceded in 1958 that the maintenance of a wife amounted to 30 to 40 thousand francs a year at least. If one considers that a hard-working man earned about 120,000 francs a year, that he spent 30 to 40 thousand francs a year for himself, that he often had /151/ in addition to provide for the needs of his aged parents and share the expenses of the festivals of the lineage, one sees that he could not have more than two wives at the same time. As for less hard-working men, who have no more than 60 to 80 thousand francs a year in ready money, they have a great deal of trouble in facing the maintenance of a single household, and many divorces have no other cause.

593 Among the Refugee Blacks some very devoted couples are [591] seen, who spend their whole lives together and who, in their old
[163] age, have completely united their destinies, living in the same house, either in the woman's village or the man's: for example, in the village of Lapé Tabiki, Buru and his wife Asamani, in 1952 aged about 70 years, together for 45 years and having had eight children. But such cases are exceptional. Besides, they [581] are not admired and held up as an example as one might believe; this man and this woman suited each other, they remained together; if some day they no longer get along, they will divorce, that is all.

595 Polygamy. Polygamy in the African sense of the term, that is, the simultaneous maintenance of several regular households, is exceptional among the Refugee Blacks because of their mode of living:

[511] band; an economy based mainly on wage earning and involving a relatively high standard of living makes it impossible for most men to maintain more than one household;

[461] --Even if a man had sizable financial means at his disposal, he could scarcely maintain more than two households; for it is not acceptable, at least nowadays, for him to have done by others the customary chores: clearings, boats, house.

168 On January 1, 1958 out of 134 men over 20 years old in 595 the villages on the French bank, whose lives were well known to us, there were:

Men maintaining three households	1	1%
" " two households	18	13%
" " one household	104	77%
[589] Bachelors, widowers, or recent divorcés	11	8%

595 Sticking to statistics, one could say that the Refugee Blacks are monogamous in the proportion of 85 per cent. But 581 it is an apparent monogamy, for unions are not stable; their 586 average duration is about ten years; in fact the Refugee Blacks are practicing polygamy over a period of time.

595 A man who takes another wife apologizes to the first and gives her a liter of tafia, asking her to live on good terms with [586] the co-wife. A certain number of wives do not accept co-wives and get divorced.

589 Most men have had, in general, four or five wives 586 successively. Most of the time these marriages have been 163 broken by the wife. /152/

Example S... (65 years old in 1957) had at least seven wives:

-- Nanay (Dip. II)†	1 child	divorced
Baakauman (K)†	3 children	"
1 Paramaka woman	1 child dead	"
Saumè (Dip. I)	1 child	"
Paata (Boniville)	no children	"
Emma (Asisi-Aw.B.)	no children	"
Masé (K)	"	marriage extant in 1958

Kwami (50 years old in 1958) had four wives:

-- Apinda (Asisi)	no children	divorced
Saayé (Dip. I)	several children	"
Do (Lapé)	1 child dead	"
Noémi (Asisi-Aw.B.)	1 child	marriage extant in 1958

582 Example of the family life of G... (50 years old in 1958).
About 1935 G... married M... (Kotika), a serious-minded and 159 intelligent woman who was very attached to him. Neverthe-
837 less, about the same time he had a clandestine affair with S...,
[847] classificatory sister of M..., whom he made pregnant (abortion).

[837]
[613] Since it is forbidden to have two wives at the same time in the same lineage, that produced a scandal and his uncles had to intervene so that he would not be beaten.

After that, without leaving M...., he took officially another wife, A... (Papalston). They lived together nearly [839] eight years, but A... began to deceive him while he was on a [586] trip. The first time, he only threatened her; the third time he repudiated her.

[589] A year later A...., who wished she had him back, had her uncles intervene so that she might come back into his favor. G...., through deference to her uncles, accepted against his will.

Thus he found himself engaged in three unions, M...., [586] A...., and T.... He thought this situation was leading him to ruin and sacrificed T... although he had no fault to find with her.

[586] Some time afterward A... began to deceive him again and he repudiated her once and for all.

Finally he took a last wife, B... (Asisi), by whom he had no children.

On each of these undertakings he had to submit to violent scenes by his first wife M...., who was very attached to him and would have liked to keep him for herself alone. Nevertheless, she never divorced him and did not provoke difficulties with her co-wives.

[842] He had a child by M... after more than 15 years of sterile marriage.

In 1958 G... was living with M... and B...., who got along well together. He was not looking for any more new adventures.

Relations between husband and mother-in-law. As is commonly observed in Africa, the husband has the duty to respect his mother-in-law, to have a reserved attitude toward her. /153/ A curious custom exists on this subject among the Refugee Blacks: If he inadvertently arrives at the village wharf at the moment when she is bathing, he must pay her compensation in the form of a camisa. This is a reciprocal obligation.

[513] He may sleep under the same roof as she when the village is crowded, but not habitually.

606 607 On the other hand, the custom of the Refugee Blacks differs sharply from African customs on one important point: it does not call for any material obligation toward the mother-in-law or the wife's brothers. The husband is not at all required to give them presents or to contribute toward their maintenance. In fact, the wife gives her mother part of what her husband gives her.

684 Adultery. The custom of the Refugee Blacks concerning adultery is extremely curious. The outraged husband has the right to inflict a public punishment on the lover, which he must stand without defending himself. In the absence of the husband his brother is qualified to strike in his place. This punishment must take place in a village in the presence of witnesses capable of intervening if the punishment goes beyond accepted limits.

Only bare fists may be used.

A man can always escape too brutal a punishment by taking refuge in the water. His adversary may not follow him into it under pain of a severe punishment by the grand man. He can also take refuge in the bush.

[692] The husband's honor being thus publicly restored, the row is over; in such cases some men are seen to beat the wife in addition, but this is not the general case; the true custom does not call for the wife to be beaten because she is considered irresponsible. She can either be repudiated or threatened

684 with repudiation in case of a second offense. The rule is to 586 repudiate her, under pain of ridicule.

In 1951 G..., of Kotika village, was informed that his 837 wife A...., of Asisi village, 25 years old, was deceiving him with a boy of the same age named K.... The first time he 684 encountered K in a village he took issue with him; K... confessed without difficulty. G... delivered a strong punch which threw him to the ground, and that was all. He did not ad-[586] minister any punishment to his wife but immediately let her know that he was repudiating her. Some time after, K...
[576] asked to be reconciled with him. He asked his pardon and [431] gave him a bottle of tafia (this is obligatory for reconciliation).
Since, the two men have again been friends.

It also happens that the grand man levies a more or less stiff fine on the guilty man.

837 According to the elders, adultery was rare in former [586] times. If a woman was tired of her husband, she divorced him openly, but she did not deceive him. Nowadays it seems to be rather frequent.

586 Divorce. The Refugee Blacks divorce each other as easily as they join together; in general it is the woman who decides to break up the union because she finds her husband too poor, too lazy, or simply because she wants to change. /154/

In the case of divorce the woman keeps all that her husband has given to her or made for her (utensils, house, boat), but of course the man keeps all his own belongings; this rupture changes nothing about the possession of property since no object was owned jointly.

581 The rule is the following: at the time of the marriage the man puts down symbolically several personal objects (fabrics, utensils) in the woman's home. As long as these objects are in her home the marriage remains in force, the wife is held to fidelity or at the very least, if there is adultery, it is regarded as such and entails the sanction related above.

No Boni leaving on a three-month trip is sure of finding his wife again. He may very well find another man installed in his place, officially, without his being able to say anything. As for those who leave for a long time, this is practically a certainty.

This is a misfortune which however they take philosophically, thinking above all of the work furnished for nothing. What concerns them most is not to be deceived clandestinely, [684] [626] for the final result is the same: they are practically obliged to repudiate the wife in such a case, for it is unworthy of a man to forgive, and in addition they will be the laughingstock of the population.

Several of our boatmen made the following speech to their wives at the time of leaving for a two-months' tour: "If you have enough of me in my absence, if you cannot wait for me, go and take my belongings to the house of such-and-such a brother; I shall not be angry and will not do anything to you on my return."

581 Custom is so favorable to the women that practically nothing guarantees the private contract made between the man and woman at the time of marriage. Since this contract is [586] essentially founded on a material association, the man cutting the clearing and the woman farming it, one might believe that the woman would be held to fulfilling her contract even in case of the marriage's breaking up, but there is nothing of the sort.

586 As far as the clearing already cut and planted is concerned, if it is on the land of the wife's family, the man can demand nothing. However, some women continue to furnish couac for a year after breaking up.

If the clearing is on the husband's lands, the woman continues to farm it normally. But she is required to furnish [593] food as if there had been no rupture. This is why men who do [241] not trust their wives insist on cutting the clearing on land of their own lineage.

Many women wait to divorce their husbands until after they have cut the year's clearing! In January, 1957, upon the return of the border-fixing mission from the southern frontier, /155/ one of us heard M...., a woman of about 40, speak in these terms of her husband T...., 60 years old, who had done everything for her and still used to come to take part in laborious jobs to procure money for her: "He is getting old; I am going to have to look for another."

Observation at Maripasoula, Nov. 5, 1956.

Mutété, boatman of the Maripasoula post, laments in front of his comrades: his wife has just had him notified, without indicating any motive, that she was breaking with him. She did not even disturb herself to tell him so, and she waited until he had finished cutting the year's clearing for her! His [562] comrades once more expressed their rancor against the avarice, spitefulness, and inconstancy of Boni women, inferior beings whom they had once and for all given up trying to understand.

Among the Refugee Blacks people divorce at any age, at 70 years as well as at 18. Thus it is that Captain Diofe (+1951), head of the Djuka lo, and his wife Efa, of the Papaïston lo, divorced each other about 1940 when both were approaching 70 and had remained together more than 35 years: in growing old their natures no longer hit it off.

586 [163] Likewise Pééchina, about 70 years old in 1957, separated from Nachinengé (Kotika) after having spent the greatest part of her life with him and having six children by him.

In order to be able to break thus a long standing union without undergoing moral collapse, it is certainly necessary for the affectivity of each one to be entirely centered on his maternal family.

586 124 Frequency of divorce. This essential aspect of the social life of the Refugee Blacks is not easy to lay hold on by direct interrogation. The women do not willingly talk about their past unions and let go in silence the ones which remained 586 128 childless. However, we were able to reconstitute with rather great certainty the past life of about a hundred women (mothers, near relatives, or wives of our most reliable informants). These men /"women" -- printing error. -- Tr./ are marked with a double asterisk  in the population list of the villages.

[178] It is useful to classify them by age groups relating to the year of birth, for we shall see that the frequency of divorce seems to have increased with time. The groups chosen are the same as for the demographic investigation which we carried on parallel to the sociological study:

/156/ Supposing that divorces are regularly spaced through the course of life, and that they cease at about the age of 65 on the average, one can arrive at an estimate of the average number of divorces in store for a Bantu woman at old age.

Women born from	Average Age End 1957	Average No. Divorces	Probable No. by Age 65
1926 to 1935 incl.	27 years	0.8 in 10 years(1)	3.8

1896 to 1915	52 years	[illegible] in 32 years	2.1
before 1896	70 years		1.5 (?)

1. The average age at marriage is 17 for this group of women, 20 for the earlier groups.

586 The estimate of the average number of divorces for women
[128] born before 1896 is probably lower than the actual number, their first divorces not being well known to our informants. It is probably in the neighborhood of two.

586 The increase in frequency of divorces among young women
593 is striking. It is related to the weakening of the authority, very 178 strong in former times, exercised by mothers over their daughters.

Here are two examples concerning two girls we have known since their childhood.

836 Lomé (L2, F74, Boniville) born in 1938, began to cause people to talk about her in 1954. She was deflowered by N...., who did not want to marry her. Then she had relations with Asadam (K, Boniville), who did not want to marry her either. She was beaten; she continued to see him. Now this is extreme-
[558] ly shameful for a girl because it is placing herself in a state of inferiority with respect to a man, when her self-respect consists in making a contract between equals.

582 Her brother Amèmbé beat her, and she ended up by marrying Pitipiti (Aw.B.2, Asisi village), who formally asked
586 for her in marriage in 1956. This marriage lasted less than a
587 year. In 1957 Lomé divorced him to marry Djoni (Kotika village).

584 Aguba (D.u. G14), girl of Asisi-Dju village, born in 1941, had been proposed to with the customary formalities in May, 1956 by Paltiki (L2, Loka village), a young man of 18. It was 584 agreed that the engaged couple would wait two years. But 585 Paltiki did not wait and consummated the marriage clandestine-
[429] ly at the end of a few months. Lènga, Aguba's aunt and guardian, became very angry and beat her. She did not give her the [illegible] until May, 1957. The marriage lasted only a few 586 months. /157/ By the end of 1957 Aguba was breaking off with Paltiki and beginning openly to look for adventures.

586 If one considers all Boni women together without any age distinctions, one can estimate that on the average they have been divorced 2.5 times during the course of their lives between 18 and 65 years of age. The average duration of marriages (not counting unions broken by the death of one of the spouses) could be evaluated, for the period before 1950, at about 15 years. [178] It tends to decrease in proportion as a generation brought up under less strict discipline reaches adulthood (1).

1. Doctor Étienne Bois, revising in September, 1960 our card file stopped at the end of November, 1958, recorded for the villages on the French bank 28 divorces which had taken place in the course of this period of 1.8 years. [162] The number of women of marriageable age in these villages being about 160, this figure corresponds to 0.1 divorce per woman and per year, or to an average duration of unions of about 10 years.

[837] Dissoluteness of the women. It appears that most wives are faithful to their husbands for the duration of the union. But since they have the possibility of breaking this union with no need of authorization by anybody whatever, they leave their husband very readily, whether they have stopped liking him or whether they intend to marry a richer man.

589 A woman who has just been divorced does not remarry
[587] immediately. Several months, sometimes a year or more, may go by between two unions, a period during which she thinks only of "living it up," indulging in all the adventures she wishes. This attitude is considered normal, and the elders have nothing to say to her provided that she does not fall into pikadu, or cause any scandal, and that the period does not last too long.

[586] We have cited the example of Aguba, a pretty girl of 18, who at the end of 1957 had just broken with her husband Faifiki /sic/ after only one year of living together. She was living with Lènga who brought her up; she was cutting a small clearing herself. Beyond that, she had no other concern but to indulge [836] in all the adventures she liked. Men used to come to solicit her favors discreetly, each one reserving his day. From one she would ask for a camisa, from another, soap, kerosene, etc.

[429] Her guardian Lènga used to press her to take another husband, but she could not forbid her to live thus, having given with the pagi her freedom as a woman.

[587] She contracted a new marriage in May or June, 1958 after leading an irregular life for more than six months.

836 As a matter of fact, things go on with great discretion. A man is notified in secret by his sister or /female/ cousin that such-and-such a woman noticed him during a dance, that she will await him at her home on such-and-such a night. At night on the river, one perceives boats which pass close to the shore,
[504] advancing silently. In each village there are secondary landings which allow nocturnal visitors to arrive at night without being noticed and to leave again before dawn. /158/

[684] If a woman lacks this discretion and if her life is openly dissolute, her mother will beat her and the head of the lineage will inflict punishments on her, but she will not be sent away; in no case can anyone be expelled from his natal village.

848 If children are born of these irregular liaisons, the mother
[784] takes care to know with certainty who the father is, for if there [753] were any doubt, the child, respecting a kina which would not be his own, would contract leprosy. On this subject the Boni 842 have a remarkable belief: they think that it is the first man with whom a woman has had relations after the end of a menstrual period who is likely to make her pregnant.

836 These adventures always involve gifts in kind (cloth, 431 jewels); so the men who have the most success with women are always short of money.

581 A woman who has lived thus in notorious fashion has a little more difficulty than another in finding another husband, but if she is young and winsome she succeeds.

548 Prostitution as such is very rare in Boni country, and the women who give themselves over to it openly (three or four for all the villages on the French bank) have generally left the [836] tribe to settle in the gold miners' villages. Dissoluteness is not considered dishonorable by the Refugee Blacks when it is carried on within the tribe and when it has no other purpose but pleasure; but prostitution is judged shameful.

834 Except for these few prostitutes, we have never heard it 648 said that a Boni woman had relations with a European; on this point tribal discipline is observed with extreme rigor.

581 Conclusion. The average duration of marriages, which was [178] from 15 to 20 years for the preceding generation, tends to become shorter and can be estimated nowadays at about ten years.
[191] In spite of this evolution, the stability of marriages among the Refugee Blacks remains noticeably greater than that observed 548 among the black populations of South America. Among them is not seen the form of prostitution so widespread in South America, the supported mistress who does not work and who lives entirely at the expense of her successive lovers.

156 The Boni woman, poor in emotional feelings, and jealous of her independence with respect to men, puts her pride into subsisting by her own efforts.

178 [156] The young women, even the ones with the freest habits, stay firmly attached to their village, to their plantings, and to the mode of life they received from their grandmothers. In fact, because of its structure and customs, the society of the Refugee Blacks has much less likelihood of suffering from the poisons spread by modern life than the patrilineal societies of Black Africa.

761 /159/ Death; Burial Rites

Death is for the Refugee Blacks an event of extreme gravity.

775 In order to ward off danger and permit the yɔrka of the dead person to take its place among the ancestors, the unstinting cooperation of everyone is required.

764 765 181 [621] [619] The ceremonies which have to do with death and mourning are by far the most important ones in the day-to-day life of the Refugee Blacks; for each one they represent a very heavy material load which is accepted without recriminations. It is really a veritable mobilization, which takes place within the framework of the village and not of the lineage. The apparatus set into motion is independent of the lineage, for it must function in the same way for an outsider, Djuka or Saramaka, who dies during a trip.

764 868 767 Participation in the burial rites is for all an essential religious duty. From childhood the Boni are prepared for this task and become, some of them kisimɛ̃ (coffin-makers), others ɔlɔmɛ̃ (grave-diggers), some others wasimɛ̃ (bathers of the dead).

767 487 Kisimɛ̃ and ɔlɔmɛ̃. It can be said that in each village, ɔlɔmɛ̃ and kisimɛ̃ constitute customary societies, provided with an organization and wielding verisable powers for the duration of their work.

767 --The kisimã command the village during the whole 764 time the coffin is being made and can requisition anyone to [466] help them;

--The ɔlɔmã are masters of the river while their work lasts. In particular they can requisition travelers passing through to help them, and even confiscate their provisions. This is piisi, a joke. But as Mr. W. F. Van Lier also has us observe, this custom has a deep meaning; it reminds everyone that participation in the burial of a dead person is a fundamental religious duty.

767 The organization of these customary societies is, at least 467 among the Boni, very rudimentary.

In each village there is a head of the ɔlɔmã who is acquainted with the topography of the cemetery and the rites to be carried out (hedemã fu ɔlo).

In Boniville, in 1958, this was Bukuman (Papaïston);

In Loka, Tabikiť, not replaced at the beginning of 1958;

In Asisi, Antonu (Awara Bakka).

If he is absent, someone is sent to get the head of the ɔlɔmã of another village.

Likewise, in each village there is a head of the kisimã:

In Boniville, this was Fintiman (Dju);

In Asisi, it was Boofo (Awara Bakka);

In Kormotibo, it was Aténi. /160/

764 The people willingly lend one another assistance from one
476 village to the other, with no need even to ask for help, and even if it is a question of burying a foreigner in the country, a Saramaka or a Djuka for example, who dies in Boni country.

767 For the making of the coffin it is rare not to find about 15 kisimã 46 spontaneously met together when four or five would be enough.

767 According to the moral law of the Refugee Blacks, all work must be paid for. The work of the ɔlɔmã and kisimã is no exception to the rule: the dead person must pay for what is done for him; to this end, his brothers appropriate pieces of cloth from his trunk (about 30 if the dead man was rich) and since that would not suffice, the relatives and friends of the dead man come to swell these assets by giving additional pieces of cloth.

If the dead man was very poor and no longer had cloth in good condition, the people of the lineage must give enough so that at least six may be given to the kisimã and about ten to the ɔlɔmã. If there are too few pieces of cloth for each one to be able to receive a whole one, they are cut up into small pieces, but it is absolutely indispensable for each one to be paid, even if symbolically.

764 Unfolding of the burial rites. These rites are complex, and the ceremonies in which they unfold are always very confused. Even if one is acquainted with the general idea and understands the language rather well, they are very difficult to follow. For [128] clearness in this account, we shall first give a résumé, which will be followed by observations collected in particular cases.

763 The day of the death is taken up by weeping and lamentations and the sending of messengers to the neighboring villages.

764 As soon as the death is announced, the kisimɛ̃ hastily construct a platform called papay (1), while waiting for the building of the coffin which will be undertaken the next day.

[824]

1. Papay = canon wood /F. canon, from L. canna reed, pipe, tube -- Tr./ (Cecropia Sp.), rapid-growing shrub similar to the African parasol-tree; it is used for the construction of the platform because of the great lightness of its stem.

The wasimɛ̃ bathe the dead man with warm water after transporting him to a special place in the village. A hole is dug for the run-off of this water and closed up again afterward. This place is strictly reserved for this use; people do not go there any other time (at Boniville it is behind hut No. 5).

[767] The wasimɛ̃ are two in number, two men and two women; in each lineage there are at least one man and one woman who are acquainted with this work.

The wasimɛ̃ remove from the dead man every object (metal, ɔbia, etc.) and dress him in clean clothes. Cotton is [775] put in his nostrils and a chin-strap put on, all of which will be removed at the moment when the coffin is closed (so that the yɔtka of the dead man will not be impeded in its life beyond the grave).

The body placed in the papay is carried under the mortuary shed (krɛyɔsu = house /161/ of tears). A tuft of hair and the fingernails are taken, which are wrapped in a cloth and hung inside the krɛyɔsu.

764 The dead person's spouse, his nearest relatives, and his children come and hang their hammocks inside the kraɣɔsu, where they will live until broko dɛ (eighth day after the death).

[533] [535] The village people begin the tukka songs and dance, which will last part of the night, while the friends and near relatives of the dead man lament seated, head covered with a cloth.

[824] The first day after the death, as soon as it is morning, the kisimɛ̃ arrive, and begin to make the coffin, using mahogany boards always kept on hand, thanks to the head of the village.

[613] The women of the dead man's lineage prepare a meal which is offered to the kisimɛ̃ about 1:00 P.M. at the end of their work.

While the coffin is being made, the dead man's friends and distant relatives arrive in crowds from the neighboring villages, bringing tafia and cloth as offerings. Two kisimɛ̃ lay these pieces of cloth one by one on the body saying, "So-and-so buries you."

[867] These pieces of cloth are divided up; about 15 are put into the coffin by the kisimɛ̃, part of the rest serve as pay for the kisimɛ̃, part as pay for the ɔkɔmɛ̃; another part, finally, is used for dressing the widower and his co-wives (or the widow), showing thus that during the whole mourning period they live dependent on the dead person.

Then the kisimɛ̃ close the coffin without any other rites taking place. The late arrivers who bring more cloths knock the coffin saying, "I bury you," and put them down on the ground.

[692] The work of the kisimɛ̃ is over; they bring the body outside the kraɣɔsu, in front of which has assembled the council called ɛ̃nti kuutu, which constitutes the judicial apparatus of the Boni.

764 692 This tribunal is charged with establishing the causes of death and rendering a decision on this subject which has the force of law. But it is above all charged with judging the dead person, with determining whether he has lived worthily, whether he has the right to be buried according to the rites and to be invoked as an ancestor, or whether on the contrary he was a wisima.

[613] [645] The grand man designates one or two lineage heads to preside over the council and "command" the dead person until the burial.

The grand man designates who will lead the assemblage and will "command" the dead person until the burial.

764 692 613 This cannot be the head of the dead person's lineage, for no one can at the same time be judge and judged.

Ex.: for Béniti (Dju) this was Popo head of the Lapé lo for Atikati (Dju) it was Kondoku head of the Awara Bakka lo for Kotoïda (Aw.B.) it was Tafanié head of the Papaïston lo for Way (Dip. II) it was Tafanié --- /162/

764 787 The 2nd and 3rd days after the death are given over to the interrogation of the dead person, which on the evening of the first day had scarcely begun.

[184] The rites of this interrogation vary from one village to another; in certain villages they begin to carry the dead man even before the construction of the coffin; the questions are not asked everywhere in the same fashion.

[171] The dead person is interrogated by methods widespread in West Africa and which are related to spiritualism: the coffin is carried on the heads of two men, feet forward. The dead man is supposed to push the bearers forward to say yes, and to make them now their heads from left to right to say no.

764 In principle the forward bearer (who is called bosman by analogy 767 with a boat) must belong to the dead person's lineage. Apart
[613] from this restriction, the bearers can be (and are in fact) any people whatever, the only condition required being that they be extremely vigorous, because the load they carry is at the limit of their strength.

Fraud can exist in isolated cases, but in the great majority of cases there is no doubt as to the good faith of the bearers; they give contradictory answers, go ahead and back interminably, until, exhausted, they are raised up again by others. Actually, the interpretation of these automatic movements does not differ essentially from any process of divination.

The dead person is interrogated from the age of four or [766] five years up. If it is a very young child, he is not interrogated; but the causes of his death are sought by interrogating possessed people, and if there is reason to, the kunu is appeased in the same fashion.

764 At the beginning of the interrogation the tribunal tries to 787 make sure that the dead person was not a wisimɛ̃. After sending 754 the bearers to the other end of the village, the president of the assemblage has two young men hidden in huts; then he has the bearers called, saying to the dead person: "I have lost So-and-so and So-and-so, find them." If the dead person was an upright man, he must have acquired a suprahuman clairvoyance permitting him to direct his bearers straight away toward the huts in question. If he was a wisimɛ̃, he will be as if blind; his bearers go wandering in vain from hut to hut.

They state that this test always succeeds.

764 The interrogation proceeds interminably. The causes of 787 death are taken up. The first question is: is it a god who killed 761 you? The answer is nearly always yes, and they proceed by [996] elimination in order to arrive, for example, at learning that it [784] is an Ampuku, that it is the Ampuku borne by So-and-so. By what the kunu was set in motion, how to appease it, is not the

787 business of the tribunal. The people of the dead person's lineage
761 will have to settle that among themselves after the obsequies.
[784] The role of the tribunal is to make official the cause of death and give it the force of law.

764 Then the inheritance is taken up in the presence of the 787 near relatives of the dead man. The questions are asked suc-
428 cessively: "To whom dost thou leave thy boat...?" "To whom dost thou leave thy gun (1)...?" The coffin moves each time toward one of the people present. /Figs. 22 and 23 appear here/

764 /163/ At the end of the third day after the death the [789] burial is prepared; the dead person is asked from daybreak on whether he is ready for that; if not it can be postponed until the next day.

[767] The pouli have been working at the cemetery since the [827] beginning of the day. They are young and strong men who have to work slowly, for not a drop of sweat may fall into the grave or their akka would risk remaining prisoner in it.

About 4:00 P.M. the bearers promenade the dead person one last time in the village for a supreme adieu. The near [534] relatives go to the wharf. The dead man is hoisted into a canoe
[705] while the aluti drum calls his yaka so that it will not remain in the village.

764 About 5:00 P.M. the coffin arrives at the cemetery wharf and is given over to the Dizmii. No other rite is carried out. It is placed at the bottom of the grave; a layer of round logs separates it from the pile of earth which is put back on top. The burial is finished about six o'clock.

Notes taken at the burial of Way in Kormotibo (January 25, 1957) (1st day after death).

I arrive in Kormotibo at nine o'clock. There are two dead people in the village: Sokodo, 37 years old, who is to be buried the next day, and Way, 65, who died in Maripasoula and whose body was transported the day before.

764 When we moored, I noticed at the south end of the village
787 the bearers of Sokodo's coffin, alone and immobile. Arriving 892 near the mortuary shed, I find Captain Kondoku, who presides
822 over the Ifinti kuutu, and Captain Poopu, head of the village. Kondoku tells me that he is in the act of proceeding to a new test on Sokodo; he has just had two young men hidden, M... and G...., and the dead man is called upon to find them without hesitation.

I look around us. There is nobody nearby; a few women are attending to their occupations, indifferent to a scene observed many a time. It seems as though Kondoku is doing that for himself alone.

The coffin-bearers appear, coming from the other end of the village. Without hesitation they go toward the mortuary shed, enter it, and the end of the coffin stops before the hammock covered with a large mosquito net spread to the ground, where Way's widower, the Saramaka Gamba, is seated.

To my great surprise I see two young men go out. Nothing revealed their presence under the hammock, and Kondoku, who was talking with me, has neither said nor done anything which could direct the bearers. Nobody present could have

764 given any indication whatever. Besides, how would he have 787 had time to make himself understood by two men walking at top speed, crushed by their heavy load and looking straight ahead?

This upsets all the ideas I had formed about this test. The only hypothesis that remains is that the bearers have been "tipped off" by the man who went to get them (an old man of the council). But is it possible that such a crude fraud could be current practice? The Boni are far from being stupid, they are ever suspicious /164/ and they are too talkative for such deceptions not to be laid bare by their perpetrators themselves.

Under these conditions, how can it operate--this collective suggestion which explains most of the rites of the Refugee Blacks? I can't explain it to myself.

764 Manufacture of the Coffin. The kisimã are gathered 769 around a pile of boards. They are about 15 in number,
322 commanded by Boofo, head of the kisimã of Asisi, and Aténi
[412] (Asisi-Dipélu II). A pile of boards is at their feet; some work with a small hand saw, others with an adze; the fitting is done with a machete. /Fig. 21 appears here./

They take measurements with a graver. The bottom board is cut first, then the front and back ends. The outline of the back end, in the shape of a truncated diamond, results from a rather complex construction with the compass which I have not time to report.

764 The work is done noisily in an atmosphere of crude farce.
769 The whole time it lasts, the kisimã exert veritable command
[152] over the village. The coconut trees of Kormotibo are pillaged
[262] for their benefit. The village women prepare the rice for the meal which must, according to custom, be offered to them upon finishing the coffin about noon.

764 767 322 I see the head of the kisimã make ready the fitting of the lower lateral wings. Without nailing it, he places the back end on the bottom plank, giving it the proper inclination. They put in place the board which is to serve as a wing. An elastic string smeared with soot is stretched between a_1 and a_2; they pinch it in the middle and in falling back it traces the line a_1a_2 on the wing.

[412] The cutting out of the wing is done with a saw and the fitting with the machete, then with a plane.

About 11 o'clock they begin to nail the wings. According to the rites, several kisimã accompany in cadence the noise of the hammer blows by hitting the coffin with pieces of wood. Why this ceremony? None of the kisimã can explain it. Perhaps it would be considered dangerous for one man to carry out alone one of the operations relating most directly to death.

764 While the kisimã work, Way's friends and relatives do not stop /165/ arriving; their boats jam the wharf. The people wend their way toward the mortuary shed, men on one side, women on the other. It is the women who bring pieces of cloth (including those given by their brothers and husbands); the men carry tafia in bottles.

Upon arriving the women sit down, cover their faces and lament a few minutes, then sit down with the others in front of the mortuary shed. On the other side of the shed the men are seated, immobile on their small benches. An elder busies himself at collecting in a large demijohn the tafia brought. It will be used at the dances which will take place that very evening.

764 767 About 1:00 P.M. the coffin is nearly finished, the upper wings are fitted and ready to be nailed. This is the moment when, according to custom, the meal must be served. But nothing is to be seen; the village women have talked more than worked, and their preparations are far from finished.

Time passes; discontent grows among the kisimã, who threaten to stop work. About 2:00 P.M. the women come in a procession led by the oldest ones to apologize for the delay; they have to pay a forfeit of a bottle of maripa oil, in consideration of which the kisimã agree to eat; the scene lasts at least 30 minutes, in a flood of words whose transcription in extenso would fill a book.

[782] Before the meal an offertory rite is gone through; two of the youngest among the kisimã slowly go around the mortuary shed carrying a dish of food; at the same time they eat, they throw food on the ground, without uttering a single word. Then they go to the river where the dish is washed.

[782] After the meal the coffin is consecrated by the sacrifice of a rooster. The leader of the kisimã sprinkles with its blood first the bottom at the back, then the upper side wings.

The presenting of pieces of cloth, having gone on since noon, comes to an end. Two kisimã stand beside the body; a woman of the lineage unfolds and hands to them the cloths given by the people present.

The kisimã grab the piece of cloth and unfold it. One of them says these words: "N... beli yu, umã (N... buries you, woman)." They do that if they recognize the cloth offered by N...; if not, they simply say: "Someone buries you, woman." Then they put the cloth on the preceding ones piled up on the body. There may be 126 camisas (1) and

/165 cont./ There may be 126 camisas (1) and

1. Pieces of cotton goods about 1.10 x 0.75 meters. These cloths are manufactured in Holland especially for the Refugee Black clientele.

15 large pieces of cloth. About 30 camisas have been taken from the dead woman's trunk; the others have been given by the people present, the near relatives each giving several, the other relatives only one.

Their work finished, the kisimã burn the shavings and [983] scraps of board. They pass their tools through a flame to purify them of the stains of death. /166/

About 3:00 P.M. the coffin is brought into the mortuary shed by the kisimã. The kisimã, who have complete charge of this phase of the obsequies, count the pieces of cloth and divide them up. One part will be used for their pay, others for the pay of the gravediggers. Fifteen pieces of cloth and about [965] ten ordinary camisas will be placed in the coffin. The rest will be used for clothing the widower who, during the whole period of mourning, will thus remain symbolically dependent upon the dead person; if there are any left over, they are distributed to the members of the dead person's lineage.

Placing in the Coffin. About three o'clock four of the 764 767 medium of two round logs. This ritual seems to have as its purpose restricting the defilement of death for the village.).

The body is put back down in the deepest silence, with the greatest care, into the coffin. A pillow is put under the head.

[152] Those present show no emotion. The widower, the Saramaka Gamba, who has remained seated in his hammock since morning, turning his back to his wife's body, does not stir.

The kisimã bring the edges of the pieces of cloth back over the body and put on, in addition, a few camisas of the ordinary kind. Before the upper wings of the coffin are put in place, one of them gently removes the wads of cotton which had been put in the dead woman's nostrils.

Then the upper wings of the coffin are nailed down, always according to the same rite, blows struck in cadence with pieces of wood accompanying the hammer blows.

[692] The role of the kisimã is ended; they give over the dead woman to the council, ãnti kuutu, charged with judging her.

764 787 Search for the Causes of Death. The ceremony begins about four o'clock in the greatest confusion, as is usual among the Refugee Blacks; it is impossible to understand who is really a member of the council and who is not a member, everybody talking at once.

I think I understand that the grand man has designated Captains Kondoku (Asisi-Awara Bakka) and Tafanié (Papaïston) to preside over the ceremony. In fact, it is neither the one nor the other who begins the interrogation, but a man from Papaïston village, Agodéba, a venerable old man whose torso is molded in a deplorably shoddy jersey calling to mind a rugby match.

764 The coffin is placed at the edge of the mortuary shed, 787 the front turned toward the spectators. Agodéba sits down before the front of the coffin. According to ceremony, he enters into contact with the /167/ yɔ̃ka of the dead woman by pouring water on the ground before the coffin and calling her by 764 name. He says the same sentences several times in different 787 forms: "Thou hast lived here ... thou hast had children in this 761 village; now death has killed thee. Thou must tell us who killed thee."

[292] Two men, B... (L'Enfant Perdu, Dipélu I) and A...
(Asisi-Awara Bakka) come forward, gird their loins with a camisa, and, aided by several others, lift the coffin. B.... who is of the dead woman's lineage, takes the forward position.

For about ten minutes the two bearers try to put themselves into a state of passivity permitting them to receive fitly the promptings of the dead woman; no question whatever is asked. They are seen to make contradictory movements, to go forward tilting the coffin from left to right, which means yes and no at the same time. Sometimes a sudden impulse appears to draw them far from the spectators, they are seen going from hut to hut, wheeling around, going away again.

Finally they come back. Agodéba asks: "Is it a god who struck thee down?" The answer seems to be yes. "Is it a Papa gadu, an Ampuku, a Kɛ̃ntasasu?" Contradictory answers, the people present lean toward the negative.

Agodéba continues: "Is it a yɔ̃ka who killed thee?"
Confused and contradictory movements of the coffin. Agodéba begins again: "Is it a god?" Someone among those present shouts: "Don't you see that she meant yes, speaking of the yɔ̃ka? Agodéba gets angry, takes his hat, and leaves the meeting. General hubbub. Half an hour of words, broken by various movements and sham exits, is required in order to bring him to take his place again.

764 The bearers are changed and the interrogation continues, 787 still as confused as before. Captain Tafanié, who arrives in 761 the midst of all this, thinks that the dead woman does not want to speak in front of such a large crowd. He asks her to designate which of the people present will form a small group. I see the front of the coffin stop in front of an old Saramaka named Yasu, then successively in front of about ten of those present of various ages and origins. They stand up, take their little benches in their hands, and go to join Tafanié under a large tree in a spot to the side; the interrogation resumes; by nightfall a sure fact has been established: Way was killed by a god. They will resume the next day in order to find out what god is concerned and how to appease him.

[114] October 22-23, 1956 (2nd and 3rd days after death).

I arrive at Asisi on the 22nd at eight o'clock. Kotolda died on the twentieth; the first part of the ceremony has been finished.

[692] It is Tafanié, head of Papsiston village, who presides over the Ilinti kuutu.

Tafanié himself has directed the making of the coffin (he is a kisimi) with the help of boards held in reserve on the spot. The work was finished at nine o'clock in the morning.

The body was placed in the coffin immediately, and after the presentation of the pieces of cloth, the wings were nailed. /168/

When I arrive at the wharf, the coffin is placed in the mortuary shed. The near relatives of the deceased (sons, daughters, and nephews) as well as the husband and the co-wife compelled to take part in the mourning are seated in their hammocks attached to the posts of the shed. The first-mentioned manifest no apparent sorrow whatever. Husband and

764 co-wife, on the contrary, are completely veiled and show by their state of prostration the keenest sorrow. Each of them is assisted by a female relative who supports them when they have to move somewhere else, for they are supposed to be too overcome to move alone.

764 The interrogation as to the causes of death has already 787 taken place the day before, but Tafanié proclaims, in front of 761 me, the result of it to the latest arrivals: the deceased was struck down by a yɔ̃ɛ̃ka which pursues the lineage with its kunu. She had already received several warnings in the form of illness; the yɔ̃ɛ̃ka had demanded a payment which she and her near relatives had neglected to furnish. Impossible to learn anything further before being able to interrogate this yɔ̃ɛ̃ka, whose habitual bearer has left for Saint-Laurent. It is necessary to wait for his return in order to mollify the yɔ̃ɛ̃ka's anger.

764 About ten o'clock the members of the lɛ̃nti kuutu go to-769 ward the fraga tiki of the Awara Bakka lo, in front of which they 778 all sit down on their stools. I notice that not a single man of [613] the dead person's lineage appears in the front row. In it I recognize Popo (Lapé), Poopu (Dipélu II, Kormotibo), Tafanié (Papalisson). The one who is speaking is a foreigner passing through, a very aged and respected Djuka.

[782] The elders invoke Masa Gadu and the ancestors in general, asking them to protect them from adversity in the future; then the offering of water and tafia takes place (no cane juice). I notice that a little is poured on each of the secondary fraga tiki erected for the sake of each one of the ancestors who pursue another lineage with their kunu. That lasts about a quarter of an hour.

764 Next someone goes to ask the deceased to whom she 787 bequeaths the Papa gadu god which manifested itself in her;
776 for the gods are bequeathed like the rest of the inheritance,
428 even if those concerned are divinities which exercise the kunu against the lineage. The god ratifies this legacy or not; in general it follows, they say, the wishes of its bearer and manifests itself some time afterward in the designated heir.

The coffin is placed on the heads of two men: Tafanié puts the questions with authority. He begins first by making sure of the passivity of the bearers, invites the dead woman to push their heads forward to say yes, to give them an impulse from right to left to say no.

The coffin advances and draws back several times; its weight is at the limit of what the two men can support. Two secondary bearers help the rear bearer, preventing the coffin from falling.

.. /. L. /Footnote at bottom of p. 168; no reference to it on the page/ Let us recall that this lineage, too few in numbers to constitute a separate social unit, lives with the Awara Bakka, with whom it has no connection through kinship or alliance.

The dead woman suddenly leads her bearers across the village. We see it come back /169/ a quarter of an hour afterward, accompanied by a woman of about 35 years, Moni, in front of whom it stopped.

Tafanié asks whether it wishes to leave its god to her; the dead woman confirms. Upon the statement of this legacy Moni's face reflects no gladness at all, nor any fear.

They explain to me that the designated heiress can in no way refuse this legacy. She must immediately begin her instruction given by a teacher, in order to become a suitable bearer. The expenses of her instruction are borne by her lineage.

789 They will be paid when the gita has been "arranged," that is, 792 has lost the bestial character of the beginning and when the god
428 can express itself in intelligible fashion.

764 There and then they busy themselves with transferring 789 the god out of the body of the deceased. An obiaman well
789 known in the cult of the Papa gadu, Goutu (Dju) and his pupil
Balan (Aw.B.) come with calabashes containing infusions of leaves. Four or five women having a Papa gadu come and line up behind them. The heiress, with an extremely vexed air, takes her place among them, clothed with the emblems of the god of the dead woman; they are going to call their gods who will dance in honor of Kotolda's god.

The obiaman and his pupil for several minutes trickle the infusion of herbs over the coffin, using packets of herbs like sponges, then they "wash" the women, including the postulant; he gives them the rest of the calabash to drink. One of the women, Samabun, falls immediately to the ground, attached by the lowest form of possession: she drags herself on her belly like a snake (these are the first forms of the gita when it has not yet been "arranged." In her case that has lasted four years, contrary to what ordinarily happens. The scene was certainly anticipated, for she had put on European panties. The other women also drink but are not possessed; they leave to dress for dancing.

[534] The agida drum taken out of the god's chapel begins to beat, accompanied by two apinti.

The female bearers of Papa gadu arrive at the sound of the agida, smeared with pemba and carrying /wearing?--Tr./ the insignia of the god. Six come in all. They are not in a state of possession; only two will reach it. The first possessed woman keeps crawling on the ground, gropingly approaching the drum which she embraces, lying on her back. It is torn away from her. The obiaman continue to come to "wash" her from time to time in order to help the god to manifest itself. The crowd presses around the women dancers who execute the greatest variety of figures. At times they embrace each other two by two in the Boni manner. The onlookers jump for joy.

The scene lasts about half an hour, then, at the signal given by one of them, the possessed ones scatter and begin to run through the village: this is the moment for the gods to pay the musicians. Each person rushes to hide his belongings, for the gods will steal anything in the village without anyone being able to prevent them: this is their way of paying.

Soon the possessed women come back, putting down at the feet of the musicians a heap of incongruous objects: /170/ calabashes, cloth, paddles, etc., which their owners come to recover by means of bottles of beer and eggs. Then the women who were truly possessed come back to their normal state and all go home.

This dance was not a success; those present think that it is because the women bearers had drunk tafia, which the Papa gadu detest.

428

Inheritance. The dead woman is asked to whom she bequeaths her clearings. She answers: "To her family," this being understood because the bearers move parallel to the people present without designating anybody. Under these conditions the property must be distributed (Kotolda having no children) among her classificatory nephews. Actually, the plantations still farmable will go to Samabun, her sister's daughter.

[591]

Inheritance of the house does not come up, for the dead woman lived in her husband Empalé's house.

Held back are the personal objects, money, jewelry, fabrics. When the mourning is lifted, the eldest of the surviving brothers or sisters in the classificatory sense will make the distribution among the near relatives.

428 613 It is very clear in Kotoïda's case that the inheriting is within the matrilineage in the strict sense, bee. Only the members of the Afi lineage to which she belonged can profit by it.

764 Burial. About 2:00 P.M. the women of the lineage who had been preparing the food for the ɔlɔmɛ̃ since morning leave by canoe in the direction of the cemetery.

At three o'clock the last preparations begin. The occupants of the mortuary shed, completely veiled and supported by their near relatives, go to take up positions at the wharf for the last farewells (for they will not go to the cemetery).

The coffin is carried through the village one last time. This is the farewell of the dead woman to her family. The objects used in mourning are carefully collected, the earth of the shed floor raked up wherever the zanies of the cadaver might have fallen, and the whole put on the papay which is placed on the mortuary bark.

[795] At three o'clock an apinti drum is placed on the wharf to call the dead person (it is obviously a question of preventing the yaka from remaining in the village). The dead person turns up at the wharf. The coffin passes over a freshly cut banana-tree trunk placed at the limit of the village and of the beach. This is the symbolic passing of the dead person out of the world of the living. It is put on the canoe while the lamentations of the near relatives resound. The scene is not lacking in grandeur.

[783] The canoe draws slowly away, the drummer in the bow, while the spectators go down in a long procession to wash themselves free of the defilement of death.

[767] At four o'clock they arrive at the cemetery. The bearers of the dead person who have taken places in the canoe pass their burden to the ɔlɔmɛ̃ who have come to the edge of the river. This to mark the fact that /.7./ the ɔlɔmɛ̃ are in authority at the cemetery. The bearers will only be present at the ceremony.

764 The women who had come to carry the food of the ɔlɔmɛ̃ go away, their work finished. Only two of them, not especially old, remain.

[787] We arrive on a little separated space where a last interrogation takes place. It is Antonu, head of the ɔlɔmɛ̃ of Asisi who speaks, while Tansia (Dipélu I) and Tyolo (Dju), basia or party-head of the ɔlɔmɛ̃ of Asisi serve as bearers.

764 787 The dead woman is asked for instructions as to the choice of the men she designates as busimɛ̃ (hunters, fishermen), intended to procure the food for the guests on the day of the broko de. The coffin advances successively toward six men. Each one of these asks: "Is it really I?" I see the forward bearer, his eyes strangely fixed, nod in their direction.

764 At four o'clock we arrive in front of the grave, about 100 meters from the riverside. It is dug with neat edges; it is about 2 meters deep, 2 meters 50 long, and 1 meter wide. It has the trapezoidal shape of the coffin.

A bench is cut in half with a blow of the machete to make two supports placed in the bottom of the grave.

The coffin is lowered to the bottom by means of the cloth ropes which enclosed it. These ropes are then pulled back up. Several shots are fired. Not a word is spoken. About ten thick round logs about 20 centimeters in diameter are placed side by side on the grave and the earth thrown over them. The ɔlɔmɛ̃ work with the shovel and hoe; the pile of earth rapidly reaches a meter in height.

Then the head of the ɔlɔmɛ̃ stops the work. He passes over the grave several times, jumping with feet together. Next, passing the bundle of cloth ropes several times around his legs, he addresses the akka of those present, admonishing them not to stay in the hole.

764 Work is then resumed. Those present who are not ɔ̃ɔ̃mã, including me, are invited to throw several shovels of earth. On top of the mound are placed the papay and the objects used in the mourning, topped by the dead woman's bench. Then those present go away without haste and wash at the wharf. Several shots are again fired while the canoes go away.

The graves are spaced about 10 meters apart. The dead are not grouped by lineages; the cemetery is extended as needed, and the dead person is put in the first available spot. Thus Kosolida (Awara Bakka) is placed beside Asolida (Lapé), a hundred-year-old woman dead a few months before.

They show me the graves of village heads I have known, Dholé († in 1951), Atikati († in 1953). The mounds are already half settled down, the brush on them is as much as a meter high.

[692] Thanking Ceremonies. On the twenty-third at eight o'clock, the ɔ̃nti kuutu is convened and sits at the edge of the mortuary shed.

[969] The ɔ̃ɔ̃mã and in a general way those who have worked on behalf of the dead person (only about ten remain, the others have left to work) are seated opposite the men of the dead woman's lineage.

It is always Tafanié who speaks. Béna (Dju), seated before the ɔ̃ɔ̃mã, turned toward the speaker, plays the role of respondent. Tafanié thanks all those who have worked on behalf of the dead person, detailing at length the various jobs, then citing their various lineages; he repeats the same thing in several ways and his speech is interminable. Sometimes he [293] interrupts himself to put in a good joke or drink a bumper of [415] tafia. A 15-liter demijohn is seen circulating inside the shed.

578

Suddenly an incident erupts. Baafu (Lapé) insinuates that Agidibon (Aw.B.) is helping himself immoderately. Insulting words are exchanged. Agidibon leaves the council. General commotion. The tumult calms down after a quarter of an hour.

764

The speaker now thanks the foreigners passing through, Saramaka and Djuka, who helped at the obsequies.

787

Someone puts down on the ground a paddle on which is attached a bundle wrapped in cloth. It is the dead woman's paddle, and the bundle contains her hair. It is kept until the broko dɛ (it seems, in fact, that this is the reason for this celebration) in order to keep contact with the dead woman's yɔ̃ka for the further questions people might have to ask it (1).

1. It seems that on this point custom envisages especially the case of near relatives of the dead person traveling on the river at the time of the death, and who could not be present at the burial.

Then, several ɔlɔmɛ will go to the cemetery to bury the bundle inside the mound.

The spectators go toward a shaded spot, for it is near noon and the sun is overwhelming.

Sosoman carries the front of the paddle and Tansia the back. Without any question at all being asked, they circulate in the village for a long time. Several times I see them make contradictory movements, nod their heads forward and sideways at the same time.

Here they are back again near Tafanié. To my great surprise Tafanié asks questions in a low voice, cupping his hands in front of his mouth.

764 787 Several times the paddle is seen to answer affirmatively, then negatively. Not one of those present can understand what is said, but not one shows impatience or doubt.

[613] Suddenly Tafanié orders his assistants to cut rods: the dead woman has asked that the people of her own lineage be beaten, guilty of having neglected the yɔ́ka's warnings. On seeing these preparations the people of Kotoïda's lineage /173/ run away in confusion in every direction while their adversaries pursue them with the appearance of having a very good time. Some take refuge in the water, others in the bush; none whatever can be caught.

Completely symbolic punishment, moreover, for at the end of ten minutes they are seen to reappear and take their places again among those present.

764 The obsequies are ended. Only the deceased's near relatives stay seated in their hammocks under the mortuary shed. They will remain there until the broko dɛ.

764 767 Payments of the ɔ́kɔmɛ̃. The ɔ́kɔmɛ̃ divide up one lot of cloth, keeping track of what they have received in the preceding obsequies. That does not appear to cause any discussion. If, after this, someone who has not furnished any work wants to take one of these pieces of cloth, he may do so by offering tafia to the people present.

766 787 775 Funeral ceremonies for people who die while traveling. If a man dies in the course of a distant trip, they take from the cadaver before burying it his hair and fingernails, which are brought back to his native village; in fact, it is assumed that as long as a fragment of the body is not buried, the yɔ́ka remains attached to it; hair and fingernails will therefore permit the interrogation of the yɔ́ka and will be buried in the cemetery with the usual rites.

764 Broko dɛ. The eighth day after death, a ceremony called broko dɛ takes place, not to be confused with the lifting of mourning. This ceremony marks the end of the burial rites proper; when it is ended, the dead person can no longer be questioned directly; the period of mourning begins.

[613] It is a very simple ceremony which attracts few people and happens almost entirely within the lineage.

[538] At nightfall they begin to relate Anansi toli, those tra-
[535] ditional tales which make the audience vibrate together and create a special atmosphere. Then come the sɩnge, susa, and awasa dances which last all night.

764 The next day each one busies himself at small jobs in 769 the village while the women prepare the meal. This is the ceremony called towɛ nyɩ̃, which takes place at the edge of the mortuary shed about four o'clock in the afternoon. Each woman of the lineage brings a large bowl of rice and a small bowl containing either a piece of meat cooked in sauce or some fish. The oldest man of the lineage has large banana leaves spread out on the ground at the edge of the shed; he takes a little of each dish and puts it down on the leaves, while at the same time addressing the ancestors in ordinary language in the tone of an intimate conversation: "Dead of the family, come, come to eat today."

That lasts perhaps a quarter of an hour, while those present are seated, immobile and meditative. The ancestors are supposed to eat the spiritual part of the food -- kaaka fu nyɩ̃.

Then the elders line up at the edge of the shed five or six small children of about ten years, each one of whom holds a basin upside down. A man keeps them in line /174/ with the aid of a long stick. Then, at a signal, he lifts the stick and the children dash headlong with laughs and shouts toward the ancestors' portion, each one carrying away all he could cover

764 Cemeteries. There are two cemeteries in Boni country: one on the lands of the Dikan lineage for the people living on the French bank, the other downstream from Kotika for the inhabitants of that village. They are ordinary places which nothing indicates from the bank, for they are covered like the rest of the country by secondary forest. The dead are buried there in graves aligned parallel to the river, about seven meters apart. The dead are placed with heads turned toward the river. No separation by lineage exists within the cemetery.

The graves are not marked by any decoration, and at the end of about ten years, the mound having settled down, no trace of the burial remains.

[767] The graves are never cleaned. Only the ɔlamã heads, who have received special instruction, know the graves of the principal chiefs and the boundaries of the cemetery.

769 The Boni never go to the cemetery alone and do not [754] make offerings on the graves of their near relatives. Someone [775] who would frequent the cemetery alone would be suspected of being a wisimã seeking to capture the yɔ́ka of a dead person.

764 Even if they are right near the villages, cemeteries are 487 never connected directly to them by paths, and the dead are transported by boat. By proceeding thus they hope to isolate the villages from evil influences.

966 If someone dies by drowning, he is buried away from the cemetery. According to Mr. W. F. van Lier, among the Djuka [961] all drowned persons are supposed to have been victims of a [784] kunu; the Boni do not have this conception and declare that they [184] have lost the meaning of this custom; one notices, however, that they observe mourning for the drowned according to the usual rites.

764 Children are buried with the normal ceremonies only from about the age of six on. The rule is the following: A child is buried in the cemetery and broko dɛ is done for him if the next child of the same mother is beginning to walk.

766 Young children are buried without a coffin at a special site on the edge of each village; a board is simply placed on the [828] body before filling the grave. They have the idea that very [795] young children have no vital force, and that their yɔka cannot do any harm. /Fig. 25 appears here./ /175/

Mourning

After the burial the wives of the dead man (or the husband if it is a woman), the nearest relatives on the maternal side, as well as the children, sojourn eight days more in the mortuary shed, until the broko dɛ.

765 From then on the obligations of mourning are limited, [831] for the near relatives of the dead person, to abstaining for a [795] year from dancing, wearing jewelry or too fine clothes; it goes [171] completely otherwise for the spouse of the dead person; the Refugee Blacks indeed take for granted, like the Creoles of Surinam, the persistence of the sexual jealousy of the dead person, whose yɔka is thought to remain in contact with the living for a year.

State of the spouse in mourning. The principle is that the surviving spouse, until the lifting of mourning, is subject to the will of the dead person. In order to materialize that in an obvious way, he cannot, during this whole period, wear his usual clothes but must dress exclusively in pieces of cloth appropriated for him from among the ones the dead person possessed, or given by the nearest maternal relatives of the dead person.

765 For the duration of the mourning, any indiscretion of the 775 surviving spouse will draw upon him the pitiless vengeance of the yɔrka; it is important for him to make himself forgotten, to have a modest and decent demeanor. The dead person might be vexed with him for having kept his health and good looks. So they try to give the surviving spouse the aspect of a miserable
765 and unfortunate being. The dead person's relatives are par-
775 ticularly interested in having this discipline observed, for in 613 the opposite case the dead person's yɔrka would turn back its vengeance against his own lineage. During all the mourning the whole lineage considers itself in danger. So custom requires that during all this period the widower (or widow) be placed under the authority of the dead person's lineage.

765 In the case of concubinage, mourning is taken on by the SOV spouse even if the relations have not been made official. People cite the example of Way (Boniville) who assumed mourning for a Djuka with whom she had begun to live before he could propose to her officially.

765 State of persons in mourning. A widower's state is exactly like [775] that of a widow, which tends to show that in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks the dead, men and women, have the same level of being and the same power over the living.

765 The surviving spouse is placed under the protection of 769 the ancestors of the dead spouse's lineage. Without this pro-
613 tection assured by the prayers of the members of this lineage, he would find himself defenseless. The proof of it is that the [628] principal sanction against him is to lift the mourning premature-[304] ly by going to the fraga tiki to tell the ancestors that one is no longer interested in him. That amounts indirectly to cursing him (see below the example of Gamba).

765 613 The spouse in mourning is taken temporarily out of his lineage and placed under the /176/ /Fig. 24 appears here/ /177/ protection of the lineage of the dead spouse, in a situation corresponding to that of the client in ancient /Roman/ society.

[769] He can no longer pray to his own ancestors. If he is sick he asks the elders of the dead spouse's lineage to pray for him to their own ancestors.

765 A man in mourning is freed from certain obligations and responsibilities:

--He cannot take part in a council of his lineage;

--If there is a squabble between his lineage and another, he cannot be taken to task;

--Part of his catch may not be appropriated in case of great nivrée;

--He is freed from his funerary obligations as an ɔlɔmã or kisimã.

765 602 613 A man in mourning is placed under the collective authority of his wife's lineage, but actually under the authority of her near relatives: mother, grandmother, real uncles and aunts. It is real kinship which is involved in matters of mourning; classificatory kinship enters into it only if all the near relatives are dead.

In general it is old women of these near relatives who are charged with watching over the behavior of the widower and on the other hand with seeing that he does not lack anything he needs.

For example Alémin (Aw.B.1) was married to Yundu (L2, G60) of the Lapé 2 fraction, living in Loka village. When she died in May, 1957, he was put under the authority of Asakundu (L2, E55), his wife's grandmother, and of Asakundu's sister [768] Térésa, living in Boniville. Since he had not yet built a hut for his wife, he was enjoined to come specially to build himself a little hut in Loka village in order to reside near Asakundu.

765 If he was sick, it was △ Baafu (L2, E58), the eldest of the 602 group, who was to pray for him. Alémin had nothing to do with 613 the head of the Lapé lineage nor with his wife's classificatory uncles of the Lapé 1 group.

As for Diamanti (Aw.B.2, E56, † in 1955), her husband Booki (K3, E133) spent the mourning in the house that Diamanti had had constructed for her by a former husband. It was ○Emma, Diamanti's mother, and Sanéti, Emma's younger sister, who kept him under watch, under the responsibility of △ Akodo, the dead woman's brother (all the actual uncles being dead). Booki had nothing to do with either the classificatory uncles nor the head of the Awara Bakka lineage.

When Atuku (Aw.B.1, D20) died (1956), her husband Nétali was put under the authority of Kondoku, Atuku's brother, all the uncles in both the real and the classificatory sense being dead.

765 The submission that this mourning entails must not be [775] considered as symbolic. It bears down on the surviving spouse with an intolerable weight which can be borne only because of the conviction that it is the sole means of protection against the dead person's jealousy. Not only does the widower (or widow) do nothing to free himself from it, but at the least indisposition he will add, of his own accord, to the harshness of his state.

The widower can no longer use his clothes and personal 765 utensils; he keeps /178/ his hammock and gun. All the rest, 613 clothing (appropriated for the mourning), various utensils, is furnished him by the dead woman's lineage. Each woman of this lineage must give him a little of what she prepares. He himself must not ask for anything.

765 He cannot go anywhere without the authorization of his watchers, and only for a specific purpose. For example, when Alémin found work with a European in October, 1957, the two old women who were charged with looking after him came to deliver him to his employer like a prisoner, making it clear in particular that they were forbidding him to disembark in such-and-such villages where he had nothing to do.

Alémin was authorized to be present at the mourning for his mother, but he did not take part in any of the ceremonies at all. He was not present at the interrogation of the dead woman carried in her coffin, and was not informed about the arrangements made for dividing up the inheritance.

765 768 A man in mourning does not necessarily live in the hut he has had built for his wife, but in a hut designated for him. He may (this is Alémin's case) be invited to build a small hut which, at the end of the mourning, will become the property of his mother-in-law.

When the house has been bequeathed, the heir may take possession of it only if the spouse has not received orders to reside in it. Only at the end of mourning does he enter fully into possession of his rights.

765 [769] A man in mourning may not go out of his house after nightfall, particularly on nights when people dance after having called all the ancestors. He would have everything to fear from the yorka.

He may circulate in the village and speak to anyone he wishes, but must not joke or be present at any festivities whatever, not even to hear tales. Not only may he not pay court to a woman, but it is still forbidden for him to make discreet overtures, even through an intermediary, with an eye to remarriage.

765 He may not walk around stripped to the waist and bare-headed; Alémin used to wear permanently a horrible jersey and a holey beret.

765 He may neither dance nor sing (even alone). If he has a 787 gadu, this gadu is called and invited not to go to the head of its "master" for the duration of mourning. The doyen of the lineage of the party concerned pronounces this adjuration.

However, a reservation exists. If someone absolutely needs to consult this god, the widower is asked to remove his mourning clothing and put on his own clothes for a few hours. The consultation takes place in private inside a hut; then the mourning resumes.

765 He observes the basic interdiction (bwasi kina) of the dead woman in addition to his own.

He must absolutely spend the yali festival (New Year's Day) with the dead woman's family.

Such are the principal obligations and interdictions which rule over the life of a man in mourning, during a period of at least 18 months, which may even be prolonged up to two years and more (at the end of 1958 the mourning for Yundu, † in May, 1957, was still not lifted, and Alémin did not expect to be freed from it before the spring of 1959).

These obligations are aggravated still more during the first three months by special provisions. /179/

During these first three months, the dipi baaka or deep mourning, the man in mourning must keep an attitude of the most acute sorrow. He leaves the house assigned to him only for indispensable work, and does not go away from the dead woman's village; he remains with his eyes lowered, not looking directly at anyone except members of the dead woman's family. Usage used to require him to lean on a stick like an exhausted person, but the present grand man has abolished that custom.

765 After three months, an offering is made at the fraga tiki
[769] of the dead person's lineage, setting forth how much her spouse
[718] has respected her memory and asking permission to lighten the [613] manifestations of his sorrow. The mourning is then lightened, but the man in mourning continues to wear a bandeau around his head or at the very least an old beret.

765 During the first months the man in mourning has no other 461 responsibility than to hunt and fish at the order of the dead
[613] woman's lineage. He does his own cooking with the food given to him; he cuts a clearing for his mother-in-law or another woman of the deceased's relatives, who will farm it with him.
[431] Next, he receives the order to go and earn the money necessary for the sizable contribution he must bring to the festival of the lifting of mourning. During the entire duration of the mourning he must report on his work and moves.

765 When the end of mourning approaches, he must do a job
[606] for the benefit of his mother-in-law, generally redoing the roof of her house or building a boat for her.

These arrangements do not involve any material sanction [626] whatever. Like the rest of the social life of the Refugee Blacks, they rest entirely upon fear of a suprahuman sanction.
[587] After the lifting of mourning, the person in mourning may remarry without further delay.

765 State of widows and co-wives of a widower. The state of a 768 woman in mourning is practically identical to that of a widower.
[562] She lives for the duration of mourning in her deceased husband's house under the surveillance of his near relatives on the maternal [613] side. The dead man's lineage lends her all the objects she [439] needs and furnishes the imported commodities (salt, kerosene, soap) that she uses. On the other hand, she may freely use the produce of the clearing that her husband had cut for her, since it is taken for granted that these products are the exclusive property of the wife.

765 431 [606] Before coming out of mourning, the widow must procure for herself at the minimum the money necessary for a demijohn of tafia as a contribution to the festival of the lifting of mourning. She must make a present of several cans of couac to her husband's mother.

765 843 184 A pregnant woman undergoes mourning exactly according to the general law. The custom described by several authors for the Saramaka, according to which the pregnant woman must join one of her husband's "brothers," does not apply to the Boni.

765 888 There are some attenuations of the harshness of mourning with respect to old women. For example in 1956, Lémiki (70 years), living in Boniville, was in mourning for her husband Tabiki (Awara Bakka, but residing since childhood with the Lapé lineage in Loka /180/ where he had been raised by his father). [768] [602] Lémiki alternately spent three weeks in her house and three in her husband's. It was Asamani, Tabiki's sister by the same father, who exercised authority over her.

765 768 [613] This remarkable example shows that as regards mourning (rights and duties), the principle of residence plays an essential role. He who has been reared by his father is in this respect taken out of his lineage, which loses all rights and all control over the conduct of the mourning.

765 [775] The co-wives of a widower are subject to mourning on the same grounds as he, and for the same motive, since they are targets for the jealousy of the dead woman's yɔrka.

[768] However, they are authorized most often to live with their maternal family. 765 833 When the period of dipi baaka has ended, they may take up conjugal relations again with their husband, but at intervals of several weeks and without his being able to spend the night with one of them. [613] Each time he must ask permission of the head of the dead woman's lineage.

765 613 689 An incident. In 1957, the Saramaka Gamba (75 years old), Way's widower (Dip. I), caused a serious incident by refusing several times the obedience he owed to the latter's lineage, on the pretext that he was old and knew how to behave.

His son Maliki (born of a Saramaka woman), whom he was raising, married to Way's daughter, had gone fishing above the Litani. Upon his return, Kwau (80 years old), Way's elder brother, reproached him for having left without authorization, pointing out that his father, Gamba, being placed under his authority by mourning, he was too, because of this fact. Gamba [578] did not accept this reasoning and the two old men fought. This [769] was a fine scandal. Kwau and the elders of Way's lineage came [778] before the fraga tiki of L'Enfant Perdu village to lift his mourn- [784] ing forthwith (which, let us recall, is the equivalent of cursing him by delivering him over to the vengeance of the dead woman's yɔrka).

Members of Way's family went to break up the shacks of Gamba and his son, who lived hidden in the bush for some time. [627] Then Gamba had the village heads intercede and obtained his [769] pardon. The elders of Way's lineage went to the fraga tiki to [778] utter the words putting things back in order.

765 Lifting of mourning. The festival of the lifting of mourning - puu baaka - is celebrated 18 months to two years after the burial. The delay may be a little longer, for most often the village celebrates this festival for several of its dead at the same time. It is a heavy burden, for festivals for lifting mourning attract many people and everyone present must find as much as he wishes to eat and drink.

[621] This festival is celebrated in the framework of the village and not in that of the lineage. It will be celebrated in the same way for a Djuka who died in a Boni village, provided that he lived there a sufficiently long time. In such a case the expenses

765 are divided up equally among all the inhabitants of the village. But if the dead person had near relatives in the village, children, nephews, or brothers, it is they who stand the main burden.

[613] Members of the dead person's lineage who are settled in other villages contribute equally to the expenses and the organizing of the festival, but in a symbolic fashion. /181/

[623] A council (kuutu) of the village inhabitants sets the date; during the two weeks preceding each one is busy. The women 765 hull and winnow rice, prepare great quantities of couac and 262 sugar-cane juice. The busimã scour the bush and have meat and fish smoked. Each one, according to his means, buys tafia, sugar, chocolate, and other articles of food liked by the Refugee Blacks.

765 The celebration of the rites occupies a whole week. This 775 is because, the Refugee Blacks think the influence of the dead person can be eliminated only progressively by the repetition of the rite of separation.

The first day, the yɔrka of the dead person whose mourning is going to be lifted is called by formulas beaten on the [535] apinti drum. Then possession dances take place.

765 The second day is reserved for the material preparation for the ceremonies to follow.

[613] The third day, the spouse in mourning, if there is one, is conducted by the members of the dead person's lineage under [822] the mortuary shed. He is dressed in red and is congratulated for having kept the mourning well. Then he is led to the river, [783] and old women of the dead person's lineage begin to bathe him [775] while adjuring the yɔrka to part company with him.

The fourth day at nightfall, all those present assemble at the mortuary shed. They recite tales (Anãsi tɔli), [538] improvisations (mato), and riddles (ɔdo). This phase of the [781] festival has as its object the concentrating of the attention of the hearers; it creates a warm, collective atmosphere which impregnates those present, bringing to them intense and highly coloured emotions.

765 535 533 Next come the dances, always in the order sɔ̃nge, susa, awasa, the rhythms given on the apinti drum. These are not possession dances and do not appear in themselves to have a religious meaning; all involve choruses in which the singers do not accompany themselves on any instrument at all; these songs have no other meaning than to exalt life; the Refugee Blacks find their best artistic expression in them. Many of them demonstrate dazzling imagination; the subjects are extremely varied, and every year new ones are created. But there is a certain number of "classics" which reappear in each festival. Let us mention: "The man who calls his dog lost in the woods"; "The song of the Balen River"; "The woman who watches over her daughter," etc. These songs are very beautiful, and in the great mourning festivals it is difficult to hear them without emotion. Songs and dances follow one another without interruption until the sun's return. This is what is called broko dɛ̃, "break a day." This ritual, which has a key value in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks, appears to be the affirmation by the group of the triumph of life over death.

765 [769] The fifth day, a kind of buffet is served to the guests under the mortuary shed. In the afternoon there is the offering of food to the ancestors, tɔwɛ nyã; this rite is a communion between the dead and the living.

[769] On the morning of the sixth day, the ceremony ends with the offering of water, celebrated not at the fraga tiki but at the edge of the shed, in honor of the ancestors. They invoke one [775] last time /182/ the yɔrka of the dead man (or the dead woman), while asking it to separate from his spouse for good and to leave her in peace! "U puu a umã a baaka; yu ãŋga umã yu paati tidɛ, na: mu siki, na: wã sani mu du ẽŋ, a mu dɛ̃ bũ. (We lift the mourning of (this) woman; thou and the woman, you separate from each other today; she must not be sick, nothing must happen to her, she must be well)."

965 Then they address the dead person in the name of the people of his village: "We have done with thee, stay there where God has placed thee."

The spouse in mourning is again bathed in the river by old women who have themselves gone through mourning.

Then they address the yɔrka of the ancestors and the [969] entities of the Beyond who are imagined to have come in a crowd: [975] "Ala sani di kɔm ya, yu mu luku ala ãŋga bū; u kaba ãŋga yu; yu sa: waka ala peesi; (Each one of the beings who have come, be benevolent toward us all; we have finished with thee, thou canst go anywhere)."

On the seventh day most of those present begin to leave. An intimate ceremony brings the dead person's near relatives together in the very house where he died. They weep and lament one last time. Then a last offering of food is made in the same house, and they repeat the adjuration: "We have done with thee; stay where God has placed thee."

[968] The eighth day, the spouse whose mourning has just been [613] lifted is conducted solemnly back to his village by the people [431] of the dead person's lineage. He is congratulated, he offers food and drink to all those present. What he might have had left of savings disappears on this occasion.

He must sleep three nights in his village, still without being able to have relations with a woman. When this time limit has gone by, he comes to give back the red clothes which the dead person's lineage had lent to him. Only then is he free.

[114] Notes taken in Boniville in November, 1957 on the occasion of the lifting of mourning for Béniti. This festival is given for the lifting of mourning for ○ Béniti (Dju, E5, living in Boniville, † in 1955 at 75), of △ Tito (Kotika, Boniville, † in 1955 at 15), and of △ G..., boy of ten, son of a woman of the village of L'Enfant Perdu (Dip. I), dead in Boniville where he was reared by Térésa. The festival is given more than two years after death. Sometimes, when there is no spouse subjected to mourning

(which is the case here), they wait still longer in order to be able to group the lifting of mourning for several dead people from the same village in a single ceremony. The unfolding of the rites shows that much more importance is attached to Béniti than to the two young boys; in fact, the ceremony is devoted almost exclusively to her.

765 621 613 [229] The mourning-lifting ceremonies in Boniville are particularly interesting, for this village includes members of five different lineages. The distribution of functions and duties allows one to better understand the thought of the Boni relative to social organization; the principle of residence plays the determining role. The ceremony takes place in the village where the dead people lived, whatever their lineage was. The burden of organization is divided up about equally among all the inhabitants of the village. The /183/ members of the lineages of the dead people living in other villages are present at the ceremony, but their contribution is much less important.

765 [251] On November 8 (day called busimã kom) at noon, the festival begins with the arrival of the buchiman who, the week before, had caught and dried fish for the festival.

The buchiman are put under the authority of Tofioto (K). They are all volunteers (one who would excuse himself from rendering this service would lay himself open to being abandoned alone on the day when he would have to bear the weight of mourning for one of his near relatives). The main weight of mourning is borne by Boniville village. The people of the principal fraction of the Dju (Asisi village) furnish a rather large contribution as regards time spent fishing but symbolic as to the furnishing of tafia and imported foods.

2 —	Lapé —
1 —	Papaïston —
2 —	Poti —

They furnished a total of two weeks of work but each one collected for himself about 15 kilograms of dry fish.

765 [531] [411] The buchiman, riding in five large canoes decorated with multicolored oriflammes, approach the Boniville wharf where all the young people of the village are massed, the men armed with their guns, the women brandishing banners made of brand-new camisas. The hurrahs resound, punctuated by hundreds of shots. In an atmosphere of enthusiasm the buchiman make their entrance into the village and go to report on their mission to the council assembled under the mortuary shed. According to custom, this council is improvised at the last moment by the elders who are there, without attention to origin, and does not involve any definite authority.

Four baskets of dried fish are put down at the edge of the shed, for the mourning-lifting festival, then each one goes to get and arrange in his house a big personal basketful.

The fish intended for the festival are distributed among the women charged with preparing them.

About 2:00 P.M. the elders are assembled in the western part of the shed; in the eastern part, the near relatives of the dead for whom mourning will be lifted lament.

Several apinti drums are brought and placed laterally.

765 [535] The buchiman execute the kwadyo dance, which seems to be an African war dance; they hold a stick in front of them and make the gesture of taking aim.

That lasts about half an hour.

The guests continue to arrive individually and settle themselves around the mortuary shed, seated on their little benches.

765 202 About three o'clock the drums begin to beat again. It is Bukuman, master of the art of speaking with the drum, who strikes the summons' formulas; the others give him the cue.

The drum speaks for a long time (1). An elder translates

> 1. It is more a question of conventional formulas than a language; two different sounds can be obtained from the drum by striking respectively with the fingers and with the palm.

for me approximately: "Other villages, be still, for there is a great festival in the grand man's village."

"We who are now living, we are going to do what our ancestors taught us long ago."

765 [551] Then the dead for whom mourning will be lifted are directly addressed, being called by name if they are men; for the women like Béniti, who cannot be called directly, for women do not have a drum-name, they call one of their deceased near relatives, here Diolé †, Béniti's brother: "Tell thy sister that we are going to part company with her, for we have been in mourning for her a long time and this is the custom, such as the ancestors did before us."

[969] "Ancestors, come, come near us, we are going to pour the tafia and cane juice for you."

[202] (Libations are made within the shed.) Then the drum addresses those present:

[202] "You who with obia so that the machete will not cut you, so that the broken glass will not wound you, what are you waiting for? You remain seated, are you afraid?"

765 At these words, several of those present stand up and 786 begin to dance, seeking the trance of possession. Some run
787 into the village and come back running, carrying banana-tree stalks. Others drag thorny spathes of awara; two brandish an old, demolished boat.

The drum furiously beats the rhythm of Kumenti. Part of the dancers, taken hold of by a furious delirium, jump and [824] prance about. Certain ones take thorny spathes of awara (2) under the arm or pass them around the neck.

2. Thorny palm (astrocaryum vulgare) whose sharp thorns nearly 10 centimeters long are particularly formidable. It is impossible to pick up an awara spathe with bare hands without hurting oneself.

Part of those present are taken hold of in their turn by trances, including people of mature age and serious character like Fintiman, who is carried off in a faint.

Two possessed people, a man (Ernest, Kotika) and a woman (Awini, Boniville), smeared with pemba, are subject to extraordinary contortions. Ernest breaks a bottle over his head with such force that the pieces fly several meters. Both /185/ dance on their knees for an appreciable length of time (but the next day Awini will come to have herself cared for). Those present manifest frenzied joy.

765 About five o'clock the sange dance begins. Three apinti
535 drums are placed at the west wall of the shed. The orchestra
534 is completed by an old overturned boat which seven to eight men strike with sticks.

765 [535] The figures are almost similar to those of the awasa dance, except that the dancers move forward stamping with the left foot.

Second day, Nov. 9. Day called puu dɛ ("a day is withdrawn"). No rite is performed on that day. Each one is busy with his occupations. The women pound and winnow rice.

Third day, Nov. 10. Day called lolo mata "the pestles are rolled." That day they carry to the edge of the mortuary shed pestles, wood for heating, and everything necessary for the preparation of the next day's food (1).

1. When there is a spouse in mourning, it is on that day that he is brought to the mortuary shed by the dead person's lineage, congratulated, and clothed in new garments red in color.

Fourth day, Nov. 11. Day called poti ala sani na a krɛy ɔsu ("to put all things into the mortuary shed").

About two o'clock the young men who have been to cut wood for heating come back in boats decorated with pennons, in the midst of hurrahs and shots.

At three o'clock the basia circulate in the village, calling the women who appear from all sides carrying heavy baskets of cassava.

The provisions prepared for the festival are brought to the edge of the shed. Many of those present have brought a bottle [293] of tafia. The basia collect all the tafia in large demijohns. In all there will be six demijohns of 15 liters of tafia and as much cane juice.

765 538 About eight o'clock in the evening, people assemble around the mortuary shed where the drummers and mato (Anansi Toli) storytellers sit. Amèmbé, of Loka village, begins to tell a story which is scarcely listened to, the audience remaining noisy and distracted. The respondents punctuate his discourse with approbations: "hiya ba! na so!" At several [522] passages of the story (when Anansi has succeeded in deceiving his victim), the audience shakes with laughter, the drums beat, the storyteller and his respondents sing and dance. Little by little the audience warms up, participates intensely in the story.

Another tale follows, told by Adiiso, head of the Dju lineage (Asisi). The audience is overexcited, the interludes [535] of dancing become more and more numerous and longer, everybody, men, women, and children take part in it.

About eleven o'clock the dances are going to begin in 765 the order susa, sɔ̃ŋgɛ, awasa; at six /186/ o'clock in the morn- [535] ing the next day the awasa dances are carried on. Part of those present go down to the wharf to go home, showing no apparent fatigue.

Fifth day, Nov. 12. Nothing happens in the morning. The people take some rest.

At 3:00 P.M. the young men go around dressed up to the nines; people visit each other from one house to the other, they drink and sing.

765 About 3:30 the basia circulate in the village, calling the 262 women to bring the ceremonial meal. Tables are set out under 264 the shed. The women each bring a big bowl or basin of cooked rice (about two kilograms of rice). Some add a bowl of sauce or cooked fish. No meat.

The basia lay out all that on the tables. There are about 30 bowls or basins (which represents a handsome effort, the rice harvest having been bad), about 50 bottles of soda, several boxes of pastries /biscuits/ and Dutch cheeses.

765 Fintiman directs the ceremony. He divides all these 264 dishes without distinction of origin into several lots, one for [613] each lineage.

[515] All the guests go down to the wharf to wash in the river, then put on new clothes before participating in the ceremonial meal.

[613] The people of each lineage go to eat on their side; a bowl is carried to the people in mourning, like Alémin, who remain confined at home. But the near relatives of the three dead for whom mourning is going to be lifted take part in the ceremony.

765 About four o'clock the women are seen to appear again, carrying a small bowl of rice accompanied by a little fish and peanut sauce. They put them down on the ground at the edge of the mortuary shed.

Banana leaves are arranged at the edge of the shed (north wall, on the side facing the river).

The elders, seated on their little benches, gather together in a half circle. Fintiman and Bukuman take a little from each bowl, spread it out on the banana leaves. They call by name the dead for whom mourning is being lifted, Béniti and the young boys Tito and G..., speaking to them in a familiar conversational tone as if to living people whom one invited to eat.

Several persons come to eat a little of the food.

At 5:00 P.M. Fintiman has five small boys of five to seven years line up, each provided with a basin, in front of the food spread out on the ground. At a given signal they rush forward, each one carrying away what he could cover with his basin. They leave a little of it, which will stay there all night. The next day the left-overs from the buffet prepared for the living will be added to it.

765 In the evening the young people dance in front of the houses of several men who have given the tafia, but that no longer has the character of a ceremony. All is over at eleven o'clock in the evening.

On the sixth day, Nov. 13, at seven o'clock, the elders assemble again in front of the /187/ banana leaves where a little of the food offered the day before remains (dogs and chickens have eaten part of it).

A long palaver begins, disconnected and disconcerting, whose purpose escapes me. The clearest thing coming out of it is that the captains make known what the grand man (absent from the ceremony) told them in the morning. They thank the grand man for this festival which has gone off without any incident; they say that they can be counted on if some mourning rises in another village.

[291] [535] [177] Todo makes apologies to the grand man because the young people were dressed in a new style (large loincloths /calimbés/ reaching to the ground) and danced several Creole dances. He says to the audience that this does not conform to custom and that the true Boni dances are sɔ̃ŋgɛ, susa, awasa.

Next Fintiman pours water gently on the banana leaves, calling the dead whose mourning is being lifted. "We pour water for you, watch over the people in your family, over the grand man and over those who have worked for the mourning, that they may be in good health, that nothing bad happen to them.

We have done with you; stay where God put you."

765 While pronouncing these words, Fintiman breaks his dead 775 mother's bench and dish (for the dead boys, nothing had been [768] brought). It is a question not only of marking the break with the living but of procuring for the dead woman what will be necessary for her in the Beyond. For this purpose a paddle is also broken, which her son Klémenti prepared for her, and calabashes prepared by her daughters.

765 Since there is no spouse in mourning (Béniti had been divorced for a long time), the ceremony stops there.

Then those present scatter in the village, go to dance, eat, and drink at one another's houses. They have the satisfied air of people who have just done an important job successfully.

[602] On the seventh day an intimate ceremony brings together Béniti's children and grandchildren in her daughter Kulina's house, where she died. After an offering of food, they weep and lament a last time. Then Fintiman, her elder son, repeats the formula of separation:

"We have done with you; stay where God has put you."

Lifting of mourning for Béniti. Division of expenditures. Béniti belonged to the fraction of the Dju lineage settled in [613] Boniville; the principal weight of the mourning therefore had [621] to be borne by that fraction, the other (the one in Asisi) bringing a symbolic contribution.

Béniti left two sons and two adult grandsons:

/188/ Actually the elder son Fintiman paid half the expense himself, the younger son being ill and without regular [431] resources. No contribution in money is asked of the women, who must, on the other hand, draw substantial amounts from their rice stock.

765 431 Nearly half of the tafia was brought to the mortuary shed to serve for the dances, the other half was distributed to visitors in the course of calls of personal interest that they were coming to make on the village people at home.

Béniti's three sons-in-law each gave three liters of tafia.

[613] The Boniville men belonging to other lineages each gave one liter, except the two principal basia (assistants to the grand man for the internal running of the village), Todo and Tofioto, who gave two liters each. Besides, each one kept one or two liters to offer to callers at their homes.

[613] As for the men of the Dju lo of Asisi, they brought one liter each, including the head of the lineage.

All the Boniville women and all the women of Asisi-Dju brought their contributions in the form of food.

In all about 150 adult visitors came.

765 273 One can estimate that about 200 liters of tafia were drunk, or a little more than a liter per person, which, for five days of festivities, is not enormous.

But since some drink very little, one can estimate that those most given to drunkenness drank up to three and four liters.

Inheritance

428 613

The custom of the Refugee Blacks, hostile to all that might divide the matrilineage, cannot accept the notion of a single heir entering into possession of all the property of the dead person and replacing him in his functions. This idea of the only heir considered as a substitute for the dead person, as it exists among the Bamiléké, which leads toward the individualization of one line within the lineage, can be regarded as the extreme opposite of the thought of the Refugee Blacks.

[613] must be dispersed among the members of the dead person's matrilineage in the strict sense (bɛ) and his children.

/189/ The custom of numerous African societies has it that the men inherit from men and the women from women. This notion is totally contrary to the legal thought of the Refugee Blacks. A house, an object, a boat, may pass from a man to a woman or conversely. It is the same with the lower gods with which the dead person might have been possessed.

428 If the dead person has not indicated before his death, in 787 front of witnesses, the distribution of his property, the same
764 divinatory procedure is used as for the determination of the causes of death: the coffin being carried on the heads of two men, in front of it are lined up the members of the dead person's matrilineage in the restricted sense and his children. The president of the lãnti kuutu asks: "To whom dost thou leave thy house?" The coffin moves toward one of those present, then: "To whom dost thou leave thy boat?" "To whom dost thou leave thy gun?" "To whom dost thou leave thy clearings being harvested?"

428 The partial heirs thus designated may enter immediately into possession of their legacies.

428 Reserved are what the Boni call the "equipment" of the 765 dead person, that is, his personal belongings, linen, money, which will be divided up after the lifting of mourning.

The customary rule is the following:

[602] For the duration of the mourning, these objects shut up in a trunk are put under the care of the eldest child if a woman was concerned, of the eldest classificatory nephew if a man was concerned. After the lifting of mourning, the distribution is 428 made by the dead person's mother, if she is still alive, if not 602 by the eldest of the classificatory uncles or aunts, and if they all are dead, by the eldest of the surviving classificatory brothers or sisters of the dead person.

428 Example: When △ Atikati (Dju, E18) died in 1953, about 75 years old, his house went to his sister Adyidya (E19), his gun to Kéwénu (G10), his boat to his classificatory sister Aliki (E23), aged 85.

[602] Upon the lifting of mourning for Atikati, it was Aliki, by reason of being the eldest of the surviving classificatory sisters, who distributed his personal belongings and his money; for example, an iron bracelet went to Sosoman (E14) (1).

1. See the genealogical table of the Dju lineage.

428 613 602 By seeing the division of this inheritance on the genealogical table, one realizes that classificatory kinship is not a useless word and that in fact, within the matrilineage (bee), the division is made strictly at random, without consideration of sex, age, or proximity of kinship, which is strictly normal, given the divinatory procedure used.

428 776 602 An analogous conclusion comes out of the study of the inheritance of gods; the Papa gadu god of the ancestress ○Sapiké (D5) passed into Pamasa (E26), her kin in the seventh degree. Likewise the god Ampuku of △ Agoabuchi, passing from a man to a woman, went /190/ to Dabisa (G45), his kin in the tenth degree at least (Agoabuchi could not be placed with certainty on the genealogical table). The Kumēnti god of △ Antinon (D9) went to Achiké (F13).

428 Study of the inheritance of houses leads to analogous conclusions.

The only case where a certain systematization is seen to appear is that of inheriting from women having adult children. It seems (but this is not a legal principle) that these children receive the essential part of the inheritance.

428 178 A tendency which has appeared during recent years in connection with men consists in bequeathing during their lifetime the essential part of their property to the children they have raised.

613 [787] Inheritance of functions and powers. Upon the death of a lineage head, the yɔrka of the dead man is asked whom it wishes to see named. Then the council assembles to proceed with the nomination; it remains free in its choice, the will of the dead man beyond the grave does not have the force of law; but actually, it seems to be most often followed.

As for the function of captain which is common to all the fractions of one lo, the inheritance may pass from one fraction to another.

Ex.: for the Awara Bakka lo, the succession:
Asèmbay (Aw.B.2);
Pèèyon (Aw.B.1);
Kondoku (Aw.B.1).

CHAPTER VII

Origin of the Beliefs of the Refugee Blacks

771 128 The spiritual life of the Refugee Blacks of the Guianas is intimately bound up with their social life, and the division we are obliged to make for the sake of clearness of the account is very often arbitrary. So we shall try to point out these connections wherever they are essential.

791 What constitutes the religion of the Refugee Blacks is a 194 synthesis of elements originating with various peoples of West Africa, especially the Ashanti, Agni, Mina, and Fon and also Congolese elements. This synthesis seems to have been born
[619] among the Saramaka, the first tribe formed at the beginning of the 18th century, and to have been adopted thereafter with modifications of detail by the Djuka, tribe created about 1760. The Boni, the last tribe formed, probably received these beliefs during the time of slavery which they spent under the tutelage [184] of the Djuka, from 1815 to 1860. The beliefs of the Boni and those of the Djuka have an identical base; the rites and their [178] effects on social life are exactly the same. Nevertheless, the Djuka, almost ten times more numerous, have been able to keep very differentiated conceptions and specialized cults, involving priests in the literal sense of the term.

The Boni have kept only the essentials, and many conceptions, especially the myths which serve as support for the whole tradition, are very much blurred among them.

829 The Boni like to imagine that Africans constitute only one nation, and that they have inherited in a lump the traditions and social forms of this nation. They know now (especially from having seen a good deal of the Senegalese riflemen of the 1937 French mission) that numerous tribes exist, but that has not shaken the veneration they have for Africa, source, for 178 them, of all knowledge and all strength. However, almost nothing of the culture peculiar to each one of the great tribes has reached them; no name of an African nation has remained in their memory, and /192/ none of the languages of their land of origin has been kept (1); everywhere the vehicular language

1. One observes, however, that a certain number of disconnected details of African life have come down to them by oral tradition; thus it is that they have kept a rather exact description of the elephant (leu) and the gorilla (malẽngwana).

[648] imposed on the slaves has prevailed. There is nothing surprising about that, since the slaveholders tried, in order to prevent revolts, to mix to the maximum the Blacks of the various tribes.

174 A certain number of men initiated in differing degrees into African cults were among the rebels. They tried to con-
177 serve and transmit these rites, which their descendants have more or less transposed or deformed (2). As far as one can

2. The single fact that the vegetation and fauna differed totally from those of Africa immediately required a modification of ritual which called for infusions of leaves of numerous plants to which definite magical properties are attributed.

[198] As far as one can judge by the secret languages attached to these cults, in which are recognized many words deformed from the ordinary language, and a few Indian words, these cults in their present state must [178] differ appreciably from the ones which gave them birth. In fact, the only thing the Refugee Blacks have authentically kept is concepts, metaphysical and moral ideas.

771 171 [177] This is precisely what constitutes the great interest of the Refugee Blacks' religious forms, which one finds again, besides, in large measure, mixed with Christian ideas, among all the Blacks of South America. They seem to point out a very important common background of conceptions common to the West African civilizations.

771 174 184 It is certainly not by chance if the various tribes of Refugee Blacks have adopted such close social and religious forms. One must assume the action of several strong personalities who knew, with an almost superhuman instinct, how to sift out from the jumble of beliefs brought by the rebel slaves what was necessary to the life of the new society; but this new religion would not have taken root in forms so stable and so coherent if all had not been intimately conscious of being in agreement on a minimum of common concepts.

It is important to observe that the Refugee Blacks, who borrowed most of their techniques from the Indians and Europeans, remained rigorously faithful in their beliefs and rituals to the African substratum, from which they drew a homogeneous and [177] living whole. Although the beliefs of the Indians are known to them in their main lines, they have borrowed almost nothing from them; on the other hand, it is certain that vague Christian recollections influenced the conception they have of the supreme god, Masa Gadu, and their moral and religious law. But they have been introduced into an African system of thought, and in fact the beliefs which directly influence individual and social life come in a straight line from the African earth.

772 [171] Metaphysical conceptions. Through the rituals of the Refugee Blacks appear /193/ metaphysical conceptions very comparable to those which have been noted in the populations of West Africa.

772 The Refugee Blacks consider beings and things as distributed on several levels:

--The creator god;
--Lower gods;
--Ancestors;
--Men;
--Animals;
--Plants and inanimate things.

To each of these levels corresponds a level of life and a level of force (kaakiti). A higher force may act on a lower force, but not the reverse.

771 One may say that the cults of the Refugee Blacks have as their goal to capture the vital force of the gods and the ancestors and to bring it back to the level of men, giving them strength, luck, and fecundity. To thus increase one's vital force can be defined as good. Evil (negative magic, wisi) is, on the contrary, to capture the vital force of another man in order to increase one's own.

754 The idea that one has wisima is that he uses a higher force (especially an ancestor's yorka) which he has succeeded in capturing by magic and in subjecting to his will in order to dominate someone else. Reduced to his own strength alone he could do nothing.

789 824 The magic of the Refugee Blacks might allow one to believe that they think they act directly on men through the medium of plants to which magic virtues are attached. This [772] would be a grave error; in their minds, animals and plants are placed at a lower level absolutely incapable of acting on man by itself. Plants are thought to act only insofar as they appear capable of attracting, of holding like storage cells, the vital force emanated from the gods.

778 824 A currently widespread idea about animism would lead one to think, for example, that before felling a tree a Refugee Black addresses words and offerings to it. That is entirely absent from his thought: either this tree is likely to serve as support for a god, in which case it can be touched only after complex rites having the aim of transferring the god elsewhere, or it is simply a tree, and one cuts it down without further ado.

784 825 One very clear aspect of these conceptions is the dagu kunu, a curse resulting from the killing of a dog. Any animal may be killed with impunity but not a dog, because "a dog is almost a man."

[613] At the opposite extreme from the true kunu, a curse extending to a whole lineage, the dagu kunu applies only to the guilty person and draws only limited misfortunes upon him.

[772] No feeling whatever with respect to the dog enters into this conception, but only the idea that he is placed on a particular plane, near the plane of the human and his level of force.

776 /194/ The Great Gods

The Boni recognize a supreme God, Nana (1), more commonly called Masa Gadu, and Kedi Amu, Kediampon in Kumenti language. He created the lower gods and all that lives on the earth.

1. This term comes from the Agni.

773 Here is how the old Boni men relate the myth of the creation of the world:

God created a brother and sister, Adam and Efa. They were twins. He put them in a place where they lived happily without working. But he forbade them to touch the fruit of the custard-apple tree.

773 One day, the devil came in the form of the serpent dagowe. He told them: "Eat the seeds of this tree and you will know all things like God himself."

Adam allowed himself to be tempted and ate a custard apple, he had Efa eat some of it. He found this fruit good and said: "God had deceived us." His heart changed, he ceased looking at Efa as a sister and united with her. She became pregnant.

Some time afterward, God came upon the earth and saw what had happened. He said to Efa: "Thou shalt bear a child in pain." And to Adam: "Thou shalt eat only what thou hast harvested by the sweat of thy brow." He gave him a stone axe and told him: "Go on the nearby mountain; thou wilt find the seedlings of what thou wilt have to plant henceforth in order to feed thyself."

Efa had two twins whom she again called Adam and Efa, and other children. From these children all men have descended.

[775] This Biblical myth, transposed into the African way of thinking, explains the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks concerning [845] twins. It was two twins whom God created first. Twins are beloved of God and share his nature.

776 The idea most generally accepted among the Boni is that Masa Gadu is the source of force from which all living beings derive theirs; men are connected with him through their ancestors.

It happens that Masa Gadu may intervene directly in the lives of men, and in such a case he acts necessarily according to justice, without any magic whatever being able to protect the guilty one. But in most cases he does not intervene, showing himself in that way to be as arbitrary as the lower gods.

[184] The great gods Gwangwéla and Gédéosu of the Djuka are not known to the Boni.

[194] Strictly speaking, no cult of Masa Gadu exists. No edifice is reserved for him, he has no priests, and no collective 776 ceremonies are conducted on his behalf. He is nevertheless 769 constantly present in the religious life of the Boni, associated with ancestor worship. Every ceremony of ancestor worship 776 includes an invocation to Masa Gadu. From time to time, for 769 specific motives such as the illness of a member of the lo, 755 people go /195/ specially to the fraga tiki to invoke Masa Gadu.
[613] The oldest man of the lo officiates, while a younger one pours
[778] a little water and tafia at the foot of the fraga tiki; the elder addresses Masa Gadu in everyday language, in simple terms, in a familiar conversational tone, asking him for the cure of illnesses or the end of calamities. Those present, seated in a semicircle, punctuate the end of the speech with some rhythmical applause, uttering the ritual formula of thanks: "Gaã tãŋgi tãŋgi fi yu, Masa Gadu."

776 Outside of these ceremonies which hardly go beyond the 782 framework of the lineage, everyone may address Masa Gadu directly by praying aloud, if, for example, he finds himself alone in the bush and prey to an illness. One never addresses Masa Gadu other than for a specific material purpose. Inner prayer for the purpose of spiritual perfection does not exist to our knowledge among the Refugee Blacks.

776 One applies directly to Masa Gadu when one believes [755] oneself to be the victim of an iniquitous action (see curse). How-[784] ever, although the Refugee Blacks have a very lively sense of justice, they never call Masa Gadu to witness for the cruel and arbitrary vengeances (kunu) which the lower divinities are [812] believed to exercise on them. It is taken for granted that all these divinities do conforms to the role which Masa Gadu has assigned to them and that the suffering they inflict on men is indispensable to the proper working of the universe.

794 [181] The laws of Odun. The cult of Odun (Odū) is the keystone of the social and religious structure of the Refugee Blacks. It is a very secret cult; its rites are not practiced in the presence of outsiders and all curiosity about it meets with frank hostility. The Boni, who talk rather freely about the cults of possession, [123] are mute on the subject of Odun, and one may spend years among them without even hearing this name uttered.

794 184 The worship of Odun is common to the Boni and the Saramaka (perhaps this is what explains the trustful relations which exist between the two groupings). Among the Djuka it is replaced by the worship of Gwangwéla (Grantata), which has exactly the same functions and rites.

796 Odun is not to be confused with the creator God Nana (Masa Gadu). The myths explaining the relationship of these two entities were not known by our informants, but it is clear that Odun was sent to men by Masa Gadu as legislator and judge.

671 Odun's laws have a profound originality, as much by their content as by the sanctions which accompany them. It is not excessive to speak of a religious and moral doctrine of the Refugee Blacks.

These laws appear in negative form. A certain number [641] of acts and behavior are forbidden to those who have entered the society of the Refugee Blacks by taking an oath which binds 784 them for good and all. Offenders will be punished without the direct intervention of men, by the all-powerful action of Odun, who will kill them or /196/ strike them down with sicknesses. As a general rule, Odun's punishment is death; this is what explains the fear his name inspires.

673 Odun forbids:

[754] --Sorcery, wisi, in the most general sense, that is, any magic action having as its purpose the killing, making ill, and in a general way doing harm to another person.

[673] --Vengeance; if someone believes himself to be the [754] victim of witchcraft, he must under no circumstances engage [627] in counterwitchcraft or invoke his ancestors against his enemy.
He may ask only for the protection of the ɔbia. It is Odun who [784] will avenge him by sooner or later killing the evil-doer.

--Violence in any form whatever. It is regarded as a [683] particularly serious offense against the laws of Odun to strike with an armed hand and to make human blood flow (1).

[684] 1. That explains the strictness with which the society of the Refugee Blacks limits the right of punishment granted to the wronged husband, who must strike only with bare fists in front of witnesses, never in the bush nor on the river. Fear of seeing [826] human blood flow explains the [952] reticence of the Boni toward minor surgical operations.

[641] --Any attack on personal liberty by material or moral [586] coercion; in particular, neither a man nor woman may be constrained to remain in a marriage which has ceased to please him; nobody may be forced to reside here or there.

[832] The forms of magic so popular among West Indians, aimed at capturing a person's love, are for this reason rejected by the Refugee Blacks and considered as a form of wisi.

[769] --Any evocation of the spirits of the dead, even to ask them for protection, other than in the public ceremonies [754] provided for by custom. Thus nobody must go to the cemetery to pray alone on his parents' grave. Whoever would do that would immediately be considered as wisima.

784 Odun's punishment is not regarded as immediate. It may be delayed for a certain number of years for reasons known to him alone, but it will necessarily take place.

683 783 Violence can be pardoned if the guilty one repents and makes an offering. The reparative offering (for example, if someone has threatened his adversary with a machete or has struck him to the point of making blood flow) is a demijohn of tafia or a certain quantity of tobacco leaves displayed in Odun's chapel.

754 784 But there is no pardon for the wisimã. Even if men pardon, Odun remains pitiless. Thus nobody can admit being guilty of wisi, for there is no possible reparation; besides, no one would dare beg for Odun's mercy on behalf of a wisimã, for this would be to associate oneself with him and expose oneself to being struck by the god in the same way.

[683] [766] The wisimã will be killed by Odun, and men will have to share in the punishing by refusing the body burial in the cemetery and by going to throw it in the bush. If they /197/ refused to obey this law, Odun would consider that they denied his doctrine and would strike them down either in person or by killing any member of the guilty lineage.

Thus, when in 1952 an old woman named A... of the Lapé lineage, who had settled in the Creole village Hermina, died, it appeared that she had wisi; but since she had been living among the Creoles, her near relatives did not dare intervene, and she was buried in the Hermina cemetery. Several [613] years passed without incident, then misfortunes cropped up; deaths which took place in the lineage, especially that of P... (1955) and T... (1957), and an accident that happened to a child in 1958, were recognized as punishments carried out by Odun upon the Lapé lineage.

346 The place of worship of Odun is a tiny chapel near the grand man's house. It contains only a post crudely carved in the shape of a bust, without any decoration.

788 The rites of the worship of Odun are known only by the [643] grand man and by an old man who replaces him when he travels. [754] They are practiced only on the occasion of the collective oath against wisi, renewed every two or three years, and when it is [783] necessary to implore Odun's mercy toward an offender. The officiant bathes the latter's body with a maceration of leaves that he alone knows.

783 To question Odun and know whether he pardons, they 789 make use of a sacred object named afalaku, placed on a board [708] put on the heads of two men. The answers yes and no are deduced by interpretation of the movements of the bearers, as in the interrogation of the dead.

695 The oath before Odun is also practiced as a legal test, permitting a man unjustly accused of theft or any misdeed whatever to justify himself.

Thus, in November, 1959, B... of Asisi, accused by two Djuka of being responsible for the burning of a large cabin /carbet/ in which objects of value were stored, asked to justify himself before Odun.

671 Odun's laws, which have the effect of forbidding violence, 771 vengeance, and every form of oppression, give to the society 571 of the Refugee Blacks a unique atmosphere of dignity and serenity which is not found to the same degree in animistic African societies. Most African societies censure sorcery and murder, but they accept vengeance and various forms of oppression. It is probable that the men who, two or three centuries ago, deep in the forests of Surinam, developed these laws, were inspired more or less consciously by Christian ideas; but they introduced them into an African system of thought, associating them with the idea of material sanctions in the present life, without which they would have been powerless.

Odun's laws create an irreducible cleavage between the Refugee Blacks and the Creoles. The Creoles of Surinam, like the West Indian gold miners of the Maroni, profess Christianity, but they have a special conception of it, associating with Christian ideas /198/ beliefs of various origins and often magic practices. If in quasi-totality they reject magic aimed at doing harm without reason, they take very generally for granted:

--Counter sorcery inspired by vengeance;

--"Invocations" to the spirits of the dead and divers magic formulas in which it is believed one captures the vital force of these spirits in order to make practical use of it;

--Charms having the purpose of forcing the love of a person one desires.

The Creoles are as attached to these conceptions as the Refugee Blacks to the laws of Odun, which are absolutely contrary to them. They have such importance in the thought of both that it would be unthinkable to make a group of Creoles and a group of Refugee Blacks live together for any appreciable length of time integrated into the same organization. Attempts made to do this, especially in Surinam, have always failed. When an economic activity engages them in the same work in the same locality, Creoles and Refugee Blacks form two separate groupings, each living according to its own law.

B 167 754 [782] [613]

If Refugee Blacks leave their group for any great length of time to settle in the midst of Creoles, if they do not come back periodically to renew the oath of Odun, it is taken for granted that they have abjured his laws and that they are suspect of wisi. It happens that people who have spent a whole portion of their lives in the midst of the Creoles come back to live in their native village because they are prey to adversity or sickness; they are always welcomed (the lineage cannot expel one of its members), but chances are great that they will be declared wisimã upon their death. This was especially the case with an 167 754 old woman of 90, A..., who died in Asisi in January, 1957. Having lived with Creoles in her youth, she had come back to live in her native village for at least 30 years and had never given occasion for any unfavorable remark. Nevertheless, upon her death it appeared that she had wisi.

771 829 177 Attitude toward Christianity. The Refugee Blacks, who are acquainted better than one might believe with the conceptions of the populations in the midst of whom they live, have a clear feeling of the relationship which exists between their metaphysical and moral conceptions and those of Christianity. They think they worship the same god as the Christians, in a com-
[797] pletely different way but just as sound. They have no animosity whatever toward the Catholic and Protestant clergy, and most of them agree willingly to wearing crosses or medals. But they have not the least intention of abandoning their beliefs for that. They do not perceive the contradiction and do not understand that people might want to oblige them to choose.

851 171 Like the Creole gold miners, they attach great importance to baptism, considered as an obia protective against the dangers of the bush. On Christmas, 1957 they were strongly impressed
165 797 by the accidental death of a Djuka Christian living at the Kotika school. He refused to observe mourning for his wife
[688] according to the custom of the Refugee Blacks, and used to go
[273] to drink in the cabarets of the Creole villages. On Christmas
[784] evening, when drunk, he drowned himself. That was attributed to a suprahuman punishment. We heard /199/ the following reflection on this subject: "He was baptized and he drowned himself just the same. That is therefore not worth the trouble."

61 581 591 Actually, the matrilineal structure of the Refugee Blacks and their conception of marriage form an irreducible cleavage, which appears immediately as soon as one leaves the metaphysical conceptions to pass to the plane of practical living.

581 The Refugee Blacks change their attitude immediately as soon as one speaks to them about marriage. Men and women are unanimous in considering marriage as an intolerable violation of individual freedom and as a tie without purpose; they talk about it with veritable indignation, even having the feeling of an offense against morality.

Cults of Possession

794

The phenomena of possession are extremely frequent [171] among the Blacks of America (possession by saints or inspiration by the Holy Spirit among the Blacks of Brazil and the United [171] States, voodooism in Haiti). With the Refugee Blacks they make up the very base of religious life to the point of being the normal means of communication between the gods and men; they have profound effects on all social life.

The cults of possession practiced by the Refugee Blacks of Guiana differ from those of the Blacks of Brazil and Haiti and do not appear to be directly connected with the African cults which have been described.

[128] We shall give here only very concise information about the ritual of these cults and we shall mainly try to show their place in relation to the institutions of the Refugee Blacks, and their functioning.

787 Possession is believed to be the entrance into a man of a suprahuman entity (divinity, spirit of an ancestor) which, during a variable length of time generally rather short (a few minutes to several hours), uses the body of this man and expresses itself through his mouth. They say that the man has become the horse - hasi - of the divinity. They also say: "Such-and-such a divinity entered his head." The possessed person is called

787 [171] The phenomena of possession exist among other populations of the Guianas and especially among the Amerindians, but among the Refugee Blacks they have special and well-defined forms.

--For the duration of possession, the ordinary consciousness of the man is totally abolished. When he comes back to himself, he no longer remembers anything and the others present have to repeat to him what the divinity revealed. This total [171] loss of consciousness during possession appears to be a very constant phenomenon with the Blacks, in Africa as much as in [114] America. Professor de Goeje calls attention to the fact that the Indian medicine man, on the contrary, does not lose /200/ consciousness during his trances and is supposed to receive, himself, the revelations of the spirits.

When a man is possessed by a divinity, in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks he is no longer there; what his body may do is not attributed to him at all. They say: "The gadu does this, says that, dances in such a way." If the gadu hurt someone (but that practically never happens) or broke something, its bearer would not have any responsibility.

787 198 [176] --The divinity expresses itself in a language peculiar to it; we shall see further on that there are four categories of divinities likely to become incarnate in men, which corresponds to four secret languages of which in practice only two are known by the Boni, at least by the oldest among them.

The bearer of the divinity, in his usual state of consciousness, knows in general this language, which he has learned from a teacher if it is a matter of a possession desired by him and obtained with the help of definite practices.

But there are also numerous cases of unprovoked possession (in the kunu especially) and people state that in this case the divinity speaks its language just as well, although its bearer has never learned it;

787 --Possession is manifested by kinds of trances called gita or k3mfo, of a varying nature according to the divinity concerned, which sometimes involve phenomena of insensibility and acts impossible to perform in a normal state;

787 --The first time the divinity enters a man, it imposes 776 a kina (interdiction) upon him which will henceforth be the 784 sign of his function. This is what is called a gadu kina. This kina varies from one divinity to another, but in principle a given divinity imposes the same kina on its divers bearers. The divinity names itself and indicates to its bearer a means of calling it back in case of need: make such-and-such gestures, scatter such-and-such a liquid or powder.

All that is recorded by those present who reveal it to the person possessed when he has come round.

It is taken for granted that the god protects its bearer as long as the latter respects the laws of its cult and observes its kina (in the opposite case the god may punish him cruelly).
787 Conversely it is assumed that the man has a certain power, a 776 certain right over the god who possesses him. They say that he 789 is the master of it, masa, word which is habitually used in the sense "to be the owner of." At his death he can bequeath this 428 god in the forms and according to the laws regulating the inheritance of property. Of course the god is capable of not ratifying this decision, and it is free to manifest itself in anyone it wishes. But they affirm that in most cases it follows docilely the choice of its bearer. We shall see that this inheritance of gods plays an essential role in the functioning of the kunu.

787 Apprenticeship for possession. What goals does a man pursue
181 who desires thus to have a gadu? Above all he seeks strength. To succeed in life, to be protected against his enemies, to be respected: Such are the goals generally pursued and openly recognized by the Refugee Blacks who "have a gadu."

/201/

787 181 One also often finds as an avowed goal the idea of being useful to his lineage.

Disinterested mystical impulses appear totally absent from these cults.

787 154 But that is only one aspect of the phenomena of possession; they really seem to be, in large measure, unconscious and involuntary. Everyone can try to obtain a gadu, but everyone 787 797 does not succeed; one must have a certain predisposition. [154] "One cannot oblige a gadu to enter a man," say the Boni; it certainly seems, in fact, that in nearly half the cases possession takes place spontaneously and sometimes to the great terror of the person concerned; this is observed especially in the kunu.

[776] Mimi, a woman about 46 years old in 1958, of the Kotika lineage, was possessed by two gadu, an Ampuku and a Papa gadu. Here is how her near relatives relate the fashion in which they came into her.

[158] About ten years before, Mimi was showing signs of mental derangement. Her mind wandered, she sometimes used to leave the village to run in the bush at random, she uttered disconnected words (1). Then she fell very ill (pleurisy?).

1. It is necessary to note on this subject the very widely held idea among the Refugee Blacks, as among the Creoles, that certain forms of mental imbalance are due to the action of an entity which is trying to manifest itself in a man and does not [755] succeed. In order to cure this man, he must be "washed" with appropriate leaves so that the god can come to manifest itself in him; the rest of the time he will be normal.

791 The elders then consulted the oracles and perceived that Mimi
776 was victim of an Ampuku named Maogan which for a very long
[613] time had been pursuing the Kotika lineage with its vengeance
[784] (kunu). In order to protect herself, she sought to have herself given a more powerful god, and she became the pupil of an obiaman specialist in the cult of the Papa gadu. In this way she [782] had a Papa gadu named Ayaémé, divinity of beneficent character to which, in difficult cases, her family applies in order
[346] to obtain advice, protection, and remedies. She had a little hut built beside her house, where the god goes to rest when it has finished each of its trips to the country of men. Ayaémé
[784] imposed on Mimi its kina which concerns a fish. But even with all this she was not rid of her kunu of the Ampuku; and one day, something it had not yet done, the latter revealed itself in her [784] and spoke through her mouth. It announced that it would con-
[782] tinue to exercise its kunu against the Kotika lineage. They appeased it by sacrifices of red cloth and beer; since then, it seems calm and in rather good humor. It comes into Mimi from time to time and speaks in Saramaka language. They are very afraid of it, but they do not hesitate to question it and ask it for remedies, which it sometimes indicates. It laid on Mimi three [784] gadu kina concerning the acouchy, the agami, and the armadillo.

791 Organization of the cults of possession. Strictly speaking, no
787 religious brotherhoods exist in Boni country; there are only 794 teachers - bas(2) - who have received their power from another

2. It does not seem advisable to translate this word by "priest." In the minds of the Refugee Blacks, this is a matter of a teacher teaching pupils; they use the same word to designate a European or Creole schoolmaster.

/201 cont. /

791 teacher and who teach a small group of disciples - kineki -, 787 without distinction of villages or lineages and under their sole
[794] responsibility; each one, man or woman, is absolutely free to pursue his teaching.

/202/These teachers are not themselves possessed, but they are believed to know the processes which permit the neophyte to obtain possession with the minimum of risks. They accept the [776] fact, however, that that involves dangers, for one cannot oblige a particular gadu to come into someone, and one may in its place obtain an undesirable gadu.

791 Procedures vary according to the categories of gadu sought.
787 But they involve three elements which are always found in one 776 form or another:

--They begin by teaching the pupil the language of the [198] divinity, or rudiments at the very least (as we shall point out further on, these languages appear to be in decline); these lessons are private;

--On behalf of a group of pupils, the teacher prepares [824] infusions of certain leaves which are suited to the divinity in question. It is thought that the god likes these plants and that they have the power to attract it.

In certain cults it is required of the pupil to utter at the [788] same time formulas inviting the god to come into him. But this is not general; in the cult of the Papa gadu especially, the teachers bathe the students in the greatest silence.

791 At the end of the session, the student is often asked to 787 drink a little of the infusion. One might believe that it is a 824 matter of a process having a physical action, certain plants possibly containing hypnotic substances; but except for one aspect of the cult of the Kumēnti of which we shall speak later, this does not seem true; especially about the plants believed to attract the Papa gadu, it seems that they have received this role because of their color or odor. Our feeling is that, at least [562] for the Papa gadu cult which appeals more especially to women, suggestion plays an essential part.

153 --Pupils are taught, individually or collectively, to dance
791 in the manner of the god. Indeed, each divinity has a charac-
787 teristic form of dance, which it executes sometimes by using 776 the bodies of its bearers when it comes into them. The pupil 535 must imitate as best he can the individual movements and the [868] rhythm of this dance, while the teacher, using the appropriate drum, beats out the calling formulas.

If the god is satisfied with the student, he will be able to come into him.

791 These exercises appear to have as their goal the creation
787 in the pupils of forms of conditioned reflexes; they have nothing
785 in common with the very harsh ordeals which the medicine man
153 of the Guiana Indians imposes upon himself, and do not involve any form of asceticism. It does not seem that chastity, even temporary, is demanded of the student, any more than fasting or doing anything contrary to his inclinations.

787 The idea of a spiritual death and resurrection of the 791 possessed person, with all the ritual it entails: long reclusion of the neophytes, change of name of the one possessed, who is supposed to relearn all the activities of ordinary life, does not appear to have been kept by the Refugee Blacks. In a general [152] way, the atmosphere of solemn seriousness, /203/ of secrecy, and of fear, which characterize the Dahomey cults of possession is not found among them.

791 These lessons are always paid for and are even very 787 expensive. Payment is made in pieces of cloth, in demijohns
435 of tafia.
[436] Having a Kumēnti amounted in 1958 to at least 25,000 francs. This payment is not only compensation for the teacher;
[181] it is the mark of legitimacy. What has not been paid for is not, for the Refugee Blacks, legitimately acquired. We shall come back to this important point later.

153 Possession begins progressively; in the beginning the 787 divinity does not find in its bearer sufficient passivity, it does
791 not succeed well in expressing itself through his mouth, spectators observe only incoherent gestures and hear only unintelligible stammerings. The pupil must continue his training for a long time in order to become a suitable bearer.

789 The god, when it has just entered a man, always begins by rendering homage in its language to Masa Gadu, proclaiming that it acts only in his name and by his will.

[576] Then it greets those present, employing formulas which [198] are the exact transposition into its language of the ordinary Boni formulas of politeness; that even if it is getting ready to speak to them in the harshest manner.

The god speaks then in its language, saying not very intelligible things to the audience that appear to be related to what goes on in its country, to its family (for it is believed that these lower gods have a family). Finally, it begins to speak in ordinary language in order to be understood by those present, and answers questions.

796 Various categories of gods capable of bringing on possession.
787 The Refugee Blacks assume that four categories of lower gods
825 exist:

The first category consists of a series of gods which present themselves to men under very different aspects but which are nevertheless felt to be of the same nature. All speak the Kumenti language, all are well disposed toward men and do not exercise against them the kunu, that is, the curse;

--The Kumēnti, which have the appearance of jaguars and live in the bush;

--The Djadja, which have the appearance of ocelots;

--The Opete, which have the appearance of the urubu and which reside in the air;

776 --The Bũnsuɲki, which have the appearance of Indian 787 women and which reside in the waters of the rivers;
825 The second category is that of the Ampuku, much feared
[784] gods of the bush, likely to exercise the kunu against men. The [198] Ampuku speak a language which is very well known to the Saramaka but which nobody speaks in Boni country. When they wish to be understood, they speak the ordinary Saramaka dialect. They can, it is said, /204/ be seen at night in the bush in the form of unknown men dressed in the manner of the Refugee Blacks;

The third category is that of the Vɔɔdũ or Papa gadu, gods still more feared, which become incarnate in the boa snake
[198] dagowe. They speak the Papa language;
776 Finally, much feared also are the Kãntamasu, gods of 787 the termitaries, which speak a language which nobody under-[198] stands and use the Kumenti language to make themselves understood.

It is important to note that there is not a god Kumẽnti, a god Ampuku, etc., as there was in the pantheon of the Ancients a god Mars, a god Vulcan. For the Refugee Blacks those are generic names like Frenchman, Englishman. Questioned about a phenomenon of possession, they will answer: "It is Ampuku who makes," but in the same way they would say in front of a boat: "It is Saramaka who makes."

776 The relationships between these gods and their animal 787 form are obscure. For the Vɔɔdũ it is clear that people believe 825 they really live in the dagowe snakes, since the accidental death of one of these snakes in the burning of a clearing is considered a calamity which risks bringing a kunu. But that does not prove that a divine character is attributed to the snake itself. As for the Kumẽnti, there does not appear to be any precise bond between the genie and its jaguar appearance. If one meets a jaguar, one may fire on him all the same without inconvenience. If he is the support of a Kumẽnti, the shot will not be able to touch him, the god will not get angry about it.

787 animal is simply a prop for the god. The god borrows this body
825 in order to manifest itself, but it is not bound to it by nature. These conceptions are totally contrary to those of the Indians, who tend to personify in their minds the beings and phenomena of nature.

776 As we have said, the Boni do not see these gods since the 787 person possessed loses consciousness. But in the time of the ancestors, there were people who used to see the gods, and it is through them that their present-day descendants have an idea of their appearance; on the other hand, certain gods such as the Ampuku and the Bũnsuŋki may be seen in dreams.

Sometimes the residence of this or that god is known, for it has revealed it through the mouth of its bearer; the god's [823] name is then given to that place. For example, at the mouth of the Abounami there is a fall named Ma Akoti Gadu Sula. It is there that the god resides which revealed itself in olden days in an old woman named Akoti.

776 Connections with the group of relatives. The idea of a god
613 protector of the lineage, whose worship, brought by the founder of the group, is regarded as indispensable to the life of the collectivity, is not found clearly among the Refugee Blacks. There are actually many divinities which have entered the lineage and which are worshiped collectively. But these di-
[784] vinities are intruders; they have penetrated into the group by force in order to exert an inexorable vengeance against it.
[782] People do not apply to them to ask for protection, and they are worshiped only because they cannot be expelled. /[illegible]/

776 /205/ There is not believed to be any kinship tie between the 602 gods and men, nor any tie of a systematic or exclusive character.

776 613 428 [787] Still, they assume that the gods that have entered a matrilineage tend to be transmitted within this group. If, for example, a woman is possessed by a Papa gadu, at her death she must bequeath it in the same way as her property, and she can bequeath it only to someone of her lineage.

We have seen in studying the transmission of the god of Kotoïda († 1956), that only the women of the Afi lineage to which she belonged could inherit.

776 613 784 Even if the god is not bequeathed, which sometimes happens, if it exercises the kunu, it will manifest itself sooner or later in a member of the lineage. But long years may pass before it shows itself. This conception is absolutely clear to the Refugee Blacks, and furthermore, if it did not exist, the idea of the kunu would be without support. [114] [428] People have therefore wrongly believed in a transmission of gods from father to son.

346 787 794 613 Material organization of cults. A material organization of the cults of possession exists within the limits of the localized lineage (lo). This organization is completely independent of the apprenticeship of these cults. It permits the members of the lineage to easily practice cults they have received anywhere, on their own responsiblity.

In each lo there exists in general one single chapel (obia ɔsu) for all the divinities of the same category.

For example in the Awara Bakka lo quarter in Asisi (140 persons), for about 15 women having a Papa gadu, there exists only a single one. There is an obia ɔsu for the Ampuku (three or four possessed persons) and another for the Kumẽnti (about ten possessed people).

The chapel of the Papa gadu is placed under the responsibility of the head of the lo. On this subject it is to be noted that the individualized lineages Aw.B.3 and Afi, which however have separate gods, are included in this organization.

346 794 787 613 The objects placed in these chapels are simply the clothing, beverage, and tools of the gods when they come to visit men; they correspond nearly to what the Refugee Blacks leave in a farming habitation where they go to work regularly. For example, in the Papa gadu ɔsu of the Awara Bakka quarter of [273] Asisi, which serves for about 15 gods, each one has a definite place on the shelves to lay out especially the scarf which serves it as a garment and a bottle of beer (a bottle is always kept in readiness by the bearer of the god) (1).

1. The Papa gadu do not like tafia. If the usual bearer of one of these gods has drunk tafia, it cannot come into him.

[534] They still stow the Papa dɔɔ̃ drum in this chapel. This drum, like the chapel itself, is believed to belong to the Papa gadu god which first came into a member of the lineage to exercise the kunu. In the example mentioned of the Awara [428] /206/ Bakka lo of Asisi, in 1957 it was the centenarian grandmother Kuluba who had borne this god since her youth, having herself received it, by several successive transmissions, from a distant ancestress.

[621] In villages like Boniville and Papaïston where fragments of lineage of entirely different origins coexist, each has its own organization.

For example in Boniville there is a Papa gadu ɔsu for the fragment of the Lapé lineage (it belongs to Térésa whose god exercises the kunu on this lineage). The fragment of the lineage has another.

In Papaïston the Toïna (Bakabuchi) lineage, reduced to half a dozen persons, has a Papa gadu ɔsu of its own.

776 The Kumẽnti. These gods are common to the Saramaka 787 (Kromenti) (1), Djuka, and Boni. The Kumẽnti are considered

1. There is no doubt about the origin of this word; it is a deformation of Coromantin, name given in the 18th century to Ashanti country. The "Coromantin Negroes," reputed to be particularly intractable, played a large role in the slave revolts. The Kumenti cult of possession must originally have been a cult peculiar to the Coromantin nation.

to be benevolent gods and friends of men, so their possession is very much desired. They do not come into men spontaneously, they are obtained only by applying to a teacher. In principle [562] only men can obtain Kumẽnti, while on the other hand only women can have Bũnzunki /sic/.

776 The Kumẽnti are specialized in protection against fire 787 and against machete and gun wounds. These dangers hold the 751 largest place among the anxieties of the Refugee Blacks, who spend almost all their life in the bush and with whom nearly [789] all sores become infected and have serious consequences. Thus the Kumẽnti cult holds an important place in their magic; even someone who is not possessed will try to obtain from these gods an ɔbia that will protect him from these various dangers.

153 The instruction of the disciples of these gods takes as its 791 pattern the procedures described above, but the collective dances
787 appear to play an essential part. The teacher calls on the gods 786 by beating a special rhythm on ordinary drums (apinti) and by [533] uttering invocations punctuated by the rattle of the saka (Indian [534] maraka, that is, hollow calabash provided with a handle and containing seeds).

153 containing seeds). Sometimes, when a god has entered a pupil, 791 the teacher puts the latter's passivity to the test by insulting the 787 god with the help of the drum. The Kumẽnti gets angry, breaks
786 bottles and swallows ground glass, walks in the fire, hits him-
[789] self with machete blows, all without any wound resulting, they say, on the body of its bearer.

[302] These frenzied dances, whose participants completely covered with pɛmba (white clay) are as if hallucinated, have a bizarre aspect which is perceptible to some of the Boni themselves. They do not have any secret character and constitute,
[522] on the contrary, a fine spectacle for the village people. The spectators double up with laughter at the contortions and strange actions which the gods inspire in those possessed. They are [521] talked about at length /207/ afterward in the evenings, humorists imitating what they saw done there, without any fear whatever of irritating the gods.

791 Each "teacher for Kumẽnti" owns a small gadu ɔsu in 787 which are lined up the implements of the cult. One finds in 346 general in these chapels a post crudely carved in the shape of a human bust, a block of stone, jaguar skulls, some kɔkɔti (shrub stalks with a spontaneous double bend, thought to be the prop of spirits in the bush), and a saka (maraka), the whole sprinkled with white clay (pɛmba). One finds also beside the door a seat and a trough which are used for the ablutions of the pupils.

153 While bathing his body with the infusion of leaves pre-
791 pared by the teacher, the neophyte repeats, in ordinary language, 787 a series of invocations: "Come to me, enter into me. But be-788 fore entering into me, it is necessary to teach me the things of thy country; O God, when thou art in me, may I be able to dance on broken glass without its cutting me; may I be able to dance in fire without its burning me. If tomorrow someone takes a machete to hurt me, he shall not be able to come forward. If someone takes a gun to shoot me, (his weapon) must break, must not be able to take off. If someone is sick, make an ɔbia for him, he must recover."

153 The teacher has the pupil turn in a circle around the 791 mortar in which has been prepared the infusion of leaves, until 787 he is dizzy. Alternately he makes him turn and "washes" his body with the infusion. Possession occurs by itself at the end of a certain number of sessions.

[276] In the practices intended to make the gita of Kumēnti
[171] "rise," the absorption of toxic substances enters, especially tobacco juice, method employed by the Indian medicine men. But once the reflexes are created, there is no further need for these substances; the gita appears as soon as the calling procedures are used, which are of two kinds:

--Personal procedures: The man voluntarily calls on his gita while putting on the god's costume and taking a certain posture;

--Outside procedures: The gita may be released from outside either by calling the god by name or by beating the corresponding rhythm on the drum.

787 When the pupil begins to feel the gita of Kumēnti, that 158 is first manifested by trances. We have very often been present at these attacks, which usually come on at night in the forest, but commonly also during the day. The one possessed suddenly lets go of the objects he was holding (for example, if he was in the process of eating, he drops plate and spoon), and rushes forward running through the forest howling rhythmically as if he had become an animal. His eyes are rolled upward, he no longer is conscious of his surroundings; he is not in any way threatening; these fits are totally inoffensive in spite of their [147] impressive aspect. One sees possessed people in this state do things which are difficult to explain, such as running in complete darkness in the most impenetrable underbrush without falling or hurting themselves, or climbing up in a few seconds on a craggy rock which would have been hard to scale in full daylight.

153 In proportion as the pupil perfects himself, the god ex-791 presses itself more easily with the help of his body, begins to 787 do coordinated acts and to speak. They say that the gita has [195] been "arranged" (seeka). The Kumēnti speak with a gruff, jerky voice, characteristic, which humorists love to imitate in the evenings' recitals.

In order to call on his gita voluntarily, the pupil crouches down, feet together, throwing pemba from right to left at the level of his feet and uttering the formula: "O Kumēnti, djumpo ku a mi." Then he remains immobile in this position and waits; possession takes place generally at the end of a few minutes.

776 The Kumēnti which enter thus into men are exclusively 787 male gods; it is known that they have wives because they talk about them, but they never manifest themselves.

[812] The Kumēnti are generally benevolent; still, no more than any divinity of the Refugee Blacks, do they represent a principle of goodness and justice in itself. They watch in a partial fashion over the interests of their bearers. Thus it is that A..., of the Dipélu II lo, has a Kumēnti which reacts in a violent way when it has the impression that danger threatens [158] its bearer. It enters into him suddenly, takes a machete and storms through the village, while people prudently barricade themselves in their houses.

787 In certain circumstances, when their trances are particu-
789 larly intense, the people possessed by Kumēnti are capable, it is said, of walking in fire, dancing on broken glass, climbing thorny awara palm trees, and even having themselves struck with blows of a machete without any wound resulting from it. Professor de Goeje gives impressive personal testimony on this subject, such as the case of a possessed man who overturned a pail of boiling water on his body (1). Mr. Mathieu, Director of

1. In a note in Mr. W.F. van Lier's work, § 37.

787 the Forestry Society of Saint-Laurent, told us of seeing in 1937
789 among the Paramaka a possessed man take firmly in his hands a red-hot axe-head and keep it between his two hands for an appreciable length of time.

Personally we have several times seen possessed people thrash themselves with spiny awara branches and break bottles on their heads with such violence that the pieces flew several meters; some of them were hurt, but others presented an intact epidermis.

There is no special instruction for the exercises of invulnerability. The possessed person does what he feels capable of, strikes himself progressively harder and harder, breaks bottles, etc.

It is affirmed that certain possessed people are capable of climbing the thorny awara palm trees. If the gita then abandons them, they can no longer come down. Those who know the Kumenti /sic/ language well then evoke the god by formulas so that he will come back.

787 Theoretically, if someone wrongs a man who has a 578 Kumēnti, his gita "rises" immediately. The guilty one can [173] do no more than flee. They say that in the old days possessed people were seen /209/ to kill those who had done them wrong. No kunu can result from this if the victim is in the wrong. Nothing like this has been seen for a very long time.

The principle is that if one has nothing to reproach himself about with respect to the possessed person, one has nothing to fear from him. This is why people do not hesitate to interpose themselves between the possessed one and the object of his wrath.

[789] If two men having a Kumēnti get into an argument, their gita "rise" simultaneously and they strike each other with machete blows without, it is said, any harm resulting to either one, until someone separates them.

787 784 If someone has a Kumẽnti, certain objects used in the cult: pestle, mortar, machete, must not be raised near him. His gita "would rise" immediately. Likewise while he is eating, neither tiger nor gun must be mentioned. To prevent their gita from rising, those concerned may take the precaution of putting a small piece of wood behind the ear while they eat.

787 178 [771] [781] [484] [743] [755] These past years the cult of the Kumẽnti was clearly declining among the Boni, as was the whole of their religious life; every one, indeed, no longer thought about anything but earning money and was always traveling in order to do this, which made difficult the indispensable meetings and dances. On the other hand, cared for effectively when they are ill in the Maripasoula hospital, the Boni feel the cult of the Kumẽnti less necessary, of which the principal social function is to cure. So, while in 1948 we used to be present very often at manifestations of the gita of Kumẽnti, in 1952 they were becoming much rarer and more secret /modest/. They were tending to fall to the level of the latent manifestations of which we shall speak further on. In 1956 we did not observe in the course of the forest [346] work any spontaneous attack of this gita. The chapels dedicated to the Kumẽnti are scarcely maintained and are falling into ruins; such is the fate of the gods judged benevolent toward men. [751] Nevertheless people continue to lay great store by the ɔbia of Kumẽnti, especially the man nẽŋge ɔbia which protects against the machete and the gun, and the Kumẽnti bui, ring of Kumẽnti, instrument of divination.

776 [823] [787] The Bũnsuŋki. The Bũnsuŋki are gods which live in the waters, by preference at the head of falls, beside rocks bearing copses of detached trees; they can also reside ordinarily in these trees themselves. They appear sometimes in dreams to men as well as to women in the aspect of Indians, more commonly Indian women with long hair. This is why they are sometimes called wata Iŋgi, Indians of the water.

wata ɲgi, Indians of the water. In certain spots, people have [778] known since the time of the ancestors that there resides such a [782] Bũnsuŋki, whose name they know; when they pass there, they address a prayer to it while making a sacrifice of tafia.

776 (The Bũnsuŋki must not be confused with wata mama, the 171 mama-of-the-water of the Creoles, a dreaded divinity but one which the Boni do not appear to worship. The wata mama lives at the bottom of deep holes in river beds and never allows her face to be seen; she sometimes abandons one of her long hairs on the rocks and he who finds it becomes rich).

776 /210/ The Bũnsuŋki can enter into human beings, exclusively, 787 it seems, into women. They give a different gita from those [562] of the Kumẽnti. The possessed person dances at the edge of the water, then swims and dives for a long time. They affirm that [789] if its possession is sufficiently intense, the genie carries the possessed woman along to the bottom of the water, where she stays for a very long time without any harm! That is supposed to have happened especially in Asisi village to a woman named Dabisa.

Possession by the Bũnsuŋki is not frequent. In 1952 it was known in Boni country in only three women.

[562] As for men, they may perceive these divinities in dreams and receive benefits from them. For that they go to the place [788] where it resides and bathe, uttering an invocation: "O god, [782] watch over me, protect me, come to me at night when I sleep, speak to me, act so that I may not be sick, so that I may get rich." The following night, the divinity will come in a dream, demand a sacrifice (beer in general), say that it /grants/ the prayer.

776 The Vɔɔdũ (1). These are gods much feared for their evil

776 character, touchy and vindictive. In speaking of them one [576] says Papa gadu (papa does not mean "father"; it is a term of respect used for important personages (2)). They are believed

776

2. This is the interpretation given by the Refugee Blacks. However, 18th-century documents on the origin of the slaves draw attention to the existence of an African tribe called Papa. Allusions contained in documents of the archives of Surinam, recently studied by Madame Silvia W. de Groot, would tend to identify the Papa with one of the populations of present-day Dahomey. In this hypothesis, the cult of the papa gadu would represent an archaic form of the Dahomey cult of the snake gods.

776 they are believed
[825] to have as habitual bearers the boa snakes (dagowe) (3) which

3. This word appears to be the deformation of the Dahomey word dãgbe.

are not to be confused with the great water snakes (anaconda) that the Refugee Blacks call mboma sineki. They may also [824] reside in silk-cotton trees (kankan tree) and in the trees called katu udu (Bombax surinamiensis).

[787] The Vɔɔdũ which incarnate themselves in humans may be of either sex; if a male god is concerned, it is called "tata vɔɔdũ."

776 [825] The Bumba gadu, other gods of the same nature and equally feared, have as bearers other categories of snakes, principally the great anaconda water snakes.

[784] [812] The Voodū, we have said, are feared; they can exercise on a lineage the collective curse called kunu. But, no more than the Kumēnti do not represent a principle of good, they do not represent a principle of evil. Not all are so badly disposed toward men, and even if one of them is the enemy of a lineage, it is not for that reason badly disposed toward the rest of men.

787 178 [562] However this may be, the cult of possession of the Papa gadu is not at all in decline among the Boni. According to the cross-checking we have been able to do, of the 670 persons living on the French bank there are at least 40 to 50 who have a Papa gadu, the great majority of them old women.

787 784 /211/ The Voodū /sic/ are much feared, and for that very reason much respected. They are oracles which are consulted very often, without consideration of the evil their kunu has done and will still do. A god which exercises the kunu but which is provisionally declared appeased may be consulted without danger; it is always assumed that in any case its bearer, if he respects its commands, has nothing to fear from it.

787 562 It is possible that, very unconsciously, women use the fear that the Papa gadu gods inspire in order to maintain their independence and privileged position in Refugee Black society.

153 79 787 [198] [178] [515] [824] [534] Instruction in possession appears to take as a pattern the same principles as that which correspond to the Kumēnti. It involves the teaching of the Papa language; this language appeared to us to be in decline; in fact, it is used only for formulas of greeting; then the possessed people vaticinate in ordinary language. Instruction in possession also involves daily ablutions with decoctions of leaves; certain of these mixtures are particularly complicated (it is said that they include more than a hundred different kinds of leaves). Instruction is essentially individual; however it also includes dances; on this occasion a

153 special drum is used, about two meters long and very narrow, 791 devoid of any decoration, which is called lãŋga dɔ̃ or papa
787 dɔ̃.
534 To call on her gita, the possessed woman (they are almost 787 always women) stands, puts on a piece of cloth which she always
787 He begins with an invocation to Masa Gadu said in ordinary 788 language.
539 "Masa gadu, gi mi pimisi, beka mi na pikin nẽŋge; ala [782] sani di mi ɔ taki, na yu mu gi mi kaakiti, beka na yu abi mi kaakiti, da mi ɲyãfalu gi yu."

"Masa Gadu, I implore you, for I am a humble creature; (in) all that I am going to say, it is you who will give me strength, for my strength is in you; I shall exalt you."

787 Next come formulas of welcome to those present, which 788 are the exact translation of the formulas of greeting of everyday
[198] life, then songs, all in the Papa language. After about a quarter of an hour, it enters a hut and sits down, answering in ordinary language the questions of those present, always in a singing tone.

787 Possession by Papa gadu does not have the bestial character of possession by Kumẽnti; outside of the dances, it does not involve brutish gestures or bizarre acts; the possessed woman hums softly in a shrill voice, moving with graceful gestures.
[531] /212/ Sometimes she draws strange signs on the huts; the Boni state that that is a kind of writing, that other possessed people

531 can read these messages; but we have not turned up any precise evidence on this subject (1).

1. These signs are very little systematized and have no relation whatever with the symbolic designs which figure in certain rituals of possession, especially in Dahomey and Haiti. It is permitted to see in them a simple likeness.

787 The Papa gadu are chiefly consulted to ask them to re-
[255] veal the cause of misfortunes that happen. One of them is not [253] asked to cure an illness unless the interrogation reveals that it brought it on.

776 The worship of the Papa gadu snake gods makes a strong 648 impression on the West Indian Creoles who maintain regular relations with the Refugee Blacks. Most consider it as diabolical [782] in nature and disapprove of it, but if the presence of an "adder"
[171] (anaconda snake) is noted in a neighboring creek, and if at the same time misfortunes occur, it happens that a Creole may go to ask the Refugee Blacks to practice rites to mollify [778] the vengeance of the god. We have happened to catch sight of, hidden in a copse behind the habitation of a gold miner, a small altar decorated with blue and red pennants, the usual place of worship of the Papa gadu.

755 Observation in Boniville, November, 1952.
An Asisi woman, Tini, comes to Boniville to consult [787] her adoptive daughter Pamasa, about 35 years old, who is possessed by a Papa gadu named Adawa. Féni, 15 years old, [164] Tini's son, has been sick for several days (fever, eruption all over the body). When someone comes to get us, the god has already entered into Pamasa, has sat down in a hut, and

755 is answering in ordinary language the questions posed. The sick
[753] boy's mother asks the god if it is really he who made her son
[784] ill. He answers that it is he and gives two reasons: first, a [824] week before, Féni damaged with a blow of the machete the root of a silk-cotton tree in which precisely he himself was living; moreover, his sister Pamasa was sick for 15 days, he did not go to visit her.

The mother begs the god: "Ubegi yu, yu abi leti, gi ɛŋ paadʒ, a 'ã be sabi bũ-bũ. (We beg you, you are right (but) pardon him, he had not realized well /what he did/.)"

Then the god directs a treatment: an infusion of a certain number of leaves, with which the sick boy will wash his body. It states that the sick boy will quickly get well.

Pamasa then comes back to her ordinary state. The scene has lasted about three-quarters of an hour in all.

164 Observation in Asisi, October, 1956.

On October 21 at 8 o'clock I am told that Bugi, a woman of about 45, is gravely ill; she suffers from violent pains in the chest and a general tremor. The sick woman is stretched out on the ground, supported by her brother and surrounded by old women who are comforting her. She appears to suffer atrociously, her body is covered with sweat, her lower limbs are agitated with an incessant trembling; she presents the symptoms of a 755 heart attack (2). In front of the house, the ɔbiaman are preparing a "remedy," /213/ for they suspect that this is a question of a manifestation of the Papa gadu of which Bugi is the bearer.

2. Bugi had already been hospitalized in Maripasoula for a heart attack.

755 A stalk of sɔŋgaafu twice bent in an elbow is arranged on the ground. A cross is traced in the dirt.

Centered on the cross is placed a large basin into which is poured infusions of leaves taken from several calabashes.

The sick woman, still prostrate and groaning, is seated on a stool facing the basin. The contents of the basin are poured slowly over her body while she is massaged. It is not a question of a remedy in the literal sense of the word; the sick one is "washed" to help the god to manifest itself in her.

I notice that while going back into the hut she trembles almost no more; the attack seems to be subsiding.

In the meanwhile someone comes to call me elsewhere and I cannot come back until half an hour later. I find the sick woman standing, smeared with pɛmba, in the middle of a meditative audience. The god has descended into her and is [787] expressing itself in Papa language while she dances with slow gestures.

[753] [784] I am told that it has just given the explanation of the illness: it struck Bugi because she did not observe the kina given to all bearers of Papa gadu, to stay away from funeral ceremonies. Now, the day before yesterday, she had knowingly participated in the tukka dance around Kotoïda's coffin.

The ɔbiaman present beg the god to pardon, which it does after claiming a bottle of beer which it drinks through the mouth of its bearer.

152 Observation in Kormotibo, December 18, 1957.

164 On December 18 in the evening I find the village of 753 Kormotibo in the clutches of terror. Several persons are sick
784 from the effect of the kunu. Apaita, a young woman, has an enormous whitlow, following an accident; two women have been stricken with pneumonia.

753 These misfortunes are attributed to the kunu exercised
784 by a Papa gadu god, since about a hundred years ago an ancestress named Akonté involuntarily killed a dagɔwe snake
[787] while fishing /nivrant/ a creek. In our day this god manifests itself in Alama (Dip. II, E1), and another Papa gadu, which says it is the descendant of the first, manifests itself in Apaita [755] (F9). It is the latter which, speaking through the mouth of Apaita, revealed that it was striking the village because nobody had danced for it for five years.

755 They called B..., obiaman specialized in the vɔɔdũ cult. He surrounded the chapel of the Papa gadu with stalks [789] of sãɔgaafu placed vertically. He prepared an infusion of leaves with which the Kormotibo women who have a Papa gadu have just smeared themselves (they are four in number, including two outsiders to the Dipélu II lineage). It is a question of helping their gods to manifest themselves.

People are going to dance eight nights running, part of the night. The agida drum drawn out of the chapel is set up in working position. /214/

The rites carried out to neutralize the kunu are:

--Cleaning of the chapel;

--Decoration by means of stalks of sãɔgaafu placed upright all around /it/;

--Bathing of the sick with leaves believed to have the power of making the influence of the Papa gadu go away;

--With other leaves, on the contrary concentrating the maleficent influence of the Papa gadu in a calabash which is then carefully shut up in the chapel.

787 Possession by the Ampuku. It is much more rare, and personally we have observed it only twice; the possessed people make circles of pemba around their eyes and draw kinds of ovals on 787 their legs with this white clay; they prophesy in a singing tone, without the usual voice of their bearer's ceasing to be recognizable, expressing themselves in the Saramaka language.

796 The Ampuku have the appearance of men similar to Blacks, but unknown. They reside in the depths of the woods; some are good, others bad. One can gain their good will by [184] worshiping them, which is especially developed in Saramaka country.

796 Baliki, of Kormotibo village, tells of having been present 535 one day at a dance of the Ampuku, when he was traveling to [103] the Saramaka village of Balen.

"During the day, people went on the paths far into the bush to put down calabashes containing certain herbs. At night were seen to come out of the forest a large number of unknown men, dressed in the manner of the Saramaka. They danced all night, and at dawn left again as they had come."

776 The Ampuku gods, considered to be maleficent gods of the bush, exercise their influence on everyone. When a person [789] has slept in the bush, he "washes" himself free of Ampuku with [824] an infusion of leaves of five plants which are part of the secondary flora surrounding the villages and of which the principal plant is the sangaafu (Costus cylindricus).

791 Frequency of possession. In 1956 teachers or bas were very 787 scarce in Boni country. For the Kumenti gods, only S... (Kotika) remained; for the Papa gadu, since the death of Antinon (Dju), there remained only M... (Papaïston) and B... [619] (Asisi). People were commonly going to receive instruction from Djuka teachers in the villages of the Tapanaoni.

787 It would be a great error to believe that nearly all the 562 men have gods. On the contrary, this is an exception. According to the evaluations we were able to make, there is not more than one adult man out of six or seven who is possessed.

562 On the other hand, possession is much more frequent among 787 women: it can be estimated that on the average, one adult woman out of three or four has a gadu.

162 For example in Boniville, out of 115 persons including 776 about 70 adults, one reckons about 30 gods including 8 to 10
787 Papa gadu, 8 to 10 Kumẽnti, 1 Bunsunki, and 2 Ampuku.

791 Apprenticeship for possession can begin from adult age, 787 but it seems /215/ that in general it is between 35 and 50 that 561 women take heed of obtaining a gadu. Would that not be, very 562 unconsciously, the desire to stay in the limelight and indirectly to keep a hold over men, once the age of sensual attraction is past?

787 Possession continues for life, and it is out of the question for a god to be transmitted before the death of its bearer. For example, in 1957, the centenarian grandmother in Asisi village, Kuluba, still kept her Papa gadu god. She had not participated any more in the dances of possession for long years, but her gita was always consulted.

But it can happen, if a possessed person stops taking part in dances and practicing the rites that have been shown him, that any manifestation ceases at the end of a few years.

We observed that in B... of the Dipélu II lo, in 1948 and 1949. He used to exhibit strong attacks of the gita of Kumẽnti. He stopped his instruction, finding that it was costing too much and was taking time. In 1952 he exhibited only latent manifestations of his gita at rare intervals. In 1956 nothing was any longer observable.

787 It can happen, on the other hand, that attacks of pos-
789 session become so frequent and so strong that the person concerned risks losing his reason; if it concerns a god which did not come of its own initiative, one can try to expel it. In [824] order to "wash" someone free of a gita, he is made to pass between two rows of ɔbiaman who hold dry palms, pina tɔ̃ŋgo, in their hands and utter adjurations.

789 in their hands and utter adjurations. We saw this rite performed
[114] in 1949 but without being able to observe the exact details.

787 The frequency of the phenomena of possession and the 791 importance accorded to them imprint a remarkable character on the religious life of the Refugee Blacks: all these manifestations have for each one the character of obvious material fact. How, then, doubt that one lives with the gods, sees them, and [177] speaks to them? Because of this fact the society of the Refugee Blacks is utterly impermeable to European influences.

787 Some plants utilized in the rites of possession. The preparations
824 with which the possessed people "wash" their bodies consist of macerations of leaves. The plants used, which for the most part belong to the secondary flora which develops in the old clearings, are very numerous. However, some are regarded as [789] having a very unique power. The first five especially are utilized by all the Boni to "wash off the Ampuku" when they have slept a night in the bush.

828 Beliefs Concerning the Human Person and Its Development
Ancestor Worship

[171] The Refugee Blacks of the various tribes have precise and identical conceptions on this subject, which are found also, more or less mixed with Christian conceptions, among the West Indian populations of African origin. For them, man is formed of three elements: the body, the yɔrka which may be translated by personality, and a higher principle called akka.

[184] It goes without saying that among the Boni, who have not elaborated these conceptions and received them from the Djuka, nobody is capable of discoursing on them. But numerous con-
[128] ceptions having to do with magic and to the relationships with the ancestors permit of rather reliable cross-checking.

sense we understand it. The akka is an immortal divine element

774 /216 cont./ The akka is an immortal divine element
[775] attached to a human person for the duration of his life and which, at his death, returns to the domain of the divine, no longer keeping any contact with men.

[828] The akka is the source of life from which the human personality is nourished, but it is not this personality.

The Refugee Blacks consider the akka as a personal protector god; they are apt to say mi gadu, my god, for mi akka.

The concept of the akka was spontaneously transposed by the West Indians into that of the guardian angel. They speak in Haiti of the "big good angel."

For Refugee Blacks the life, health, and destiny of a man depend above all on the akka; they think that if the akka went away, the body and mind of the man could not remain bound together; he would die or lose consciousness. This is, a little, what happens each night, for they believe that the akka leaves the body to wander, which brings on the loss of consciousness.
[754] /217/ So the wisimã, the sorcerer, tries to profit by this to capture the akka so that the man may become insane.

The akka is thought to have tastes, desires, and goals foreign to those of the personality and of which the man, in his [753] ordinary consciousness, has no knowledge. The akka can make the man sick if he behaves in a way that it does not like. So [755] when someone is sick, he resorts to divination in order to know whether it is not the deed of the akka and, in the affirmative, for what motive. One might think that the akka behaves like a conscience in the moral sense of the term; that it gets angry if its bearer does something evil. But in reality the akka shows itself to be as arbitrary, wicked, and venal as the lower gods of the Refugee Blacks. If it gets angry (they say: mi akka mãndi), this is because its bearer wears clothes of a color it does not like, or because it wants an offering. We have never, on the other hand, heard a case spoken of in which the akka might have become angry with its bearer because he was a thief, liar, or adulterer.

774 Most of the Boni are not concerned with their akka. The only ones who take heed of it are those who have reasons to believe it irritated. The worship rendered varies a good deal from one individual to another in the nature and frequency of the rites performed.

774 For example, K..., of Papaïston village, prey to a 777 persistent streak of bad luck, went to consult a Creole lukumã
[640] from Surinam, who revealed to him that it was the doing of unsatisfied desires of his akka. His akka wanted a black dog and a copper bracelet. He procured both for himself, and since, he says, he no longer has the same bad luck.

774 B..., head of T... village, has in a corner of his hut
778 a post crudely carved in the shape of a bust with a half calabash from which emerge stalks of saŋgaafu on its head. At the side is a small fraga tiki. He tells me that this is the god of the cult of his akka; these rites are strictly personal with him.

774 Most of the akka esteem white beads and red cloth. If [822] one sees a Boni wear a red cloak, one can be almost sure that it is by order of his akka.

[787] If someone's mind wanders or he has bizarre dreams, he may see in this the feeling that his akka wishes to leave him and that he is in danger of its happening. He then goes to ask [789] an ɔbiaman to make him an akka tetɛy: this is a ring of fibers worn on the big toe and which is supposed to prevent the akka from going away.

These rites vary a lot from one individual to the other, but they have a common principle. If someone begins to attend to his akka, he cannot abandon the worship during his lifetime, or else the akka will avenge itself.

Akka worship is strictly personal and is not bequeathed upon death.

774 583 If someone marries a girl, he must not only pay her mother the price of virginity but must also pay the girl's akka. [782] For that he offers white beads and cloth which the bride will wear, as well as sweets which will be consumed by her. If the [784] price of virginity were not paid, the woman's akka, humiliated, might make her sick or kill her. /218/

774 /218/ There are seven categories of akka, masculine and feminine, one for each day of the week.

[114] Crevaux in 1877 was able to establish the complete list (1):

[191] 1. This conception is widespread in the Agni-Ashanti culture area, among the Éwé and Mina, and as far as western Dahomey. The names reported among the Mina correspond very exactly, except for some differences in pronunciation, to the ones kept by the Boni.

	Men	Women
Sunday	Kwasi	Kwasiba
Monday	Kɔdyo	Adyuba
Tuesday	Kwami	Abeniba
Wednesday	Kwaku	Akuba
Thursday	Yao	Yaba
Friday	Kɔfi	Afiba
Saturday	Kwamina	Amba

[184] All these names are known to the Boni, but none of our informants was capable of reciting the complete list. It is [551] well understood that a name like Kɔfi, Kɔdio /sic/, etc. is the akka's name and not at all the man's name (2).

551

2. Although it happens that people receive as a name an akka name, sometimes accompanied by a qualificative, such as Lébikwaku.

774 Actually, each one knows his akka's name, which was revealed 762 to him by his parents when he was a child; to this name is [551] attached an akka kina or food prohibition relative to the akka.
[754] Both are carefully kept secret even from near relatives and friends, for knowing them could help the wisimã take possession of the akka. On this subject people often use the term gadu kina, as they say mi gadu instead of mi akka. This term is [784] easily confused with the prohibition imposed on the possessed
[787] person by the god which incarnates itself in him; these are two very different notions.

[258] The akka kina is unique for each man. It is sought by the parents when the child is completely weaned. They try to [787] draw parallels between the foods he has eaten and the health disorders he may exhibit, and these suppositions are confirmed by divinatory procedures.

774 A man does not ordinarily pray to his akka. He addresses
782 prayer to it only if he is sick, to ask it for protection, or before leaving on a long trip, to ask it to watch over him. If he comes back safe and sound, he thanks it by making an offering to it, in the form of a bottle of syrup (switi sopi), which he turns upside down over his head.

774 According to Mr. W. F. van Lier, the Djuka have the 184 idea that the shadow (kaaka) is the visible image of the akka; the Boni do not appear to have this conception; one does not observe that they attach any importance whatever to whether a man's shadow passes over them; on the contrary, one must not step over a man lying on the ground, that might injure his akka.

774 The yɔrka. (The Boni say yɔɔka, the Djuka and the Creoles 775 of Surinam yɔrka.) The expression yɔrka is used only to designate the spirits of the dead. But of course the elements of the yɔrka are present in the living man. /[illegible]/

774 /219/ The yɔrka is the ordinary consciousness of the man, his 828 memories, tastes, aversions, all that constitutes his personality. All that, for the Refugee Blacks, does not come from the divine plane but at least in part from former human existences, and after death will not reach the divine plane. The Refugee 775 Blacks seem to believe that after death, the yɔrka remains unchanged, will keep the same desires, the same aversions, the same thoughts; it is simply no longer in ordinary life, it has passed to another plane, intermediate between the divine and the human, from whence it continues to remain in a certain fashion in contact with men. The various informants we questioned on this subject declare that they have no idea of the fate of the yɔrka after death, of its place with respect to the divinities, of the rewards or punishments of which it may be the object according to the manner in which the man lived. These are questions they never ask themselves openly and which hardly interest them, all their interest being centered on earth-[754] ly life. The idea of a paradise is absolutely foreign to them; they acknowledge however in the case of the wisimã that they will be stripped of the force that every living being receives from the divine, and that thus destroyed as beings, they will no longer be more than empty shadows.

769 The gaã yɔrka, spirits of the ancestors, are believed to watch over their descendants and are subject to worship.

[771] Ancestor worship. Among the Refugee Blacks, ancestor worship is intimately bound up with all the acts of family and social life. They assume that the yɔrka of the ancestors are always present near their descendants and that they protect them. It is through them as intermediaries that the force emanated by the divine is received by the living.

769 We have described the principal ceremonies of this worship in speaking of family life.

769 613 One addresses only his near ancestors in maternal line, and one addresses them all collectively. Just as the custom of the Refugee Blacks rejects all that might individualize one line within a lineage, it rejects every individual bond between a given dead person and a given living person. Just as "uncles" exercise guardianship collectively over "nephews," the dead collectively protect the living. It would be a grave offense against the customary law of the Refugee Blacks to go individually to the fraga tiki to invoke the yɔrka of one or another of his relatives. We shall see further on that the only exception to this is for the ancestors who have made themselves conspicuous by exercising the kunu against another lineage.

Ancestor worship is organized within the lo, and its priest is the head of the lo, hedemã or captain. Individualized fractions (bɛɛ) which may exist within the lo, like Papaïston 2, have no separate ancestor worship.

769 778 The place of prayer is made up of a small square of ground about 1 meter x 1 meter, separated from village soil by pieces of boards; in the middle of this square is set a T-shaped post whose horizontal arm serves as support for a square of white cloth: this is the fraga tiki.

The cloth rots rapidly under the influence of bad weather, but it is not removed; a new one is attached over the old when it is too spoiled; likewise /220/ the post, which ends up by rotting, is not replaced as long as it does not fall to the ground. This behavior might be thought to be negligence, but it is nothing of the sort: for the Refugee Blacks, what has been offered to the ancestors is removed from the action of men; no one can touch it any more, even to repair it.

769 Beside the principal fraga tiki one sometimes sees sticks
778 bearing fragments of white cloth; they have been planted in honor of those ancestors who have demanded it.

The ceremonies at the fraga tiki have a very simple 769 character; prayers are said in the ordinary language and often 778 have the character of an intimate conversation. In the absence
782 of the head of the lineage, an old man pronounces them; while he speaks, an assistant makes the offering of water and tafia. Pouring water on the ground is a rite having as its purpose entering into contact with the ancestors: it is seen performed in funeral ceremonies, before beginning the interrogation of the yɔrka. The tafia is an offering in the literal sense of the term; at the time of the principal prayers being addressed to the ancestors, the offering of tafia is preceded by an offering of cane
[272] juice, kyẽɔ wata. Cane juice was the beverage on feast days in the times when the ancestors, at war with the Europeans, were bereft of tafia.

The prayer formulas most commonly used ask the ancestors to intercede with Masa gadu on behalf of their descendants: "Ancestors, watch over us, protect us, pray to Masa gadu for us so that...."

769 Possession by a yɔrka. It is taken for granted that the yɔrka of an ancestor can enter into a member of his matrilineage and 787 reveal itself in the course of attacks of possession. This is a very 613 rare phenomenon. In 1958, in all the Boni country, only about ten people were known who bore thus the yɔrka of an ancestor. These attacks come on spontaneously, no cult having their provocation as its purpose. We were present in December, 1956 at one of these attacks in a young woman from Papaïston, Mili, about 20 years old. Since the day before, the yɔrka of an ancestor of the lineage dead for two generations had manifested itself in her intermittently; these attacks lasted several minutes;

769 778 782 her voice changed, imitating a man's; eyes staring, she appeared to have no longer any consciousness of what was around her. Then suddenly the attack would cease and she would busy herself with her household occupations in the most natural fashion. The yɔrka which was believed to become incarnate thus in Mili's body spoke of very commonplace things, repeating indefinitely sentences concerning minor happenings of the day, or asking for a small offering of tafia on its behalf at the fraga tiki. A psychiatrist would doubtless have thought of an attack of mental dissociation.

[784] These yɔrka are not feared by their involuntary bearer, since none can exercise a kunu against his own lineage; they manifest themselves only exceptionally, sometimes indicating remedies or warning of dangers. Thus it is that A... of the Dipélu II lo, who has a Kumẽnti besides, also has a yɔrka which revealed itself in him without ever having been called on. According to his comrades, this yɔrka sometimes steps in with a cavernous voice, notably in September, 1952, during a hunting expedition, where it shouted: "Let us not go that way, we shall meet a jaguar." A... lost consciousness for only a few seconds and had not been aware of anything.

775 828 The nẽmseki (1). Each Refugee Black has a nẽmseki, that is to say that certain elements of his personality are thought to originate from the reincarnation of a certain ancestor. This is a very obscure conception with the Boni, and without apparent correlation with their notion of the akka and the yɔrka; they never say: "I am the reincarnation of So-and-So," but simply:

1. This word seems to be a deformation of English "namesake" (homonym).

775 828 [184] "My nɛ̃mseki is So-and-So." Mr. W. F. van Lier, speaking of the Djuka who have much clearer conceptions on religious questions, gives an important clarification: in 1915 Grand Man Oséisi became incarnate in a newborn baby of the tribe, nevertheless he continues to be invoked as an ancestor before the fraga tiki. It seems, then, that it is a case of certain elements of the personality which are believed to be reincarnated, and not of the yɔrka as a whole.

787 It is important to distinguish the nɛ̃mseki from possession by a yɔrka. Possession by a yɔrka is an exceptional occurrence which is manifested in the form of trances, the yɔrka speaking through the mouth of its bearer; outside of these possessions, this yɔrka is believed to reside in the abode of the ancestors.

775 828 The nɛ̃mseki, on the contrary, exists in all men. The ancestor who is thus partially reincarnated is generally on the paternal side, but this is not an absolute rule.

A man is not conscious of his nɛ̃mseki and is acquainted with it only because his parents have revealed it to him. This nɛ̃mseki does not manifest itself in anything in everyday life; it does not impose any kina whatever and does not ask for offerings. However, when a young child falls ill, divination may reveal that it is the doing of the nɛ̃mseki which is indignant at being misunderstood. People hurry then, always with the help of divination, to find out the name of the nɛ̃mseki, proceeding by elimination. As a general rule, they allow themselves to be guided by resemblances of physiognomy, birthmarks calling to mind, for example, certain scars of the dead ancestor.

It is believed that the older a man is when he dies, the more time he will allow to elapse before being reincarnated.

Relations between Gods and Men

The kunu

The kunu. The Refugee Blacks call kunu the collective curse which has weighed on a matrilineage since an ancient offense. The kunu is without time limit, without pardon, without pity, blind in the choice of its victims; in principle, it can end only with the complete extermination of the lineage. Each time [753] that adversity swoops down on one of its members in the form [761] of death, sickness, various calamities, the kunu is the most frequently obtained explanation. The instrument of this inexpiable vengeance is either a god or the yɔ̃ka (spirit) of a dead person.

784 This notion, which occupies a central position in the 613 beliefs of the Refugee Blacks, does not appear to have been 171 borrowed directly. Most of the populations of Dahomey /222/ and the Ivory Coast take for granted the idea of arbitrary punishments exercised upon the members of the lineage by the gods or the ancestors of the group. But no population of these regions has, to our knowledge, developed so highly systematized a doctrine.

784 The conceptions developed by the Refugee Blacks,
571 divinities impelled exclusively by vengeance, and especially ancestors inexorably chastising lineages other than their own, have created new relationships among individuals and among lineages.

784 We have not been able to elucidate the origin of the word kunu. Perhaps it is a deformation of the Mina word ekunu, which means burial.

776 Three categories of divinities can pursue men with their 784 kunu, and because of this fact the Refugee Blacks feel toward 781 them an extreme terror mixed with veneration.

776 --The Papa gadu (Vɔɔdũ). The kunu that one of them
784 exercises upon a lineage comes uniformly from the fact that in 613 times past, one of the ancestors had inadvertently killed a [825] dagowe snake (boa), usual bearer of the Papa gadu. For example, the snake might have perished in the burning of a clearing.
[787] Some time after, the god had possessed a member of the lineage and revealed that henceforth it would exercise a kunu;

--The Ampuku. The kunu of an Ampuku begins in an analogous way; in days gone by an ancestor had, for example, cut a katu tree without performing the rites suitably, or had made a clearing in a place where an Ampuku was residing;

--The Kĩntamasu (who call themselves Akɔlo), gods of the termitaries, much feared, may exercise a kunu if, before cutting a clearing, someone has, in spite of all his searching, allowed a termitary to escape him, which thus was not the object of the indispensable rite;

775 --Finally, the kunu may be brought by a dead person's 784 yɔrka. For example, a man of lineage A had once upon a time
613 unjustly accused a man of lineage B. The latter committed 762 suicide out of revenge. The meaning of this act is not the same as in Europe. It is not a question of making one's enemies live in shame and remorse, but by sacrificing one's life to cause an eternal vengeance to be wreaked upon one's enemies. Some time after the suicide, the yɔrka reveals itself in a man of his lineage and announces that it will pursue the members of lineage A eternally with its kunu.

784 Thus the offenses which the kunu punishes are not moral sins as we understand them, but involuntary acts without inner meaning. The purifications and sacrifices demanded are likewise purely exterior acts.

114 The various works treating of the Refugee Blacks point out
784 well the importance of the kunu, but it seems to us that the functioning of this institution (for in fact a social institution is certainly concerned here) has not been clearly understood.

784 A kunu is attached to a matrilineage in the literal sense
613 (b&s). It extends obligatorily to all the members of the matrilineage and can strike only them.

For example, my kunu can strike my sister's son but not my wife nor my children (they are subject to the kunu of their own lineage). /223/

[782] The kunu, striking the lineage as a whole, can be appeased only by prayers uniting (at least in principle) the whole lineage. That is the respect in which the kunu may be defined [571] as a social institution, for it is, we shall see, the principal cement holding the groups together.

The unleashing of a kunu does not necessarily and immediately follow the destruction of a termitary or the death of a dagowe snake. The god thus offended avenges itself by making a certain number of members of the lineage sick and 784 by causing limited misfortunes to happen. When things are 613 at that point the kunu can still be exorcised by prayers and 782 offerings. In 1957 the beginning of a kunu was manifesting itself thus in the Awara Bakka lineage of Asisi; very frightened, the members of the lineage made offerings and prayers to exorcise it.

784 But if the lineage people neglect the warnings of the god,
613 if through laziness or selfishness too great a number of them
[673] are absent from the collective prayers and do not take part in [761] the offerings, prayers and offerings will be refused and the god will kill one of them. From then on the kunu is unleashed and can no longer leave the lineage. Its involuntary bearer [428] will have to bequeath it upon his death to a member of the lineage, who cannot refuse this legacy and must immediately

784 begin his instruction in order to become a suitable bearer. (If 613 this procedure were not carried out, the god would not cease
428 its kunu at all, and the possibility of entering into contact with it and appeasing it would be lost. Besides, sooner or later it would come back into a member of the lineage.)

784 The kunu strikes without regard to kinship ties, even if 613 kinship between the bearer of the god and the supposed victim
[602] is very distant. Ex.: The Papa gadu of Donasi (Papaïston lo) struck a young woman, Gou, with illness in January, 1957.
[782] Donasi and Gou are only relatives in the ninth degree. The [361] members of the entire Papaïston lineage assembled to supplicate the god: even people of Wétiti village in the lower Maroni came.

775 The kunu exercised by the yɔrka of a dead person has a 784 special importance in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks, for it has 613 profound repercussions on the relations among the lineages.

In principle, the yɔrka exercising a kunu has as bearer
[428] a living member of its own lineage, who will bequeath it at his death. But it is also possible that the yɔrka may take as bearer a member of the lineage upon which it exercises the kunu.

In both cases, the rite to appease the yɔrka is the same;
[782] the yɔrka can be invoked effectively only by the members of its own lineage, since one can pray (at least in principle) only to one's own maternal ancestors.

When matrilineage A is struck by the kunu exercised by a yɔrka of matrilineage B, its members thereupon go to consult the elders of matrilineage A /sic/ and ask them to try to calm
[769] the anger of their ancestor. The members of lineage A assemble [778] around the fraga tiki of lineage B, in back of the elders of this [787] lineage, in the presence of the bearer of the yɔrka, who calls on his gita, goes into trances and prophesying. The yɔrka [782] usually asks for an offering of cane juice and tafia, which is made at the foot of the /224/ fraga tiki by the elders of lineage B (for the rite to be efficacious, the offering must have been furnished by lineage A).

775 A yɔrka exercising a kunu may also demand that another
784 smaller fraga tiki be erected for it beside the principal fraga
769 tiki of its lo. In the villages of the Refugee Blacks one often 778 sees these little crosses provided with white veils like the main 613 fraga tiki, planted beside it a little obliquely.

The notion of the kunu exercised by a yɔrka explains the 775 rarity of murder among the Refugee Blacks. How would you 784 dare to kill someone when, as soon as it is freed from his body, 674 his yɔrka will have full latitude to make you sick, to make tree branches fall across your path, to cause to suffer and to 775 kill all those dear to you? If someone is blinded by hate, it
784 is the idea of suicide which will dominate him. In October,
762 1952 we were able to observe this reaction in a man who had just been subject to a deep humiliation: "I am going to kill my body in order to go to kill that man and his whole family," he said to us, prey to a fit of rage; fortunately, when the fit had passed, he came back to a more sound outlook on things.

775 It is to be noted that a yɔrka cannot exercise a kunu
784 against its own lineage. This notion explains why, in the times 613 when they exercised absolute authority, tribal chiefs had those 696 condemned to death executed by men of the same lineage.
[171] Apparently similar practices were the rule in olden days in several African kingdoms, which allows one to think that notions analogous to those of the kunu may be rather widespread there.

784 Situation of the various lineages with respect to the kunu. There 613 we touch on one of the most secret aspects of the social life of the Refugee Blacks. Years of living among them are necessary in order to obtain precise information on the nature and the mode of action of the kunu acting on the various lineages.

784 Nearly all the entities which now exercise their kunu on the 613 Boni have been in their lineages since a very ancient period,
428 to the point where the name of their first bearer is forgotten. They are transmitted inexorably from generation to generation. In the course of the ages, the kunu have accumulated, and now certain lineages are living with four, five, or even six kunu.

784 613 776 787 Kunu of the Dju lineage. The Dju lineage in 1958 was affected by four kunu:

--An Ampuku which has exercised its vengeance since time immemorial, to the point where the origin of this kunu is no longer remembered, its bearers being Dabisa (G25) and Adyidya (E19), two women about 50 years old. This Ampuku formerly had as its bearer an ancestor named Agoabuchi, who died about 1940. Two or three years after his death, it manifested itself in Dabisa;

--A Papa gadu named Adawa which has also pursued the lineage with a pitiless vengeance since the time of the great ancestors. It revealed itself to the preceding generation in an ancestress named Sapiké (D5), and a long time after her death it passed into Pamasa (E26), a woman of 35. This kunu has grown worse since /225/ two other Papa gadu revealed themselves in recent years in two women named Kulina (F9) and Diana (E9). They declared that they were the descendants of the first one and that they came in support of it;

784 613 775 787 [762] --A yɔrka whose name nobody wanted to tell us because they were so afraid of it. It is that of a man of the Awara Bakka lineage, who committed suicide two or three generations ago when he was unjustly accused of a crime by a man of the Dju lineage. Since then, this yɔrka has been exterminating the Dju lineage little by little. Its bearer in 1958 was an old woman of the Awara Bakka lineage, named Namu;

784 613 776 787 --A Kantamasu since, a very long time ago, an ancestress whose name is forgotten inadvertently destroyed a termitary while burning a clearing. It had as bearer a very old woman named Wima (E3) († 1957), and it manifested itself also in Ata (F2).

784 613 787 562 Thus, in this group, the maleficent gods had exclusively women as bearers; out of about 20 adult women, seven were participating in the functioning of the kunu.

784 One sees from this example how the influence of women, 613 exerted in arbitrary fashion, in a domain placed outside of 787 custom and ordinary social life, weighs on the life of the 562 group.

Kunu of the Dipélu lineage. The situation of the Dipélu 614 lineage with respect to the kunu is particularly interesting.
571 Although split for perhaps 100 years into two separate groups, Dipélu I (L'Enfant Perdu and Apatu villages) and Dipélu II (Kormotibo and Asisi-Dip. II villages), this group still constitutes an undivided unit with respect to the kunu. Neither time nor [484] distance (it takes more than a week of traveling to make the round trip between L'Enfant Perdu and Apatu) has been able to [755] break it up. The Apatu people come very often (at least some of them) to be present at the collective prayers which take place at L'Enfant Perdu to appease a kunu in order to cure a sick person.

The oldest kunu ("since Africa") is that of a Papa gadu 614 god whose bearer was ○ Dika (Dip. I, D10, † 1951) and which 776 passed after her death into ○ Pééchina (Dip. I, E42, L'Enfant [787] Perdu village). This kunu strikes indiscriminately the people of L'Enfant Perdu, Apatu, Kormotibo, Asisi-Dip. II, and the Dipélu fraction residing in Boniville. To it, these past years, [761] have been attributed the death of ○ Way (Dip. I, E6, living [753] in Boniville), the illness of △ Akwali (Dip. II, F7, Kormotibo village) and of ○ Bongo (same village).

Another very old kunu is the one exercised by the yɔrka
775 of a Surinam Creole who had settled with the Dipélu people a 614 very long time ago. He was suspected of sorcery and killed.
[683] Since then his yɔrka comes back regularly to exterminate the Dipélu.

784 Having no known lineage (his family, if he had any, was 776 in Surinam), it had taken people of the Dipélu lineage as 614 bearers. The last was △ Denis † in 1938. Since Denis'
787 death, it no longer has a bearer. The questioning of the dead reveals that they died by its kunu. The members of the two [782] fractions of the lineage meet together (at least two or three members of each village come) to supplicate it.

784 A third kunu, very interesting in origin and supposed
614 action, /226/ in 1957 was borne by Kwau (Dip. I, E1, Kotika village). It results from the killing of an anaconda snake by Apatu † (Dip. I, C1), companion of the explorer Crevaux when he was traveling to /in/ Brazil. Upon contact with Europeans Apatu had become a freethinker and was no longer
[753] observing the laws of his people. Among the later victims of this kunu was counted Kwami (Dip. II, F4, Kormotibo village)
[755] who, gravely ill, had had to go to L'Enfant Perdu where the god had been invoked for him and offerings made. The death [761] of Manga (Dip. I, E5, Boniville, † about 1930) was particularly attributed to it.

No other kunu has revealed itself in Apatu village since its founding in 1882.

784 A fourth kunu concerning all the Dipélu has as bearers
614 women of the Dipélu II group. It results from the inadvertent 776 murder of a Papa gadu whose bearer was a dagowe snake killed
787 in the course of the nivrée /fishing/ of a pool by Akonté 562 † (Dip. II, B1), transmitted to Kondo †, then to Alama (Dip. II, E1).

Since then Papa gadu have revealed themselves in ○ Apaïta (Dip. II, F9, Kormotibo village) and in ○ Kaala (Dip. II, G28, Asisi-Dip. II village). They declared themselves to be the descendants of the first and to come in support of it.

784 Finally, a fifth kunu is threatening to show itself. This 182 is a remarkable affair which clarifies at the same time the legal and religious conceptions of the Refugee Blacks.

672 About 1918, a stupid accident which happened at Dagouédé (gun which went off by itself at the moment when it was being stowed in a boat) caused the death of a girl, Santonia, daughter of Kuluba (Aw.B.1). The unwitting perpetrator of the accident was Kwau (Dip. I, Apatu village).
[692] There were people in the Awara Bakka lineage who accused him of having done it on purpose, but the grand man judged that he was innocent and the affair was shelved.

784 Now in April, 1957, Kiboya (Dip. II), a young woman
614 of 25, was attacked by a fit of possession. It was Santonia's
775 yɔrka which was supposed to reveal itself in her. It declared
787 that it was going to exercise a kunu on Dipélu. It was not claiming that Kwau had killed her on purpose and even asked the Awara Bakka not to make reprisals.

628 Nevertheless, full of fury, a party of Awara Bakka went 614 the next day to attack the village of L'Enfant Perdu, demolishing a certain number of huts and pursuing the inhabitants, some of whom took refuge in the water and others in the bush. There were, however, no serious blows.

The next day they went to attack Kormotibo in the same way. It is to be noted that only after that did they think of blaming Kwau, who was then living at Wacapou. But the grand man had intervened in the meantime to re-establish peace.

In both cases the façades of several shacks were smashed and two men, Bonana and Amatodja, who had run less fast than the others, were struck symbolically.

628 The members of the Dipélu lineage did not believe a 614 word of this affair, convinced that Kiboya, a proud and scheming
784 woman, had pretended the gita to make herself interesting.
787 Nevertheless, to bring back peace, they decided to go to Asisi
156 and to ask pardon in front of the fraga tiki, pouring tafia, 769 asking the ancestors not to take vengeance, the living being 778 reconciled. /227/

784 /227/ (Note that in this affair, the yɔrka manifests itself in a 614 member of the lineage on which it exercises the kunu.)

784 Kunu of the Awara Bakka lineage. The Awara Bakka lineage
614 does not form a unit with respect to the kunu, and the situation 613 of its fractions is particularly interesting. This lineage includes:

--A principal fraction (Aw.B.1);

--A fraction whose kinship ties with the first are forgotten (Aw.B.2), whose position with respect to the kunu we have not been able to define.

--Finally, a group descended from Anèta, Djuka woman, wife of Péeyon † (Aw.B.1) settled in Asisi with her descendants in uterine line. We have called this group Aw.B.3. It has a separate kunu originating in the Djuka village of Tabiki where Anèta came from.

784 The Awara Bakka I, all living in Asisi village, had to 787 our knowledge three kunu in 1957:
776 --One exercised by a Papa gadu god, borne up to 1957
613 by O Kuluba (Aw.B.1, D1). At her death in April, 1957,
428 she bequeathed it, contrary to custom, to a person of another fraction, Summa (Aw.B.3). But the god did not ratify this legacy and, in January, 1958; it manifested itself in OLéna (Aw.B.1, F52), thus remaining in the same lineage;

784 --A second, very old kunu is exercised by a yɔrka of the 775 Dipélu II lo, Gy..., dead so long that he cannot be placed on the genealogical table; it, too, had as bearer a member of the 613 lineage on which it was exercising the kunu. O Akumuyé
614 (Aw.B.1, D17) † 1957.

Thus the Awara Bakka and Dipélu lineages exercise the kunu reciprocally one against the other;

784 --A third kunu of recent origin is exercised by a Papa 776 gadu god which had as bearer in 1957 O Irma (Aw.B.1, E37).
613 It results from the inadvertent killing of a Dagowe /sic/ snake
[789] by △ Takwa, Irma's brother. At the end of 1957 this kunu
[953] had yet brought on only illnesses of such a kind that people could still hope to exorcise it.

784 The Aw.B.3 group has a special kunu of its own and 613 considers itself out of reach of the kunu of the Aw.B.1.

Anèta, originating in the Djuka village of Tabiki, is subject to the kunu of that lineage as are all her descendants in [782] uterine line. On occasion of serious illnesses the latter have sometimes had to go to Tabiki village to supplicate the kunu.

[776] This kunu is the one of a god borne by Akanté, Anèta's [787] daughter. In September, 1956, Summa, Akanté's daughter, was sick. The god revealed that this was its doing. It was [782] supplicated (the other fractions joined the group) and she then got well.

613 Kunu of the Afi lineage. The descendants of Afi † (woman 621 coming from the tribe of the Bakabuchi of Surinam) live for the most part in Asisi in close symbiosis with the /228/ Awara Bakka lineage. They are in a situation analogous to that of Anèta's descendants (Aw.B.3) but, perhaps by the simple fact of their number, they form a more individualized unit.

784 613 786 787 They are the object of three kunu:

--One exercised by a Papa gadu god whose bearer up into 1956 was Kotoïda († Oct. 1956), who bequeathed it to O Mani (Afi lineage, d12).

784 785 613 --The other exercised by a yɔrka of the Lapé lineage. This kunu dates from about 60 years ago; Alémin (Afi lineage, b3, Kormotibo village), 80 years old in 1957, had when he was young cut a clearing in a place which was found to be an old abandoned Boni cemetery (opposite Maripasoula). Some [787] time afterward, a yɔrka revealed itself in a woman of the Lapé lineage, saying that it was exercising a kunu against the family of the sacrilegious person.

[761] It is to this yɔrka, whose bearer is M... (L2, Boniville), that the death of Kotoïda in October, 1956 is especially attributed.

--A third kunu is exercised by A..., of the Papaïston 2 [684] lineage. A... had committed pikadu. Surprised by Alémin (Afi lineage), he had paid the latter to obtain his silence. [762] But Alémin had talked. Dishonored, A... committed suicide with a gunshot; some time afterward his yɔrka revealed itself in Alémin; it exercises a kunu on this lineage.

613 614 784 Situation of the other lineages with respect to the kunu. The Papaïston lineage is divided into two groups: Papaïston 1 (the principal one) and Papaïston 2, of which there remain only three living members: two women and one young man. This remainder of a lineage continues to bear its own kunu, which is unique and separate from that of the principal group.

The principal group forms a unit with respect to the kunu.

The Lapé lineage, cut from the point of view of genealogy into two pieces, forms a unit with respect to the kunu. We [114] have been able to collect only fragmentary information on the various kunu of this village.

784 A kunu is exercised by a Dipélu yɔrka, borne in 1958 by 775 a Loka woman. It is invoked before the fraga tiki of l'Enfant
778 Perdu village (Dipélu I). Sometimes a broko dɛ is celebrated 769 for it in the same forms as the ceremony of the eighth day
613 after death.

784 We have likewise not been able to collect complete
613 information on the kunu of the Kotika lineage. This lineage, 114 divided into three fractions, forms a unit with respect to the kunu.

784 A kunu is exercised by the yɔrka of a Surinam Creole 613 assassinated in former times by a member of the lineage. Its 775 bearer in 1958 was Todo (K1, E68), a man of the Kotika lo
787 living in Boniville. In 1958 a young woman of the lineage,
[761] Awini (K1, E37), died suddenly; the yɔrka revealed that it
[684] had struck Awini because she had a liaison with Sintamann (K3, E145), thus committing pikadu. The idea of the collective responsibility of the lineage is so deeply accepted by the Boni that the near relatives of the dead woman did not reproach Sintamann at all.

784 /229/ A yɔrka of the Kotika lineage may exercise a kunu on 613 the Djuka. This is the case of an affair going back to 1950;
775 a young woman died some time after having a serious discussion
761 with a Djuka woman who had hit her. Deaths among the Djuka
619 these last years had been attributed to its vengeance.

It seems that there is no other kunu exercised by a Djuka 784 upon a Boni lineage and vice versa. This is surprising, con-
619 sidering the fights which in former times set the two nations
613 against each other.

The Djuka and Saramaka living isolated in the midst 621 of the Boni know their kunu, which were revealed to them in 784 childhood. In case of sickness, they employ divinatory pro-
[755] cedures in order to know what kunu is concerned, then they [613] make offerings. But in case of serious illness, they are forced to go back to the village of origin of their lineage.

784 613 [428] The kunu and Boni family life. It follows from the detailed examination we have just made of the situation of the various lineages that the transmission of the kunu within the uterine kin group is a rigorous law which suffers no exception whatever. [571] [602] The process of assimilation which permits in a certain measure, on the social plane, the integration of fragments of paternal kin (like Awara Bakka 3) into a group does not come into play here. [611] [829] Unity with respect to the kunu can therefore be regarded as a rigorous criterion of a common matrilineal origin. The Boni feel it as an obvious fact and in such a case it is the proof that comes to their minds: "We are of the same origin since we have the same kunu."

784 613 571 182 Thus the kunu appears as the principal cement of the unity of the groups. It opposes the dissociation of the lineages; this curse which weighs collectively upon a group and which can be exorcised only collectively is an iron bond which nothing can break. It obliges the Refugee Blacks to surmount their individualistic tendencies, their egoism which, if they acted freely, would soon have scattered them into a dust of [888] separate persons. In the face of adversity each one accepts with good grace obedience to the elders, who alone know how to talk to the gods and appease them. [672] Nobody ever is indignant or even surprised to be struck down for the offense of another; there is not a movement of revolt or hostility against the one who by his inattention or inconsiderateness has brought on misfortune. On this plane the members of a lineage feel like cells of a single body.

784 613 672 The collective legal responsibility of the members of a group in the domain of customary law flows from the kunu. We have observed that several times, notably at the time of the obsequies for Kotoïda (Afi lineage) in October, 1956. The president of the lãnti kuutu condemned the members of

784 613 672 the Afi lineage to be thrashed symbolically for not having paid sufficient attention to the warnings of the yɔrka which had already made Kotoïda sick several times: by their negligence they bore part of the responsibility for Kotoïda's death. Although the Afi and the Awara Bakka live together and regard themselves as members of one community, there was no question whatever of thrashing the Awara Bakka, and that because, not being subject to the same kunu, they bore no responsibility for this death. /230/

Likewise it is taken for granted that the descendants of Anèta (Aw.B.3) do not share the legal responsibility of the Awara Bakka proper (fractions 1 and 2). The fact that Anéta was the wife of Péeyon, captain of the Aw.B., and that her descendants are completely integrated into the life of the village, does not modify this legal situation at all. At the time of the brawl between the Dipélu and the Awara Bakka in 1948, the Aw.B.3 were not taken to task, any more than the members of the Afi lineage.

791 The relations of the Boni with the entities which are believed to pursue them are most interesting. They seek only to appease the divinity, to calm it provisionally, and to live with it in a state of armed peace, if one may say so.

784 787 When divination has shown that a certain calamity was due to the kunu (sometimes the divinity in question reveals it immediately, through the mouth of its bearer, before being interrogated), it is asked why it struck: it always indicates a precise reason: usually it appears to be inspired by arbitrariness [776] and a pitiless despotism. The Refugee Blacks are not surprised at this, for thus it is that they imagine the lower gods.

784 787 776 In 1948, A..., of the Dju lineage, fell ill; he felt violent pains in his legs. Divination showed that it was the doing of the Kãntamasu, which was exercising its kunu upon

784 the lineage; questioned, this god declared that it had something 787 to complain about in the bad condition of the house which the 776 members of the lineage had erected to it on its order; the roof of leaves had not been changed and it was raining through.

784 It happens also, but as an exception, that the god has 684 sanctioned an offense against morals or more precisely, against the social law, such as the breaking of an interdiction, pikadu (incest in the wider sense, an offense against exogamy). It is necessary to understand that in the thought of the Refugee Blacks, incest unleashes the existing kunu but does not create a new kunu.

In October, 1952, Dolo, a young man of 25 of the [787] Awara Bakka lo, died almost suddenly. Divination revealed [761] that he had been killed by the kunu (it was a Papa gadu which [613] had intervened) in order to sanction an offense committed some time previously by another member of the lo named P.... The latter, a notoriously depraved individual, had committed incest with his own sister.

784 When the divinity has made known through the mouth 776 of its bearer the causes of its act, the assembled members of 782 the lineage implore it, ask it not to pursue its vengeance; the [787] divinity then requires an offering: for example, if it is a Papa gadu, it will require bottles of beer, some red and white cloth which will be immersed in a given place in the river. It may also require dances in its honor, celebrated by the other possessed people in the village. If it is an Ampuku, it will demand rum, dark-blue cloth which will be exposed in a remote place in the forest. An offering of this kind represents a relatively small sum, even for the Boni (several thousand francs in 1952). The god then declares itself appeased. But it does not pardon and it will resume /231/ its vengeance
[183] at the first cause. Thus the Boni have hope only in a rigorous 776 observance of customary law and the rites. There are divinities 787 which appeared to be thus appeased for a long time and to

776 which people do not hesitate to come to ask for remedies or 787 opinions, in spite of the evil they have done to the lineage and perhaps will do tomorrow. It is even allowable to wonder whether people do not prefer to consult the most wicked divinities, for they are believed to be stronger.

784 The kunu focuses, turns aside toward high purposes the 771 blind forces of superstition, fear, and rancor. Several authors
114 who have written on the Refugee Blacks have stated that 754 calamities were almost unfailingly attributed to sorcery (wisi). This is a grave error due to the fact that they believed they could transpose to the Refugee Blacks what is observed among the Creole populations of Surinam. If this were true, no
[787] positive social bond could exist. We believe we can assert that among the Refugee Blacks divination lays the blame on sorcery in only scarcely a tenth of the misfortunes. Here, 784 among other examples, are several typical cases concerning [114] Boni who worked with us or whom we have known especially well:

[753] --In 1948, Fintiman (Dju) falls ill (violent pains in the [776] legs); kunu of a Kãntamasu.

[752] --In 1948, Galmo (Papaïston) is accidentally hurt (gun backfire): kunu.

[753] --In 1949, Diolè, captain of the Dju lo, is smitten with [761] hemiplegia and remains paralyzed. He dies in 1951: kunu
[776] of a Papa gadu.

761 --In 1950, a Saramaka is killed in a hunting accident (a gun in poor condition went off by itself): ɔŋgɔɔku (accident).

[754] --In 1951, Kanayen (Kotika) drowns while sailing at night on the river: wisi.

[776] Ampuku.

752 --In 1951, F... (Dju) is seriously hurt by the falling of 784 a branch while cutting his clearing: kunu of a yɔrka.

761 --In 1952, Dolo (Awara Bakka) dies almost all of a [784] sudden with the symptoms of peritonitis: kunu, punishment for [684] incest committed by another member of the lineage.

--In 1952, Maìèndo, ten years old, son of Osaya (Awara Bakka) accidentally drowns: natural accident (ɔ̃ŋgɔɔku).

[784] --In 1954, Bèniti (Dju) dies at nearly 75 years of age:

[784] --In 1954, Agyémési (Aw.B.) dies almost all of a sudden:
[754] killed by Odun (he was a wisimã).

--In 1955, Tabiki (Awara Bakka) dies at over 80: natural illness.

[784] --In 1956, Kotoida /sic/ (Afi lineage) dies suddenly,
[775] aged about 50: kunu of a yɔrka.

784 --In 1957, F... (Lapé) is gravely ill with symptoms of 776 typhoid: kunu of a Papa gadu.

[761] Kãntamasu. /232/

75 /232/ One observes that in the 15 cases cited here, the kunu
761 interferes ten times, while in three cases natural causes: ill-
784 ness, accident, were assumed.

In reality, the Refugee Blacks do not have the conceptions of a natural world, subject to known or knowable laws, which is set against a supernatural world. The intervention of a Papa gadu is neither more nor less natural than an illness or an accident. There is only, on the plane of human life, more or less frequent intervention by suprahuman forces. The intervention of these forces is made according to laws which embrace the totality of beings and things, laws which men cannot understand but of which they believe they have a partial and empirical knowledge.

75 It is important not to confuse the kunu with the sufferings
784 which other divinities can arbitrarily make men undergo. The 776 kunu has a systematic character. But a divinity theoretically beneficent, and which has come into a man after being called on, may also from time to time bring misfortunes if such is its whim of the moment.

752 In 1949, G... (Dju) was busy cooking a crab in the 776 house of his mother D... A machete which was fastened to 784 the wall suddenly detached itself and wounded him in the right hand. Now his mother had an Ampuku which had imposed [787] the crab on her as kina. This Ampuku, immediately called [428] on, revealed that it really was it which had struck G..., for it did not like to see D...'s son eat crab (note that G... was not at all held to the observance of this kina, for no kina is transmitted from mother to son).

784 Neither must the kunu exercised by a yɔrka be confused
775 with the vengeance that a dead person can exercise against 613 the members of his own lineage in order to punish them for 769 having neglected their duties.

Punishment inflicted by an ancestor of the lineage seems for the Boni to be a notion distinct from that of the kunu. Vengeance exercised by a yɔrka upon its own lineage is regarded as exceptional and devoid of the inexorable and definitive character of the kunu, but they assume it to be [762] possible. They cited to us the case of Yali (Loka), who [753] committed suicide when accused of sorcery by the people
[761] of his lineage. Since then, his yɔrka has caused sicknesses and deaths in his own village.

776 Conversely, a god which exercises the kunu upon a 784 lineage may in certain cases intervene in favor of this lineage
613 if such is its whim of the moment. Thus the death of Diamanti
[761] (Aw.B.2, Asisi village, † in 1955) is attributed to the god which exercises the kunu on the village of L'Enfant Perdu and whose bearer was Pééchina. Diamanti had wronged someone of this village and the god had intervened against her.

787 In a general way, they consider that the bearer of a god 784 exercising the kunu has nothing to fear from it personally if he 776 rigorously observes the kina which have been imposed upon him. On the other hand, this god will punish any injury to [562] its bearer. Thus these bearers (almost always old women) live [888] surrounded by respect and fear.

784 /233/ Observations in January, 1958 (misfortunes attributed to 769 vengeance of ancestors on their own lineage).
613 Do (Lapé) is taken ill on January 7, 1958 with a violent 75 attack of dysentery. The same day his five-year-old son is grievously hurt at the wharf by falling on a broken bottle.
[787] Alarmed by this coincidence, the members of the Lapé lo assemble and proceed to question a possessed person. The latter reveals that it is the doing of an old woman of the lineage, Atala, dead for two years. Several lineage members have already been sick from this; the dead woman wanted to sanction offenses committed by the people of the lineage.

The same day in Boniville, Klémenti (Dju), to whom I am recounting this affair, tells me that before the lifting of mourning for his mother Béniti, he and his sisters were sick.
[787] Divination showed that it was the doing of Béniti, who wished to hasten the celebration of the ceremony.

784 The kunu and social peace among the Boni. Role of the grand 775 man. The kunu exercised by a yɔrka creates very strange re-613 lations among the Boni lineages. As blind and arbitrary as the 571 vengeance attributed to the yɔrka may be, the Boni have the sense of the legal unity of the lineage too much for any resentment to exist: "They are killing our family..."; and yet the two lineages find themselves henceforth irreparably bound to-[782] gether. The victims of the kunu can no longer get along without people of the lineage of the yɔrka which pursues them with its vengeance, since they alone, by their prayers, can appease temporarily the anger of their ancestor. One conceives of the 784 /233 cont./ One conceives of the 795 interminable dissensions which this situation entails: if the 613 manifestations of the kunu do not cease, the victims let it be 578 understood that the prayers were badly made.... /Figure 28 appears here./

761 Every suspicious death whose circumstances lead to the 628 belief that /234/ an inhabitant of another village was responsi-
613 ble can bring on a punitive expedition against that village and [784] other villages of the same kin group. By taking this vengeful attitude even before the grand man has been notified and the blamed people heard, the people of the dead person's lineage are thinking above all else of taking precautions against the action of the dead person, who could turn back his vengeance
628 against them. Actually, these fights are above all symbolic; the wisdom of the Refugee Blacks has promulgated precepts which many nations could take as a pattern, in order that these punitive expeditions might not have serious consequences:

--One may strike only with the fists, and blood must not flow;

--Men may strike only men, while the women find fault with women;

--One may fight only on the village common and before witnesses, never in the bush or on the river. As a general rule, the people aimed at by the expedition do not resist, but flee into the bush or on the boats, or group themselves around the fraga tiki, holy place which the aggressors must respect.

628 We have told about the expedition made in April, 1957
613 by the people of Asisi-Awara Bakka against the villages of L'Enfant Perdu (Dipélu I) and Kormotibo (Dipélu II). Eight years earlier, in 1949, another squabble had thrown the Dipélu against the Awara Bakka after the death of Pétikona (Dip. II), whom her husband Boofo had taken to Surinam and who had died there. The Kormotibo people claimed that Boofo was responsible for her death. They went to attack the people of Asisi who, although three times more numerous, did not try

628 613 to resist and fled to Boniville, where some took refuge in the water, others in the bush. About ten shacks were broken (without great damage), principally kitchens and empty sheds. Only one man could be caught and he received several punches.

The expedition of April, 1957 against the villages of L'Enfant Perdu and Kormotibo did not do much more harm. Only one good house was smashed, that of Akwali (Dip. II, Kormotibo) because its owner, passing by in a boat on the river, insulted the aggressors....

Fig. 28. Schema of the kunu exercised upon one another by the various lineages.

695 Fist-fighting is practiced also between individuals as a test for justification. If someone is unjustly accused of theft, this is the first idea which occurs to him, even before the oath before Odun. On this subject the Refugee Blacks have a conception analogous to that of the ancient Europeans, according to which God will come to the aid of the innocent person, giving him the strength of ten. This fighting, too, is subject to precise rules; it can be indulged in only publicly, in a village, never in the bush or on the river.

In spite of the importance attached to the oath before Odun, Boni custom does not make provision for any test for 628 justification having a recognized legal value. This is what makes 613 the symbolic battle indispensable. Intervention is then asked of the head of a neutral lineage in order to restore peace. If no death or calamity takes place allowing /235/ belief in the unappeased vengeance of a dead person, the affair is very quickly forgotten. For example, in examining the table of marriages among the various lineages, one ascertains that there are a number of normal unions between the Dipélu and the Awara Bakka.

643 In these kinds of affairs the grand man has two very 692 exact functions:

--To reveal pretense;

--To intervene as supreme arbiter in case of necessity.

[787] Each time that someone is attacked by a fit of possession
[775] and claims to speak in the name of a yɔrka coming to exercise a kunu, the lineage head conducts him to the grand man who makes sure that there is no question of pretense.

643 The grand man, in the thought of the Boni, has the 775 power to compel any yɔrka to manifest itself.
787 He conducts the person concerned to the fraga tiki and 695 invokes the yɔrka. If pretense is involved, the individual will not be able to articulate a syllable. If it is true possession, the yɔrka will speak through his mouth.

775 A few years ago a Kormotibo woman was thus confounded.
787 She had wanted to pretend possession by a yɔrka in order to 695 blackmail another family.

Grand Man Difu recently forbade the bequeathing of gods
784 and yɔrka exercising the kunu (1). People will wait for them
428

1. Let us recall that the dead are questioned on this subject as for the apportionment of the rest of their heritage.

to manifest themselves of their own accord. That will reduce the risks of pretense.

643 The grand man's lineage does not exercise any kunu upon 613 another lineage, and no kunu is exercised upon it. For the Boni
775 this is a fundamental idea, because the grand man is precisely
784 the supreme recourse in case of persistent calamities attributed to the yɔrka of a dead person. The grand man has the power to exorcise all the dead Boni. If his lineage exercised a kunu or were victim of one, he would be judge and litigant at the same time.

When, with the death of Grand Man Difu, the Dikan lineage is extinct, and when the function passes to another lineage, consideration of the kunu exercised by the lineages upon one another will be determinative in the choice of his successor.

Divination; Premonition; Dreams

Divination. It plays an essential role among the Refugee Blacks as in all animistic societies. Individuals have recourse to it to inspire all important discussions; in large measure one can say that for them it takes the place of will and conscience.

787 But divination is more than that; the interpretation it
626 gives of the events of daily life is the very mover of the ani-
182 mistic society; presenting calamities /236/ as the punishment
571 of offenses against customary law, it is constantly vitalizing that law, conserving its practical value and its efficacity. What it expresses is not the hidden influence of chiefs or priests -- there are in fact neither chiefs nor priests among the Boni -- but the very consensus of the group, the deep feeling it has of its unity.

787 There are two large categories of divination:

The first consists of calling on a divinity through the medium of its bearer. For that, one applies to a person (of his [791] lineage if possible) who has a gadu. This is a service which is rarely refused. This person employs the appropriate procedure for calling his gita and enters into trances. The god speaks, the question is put to it; if it is well disposed, it may give the explanation or the advice requested. For example, one asks for advice before looking for another sector to make his clearings.

787 Suggestible as the Boni may be, they do not fail to per-776 ceive that all the gods interrogated do not give the same directions. So they think that certain ones are stronger than others; there are people whose gita is considered to be particularly [791] good, others whom they have stopped consulting entirely. The defunct head of Kotika village, Bayo, used to have a gita so remarkable that people would come from very far to consult it.

[829] The general opinion is, furthermore, that nowadays
[178] everything is degenerating and that good gita are no longer seen as in the olden days.

787 These consultations involve only a very modest remuner-
[791] ation, a bottle of tafia at most (1). If it is not a matter of a

1. The remuneration of the possessed person is in question; the god always demands a payment for itself, of variable size according to its whim.

[787] very serious question, the asker contents himself with going to interrogate a divinity in which he has confidence. If, when put to the test, the advice turns out to be bad, he goes to consult others and if he obtains the same advice from two different directions, he stops there. If not, he appeals to the elders of [888] his village to bring into play the processes of divination which [791] they alone know.

A second category of divinatory procedures consists in the [428] use of "remedies," whose origin is unknown and which are transmitted like a personal belonging.

The process reputed to be the surest, in which everybody has confidence, is called pusu. The instrument is composed [824] simply of a rope made of fibers of the Mauritia (2) palm tree which has been dipped in an infusion of herbs; it is stretched horizontally between two stakes. The elder brings near it a machete blade heated red-hot, at the same time asking the question. If the answer is positive, the rope is cut when the iron has scarcely touched it. If the answer is no, they state that the red-hot iron remains in contact with the rope for an appreciable length of time without the rope's being cut.

2. Palm tree which grows in the coastal savannas and whose fibers are bought from the Galibi Indians. The word pusu, like gita, kandu, mula, is of Congolese origin. In Kikongo, mpuusu = raffia palm tree.

They will say for example: ɛfu na Ampuku siki X, a how a 'ɛ mu do: fosi a kɔti: If it is an Ampuku which is making X sick, the machete must cut (the rope) before (even) reaching it.

787 In this way they put a series of questions entailing yes or no answers and which narrow down the problem more and more.

791 For this divinatory procedure, they pay the man who has brought it into play three liters of tafia, two pieces of cloth, and one machete.

787 695 This procedure is put into play to confound thieves and adulterers. The plaintiff publicly calls on the accused to come and undergo the test: Mi ɔ tya yu go a sweli! If he refuses, it is the equivalent of a confession.

In 1947, Liki (Aw.B.), accused of having stolen 20 grams of gold by a man from Loka, was thus put to the test. The rope was not cut. He was declared innocent and it was the plaintiff who had to pay the price of the test.

In 1950, the uncle of Tabayé (Dip. I) accused him of having committed adultery with his wife. He denied it, but he was put to the test which gave a positive result; he confessed immediately and begged his uncle's pardon. Then they were reconciled. Of course it was he who paid the price of the test.

787 Another important divinatory procedure is the Kumẽnti bui (ring of Kumẽnti). This is a surprising form of divination by pendulum. The ring, which is made of fibers, is ordinarily kept hidden by its owner. Very few people have any. The ring, suspended at the end of a string, is put in oscillation. Its owner puts a question to it. If the answer is affirmative, it oscillates from right to left. If it is negative, it describes a circle.

[825] Another procedure is sometimes used after a sacrifice to know whether the god has received it favorably: it consists of killing a rooster to examine the color of its testicles: if they are found to be black, the sacrifice has not been accepted.

888 Not just anyone may resort to divination on behalf of someone else: only the eldest have the right to do it, and it has happened that the grand man punished offenders severely.

797 Fate. The Refugee Blacks do not attribute all misfortunes
[752] to suprahuman causes. They have the notion of natural accident, ɔŋgɔɔku. They say ɔŋgɔɔku miti mi, or again ogi miti mi, [761] misfortune met me. They also accept the idea of natural death. They usually regard as natural death that of the very old, the infirm from birth, and sickly children.

[787] Divination blames fate in ten to 20 per cent of accidents.
[792] It is the usual explanation for hunting accidents.

772 /238/ Magic Forces

As we have shown, the Refugee Blacks consider beings and things as a world of forces capable of acting on one another, outside of time and space, according to laws which men cannot understand but of which they believe they have a partial and empirical knowledge transmitted by tradition since the 754 time of the ancestors. They distinguish negative magic forces,
789 wisi, which have the effect of diminishing the vital force of men, which makes them sick or kills them, and positive magic forces, ɔbia, which come from the gods: the ɔbia comes to increase the vital force of men, giving them protection, immunity, or knowledge. But no power is in essence a principle of good or evil; nothing is impossible for him who knows the formulas; this is why the magic of the Refugee Blacks is reduced to a perpetual and indecisive struggle between ɔbia and wisi.

754 Wisi. Wisi is sorcery in the African sense of the term, that is,
[673] the use of magic procedures to harm others; wisi is for the Refugee Blacks the pre-eminently criminal act, at the same time against morals and against society. The struggle against

754 /238 cont./ The struggle against 781 wisi is one of the foundations of their social life, protection against the undertakings of the wisimã one of the most constant worries of each person. Nobody knows these wisimã with certainty; one is reduced to vague suspicions of this or that person, which one dares not formulate for lack of proof. No one knows exactly how they operate. Yet each one feels their enterprises everywhere about him, and those who by reason of their wealth or successes with women have the most reason to believe themselves exposed to jealousy live in anxiety.

754 Intense jealousy or hate are already a form of wisi, and [828] this is why each one must try to drive them out of his heart;
[784] besides, he would risk falling ill or being subject to all sorts of calamities for having broken his oath. But the wisimã employs explicit procedures:

--Burying a bottle (beli bata) containing sorcery under his enemy's door. When the latter comes home, the sorcery will [751] penetrate into him. So some Refugee Blacks carry a special ɔbia against this kind of aggression: thanks to this ɔbia, they will feel a sharp pain in the tip of the foot when approaching the bottle, which they will thus uncover easily.

754 --Kisi akkaa, stealing the akka of the enemy. The latter 774 then becomes mad. The Boni believe that the wisimã operates at night, taking advantage of the fact that the enemy's akka has left his body to wander. He captures it by attracting it with what it likes. For that, one must know the name of his enemy's akka, know its tastes and preferences; all things which each Refugee Black will carefully hide, even from his comrades. What the wisimã does with the akka was not clear to any of our informants. He tries either to capture it in order to deprive his enemy of it, or to make it hostile to its bearer, or to inspire it with abnormal ideas or tastes. If someone manifests an abnormal change /239/ in tastes or behavior, people will be inclined to think that a wisimã was able to act upon his akka.

754 [774] [829] On this point it is taken for granted that Indian magic is much more powerful than African magic, and that any Indian is capable of attracting his enemy's akka.

--Transforming himself into a vampire (azemã) and flying at night in search of sleeping men in order to suck their blood and eat them in spirit; this conception, closely related to the one which the West Indians have of the soucougnan, comes from Dahomey (in Fon, aze = sorcery). It is said, as in Dahomey, that the azemã flies by emitting fire through the anus.

--Seni ŋgi sani: this is what the Creoles call "sending bad baggage." This is acting upon a living being or an inanimate object to make it behave in abnormal fashion at the expense of the enemy. For example, if someone is bitten by a snake or if a child is carried off by a tiger, the action of a wisimã will be blamed first, for normally snake and tiger do not attack. But there is no material limit to the action of the wisimã, who can make a branch fall on his enemy's head or make a cartridge of dynamite burst prematurely.

[825] The idea that the sorcerer may transform himself into a jaguar, dog, or other animal is not assumed by the Refugee Blacks. Neither do they have the idea of brotherhoods of sorcerers.

754 695 How does society defend itself against the wisimã? There is first of all the test oath. At regular intervals, every two or three years for example, the grand man gathers together all the Boni to the last man before Odun's chapel, and makes each one drink a little of a magic liquid while inviting him to utter the formula: ɛfu mi e meki wisi fu dede a sama, mi mu dede: If I do sorcery to make someone die, I must die. This is what is called diŋgi sweri, to drink the test. Actually, it is a harmless liquid, but each one is convinced that a wisimã would not be able to drink it without dying from it. If someone stubbornly refuses to present himself at the ceremony, he is not obliged to, but he has denounced himself: suspicions will be directed on him henceforward.

754 Trial for sorcery does not exist among the Boni, but a 787 procedure exists which allows for pinning down suspicions.

After each death the dead person is asked the question: Is it wisi that killed thee? The question is put last (they first ask kunu, then fyo-fyo /see p. 398/).

If it is wisi, they ask: Is it such-and-such a family? (In general it is in the lineage itself), then the names of the lineage members are uttered successively until there is a positive response.

754 The one who is thus accused of wisi can be summoned
695 to justify himself before the grand man, but that can only have the character of an investigation and not a trial. The suspected individual may not be challenged. They accept the fact that it is only a matter of presumption and that the dead accuser can lie, pursuing vengeance beyond the grave.

The Refugee Blacks declare that there is no certainty about wisi.

754 A remarkable principle of customary law is that if a 613 member of a matrilineage /240/ is believed to have killed one
692 of his "brothers," the judiciary power of the Boni cannot interfere. It is an affair purely within the lineage.

754 Thus no one can be challenged or expelled for an act of sorcery. If one suspects somebody strongly, one will avoid him, one will turn the cold shoulder to him, all the time remaining polite, but one will not show anything. To this principle is attached a very noble idea, that of the interdiction of vengeance. He who is victim of sorcery must under no circumstances do countersorcery. He can only ask for the protection of the obia. One must not under any circumstances ask a divinity or his ancestors to harm his aggressor.

754 Among the Refugee Blacks there is only one sanction
715 against the wisimã: They will necessarily be found out at their 787 death. The yorka of the dead person, interrogated by the elders,

787 will be obliged to confess: "It is I who killed So-and-So and So-and-So." They immediately inform the grand man, who 754 orders the usual procedure against wisimã: Ceremonies are 766 suspended, the body is transported by boat to a place reserved for cursed people, downstream from Boni country, and it is abandoned in the bush without being buried. Grand Man Difu is trying to modify this custom and to compel burial of wisimã in a special cemetery, but without great success up to now, it seems.

754 There is no broko dɛ. The spouse may remarry immediate-765 ly. Since the property of the deceased are presumed to be ill-768 gotten, inheritance is cancelled. The house is destroyed and thrown into the water, the boat abandoned to the current.
Personal belongings of the deceased are turned over to the grand man who distributes them to whom he wishes.

The near relatives of persons thus designated are overcome with shame but can say nothing. Not a bit of responsibility is imputed to them.

754 How does society protect itself against the sorcery of the 775 wisimã from beyond the grave? According to Grand Man Difu, 784 this is a problem which does not come up. The wisimã has been killed by Odun as punishment for his crimes. Since every being draws its force from the divine, he has no more force, he is destroyed as a being, he is no longer anything but an empty shadow incapable of doing harm.

754 In fact, among the Refugee Blacks these trials of dead
775 people are very rare. Whereas about 15 persons die per year
782 on the average in Boni country, including about ten adults, [165] in the last 20 years (1) only about 20 persons were revealed to be wisimã.

1. Disregarding the period 1957-1959 when a definite fresh outbreak of the fear of wisimã was observed.

754 be wisimã. We were able to draw up the list of these from 775 information from diverse sources which agreed very well.
787 In nearly every case persons were concerned who had already been accused, during their lifetime, of being wisimã; and on whom suspicions had been directed either by reason of their solitary life and irascible character or as a consequence of a series of coincidences.

754 In general, they tend to accuse of wisi any individual 828 who systematically isolates himself, shows ill will in the observation of customary law, or shows himself particularly selfish, irascible, or jealous.

754 /241/ They tend also to suspect those who in their youth had 648 abandoned the tribe for years to settle among the Creoles, and those who frequent the Creoles of the region, known as quimboiseurs, or who go too often to Saint Laurent or Paramaribo to consult lukumã (clairvoyants) (1).

1. Consulting a clairvoyant is not contrary to the laws of Odun. Infringement of these laws begins when one claims to act upon other people.

754 Also deemed suspect of wisi is anyone who gets rich too
434 quickly or shows an immoderate love of money. A hard-
828 working man who earns his living in broad daylight is never accused of wisi. But the one who engages in trade is suspect. It is thought, for example, that G..., who furnished a shop and earns much money, is a "pledged man." It is said also of F..., a fishing contractor particularly greedy for profit. But neither has been accused openly.

152 828 754 777 Jealousy. To speak of jealousy as a negative magic force is not to be false to the thought of the Refugee Blacks. They regard it as an attenuated force of wisi, capable of bringing misfortunes even if no sorcery has been formulated. Jealousy is 152 157 very marked in their character, associated with an individualism verging on asocial tendencies. When somebody is accused of 754 wisi, jealousy is the commonest explanation of the crimes 152 828 attributed to him; it is thought for example that a man can be jealous of his brother's growing rich to the point of making him die; that a woman may be jealous of the beauty or health of 152 her sister's children. Not laying themselves open to jealousy 156 is the constant preoccupation of the Refugee Blacks; one ob- 828 serves it in daily behavior, for example in the greetings which 576 they exchange on the river. They never say, "I am well," but: "I feel only fair." If they come back from hunting they say, "I found a little."

152 Examples are not lacking of people who avoid building 156 a fine house or buying an outboard motor in order not to give 828 cause for jealousy. This preoccupation has profound reper- [182] cussions on the material life and the economy of the Refugee [463] Blacks; it explains in particular the absence of specialized professions and trade among them.

Many aspects of the customary law of the Refugee Blacks [183] have no other function than to exorcise, if one may say so, [591] tendencies toward jealousy and selfishness which, if they were given free rein, would poison the life of the collectivity.

76 The rites of death and mourning, which we have shown 181 to constitute the pivot of the social life of the Refugee Blacks, 725 are entirely based on the idea of preserving the surviving spouse 828 from the effect of the jealousy of the deceased.

[126] Several cases of wisi. We transcribe these affairs as they were related to us, placing ourselves in the perspective of the narrator, without making any judgment as to the nature of the facts and their probability.

N... affair. -- N..., of Kotika, was working gold with another Boni. After they had eaten /242/ together, the latter was taken with uncontrollable vomiting, then he died. His near relatives blamed N..., accusing him of wisi. In the night N... took refuge at Benzdorp and took passage on a Djuka [167] boat which was going down the river. He settled in Paramaribo. Since then his sister T... has gone to join him. They have left the Boni for good.

P... affair. -- Toko (Dipélu II), while boating on the lower river, wagered one morning with his friend Kwami (who told us the story) to stay in a dive for the time necessary to fill a five-liter demijohn; bet taken; Toko did not come back up, he had drowned. His body was found the next day. The family
[578] blamed one P..., of Kotika village, whose wife N... had left him to marry Toko and who at the time had made threats.
[683] They insulted him, they presented Toko's decomposed body to him: "Eat him, since thou hast killed him like game." P... stubbornly denied it. The grand man commanded that he be left alone, turning him over to Odun to punish if he were guilty. As a matter of fact, some time afterward, P... died and was declared wisimã.

[464] S... affair. -- About 1955, S..., of Kotika, about 60 years old, was working with Kwau weeding the clearings of a Benzdorp Creole who raised oxen. One morning this cattle-raiser saw one of his oxen covered with blood coming from wounds which bore tooth marks and could not have been made by bats. He followed the traces of blood which led him to S...'s hammock.

754 He accused him of being an azemã (vampire) and of drinking the ox's blood. S... answered nothing, which appeared to everyone obvious proof of his guilt. He untied his boat and went away. Since then everybody in Kotika avoids him; they abstain from accusing him personally in order not to become victims of his sorcery.

Agyémési affair. -- Agyémési, an old man of Asisi village (Awara Bakka) who died in 1953, was a solitary and morose man with odd ways. For a long time he had been accused by B... (of Loka) and by N..., a Djuka living among the Boni, of being a wisimã and of having made them sick. He had even [695] been accused before the grand man, had denied it, and the grand man according to usage had told him: "We leave to God [167] the job of punishing thee if thou art guilty." Agyémési, in order to flee his persecutors, had settled in the Indian village of Aloïké.

His accusers insisted to people of his lineage that he be brought and publicly interrogated. A... and P... were sent, who went to get him by making him believe that the council of the Awara Bakka lo, putting an end to a long dispute, had decided to name him captain as the doyen of the lo. Without [695] mistrust, he followed them to Asisi. He was received by his accusers who insulted him tumultuously, without, however, there [154] being any blows. The poor man remained speechless, which appeared to all to be the obvious proof of his guilt. He took to his bed and five days later he was dead (1).

1. The Refugee Blacks are so suggestible that the sole fact of seeing oneself cursed and abandoned by all must bring on a psychological shock capable [171] of bringing death. Similar cases have been observed in Africa.

754 Of course he was recognized as a wisimã by the first
764 adjuration made to his body carried in the papay on the heads
787 of two men: "If thou art a wisi man, do not come toward us."
The dead man drew back. /2.o/

[784] /243/Continuation of the interrogation showed that he had not yet killed anybody, but that he had been killed by Odun when he was preparing to kill someone of his lineage.

754 The persecutors of Agyémési, contrary to their hope, did not recover after his death from the maladies which they were attributing to his sorcery; that did not shake their conviction in 755 the least. They left for Paramaribo to have themselves treated 648 by a Creole magician (for the Surinam Creoles, who practice white magic and black magic indiscriminately, are by this fact reputed to be more expert than the Refugee Blacks in combating the effects of wisi).

754 In recounting this story to us, the grand man told us that it is always necessary to be cautious with accusations of wisi, [762] because one can never be sure. A man unjustly accused can [784] commit suicide and pursue his accusers with his kunu (most of the Boni state that they would do so in such a case). In former 173 times, the barbarous punishments in use in Africa were applied
683 to revealed wisimã: they were burned alive. But people tell 784 that one of them, some months afterward, undertook against his accusers' lineage a kunu which still lasts today. He had been wrongly condemned! It is through fear of the kunu more than [178] through care for humanity, that these punishments have been abolished.

754 It certainly seems that the constant fear of the wisimã in [152] which the Boni live is only a collective hallucination, and that rare indeed are those who dare to indulge in practices which might draw upon them such terrible social and religious sanctions. As for these practices themselves, they appear to be without any real content, and the misfortunes attributed to them are

754 only commonplace illnesses or accidents of some sort. We [683] have never heard poisoning, in the usual sense of the term, mentioned.

754 The wisimã trials are in our opinion the most unpleasant 695 aspect of the civilization of the Refugee Blacks. But it must 182 be admitted that they correspond to profound necessities. These archaic societies need an obvious materialization of the principles they have given themselves. Since evil exists, opposing itself to good, the practices of wisi and wisimã exist, and the punishment of evildoers is indispensable for the society to remain subject to the law of good.

[984] By its notion of the kunu which turns aside toward the gods the responsibility for most misfortunes, by the extreme rarity of wisimã trials, by the prudence of its judiciary action which in point of fact pursues only the dead, the society of the Refugee Blacks shows itself humane and realistic.

If one undertook with the Refugee Blacks definite action to make these practices disappear, one would risk obscuring their notion of good and evil and removing all efficacy from their customary law.

[183] The social order of the Refugee Blacks cannot be maintained if the interdiction of harming anyone and the interdiction of vengeance do not remain clearly laid down. It matters little that these acts of sorcery are without real content: It is the intention to harm which counts, with all its social and psychological consequences.

171 When one observes the Creole populations of the Guianas 177 and the West Indies, even though /244/ they have been under 182 the influence of Christianity for several centuries, one is 754 struck by the development of sorcery and by its repercussions on the whole of social life. The teaching received at school and from the catechism, which embraces white magic and black magic in a single reprobation, has greatly contributed toward making these populations lose the principles of social morals of their ancestors without in exchange modifying their

171 image of the world. Since magic practices are rejected by 177 religion, since it even denies their reality, one does not think,
182 when one finds oneself constrained to have recourse to them,
754 of transferring to them the notion of good and evil which it teaches. Black magic gets in almost inevitably because a person believes he must defend himself; then its use becomes habitual, and the two forms of magic end up by mixing together and being no longer regarded as fundamentally different from each other.

171 Cases of wisi and Boni customary law. In African villages, 754 cases of sorcery are interpreted by interminable and useless
695 discussions, wild accusations, protestations of innocence, sometimes more or less sincere confessions, oaths and legal tests with always contested results. These cases are never finished; they are in permanent evolution, sometimes for months and years. Opinion moves successively onto different hypotheses according to events which take place, seeking its way gropingly like a man lost in darkness.

754 It is clear that the first lawgivers of the Refugee Blacks, 695 by carrying judgment back to the death of those concerned and 182 by refusing the wisima any kind of pardon or compromise, tried to prevent the development of these sad crises. What is the use of discussing interminably, since there is no certain proof, and since nobody may confess? But customary law collides on this point with tendencies too deep to be entirely restrained. The laws of Oduu are not always obeyed to the letter, and it happens sometimes that the Boni lose their footing in the [571] observance of their customary law. Then crises take place among them, as violent and confused as in the villages of Black Africa, going as far as paralyzing social life for several weeks; then peace returns for several months, sometimes for several years.

754 695 571 In 1958, a Boniville woman, N..., was convicted of having paid a Creole quimboiseur to make the grand man die. She confessed, a rare thing in this kind of case, and the materiality of the facts did not appear doubtful. The Boni were strongly impressed by this unprecedented event, and for several weeks the members of the lineage concerned were in such agitation that one could have believed they had lost their reason. In Boniville they "held court" continually for nearly two months, and they discussed so much that farm work was neglected and part of the rice crop lost.

754 695 683 [648] What were they going to do with this woman? The laws of Odun forbade killing her, no more could she be expelled. The Boni made discreet overtures to the administration to find out whether it was not possible to have her imprisoned. They were surprised to learn that French law does not recognize the offense of sorcery. Somebody then proposed having her admitted as a servant at the leprosarium of the Acarouani on the /245/ coast. This suggestion produced a surprising result; the Boni were unanimous in thinking that making someone who was not a leper live in a leprosarium was a punishment worse than death, and they resolved to pardon her.

How does one go about it, since the laws of Odun do not permit pardoning a wisimã? Nobody could give us a satisfactory justification on this, but in 1959 A..., the preceding year spurned and maltreated, had taken up normal living again in her village.

754 761 784 In fact, a case of wisi is terminated only upon the death of the person concerned. If a man who has been accused of wisi during his lifetime dies accidentally, or is struck by a fulminating sickness, the fact that he has been chastised by Odun appears as incontestable proof. The case is fixed in the memory of the group in a specific form and will be given as an example to inspire respect for customary law.

754 766 Burial of a wisima. We transcribe here an account given by a witness of this scene, K..., of Papaïston village, withholding the exact date and place.

"It was at the time of the clearings, people were in the farming habitations and the village was almost deserted. I was going fishing with P..., of Loka. We had moored our boat and were walking at the edge of the water when our attention was attracted by a nauseous odor which came from an unoccupied house. There we found the cadaver of a woman, E..., dead for two or three days. She had tried to break into the house by raising the roof, but she had remained wedged between two beams and smothered to death. Since she knew the house to be empty, she could not have had any other intention than to lodge an evil spell; after disengaging the body in the presence of witnesses, we went to inform the grand man who commanded, the motive seeming to be clear, that the yɔrka be interrogated on the spot without making a coffin.

[787] "Before a council composed of half a dozen men and two village heads, the interrogation began; the dead woman was carried in an old boat bottom; at times I myself served as bearer. Pressed with questions, she confessed that she had wisi (1) and that she had been killed by Odun. The case was clear. We were ordered to transport the body to the place reserved for cursed people, downstream from Boni country. When we arrived there the body was again borne on the heads of two men to ask it to choose the spot where it wanted to be abandoned. The dead woman drew us far into the forest, wandered a moment, then stopped. We abandoned her on the 754 766 ground, after scattering the cloths which were covering her, and left without carrying out any rite.

"Next we went to Boniville, the grand man invoked Odun on our behalf, stating that we had only followed his laws and that he had to protect the performers of the job against any distressing consequence."

754 181 178 Development of sorcery. Since 1957 Boni country has been passing through a crisis; /246/ fear of sorcery is poisoning village life, while in 1948-50 it was a preoccupation of secondary importance.

[578] That is due to the fact that the rapid growing rich of part of the Boni aggravates jealousies and suspicions. Moreover, these affairs tend to appear in series. Since the case related above (1958), in which a woman, N...., was convicted of having paid a Creole quimboiseur to make the grand man die, an affair which strongly impressed the Boni, they tend to see wisi in all misfortunes that occur.

[167] In November, 1958 the death of a little girl of 12 of Kotika village was attributed to her uncle Mbomaolo, who had recently emigrated to Surinam and settled in a Creole village. [787] It is believed that he "committed himself," that is, that he sold his soul to the devil (1), which necessitates sacrificing one

1. This notion, which plays such a large role in West Indian beliefs, has no equivalent among the Refugee Blacks. There is no word in the Boni language for translating the term "committed." They translate thus: a e suku didibi, he [776] seeks the devil. The Boni do not have a clear image of the devil, and this notion remains, in fact, foreign to their beliefs.

181 of his near relatives, his sister's children being regarded as 178 the victims most pleasing to the demon.
[787] Although in former times one to two out of ten deaths were attributed to wisi, in 1957 and 1958 out of 14 adult deaths of which we could obtain the explanation, there were:

[784] --Four wisimã killed by Odun, including two women of over 85 who during their lifetime had never been the object of unfavorable notice;

[761] --One death by the action of a wisimã, or a total of more than a third of the deaths; out of the nine others, two were looked upon as natural deaths (dead of old age), seven were attributed to the kunu.

754 The Refugee Blacks and Creole magic. Some of them go to 648 get from the lukumã what their own social morals forbid: vengeance or success acquired at the expense of other people. They have uttered an oath that prohibits the practice of wisi: for most of them it is clear that if they paid a piayeur /magician, sorcerer/ to harm someone, it would be the same as if they performed the sorcery themselves. But others make a mental reservation on this point.

754 In 1951, G...., of the Kotika lo, then about 20 years old,
755 felt ill while staying at Saint Laurent. He went to find a 648 Creole maïtif (clairvoyant) who presented him with a mirror, announcing to him that he was going to see in it the face of the one who had piayé /bewitched, cast a spell on/ him. G... saw nothing in the mirror. The maïtif was not upset at this and revealed to him that the piayeur must be someone in his wife's family. G... then recalled a dispute he had had some time previously with one of his wife's brothers and let himself be convinced: since that day he has not gotten along with his brother-in-law.

755 The maître asked 2,000 francs from him as the price of 789 Curse. Someone who judges himself victim of evil-doing has at his disposal a supreme resource: /247/ cursing his adversary, that is, appealing directly to the supreme God, Masa Gadu, to ask him to punish his adversary. This is called seni gadu -- sending God -- against someone. To do that, while asking God to kill him or make him sick, one kneels and strikes the ground with both hands in the presence of the adversary or in front of his house. This act is regarded as totally different from wisi, for one is relying on the justice of God, who judges with equity and punishes only the guilty.

However that may be, cursing is for the Refugee Blacks a very serious act. It may happen that, feeling guilty, the source of the injustice asks pardon and promises to make amends for his misdeeds. The one who uttered the curse again implores Masa Gadu in order to take back the words he spoke: "He has given me satisfaction, do nothing against him." But oftener still it happens that a complicated affair is involved, that both parties concerned are persuaded of their legitimate [692] ground and curse each other. The case must then be carried before the grand man and straightened out at once or misfortunes
[695] may pounce upon both lineages. The grand man judges without appeal and inflicts a punishment on the one who was wrong
[778] on the main issue of the debate. Then he obliges the ad-
[782] versaries to be reconciled before the fraga tiki, where the offering of tafia and water is made.

[828] The effect of these conceptions is to render nearly im-
[754] possible hidden hatreds and rancors, which the Refugee Blacks fear very much, for they are the source of wisi.

688 In general, the act of getting angry in public and serious-689 ly insulting somebody is considered as an offense against moral and religious law, capable of attracting misfortunes; it is an

689 attenuated form of wisi; in serious cases the grand man may inflict a severe punishment on the guilty ones.

789 ɔbia. The Refugee Blacks use the word ɔbia (1) to designate

1. The term ɔbia is used by the Refugee Blacks when they are speaking to outsiders, to designate positive magic, but in reality this term has a very different meaning in their language. It designates any kind of magic action, negative as well as positive; likewise the term ɔbiamã has the sense of sorcerer as well as that of holder of a remedy.

192 The Boni among themselves use the word deesi, remedy, instead of ɔbia. They do not use the word deesimã in place of ɔbiamã. It is said, for example, of a man who knows the rites of a cult of possession "A sabi Papa gadu sani" (he knows the things of Papa gadu).

[787] The term gadumã designates one who is possessed of a god, and not one who knows how to bring on possession.

114

In the rest of this work we shall continue, nevertheless, to use the terms ɔbia and ɔbiamã to designate positive magic, in order to facilitate collation with the English- and Dutch-language authors who have used it in this sense.

789 the object to which is attached a magic force, as well as that force itself. But there is no confusion in their minds; the object is only a simple support, it is nothing by itself. The traveler [755] who sees them prepare an infusion of leaves for a sick person may be tempted to believe that they attach to this leaf the power of acting against a certain disease; that would be an error, they attach to these leaves and to the white clay, pemba, the power of holding, /248/ of condensing the vital force which emanated from a certain god. It is the god which "makes ɔbia," and not men; men do nothing but collect this energy and apply it.

755 The Boni distinguish two categories of magic remedies:
787 --Those which come from a god through the medium of a possessed person. The god must be consulted each time, and the remedy it gives is effective only for the asker alone, and for a limited time; it can act only when the god has been paid, usually in the form of drink or piece of cloth; in principle nothing is owed to the possessed person (they admit that he benefits by the payment made to the god), but the custom is to give him a bottle of tafia.

Consultation of a possessed person is in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks the normal mechanism by which the ɔbia descends from the god to men.

755 Certain Ampuku gods might give remedies effective for 776 a particular disease and for any asker, remedies which could be transmitted from one man to another. Unfortunately we could not obtain exact information about this.

755 --Those whose origin is unknown, and which have been 756 transmitted from one man to another for a very long time. It is believed that these are remedies which were found empirically by a man in days past; this is the case with many remedies specific for this or that disease.

In such a case payment is made to the possessor of the remedy and to him alone.

755 823 [174] White clay, pɛmba (the word and the rite are of Congolese origin), does not undergo any special preparation. In the thought of the Refugee Blacks it has the power to fix upon a man's body the magic influence of the infusion of leaves.

791 Among the Boni, except for the cult of Odun, there are no priests, strictly speaking, invested with a function at the same time social and religious. A large number of persons 756 791 are regarded as "knowing remedies." This notion implies at once knowledge and power. In general the ɔbiamã is believed to hold only a specialized power: for example, he knows how to prepare a hunting ɔbia, or an ɔbia for protection against wisimã. This power he received from his father (as an exception, it seems, from his uncle), who instructed him, before dying, in the specialized rites it requires and transmitted his power to him by giving him mula.

To give mula to someone, one blows into his hands, one puts them on his head while uttering a formula by which one transmits to him a certain power or piece of magic knowledge.

What is the criterion of legitimacy? Who has the right to call himself an ɔbiamã? It seems that basically everything is reduced to this: the ɔbiamã has the conviction, the sensation that he holds this power; as for his clients, they believe they observe the efficacy of his ɔbia; if they stop having confidence in his remedy, they will abstain from coming to ask it of him, that is all; no social prohibition comes to limit the action of the ɔbiamã. The grand man intervenes only against someone [754] who might claim to hold remedies to harm another person or to capture his will, which would be wisi. /250/

[888] /249/ The Boni accept the possibility of deception as regards ɔbia, especially by people who are too young, but they have the conviction that the elders (people over 55-60) possess wisdom and that one can apply to them with complete confidence.

751 Principal ɔbia. The Kumẽnti bui, bracelet of Kumẽnti, which is not to be confused with the man nẽŋge ɔbia, is materialized by a bracelet of fibers not worn on the arm but shut up in one's small trunk. It is a polyvalent ɔbia which insures at the same time [787] the protection of its owner against the machete and the gun, his material prosperity and his moral security, for it furnishes him with a very highly esteemed procedure of divination.

751 This ɔbia must be prepared each time on the orders of a 787 Kumẽnti and in its presence in the body of a possessed person. It is the Kumẽnti which designates the leaves to go and get and the processing to make them undergo; according to the information which we have been able to get, this consists of plunging into the infusion of leaves first a machete, then an axe, both red hot, while the postulant recites formulas intended to fix in the ɔbia the power he desires (that the machete may not cut me, that I become rich, etc.).

751 The man nẽŋge ɔbia, exclusively intended for protection against the machete and gun, is materialized by a crudely fashioned iron ring clasping the arm a little below the shoulder (1).

1. The fact of wearing an iron ring on the arm does not necessarily correspond with possession of this ɔbia. In general, commoner ɔbia intended to protect from leprosy are concerned.

This ɔbia must not be confused with the ɔbia Kumẽnti. Obtaining possession by a Kumẽnti and the man nẽŋge obia /sic/ are two different things, corresponding to different rites.

751 [787] Possession by a Kumẽnti gives, they say, invulnerability during the time of the trance, but in his ordinary state the individual remains vulnerable (they say only that in case of danger the gita "rises" immediately).

Someone who has a man nẽŋga ɔbia has no trances of possession, but they state that he is permanently invulnerable (except for breaking of the kina). In order to obtain this ɔbia one must have himself "washed" for a very long time by an elder who knows the leaves in question. He delivers them already crushed so that no one may be able to know this secret outside of the son or nephew to whom he bequeaths it.

It is necessary to continue to be washed four times a year for 15 days each time, to keep up the force of the ɔbia.

[515] During these 15 days one bathes three times a day, in secret (in principle nobody knows that you have this ɔbia).

[834] During these periods one must have no relation with a woman, even to talk to her.

They state that someone who has a man nẽŋge ɔbia can be struck by blows of a machete and even receive a gunshot with impunity.

[173] They believe that this ɔbia, in the past called man feti ɔbia, was obtained by the ancestors at the time of the wars against the whites; still today it inspires an unshakeable confidence. /250/ In October, 1952 we saw M..., a man of 45 [164] [752] with great good sense, make a deep gash in his leg while cutting a liana, in spite of his ɔbia. Doubt did not cross his mind for a second: he told us that certainly he had unknowingly eaten something contrary to the kina of the ɔbia. Since we were working near some villages, he went immediately to find the master of the remedy to have the power restored. For nothing in the world would he have left for a long round of work in the bush with the feeling that he was at the mercy of an accident.

751 Next in the preoccupations of the Refugee Blacks come the ɔbia called tapu, that is to say, protection. There exist numerous kinds adapted to the various dangers of a supernatural order (protection against other divinities, against the maleficent entities of the bush, against the wisimã).

[776] [754] The Ampuku are generally asked for tapu against the wisimã. We saw a remarkable one in front of the house of F... (Dju). Its owner was not a little proud of it and he talked about it to us freely.

751 778 [532] The ɔbia, placed at ground level in front of the door, was composed of a crude representation in clay of a head in which appeared two wide-open eyes: in front of it were planted in the ground three plant clusters including a planting of groundnuts and one of maize; the whole was topped by a small basket containing an egg. It was necessary to water the ɔbia with a certain infusion of leaves at regular intervals to restore its force.

751 754 This ɔbia insured infallible protection against wisimã; in fact, none of them would have been able to cross the threshold without stubbing his toe on the door frame in spite of all his precautions; F... stated that his ɔbia constituted by this fact an effective means of detection of wisimã, for it was enough for him to invite suspects to enter his hut, to know what to think; the wisimã refused, for fear of thus being given away in the eyes of all; one could thus at least pin down suspicions.

751 [411] Other ɔbia are called sama mɔfu tetɛy (ɔbia against "people's mouths," that is, people's jealousy). They are nearly always seen on fine guns; they have a cord to hold them made of mɔriti palm fibers, to which two cowries are fastened.

755 The ɔbia intended to treat diseases generally have for support a calabash containing the infusion of leaves and a ball of pɛmba (kaolin). The person concerned sprinkles himself several times a day with this liquid.

789 396 There exist special ɔbia for the building of boats. The opening of the hull in the fire, a delicate operation, sometimes fails. To insure its success everyone possesses a personal recipe inherited from his father or uncle. It does not call by name and directly upon the action of a god; the Boni do not have a clear idea about the origin or the nature of these rites. It is a matter of a maceration of two or three kinds of leaves, generally belonging to the secondary flora which surrounds the villages, and they vary from one man to another. One pours this maceration over the overturned boat before the burning is begun, while saying: "The boat must not split, it must open well."

832 [673] The laws of Odun forbid the use of charms aimed at forcing the love of a woman one desires; that would infringe on a person's freedom, therefore wisi. It is very /251/ possible however that certain people go to get charms of this kind from Creole magicians. But they take for granted, on the other hand, the ɔbia believed to permit men who have little success with women to have more in the future.

751 789 There does not seem to be any hierarchy of ɔbia nor is one category of ɔbia believed to be stronger by nature than another; in fact, the Refugee Blacks are seen to go readily to ask one divinity for an ɔbia in order to protect themselves from another. Here is an example:

464 [648] In 1951 the administration had a systematic cleaning of the Petit Inini River begun, in order to rid its course of innumerable pieces of fallen wood which were making the use of motors on boats difficult. A team of Boni were employed in this work under the direction of a Creole foreman. While the [776] work was being done, a Papa gadu "came into the head" of an [787] old woman named M... of the Awara Bakka lo. It revealed that it was opposed to this work, for it lived in exactly this 464 place and the noise of the motors bothered it. Upon their return 776 to Boni country, the men charged with this work learned the 464 776 decision of the god and under some pretext or other refused to resume work. In August, 1952, while we were on a work trip 751 /en mission/, an ɔbiamã made it known that an Ampuku was 79 willing to give a tapu, that is, an ɔbia of protection, against this Papa gadu. We were present at a discussion in the course [465] of which several Boni planned to take up this work again, but asking for raised wages to cover the expenses of the ɔbia (1).

[171]

1. Situations of this kind are common in the Guianan forest, even among Creoles. For difficult or unusual work, the high wages demanded serve in part to remunerate magicians.

751 435 These expenses amounted to about 5,000 francs per person, or:

--3,000 for the payment of the god, including red cloth, 771 dark-blue cloth, white beads, beer, rum, cowries; the ɔbiamã would take them to set them out in the forest.

--1,500 for payment for the work of the ɔbiamã, including a piece of canvas /toile/, beer, a container /bidon/ of powder, a chicken.

751 The remedy would consist of an infusion of leaves with which one should "wash one's body" morning and evening for the duration of the work.

As for the Creole foreman, he prudently had himself assigned to another job.

751 776 They have the habit of asking an Ampuku for protection against a Papa gadu and conversely (we have cited an example of this above), but they do not ask a Kumẽnti for protection; the Kumẽnti occupy themselves only with illnesses.

751 789 Renewal of the power of the ɔbia. The Refugee Blacks have the idea that no magic power can last if it is not renewed by formulas and offerings appealing to the god from which it came. [824] Each year, at variable dates for each ɔbia, one must renew the power of the ɔbia by dipping the support object into a maceration of certain leaves. This renewal may not take place on January 1. On that day all leaves lose their power. /252/

[768] Mr. W. F. van Lier writes that among the Djuka, objects (bracelets, etc.) serving as support for a magic remedy are thrown away upon the death of the owner for they have lost [184] [428] all power. The Boni do not have this conception; with them, these objects keep their value for the dead person's son provided that before dying he voluntarily transmitted them to him by giving him mula.

789 428 613 Transmission of ɔbia. An ɔbia is often bequeathed simultaneously to a son and to a nephew. Care is taken not to lose the ɔbia for the lineage. Thus it is that certain lineages have certain ɔbia as their specialty.

789 [171] Kãndu. The Refugee Blacks call kãndu a magic object intended to protect property (houses, harvests) against theft. This procedure is also very much used by the Creoles.

There are three common kinds of kãndu:

--Piiti tiki kãndu. It is made of a split stick stuck into the ground, in the slit of which dry banana leaves or small sticks are placed horizontally. This device originated in Dahomey.

--Sikopu kãndu. It involves a shovel stuck into the ground in front of the house (the idea of the shovel is associated with the idea of death, for this instrument is used particularly in digging graves).

--Bɔɔ kãndu, made up of a bow and arrow planted in the ground.

789 The one who installs a kãndu utters the formula: mi poti yu ya, ɛfu a sama kɔm fu fufu mi sani, yu mu siki ẽn (I put thee here; if someone comes to steal my belongings, thou must make him sick).

[784] If someone goes beyond /it/ and commits a theft, he will be struck sooner or later with various sicknesses.

According to the conceptions of the Refugee Blacks, the kãndu is blind and strikes as well the friend who came to take objects because he received previous authorization to do it. So, many forego placing kãndu, as with us, people hesitate to set wolf-traps for fear of causing accidents.

789 784 428 However, the kãndu does not act upon the people who have the same basic interdiction (bwasi kina) as the one who placed it. This conception shows that these interdictions transmitted from father to children really are the mark of true patrilineages.

674 789 754 In fact, we have ascertained several times, there are burglaries in Boni country in spite of the kãndu and people do not succeed in uncovering the burglars; it is infinitely probable that one must not see in this the stamp of freethinkers who do not believe in sorcery; these are people who have obtained from a wisimã a talisman of black magic stronger than the kãndu! At least this is the explanation their victims give.

789 751 One can lift a kãndu on behalf of any man, whom one wants, for example, to send to get an object which one has forgotten; for that it is sufficient to give him mula: one blows into one's hands and lays them on the man's head, saying: mi puu a kãndu gi yu, a 'ã mu du a sani ãŋga yu: I withdraw the kãndu for thee, it must not do anything to thee. /253/

Mula can be given retroactively: If someone perceives that he has inadvertently incurred the chastisement of a kãndu, he has several days to be able to ask for mula from the owner, for the action of the kãndu is slow.

Various Beliefs

578 Fyo-fyo. If a Boni is on bad terms with someone of his lineage or of another lineage, he has the absolute right to turn a cold shoulder to him and stop having anything to do with him. But 828 if, hiding his rancor, he seeks, from selfish motives, to main- 753 tain the appearance of friendly relations, he risks falling ill, be- 761 ing struck by various calamities, or even dying from the effect 789 of what the Refugee Blacks call a fyo-fyo. The nature of this [825] force is not clear; they know only that its support is a small, common insect named fyo-fyo. They declare that if a person dies from the consequences of a fyo-fyo, one of these insects will be seen leaving his body through the nose at the moment of death.

776 Taku sani. By this name the Refugee Blacks designate maleficent [775] entities of the bush, which they imagine as of nonhuman nature by contrast to the taku yɔrka, wandering spirits of dead people [753] rejected by society. These entities are lower beings devoid of [828] consciousness but dangerous for men into whom they may enter, rendering them sick or mad. Certain of these entities are believed to reside in plants, like the kɔtkɔti, others are thought to take on the appearance of dwarfs (baku), whom certain people believe they sometimes see at dawn on the outskirts of villages.

751 One protects oneself against taku sani by special ɔbia, and those who do not feel completely secure take a certain number of precautions in addition, like that of tearing up the leaves they have used for drinking water from creeks.

751 417 [824] Tyifunga (1). This is the name of the magic enclosures made

of shoots /"tongues"/ of pinot palm, pina tõngo, attached to a string, with which on certain occasions a village is completely surrounded. These enclosures are thought to bar the passage of the evil spirits of the bush (taku sani); they are put up especially in the case of an epidemic, as well as before the great festivals which attract a crowd of persons among whom wisimã can slip 789 in. After putting the enclosure in place, people arrange themselves in a line at one end of the village and move along slowly so as to sweep its whole surface, firing guns, making all the noise possible by striking metallic objects and striking the ground with reeds to expel the evil spirits. This is what is called naki tyifunga. The elders repeat the formula: "U naki tyifunga fu agi na: mu ku a so (We strike tyifunga so that the evil (spirits) may not be able to come to earth)."

751 417 The magic fence is then left in place until it is rotten.

753 76 Beliefs about leprosy. Lepers are buried at the limits of the cemetery, but they are not considered cursed, and mourning for them is carried out normally.

753 784 /254/ They take for granted that if someone is attacked by leprosy, it is because he has "broken" his bwasi kina. They think that an enemy can, because of ill will, hide a bit of the forbidden fare in the food. This is why the Boni do not willingly tell one another their interdictions.

784 756 751 If someone realizes that he has broken his kina, he goes to see, not an ɔbiaman, but the specialist-healer of leprosy and asks him to treat him by way of prevention.

411 832 [177] [558] Beliefs about guns and hunting. The gun, which entered the everyday life of the Refugee Blacks two centuries ago, has taken an important place in their magic. It is the symbol of virility. A Refugee Black who no longer has a gun is a man humiliated and almost dishonored. As one of them explained to us in begging us to help him replace his old gun eaten by rust: "If you cannot present yourself before the women with a machete, hunting bag on your shoulder, and gun in your hand, you are not a man."

411 754 This idea has been transposed onto the plane of magic and they take for granted that the wisimã can, by putting evil spells on a gun, attack the owner of the weapon in his virility. It is supposed to be enough for someone to put his finger into the barrel of the gun while uttering a formula of vengeance, or even being moved by hate for the owner of the weapon, for this gun to be no longer capable of hitting the mark. So, to avoid these misfortunes, the Boni never part with their guns and never lend them to anyone. If, in spite of these precautions, they 411 789 have the impression that a gun no longer fires so well, they will go to an ɔbiaman to have it washed of maleficent influence. There exist for that purpose several remedies all of which consist of soaking the gun for one to three days in infusions of leaves, which has the unfailing result of making it rust. We have seen a hammerless, latest model gun spoiled thus by an intelligent Boni head boatman, a clever mechanic and usually full of good sense.

224 We have never witnessed among the Boni any individual or collective hunting rites claiming to attract game or to promote meeting it (when, on the contrary, hunting playes are extremely widespread among the Creoles).

841 Woman's magic power. The Refugee Blacks assume that a woman, during her menstrual periods, is impure and has the power to destroy the power of ɔbia. So during these periods she must withdraw into a special hut, munu ɔsu, and prepare her meals in special dishes; she may not prepare her husband's food, for by doing this she would destroy the power of his ɔbia, and must abstain from touching objects he habitually uses, particularly his gun, which would lose its good points for shooting. Even in the little farming habitations which consist of only several huts, one may be sure that one of them serves as a munu ɔsu.

841 343 462 [465] The munu ɔsu are very simple sheds built by the women themselves, using reclaimed materials taken from huts being demolished; some belong to one woman only; for others, three or four women get together. They have recourse to men only for assembling the framework, remunerating them with several cans of couac or several baskets of yams.

841 /255/ A man who has a powerful ɔbia like the man nɛ̃ŋge ɔbia must abstain from speaking to a woman who has her menses.

[751] The Boni assume there are women wicked enough to willfully hide their menses in order to destroy the power of a man's ɔbia, but he who has a good man nɛ̃ŋge ɔbia cannot be a dupe: the iron circle warns him of the danger by squeezing his arm.

184 841 68 According to Mr. W. F. van Lier, the act of willfully hiding her menses is for the Djuka one of the gravest offenses a woman can commit, and the most severe punishments are inflicted on her. It is not the same with the Boni: in such a case a woman risks only being insulted and banned.

752 834 171 Another deeply rooted belief among the Refugee Blacks, and which exists with many Creoles, is the necessity for the

834 ɔbiaman who treats a wound made by a firearm to observe [171] chastity during the whole duration of the treatment. It is for this reason that the Boni hesitate to have gunshot wounds cared for in hospitals.

784 Kina. The interdictions of the Refugee Blacks generally have [262] to do with food. There are five categories of them to our knowledge:

[753] --Bwasi kina, basic kina, mark of patrilineages, the breaking of which gives leprosy;

--Akka kina, often called gadu kina, established by divination and believed to be imposed by the akka;

--Gadu kina, mark of possession by a divinity;

--Obia kina, interdiction attached to each object involving a magic power, and which must be observed for this power to last;

--Finally, local kina, particularly the kina dɛ, days of rest, going back to the idea of the day of rest of the local divinity. They observe, for example, that the Mana River has a kina dɛ on Sunday. The Saramaka observe it strictly. The Boni we took on the Mana in 1949 went to find out from the Saramaka, and asked us to stop navigation on Sunday, [648] for this kina was very urgent. It is noteworthy however that the Boni bow in such circumstances before the will of the Europeans, as with respect to their own kina dɛ of Friday; in effect they are assuming that if they are ordered to be on duty, it is the European alone who bears the responsibility for breaking the kina.

[428] It is possible that the kina alluded to by Mr. W. F. Van [114] Lier and which, among the Djuka, would be imposed on a [613] whole matrilineage are also local kina; in any case no kina is transmissible through the mother, all the Refugee Blacks are explicit on that point.

784 262 A... of the Dju lo, about 28 years old in 1958, must observe six kina:

--The cayman and the jaguar as bwasi kina.

--The otter (yundu) as akka kina. /256/

These three kina have been imposed on him since his first years, but the meaning of them was explained to him only later on.

[751] --The eel (mãnsi) was imposed on him as a kina by his father when the latter gave him a man nẽɔge ɔbia, ɔbia of protection against machete or gun, materialized by an iron bracelet.

[841] [834] To this ɔbia is attached another kina. A... must not speak to a woman having her menstrual period.

[751] [787] --Finally, the crab (kaabu), kina attached to an ɔbia of which the man concerned only spoke with reticence, probably a Kumẽnti bui (bracelet of Kumẽnti, instrument of divination).

A... has no gadu kina in the strict sense of the term.

There exists no food kina common to all the Boni; the cayman is generally forbidden to them as bwasi kina, associated with another animal; but this is not absolute; we know at least one Boni who has not received this kina.

If someone has broken a kina inadvertently, he can have himself cleansed of this offense by ɔbiaman. But if he broke it willfully, he cannot escape the punishment attached to the offense.

845 p28 Beliefs about twins. They have the idea that twins and children who follow twins are of a nature different from other men, participating in a divine principle.

[755] Twins cannot live (since they do not belong to ordinary humanity) if they are not treated with a special remedy known only to certain lineages especially rich in twins.

845 961 578 613 When twins die young people almost always blame a disagreement which has arisen in the lineage. The twins did not want to live in a disunited family. The head of the lineage then exhorts his people to be reconciled with one another at any cost in order to avoid new misfortunes (1).

[753] 1. In general they have the idea that dissensions occurring in the lineage have as a consequence illnesses or misfortunes striking the members of the lineage. [182] This notion plays a major role in the social life of the Refugee Blacks; after the kunu, it is the principle cement holding groups together.

845 798 One who harms a twin is sure to fall ill. Conversely, it is assumed that the twin must not abuse his power, that he must lead an upright life and avoid quarrels. He is nearer to God than other men.

They assume for example that Efa, of Papalston village, herself a twin and the mother of twins, has a very special power. Nobody would risk harming her.

[613] [274] In lineages having many twins there exists a place of worship sacred to a vital principle called Twilenge. The nature of this principle is not clear. The Boni define it as the soul of twins. Is it a matter of the first twins Adam and Eve? Or of a collective worship offered up to all deceased twins?

This worship is celebrated each time there is occasion to protect newborn babies. They are washed with a certain decoction of leaves.

845 535 751 Every four or five years on the average a big dance takes place, then the father and mother of twins and the twins themselves are washed in order to maintain their powers and keep them in good health.

[784] [753] If these dances are not held, dead twins will show their anger by making living twins and parents of twins sick.

845 613 778 Lineages that do not have twins do not practice these rites. If twins are born to them, they will apply at the place of worship of another lineage.

Papaïston and Lapé have this cult particularly highly developed.

842 776 Tɔne pikin. It is assumed that a woman may be made pregnant by a river god, either a Papa gadu snake god or by the Wata Ingi, which look like Indians. Children thus conceived are called tɔne pikin.

A...., of Papaïston, had cut a clearing opposite a remarkable white rock called Weti stɔ, where she used to moor her boat. She had not had any children for several years and she became pregnant. When her daughter was born a possessed person revealed that she was born of a Papa gadu snake god which lived there: since then her parents /relatives/ go regularly to this rock to make offerings.

About 1910 Alama (Kormotibo) had followed her husband to a shipyard on the lower river; one day while walking in the forest she met an Indian having the appearance of a Galibi Indian, who was carrying a newborn baby. She stopped and admired the baby. The Indian said to her: "Do you wish to raise him?" She acquiesced. He said: "We shall see each other again"; then he went away so quickly that she had the impression that he had disappeared on the spot.

842 A few weeks afterward she found herself pregnant, and 976 it seemed obvious to all that this was the doing of a Wata Ingi.

845 No magic power is attributed to the tone pikin, any more than special mental or physical characteristics. But it is assumed that they are the object of a special protection, and that they cannot be harmed with impunity.

771 The sacred character of payment. Relations between the gods 789 and men always have the character of a bargain, among the 435 Refugee Blacks: an irritated divinity is never appeased by repentance or good will; it requires that it be paid; likewise, an obia is of value only for the person who has paid for it. Refugee Blacks will never utilize ready-made magic recipes: uttering certain words, making certain gestures; face to face with such a recipe they will ask immediately: "From what [P/2] god does this obia come, and whom must one pay?" It seems that in their conception every transference of a spiritual power or a magic force disturbs something in the proper functioning of the universe; payment restores this equilibrium, it is the
[M] mark of legitimacy. Some Creoles of African ancestry transpose the same idea with respect to Christianity, and this is /258/ why they insist so much on paying for masses and buying 759 "orisons" (1). One observes likewise that free medical care
558

1. Written prayer to which is attached protective power. This notion, borrowed from the rustic magic of 17th-century France, seems to have been introduced into Guiana by the first European colonists.

lowers the prestige of the doctor in the eyes of all.

461 829 431 On the material plane the same conception explains the high importance attached to fair payment for work done, the holy fury which takes possession of Refugee Blacks who consider themselves wronged; it also explains why they can interpret a free gift only as a mark of weakness except in exceptional cases (present given by a high official on the occasion 431 829 of a visit). A gift which does not have the character of an exchange has no spiritual value for them; it brings only scorn and near hostility, for they feel that the object has not been legitimately acquired and that they are not in tune with their moral law.

Local Divinities

776 823 The Refugee Blacks assume the existence of local divinities exercising a de facto power on such-and-such a portion of the country. Since their very special mode of life leads them to circulate almost exclusively along rivers, with them this idea has been transposed into a double notion: the divinities of the rivers and the gods of the soil. In their minds those are two entirely separate conceptions: the power of the god of the soil stops at the edge of the water and conversely.

De facto worship is rendered the divinities of the river according to the rites set by the first users of the river. In practice, worship is rendered only to the divinities of dangerous rivers where accidents are frequent. People do not bother with the others.

These gods are designated indiscriminately by the words gadu and sani (thing, being), indicating that their nature is not known.

776 One of the best known of these gods is that of the Maruini.
823 It is assumed to control all the tributaries of the Maruini as far 778 as their sources. Its place of worship is a thicket situated downstream from the dangerous Kubi Sula Falls, at the mouth
782 of the river. Before starting to go upriver in August, 1956, [539] the crews of our three boats, in an atmosphere of great meditation, lined up behind the eldest of them, who made the offering of water and tafia, uttering these words: "God who commands this river, watch over us, keep us from being sick, let no accident happen to us; if there is on this river an interdiction which we do not know (2) and which, through ignorance, we do not observe, pardon us. Bring us back to our villages safe and sound." The boatmen came one after the other to make the offering of tafia. The scene lasted more than a quarter of an hour. This ceremony was not without nobility, engendering belief in that sincere fervor of animists so often mentioned in the /259/ ethnographic literature.

771 But our return at the end of our work trip took place in a completely different atmosphere, showing the strictly practical and utilitarian side of the religion of the Refugee Blacks. Once past the Kubi Sula, the three boss boatmen could not persuade any of their men, who were in the act of eating their meal, to accompany them as far as the place of worship to thank the god. Some told us straight out that they were scoffing at this god from now on, having no intention of [782] coming back on the Maruini. As for the boss boatmen themselves, they measured stingily the quantity of tafia offered

771 [782] to the god, and their words of thanks lasted scarcely half a minute (1). At the time of our first trip on the Maruini, in

Rites Relative to Agriculture

These rites occupy a relatively minor place in the religious life of the Refugee Blacks, which may be attributed to the great regularity of the climate and the absence of calamities affecting the yield of crops.

[613] It does not seem, at least among the Boni, that a religious bond is assumed between the lineage and the land, and rites intended to insure the fertility of the soil are carried out by each one for himself in the neighborhood of his own field; the lineage head does not appear to play any particular role in this regard. In the thought of the Boni, the fertility of the soil depends upon a local divinity, to which is offered de facto worship; the temporary or permanent users of the lands situated in the domain of this god perform on their own behalf the rites of this worship without any distinction of origin, whether they are Boni, Djuka, or Saramaka.

[796] [793] [643] The only collective worship existing in Boni country is the worship of mama gɔ̃, of which the grand man is priest. Its rites are limited to a short annual prayer.

241 776 [532] 831 [778] [643] [782] Cult of Mama gɔ̃. Mama gɔ̃, mother of the earth, is represented by a crude statue of white clay provided with enormous breasts, symbol of fecundity, which can be seen in a little hut situated on the open place of Boniville village. Each year, when the time for cutting the clearings approaches, the grand man, surrounded by many other people, prays to the god to grant fertility to the plantings. If rain does not fall, an offering of water and tafia is made and the statue is sprinkled.

811 The Boni do not appear to associate the idea of women's fecundity with that of the fertility of the soil, and we have not heard anyone say that the grand man prays on this subject.

241 776 Neither do they appear to have a very clear idea about the relationships of this worship with that of the gɔ̃ gadu, local gods of the soil.

796 535 787 Every three years a great possession dance takes place in Boniville on January 1, /260/ in which the Papa gadu gods dance in front of the sanctuary of Mama gɔ̃. We have not been able to obtain specific information on the meaning of this rite.

241 776 [784] Cult of the gɔ̃ gadu. It is assumed that every portion of land is under the sway of a local god, gɔ̃ gadu. Its power is limited only by the fertility of the soil, and he who neglects its worship cannot be attacked in his person or in his goods, but only punished by a poor harvest.

What is the nature of these gods, what is their place in the cosmogony? These are questions which not one of our informants had ever asked himself. In their minds, gɔ̃ gadu has a de facto existence, and is rendered de facto worship. This worship consists essentially of:

[527] --The observance of a local day of rest, kina dɛ, corresponding to the god's day of rest.

241 776 In order to observe these rites suitably, it is important then to know in which god's domain are situated the lands one is cultivating. On the banks of the great river, the division of the lands among the gods of the soil has been well
241 776 known since the time of the ancestors. By summarizing the kina dɛ of the farming habitations, one realizes that the do-
527 main of each god is extensive; it occupies several kilometers along the banks. It is often thought (but not everywhere) that the two banks are controlled by different gods. For example:

Downstream from Boniville, right bank: Wednesday;
Toward Kormotibo, right bank: Thursday;
Toward the mouth of the Imini, both banks: Wednesday;
Toward Simayé Falls, both banks: Saturday.

On those days one may do nothing related to agriculture, and in particular one may not dig in the earth nor plant. If absolutely necessary one may go to pull up tubercules.

What one must avoid above all is handling tools which make noise and could disturb the god, except in the immediate vicinity of the water which is not under its control. However, one may shoot off a gun.

This kina dɛ is observed more strictly than Friday, the general kina dɛ in Boni country, which appears to be related to the cult of Mama gɔʒ. On those days people mend boats and especially go hunting and fishing.

241 778 Offerings are made in a purely individual and local fashion; in each farming habitation is seen at the approaches to the wharf a worship place formed by a simple meat-drying rack decorated with pennants of several colors, on which the offerings are exposed; even if this habitation combines people of diverse kin groups, there is only one place of worship.

241 778 People who have no farming habitation and who farm on the outskirts of /Fig. 29 appears here/ /261/ residence villages get together in groups of three or four to establish a worship place in a copse, preserved from the forest adjoining their clearings.

241 782 Cane juice, syrup, rice pounded fine but not cooked are offered.

They make this offering at the time of the plantings, saying, "Gadu, please come and eat a little, watch over us, thank you very much."

The Boni who observe the rites most faithfully renew this offering each month at the new moon.

If someone has two clearings in two different sectors, he performs the rites twice, each gɔɓ gadu being entirely independent of the others.

241 171 On this subject one notices that the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks are much more systematized than those of the Creole populations of African origin in the West Indies. They do not think each field has an individual soul; neither do they apparently believe in the possibility of capturing the soul of the field in order to make the neighbor's field sterile out of revenge. These beliefs, which play such a large role in the popular magic of the West Indies, seem to be without exact counterpart in the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks.

241 [776] Interdictions and various rites. Cutting a clearing involves great dangers: it is necessary to avoid injuring the maleficent divinities of the bush, which have as supports well-defined plants and animals, by brutal destruction of these supports, and their wreaking inexorable revenge -- the kunu -- on the lineage of the unintentional sacrilege. It is therefore necessary to seek out these plants and animals and to carry out for each the rites recommended by the ancestors' experience without forgetting a single one. No Refugee Black would dream of 241 neglecting these rites. Their rigorous observance has the effect of preventing farming from becoming for them a commercial activity and of keeping a religious and family feeling in it.

824 778 784 [776] --The kākāti (silk-cotton tree) is a much feared tree, for according to the elders each one of them shelters 12 categories of divinities, especially a Papa gadu and an Ampuku. So it is absolutely impossible to cut it. One must even be very careful not to injure its roots which spread far. The site of every one felled is preserved. Likewise people watch carefully so as not to injure the roots of the big silk-cotton trees often found in the villages.

824 778 776 361 Still, the fact that their site was chosen for setting up a village shows that people believe they can make an alliance with the divinities which reside in a silk-cotton tree and draw their protection upon themselves.

824 778 789 [776] --The katu tree (Bombax Surinamiensis), tree of very large size, living in symbiosis with a parasitic liana which appears to enclose it in a gigantic net, also shelters maleficent divinities (Ampuku, Papa gadu, Bumba gadu). One may cut it down after performing rites whose purpose is to transfer these divinities into another tree.

First, one must have procured from a man who possesses this remedy a pot of ɔbia containing an infusion of leaves in the middle of which is a bracelet of fibers. /262/ It costs [435] two liters of tafia, four liters of beverage (beer for example), one large piece of cloth, and one machete.

Having arrived at the foot of the tree, one bathes his body and machete with this infusion; one puts the fiber bracelet on one's arm. One also bathes several small sticks provided [822] with squares of white cloth (for the Papa gadu), dark blue and red (for the Ampuku), and a pinot palm (pina tɔngo) leaf.

One plants the sticks at the foot of the tree, one strikes the trunk with the palm leaf while invoking the divinities of 824 778 789 the tree: "Ala sani di dɛ̃ na a udu ya, da mu kumɔto, beka mi ɔ faa ɛ̃ŋ. Kɔm na a pina tɔ̃ŋgo: All things (suprahuman entities) who are in this tree, leave it, for I am going to throw it to the ground; come into this palm leaf." One takes away the palm leaf and the little flags far from there into the interior of the lands, to a spot where nobody is likely to come to fell trees, and one arranges them beside some big tree. The divinities will come and settle there. Nevertheless, it is still necessary to wait almost a month to cut the katu tree, probably to leave the maleficent influences time to dissipate.

824 778 [781] [771] The Boni are so afraid of this tree that many of them, deeming these precautions insufficient, give up the idea of cutting it down and go to establish their clearings elsewhere. The Creole gold miners of the Haut Maroni, who call it cottonwood, also attribute a maleficent influence to it and some of them do not cut it.

The Refugee Blacks fear also, but to a lesser degree, what they call kɔtkɔti, that is, the small trees of any species which, instead of having grown straight, have two angles in their trunk like a Z. This is a very rare anomaly. In such [776] [784] a shrub is hidden a maleficent entity, taku sani, capable, if a man cut the trunk unintentionally, to take revenge on him by paralyzing a limb or even the whole body in a bent position. In order to see whether or not the entity is present in the shrub, there exists, according to the Boni, a very simple means: one gently brings the finger near the bent part. If he feels his finger held there to the point where he has trouble drawing it back, the genie is present! The power of autosuggestion characteristic of the Refugee Blacks shows itself clearly here.

[789] Rites exist for rendering the kɔtkɔti harmless, for cutting them with impunity, and even for using them in magic preparations, but we do not know the details. Kɔtkɔti are among the objects usually found in the chapels (ɔbia ɔsu) of Kumẽnti; we have even happened to see one used to fasten a

824 778 door; it was a particularly feared kãndu that no thief would have dared to remove.

825 778 [776] --The Kãntamasu are the divinities, especially maleficent and hostile to men, who live in the termitaries (these are termites proper, who make their nest in the earth, and not wood lice, much more common). There is one to each termitary.

It happens that in spite of all the precautions taken a termitary is forgotten. Then, several days later, one will [789] have the consternation of seeing the Kãntamasu reveal itself [784] in someone of the lineage; it announces that it is going to exercise its kunu (curse). It is temporarily appeased by offer- [782] ings of tafia, various drinks, red cloth.

796 198 787 The Kãntamasu call themselves the Akɔlo. Through the mouth of their bearers they speak a language nobody understands. However, when they wish to be understood by those present they speak Kumẽnti.

755 784 Observation in Boniville, January, 1957:

A..., boatman of the border-fixing mission, asks for three days off. His wife, Masauman, has been ill for several days; divination (in this particular case the gita of a female relative in his lineage) showed that it was the doing of a Kãntamasu injured in the burning of the clearing which he himself, A..., cut for his wife in October. The Kãntamasu has not yet manifested itself directly, but a kunu threatens; to appease it he must put in action the remedy known only 000 to M..., an old man of Asisi. He will go to the spot, following

765 /263 cont./ He will go to the spot, following
782 at a good distance M..., bearer of the remedy, with which he will sprinkle the surface of the clearing, and of offering objects. When the offering has been made, they will wait some time to see whether Masauman is better and if she is, they will deem the god appeased.

The Yali Festival

[805] The Refugee Blacks, who do not count the days that elapse, contenting themselves with lunations in order to follow the course of the year, make inquiries from Europeans and Creoles to set the time for the Yali festival which marks the new year. Everyone accumulates provisions, especially tortoise meat, varied drinks, and many firecrackers.

On the evening of December 31 each one dances in his own village.

The festival lasts all night, tafia gushes forth, firecrackers go off everywhere.

[787] At the end of the night several gods "rise" in the heads of their bearers, at least of those who are not completely drunk.

[535] During the day dances resume intermittently in the order awasa, sɔŋgɛ, susa. It is customary for the people of one lineage to go to dance in the village of another, then they [574] invite them back. People make many individual visits. Some have set up in front of their hut a sort of small buffet on which they have arranged about ten glasses, five to six liters of tafia, four or five bottles of beer, lemonade, and syrup.

Observation in Boniville, January 1, 1958:

The grand man, who scarcely leaves his habitation downstream from Boniville any more, did not /264/ put himself out. He delegated his functions to Lébiman and Fintiman, men about 50 years old, belonging to the fraction of the Kotika and Dju lineages residing in Boniville.

796 At seven o'clock, about ten men assemble at the fraga
769 tiki. They pour water first, then tafia, while uttering the 539 prayer whose whole text follows, taken from a tape recording:
[126] Fintiman (pouring the water):

"Ancestors, hail! We have come to you; it is for the new year that we have come to you! as you yourselves used to do when you were (alive). May God protect us until the new year comes back again; thus it is that you yourselves used to pour the water on behalf of the ancestors. We have come to our place of prayer to speak with you, to ask you to carry our words to God."

(The same formulas are repeated several times.)

Lébiman:

"This is the New Year's Day water. It is God's day. He has arrived. Grand man Awensay (1), (because) I have not known the more distant ancestors, it is you alone that I call; call all the others."

"It has arrived, God's day. As for the grand man himself, a slight hindrance has come to him, he could not come, but it is not that he is no longer interested in the village."

"Watch over all the people who are there... we have come to pour water on your behalf, so that you will watch over the chickens and dogs of the village (and up to the living men) (2). Protect the grand man; if misfortune was about to 769 to pour (the water) to beg you to protect the village. The year

539 has changed today, it is a new year. May we have money and food, we beg of you, ancestors; watch over our plantings, may they prosper, may the young women who fish at the wharf catch fish."

"All the captains pour (the water), the fiskal, the majors pour (3) for all the lineages; protect the villages."

3. Honorific titles imitated from the Djuka but which, among the Boni, do not really mean anything; the head of Kormotibo village bears the title fiskal and the one of Kotika village the title major.

Fintiman:

"The people who have pure hearts, protect them, big and small. But the people whose hearts are not good, who do evil spells to kill others and decrease the village, we do not pray for them; turn them out."

"Watch over the grand man; if something happens to him, it must not be said that we, the people who are seated there, have not prayed well. Great ancestors, we supplicate you, if we were on the point of meeting misfortune, that we may find the good."

/265/ "Grand Man Awensay ,..." (Thanks follow for a trip which was carried out without hindrance.)

Lébiman:

"May the grand man live long with us, may misfortune not happen to him."

/265 cont./

796 "Great ancestors who are in God's country, it is you who 769 have the strength of the village."
539 (The tafia gushes forth.)

"Drink, drink, but do not get drunk to the point of being deluded, look with favor upon the righteous, scatter the wicked."

796 Next, Fintiman goes off to make an offering of tafia
782 accompanied by a few words at the chapel of Odun. Then he goes to the edge of the mortuary shed to pour water, tafia, and coffee on behalf of Samalobi, the grand man's brother, for whom mourning has not been lifted.

He goes next to the house of the deceased grand man Awensay to make an offering of coffee (Awensay, like the other grand men, used to drink coffee).

796 The prayer of the preceding year (January 1, 1957),
782 presided over by grandfather Samalobi, had had a higher
829 inspiration. After praying in about the same terms as above for the Boni, they prayed for the Djuka, explaining that in days gone by Boni and Djuka had fought, but that all that was forgotten. They prayed next for the Saramaka, then for the Indians, finally for the Europeans. I asked why; they answered: "It is because the Europeans were the ones who brought us to this country which has become ours." /p. 266 is blank/

TALES -- PROVERBS

Tales (Anɛsi ɔlɔli) and Proverbs (ɔdo) retain an important social function among the Refugee Blacks. It is always by tales that the great customary ceremonies of the lifting of mourning begin. Their function is to concentrate the attention of the audience and to create an atmosphere of participation in the rite.

This ritual character makes it so that the Anansi Toli cannot be recited any time and in any old way. The story-teller may speak only at night, in the presence of a respondent and of an audience of at least two or three persons. A ritual formula: "dirinti" -- the response of the audience: "ndaeti," [124] precedes each new story. It is only with extreme repugnance [126] that informants consent to listen to and comment in the day-[76] time on a tale recorded on tape, particularly if their parents are still living, for it is said among the Refugee Blacks as in Black Africa that telling stories in full daylight makes one's father and mother die.

[194] These tales belong to an authentically African [197] accumulated store, practically unchanged in spite of the borrowing from the Creole Blacks of Paramaribo of several themes concerning automobiles, steamboats, etc., inserted in droll fashion into the traditional themes.

The usual hero of these tales is Anansi, the crafty one. [825] Anansi is the name of the Mygale spider (1). It is noteworthy, however, that this spider does not appear to play any special role in the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks and that no divinatory power is attributed to it. In fact, in the tales of which he is the hero, Anansi is nearly always represented as a man.

Habitually figure in these tales:

Wénon	Anansi's wife
Akpwatitikwati	his sons
Asingébelé
Panikitapu
Bigimofu

Santasimooyu, his daughter.

(825) /268/ Also included under the title of Anansi Toli are tales in which only animals appear: leu, the elephant (whose description the Refugee Blacks have kept through oral tradition), kɔgioni, the agouti (1), who knows everything that happens in the bush, kariaku, the deer, a sly old blade who thwarts all tricks (2).

1. Rodent the size of a rabbit.

2. It is strange to see this animal play the role of the fox of our fables; the deer easily escapes the hunter thanks to his acute vision, but he does not really have intelligence.

The tales transcribed below are 14 in number; they have been chosen from about 30 and represent the most characteristic themes as well as the best-constructed narratives.

About half of the tales of the Refugee Blacks turn upon two fundamental themes:

--Hunting ruses, whereby Anansi succeeds in killing all the animals of the bush except one who, cleverer than he, succeeds in turning the trick and killing him in turn;

538 --Deception, more particularly associated with gluttony; in many tales, complicated ruses have for their purpose eating the neighbor's share.

Half the tales are improvisations on extremely varied themes and are impossible to classify. A large proportion are fantastic stories, disconnected and incoherent, recalling the progress of dreams. We have given no room here to this type of tale which in fact presents little of sociological interest.

In a general way, the tales of the Refugee Blacks do not reflect any definite concept. The same character is represented from one tale to another in contradictory aspects; he has no fixed personality. For example, the character Anansi, generally represented as lying, thieving, jealous, greedy, and cruel, is not associated with any definite concept. Some tales show him bringing Death among men, but others show him humiliating, to the great joy of men, the maleficent goddesses of the water and the bush. Most of the tales represent him as a swindler, but in some he figures as a judge. These contradictions are not perceived by the Refugee Blacks.

The storyteller himself succeeds with difficulty in following the thread of his story, losing himself in details, often recounted with wit. Sometimes the theme turns aside completely in the course of the narrative, like the ornamental motifs of the Refugee Blacks in which human limbs end in volutes, giving a harmonious whole but without great meaning. In this respect there is a great difference from one storyteller to the other. Certain ones construct more highly organized narratives; most are satisfied with the incoherent and fantastic tales.

538 Doubtless for the same reason, nothing is found in most of these tales which brings to mind a moral inspired by a concept of good and evil. Now it is the thief and the swindler who triumph, now they find one cleverer than they. It is easy to see that for the storyteller all that is on the same plane; he simply guided his story on what seemed to him most amusing. [522] As for the audience, it always laughs at the loser. One single tale out of 14 (No. 1) expresses a practical moral: "That is why you must not deceive people, for there are people who are cleverer than you."

Most of the tales and proverbs have already been heard many a time by the Refugee Blacks without that lessening their pleasure. More than the story itself, they appreciate the verve of the storyteller, his mimicking talent, the always new variations he knows how to give of a hackneyed theme.

538 All these tales were recorded with the tape recorder and 128 then were studied carefully with respect to vocabulary and syn- [126] tax. We have stayed very close to the actual wording and as far as possible have kept the special Aluku turns of phrase, especially African interjections which reinforce the verbs. The tedious passages which had to be summarized are put in parentheses. Tales nos. ten to 14 are summarized.

1) The Bearded Rock

One day Anansi went into the bush. He walked until ... he saw a rock, a rock with a beard. He cried: "Bearded rock!"

Then he fell, he fainted (1). He stayed there until (finally) he came to, and (could) go back home. Then he said (to himself): "I have found a place to kill game."

He saw the agouti who was passing by, he asked him: "Where are you going thus?" The agouti answered: "I am going hunting." Then Anansi told him: "I know a good place, come tomorrow so that I may take you there." He came and both walked until they had arrived at this rock. Then Anansi told him very softly: "Look at this rock, shout 'Bearded rock!'" The agouti shouted: "Bearded rock!" Immediately he fell in a faint; Anansi killed him with blows of a club and carried him off home.

He killed game in this way until the deer arrived unexpectedly. Anansi told him: "I know a place where game is found. We shall walk to a spot where we shall see a rock and you will shout: "Bearded rock!" They arrived at the rock; the deer said to Anansi: "I have forgotten the name of this rock." Anansi said very low: "Bearded rock." The deer said to him: "I don't hear." Then Anansi got angry, his heart took fire (with rage) and he shouted very loudly: "Bearded rock!" Then he himself fell to the ground. The deer killed him, took his liver, and carried it back to his wife.

That is why you must not deceive people, because there are people who are cleverer than you.

2) The Pond Genie

(One day) Anansi went into the bush; he explored in the bush, comrades. He went until... hunger seized him. He arrived at a pond where there were fish! fish! He caught the fish, he caught until...he came to a stump. He slipped his hand into a hole, and there his hand was grabbed, kyin kyin! He said: "Who is holding me like that?" "It is I the Thrower" (said the pond genie). He said: "Throw me to see." He threw him...to the top of the trees. He fell back down to the ground. Comrades, you know Anansi, he did not die of it. He said: "I shall kill all the animals (here) to the last one." He went to sharpen a trident. He said: "It is here that I must bury the trident, since it is here that I fell back down. I am going to show the animals here, I am going to show them." He buried it up to the iron. He carried a load of fish, said to his wife Wénon: "I am going to kill all the animals to the last one." She said: "How are you going to do it?" He explained to her.

Some time afterward the agouti arrived. He said to him: "Brother agouti, aren't you hungry?" The agouti said: "Brother, I am hungry; I am looking for the sauce (1). He said

#539 The agouti slipped his paw into the hole; kyin kyin! It stayed prisoner. He said: "Brother Anansi, my paw is caught." -- Say: "What is holding me there?" He said: "What is holding me there?" -- "It is I the Thrower." The agouti said: "Brother Anansi, what must I say?" -- Say: "Throw me to see." He said: "Throw me to see." Comrades, he threw him into the air, he passed over the top of the trees, he fell down on the trident. Anansi took his club, pa! He ran up, he knocked him down, gbo! He killed him. He put him aside. He picked up all the fish the agouti had caught. He took the agouti himself, cut out his liver. He took it to the agouti's wife; he told her: "The agouti and I killed a tapir out there, he stayed to smoke it. He sent half of the liver for you to cook." She cooked the liver and boiled rice. They ate; they ate to the last spoonful, to the last piece of liver. He said: "All livers are good but the agouti's liver is the best." (Then she understood.) She took a pestle to hit him but he got away.

Thus he killed in succession all the animals of the region. There remained the deer. The deer is some clever. He had observed Anansi and seen what he had done. Anansi came to him and said to him: "Brother deer, aren't you hungry?" He answered: "I am very hungry." Anansi said: "I know a pond where there are many fish." They went there. They fished until Anansi said: "Feel in the hole at the base of this stump, there are some acoupas and plant-runners /coulants/." The deer felt and said: "I don't feel the hole"; he knew /271/ very well where it was. Anansi said: "You have big eyes, how is it that you do not see the hole?" He took his paw in his hand to plunge it into the hole; the deer's paw is thin. He pulled it back. It was Anansi's hand which remained prisoner.

#539 Anansi said: "Brother deer, go over there; you will find a trident I use for hunting; pull it out of the ground." The deer came back saying: "It is done." He showed him another trident which he himself had brought and hidden. Then Anansi said (to the genie): "Throw me to see." He threw him to the summit of the trees. He fell back on the trident. The deer knocked him down with a club, cut out his liver, and took it to Wénon. He said to Wénon: "Anansi and I killed a tapir. He stayed to smoke it. He sent the liver for you to cook." She prepared the liver and boiled rice. They ate to the last mouthful. Then the deer said: "All livers are good but Anansi's liver is the best." Wénon grabbed a pestle to strike him, but he was already far away.

3) Anansi and the Magic Frying-Pan

(One day) Anansi went exploring in the bush, comrades. He went into the bush one day, until... he was hungry. And now he saw a frying-pan hooked in the air. He went near; he said: "Frying-pan, why art thou beautiful thus?" It said: "I am beautiful, but I am not beautiful for nothing." He said: "Let me see." It began to fry all sorts of things, fritters, meat. He said: "Put that down on the ground in front of me." It put them before him. Then Anansi ate, he ate until... his belly was full. He said: "Frying-pan, I beg of thee, stop." It stopped, gban! He said: "What kina dost thou have, in truth(1)?" It said: "It is the lemon, lemon juice, and the power."

He said: "That's good; please agree to come into my ɔbia house, so that I may frustrate my wife Wénon and my children. They tire me." It said: "Very well, I shall go with you." He walked, he put it on his head. His belly was full, comrades, his intestines were full. He walked until he arrived at the outskirts of the village. He shouted: "All the people of the village, shut yourselves up, I am carrying my ɔbia to my ɔbia house." They said: "What art thou saying?" He repeated: "I am carrying my ɔbia pot to my ɔbia house." Gban! Gban! The people slammed the doors of their houses, gban!

Anansi walked to his ɔbia house, opened the door, he hung up the frying-pan in a corner.

That day he did not eat in Wénon's house. Wénon cooked spinach for him. He said: "My belly is full." He waited until midnight, then he went out. He said to the frying-pan: "Frying-pan, why are you beautiful thus?" It said: "I am beautiful, but I am not beautiful for nothing." He said: "Show me so that I may see."

It began to fry for him as much food as he could eat. /272/

/272/ One of his children named Akpwatitikwati said (to his brother) Asingébélé: "We are cleverer than Anansi. I am going to keep an eye on my father until I surprise him." Then he began to watch him and surprised him. He saw and cried: "So that's how he did it."

Anansi said he was going hunting; then he went away to hunt. (Immediately) the children came; they said: "Frying-pan... " ... (same formulas).

#539 It began to fry for them. It fried until... they went to get their other brothers and their mother Wénon. They arrived, carrying calabashes and all sorts of receptacles; comrades, they put in them meat, fritters, all kinds of food. They loaded themselves up with all these things to the very limit.

They said: "Stop." It stopped, gban! Comrades, they climbed up to the attic (1); they lifted up the bunches of rice, they slipped all that underneath, zou! They hid these things so that Anansi might not see them, until they were finished. There! They went, took some lemon, took a brush. They cried: "We are going to teach Anansi a lesson today, we are tired of hearing him say that he does not want to eat spinach, we are going to make him see!" And so they did. They poured the lemon juice, tollo! They rubbed the (frying-pan) with rice straw (2). It is done! They hung it up again.

2. It is necessary to understand that it was through malevolence and not inadvertence that Anansi's wife and children destroyed the power of the frying-pan.

They went away until dinner time. Anansi came. Wénon had cooked spinach with rice: "Brother Anansi, since thou art already here, come, take something to eat; we have not found much that was good." He said: "Sister, I am still not eating. My belly is not open. While I was walking in the

He said: "What has happened to my frying-pan, that it doesn't work any more? I know, it is Akpwatitikwati who has spoiled it. I am going to teach him a lesson, wait!" He went away; he said: "That one is spoiled; I am going to go and get another."

He came home. He made no remarks at all; he remained silent. He took the spinach which he had refused; with the spinach he ate rice.

The next day he went into the bush, voloou! exploring, comrades; Anansi walked in the bush, looked... until he saw three whips hung up. He said: "Whips, why are you so handsome?" They said: "Ho! We are handsome, but we are not handsome for nothing."

Comrades, they whipped him in the bush, viop, viop! they whipped Anansi. He shouted: "You are right, you are right. I am the one who came to bother you, you are right! Can you come with me?" The whips stopped striking. He said: "Please, I ask you, I have bad children in my village; I beg of you, come into my ɔbia house." They said: "Out of sheer caprice, we shall go." He took them. He arrived at the edge of the village; he shouted: "I am carrying my ɔbia pot home! my ɔbia pot /273/ again! Comrades, again gban! gban! (His sons) said: "Well, well, our father is bringing the same thing again. We shall make him see!" Anansi opened the door of the ɔbia house gently, put down the whips carefully. He slept until the next day. He said: "I am going hunting." But he stayed at the edge of the forest; he kept an eye on the approaches to the ɔbia house. When he had seen Anansi leave, Akpwatitikwati said: "I am going to get my brothers and my they entered the ɔbia house. Again: "Whips, why are you so handsome?"

Viop! viop! Anansi ran, he shut the door; he said: "Let me see, whips, strike so that I may see!" viop! viop!

(cruel laughs from the audience)

Then Anansi opened the door and they fled.

The end.

4) Anansi and the Bat

Anansi was looking for someone to go with him to a festival which was taking place in a neighboring village... because the more who come, the more they give you to eat. He asked the bat, who said to him: "I haven't been to a festival for a long time. I'll go on the day you wish." The day they had set arrived. They started out; they walked until they had arrived near the village. Anansi said: "Comrade bat, see this lebi weko (2). If I begin to shout: "My belly,

The bat said: "I am going to step aside for a moment." It stepped aside, then ran noiselessly to the tree, cut a piece of bark, put it in its bag, and came back.

They arrived at the village. The people had set the table; a big table! As they were getting ready to eat, Anansi moaned: "My belly, my belly. Please, that bark I spoke to thee about, go and get me some (3)."

3. This complicated ruse is to get his comrade away in order to eat its portion. This is the central theme of a whole cycle of tales of the Refugee Blacks.

The bat pulled it out of its bag: "Here it is." Anansi said to himself: "There are some people who must not be involved in one's affairs." They ate until they had finished; they danced until dawn. As they were taking their leave, the people made them a gift of a bag /274/ of groundnuts, comrades, a big bag; it was not a one-quintal bag, but a two-quintal bag.

Anansi said to the bat: "Thou art not able to carry this bag. I am the elder, it is up to me to carry it." He lifted it; he wavered (under the weight) but stuck to it just the same. They walked. Anansi was going first, the bat behind. The bat flew, pou, pou, pou! dropped on the road and changed itself into a golden fork. Anansi arrived. He said: "Here is a golden fork, I am going to take it." He stretched out his hand as if to take it. He said to himself: "Hou? I must not take it, it is the bat." He cut a stick and struck it, gbo! He walked, walked. The bat flew ahead, pou, pou, pou! It dropped on the #539 ground and changed itself into a golden chain. Anansi arrived. He said to himself: "The people who left ahead dropped a golden chain. I have already left a golden fork, this golden chain I am not going to leave." He opened the bag of groundnuts, he threw the chain inside. Comrades, the bat ate the groundnuts. It would eat, it would void. Anansi was almost arriving in his village. The bat took the last nut, ate it, and voided. Anansi walked to the village without bothering any more with the bat. He said: "Sister Wénon, I have been lucky. I and the bat were out there, how it walked I have no idea. I found a bag of groundnuts for me and thee. Children, come into the house." They went in, locked the door carefully. He untied the bag. The bat escaped, pou, pou, pou! He said: "Wife, I am dead." He opened the bag: nothing but droppings. The bat was flying, pou, pou, pou! It alighted on the head of Saniasamooyu (1).

1. Anansi's daughter.

Anansi said: "Thou hast ruined me thus. I shall fix thee." He took a stick, he brandished it as hard as he could; he threw it, gbo! to knock down the bat. The bat flew away, pou, pou, pou! The stick struck the child who fell. The bat lighted on Bigimofu's head. Anansi said: "Mother, I am dead; Bat, I am going to kill thee." He threw the stick at it, pou, pou, pou! The bat flew away, the child fell. The bat lighted on Wénon's head. Anansi said: "Mother, I am dead, it is thy fault that I have killed my children, and now thou lightest on my wife's head!" Gbob! Pou, pou, pou! Wénon fell dead. The bat lighted on Anansi's head. Anansi said: "I am going to fix thee." He went under the baliki (2) (and hit his head). Gbo! balau!

5) Anansi, the King and the Rabbit(3).

3. The rabbit, who plays the part of the sly character in the folklore of the West Indies, does not exist in Guiana. This tale is probably the transposition of a West Indian theme.

There was a king; he reigned over a country. All the people of the king's village had the habit of going to wash in a certain pond. One day, the king went to this pond to bathe. Comrade, he saw a cack in the water! "Who relieved himself there?" "I don't know." /275/ The king called the people together. This one said: "It isn't I." That one: "It isn't I." Nobody had made that cack, but there it was.

Anansi said to the king: "Grand-man, I shall discover the guilty one." The king said: "Very well; do what thou canst do."

Anansi went away. He went and cut a tree; he made a beautiful big statue, he made it eyes, a nose, a mouth, breasts. He smeared it with birdlime, then put it in the middle of the path which went to the pond. The moon had not risen.

Comrades, the rabbit relieved himself in the pond, then he came back to the bank, for it was he who had made that cack in the water. He took to the road, a pail of water on his head. He saw a woman standing in the middle of the path. He shouted: "Ho! woman! get off the path, I don't want thee (here)." She remained immobile. He said: "Woman! I am

#539 going to hit thee." She stayed immobile without answering. He puts the pail down on the ground, he hits her gbo! Kyin kyin! (1), his hand stays stuck fast. He says: "Art thou going to let me go, I don't want thee (here)." He struck her with the other hand, gbo! Kyin kyin! The other hand stayed stuck. He said: "I am going to give thee a poke with my knee!" He gave her a poke with his knee, kyin kyin! The knee stayed stuck fast. He hit her with the other knee, it stayed stuck too. Thus the rabbit remained immobilized, feet in the air, until the next morning. Anansi came, he said: "Rabbit, we meet again! Ever since somebody made cack in the pond, it was thou. We meet again!"

Anansi went to the king; he said: "Grand man, I have found the one who was dirtying the water, it is the rabbit! It is he who was making cack in the water. What shall I do with him? The king said: "Anansi, do as thou wish, for that water, all the people of this country use it."

Anansi said: "Very well." He lighted a fire, he made the pitch melt which was holding the rabbit, he put the rabbit in a bag, zou! He tied the bag, kwa! Next he went and got a long iron rod; he said to the rabbit: "Dost thou see this rod? Well, I am going to heat it red hot and plunge it into thine anus up to the very end. Thou wilt not dirty the king's water any more."

the rabbit at the edge of the water). The way was long from the wharf to his house. Comrades, he made a big fire, heated the rod red hot.

The rabbit, alone, spoke aloud, saying: "What misfortune! Here I am in a pretty mess! I haven't any luck!" The jaguar came by; he said: "Old man rabbit, what's the matter with you?" -- "It is the king who has had me taken for he wants to force me to marry his daughter; he had me arrested and tied in a bag so that I could not run away."

The jaguar said: I am going to free thee and get into the bag in thy place, for that is just what I am looking for, in order to find a good set-up."

The rabbit said: "Come and set me free." He let him go, got into the bag. The rabbit shut up the bag again and ran away. /2/

/276/Anansi came, he said no more but groped for the rabbit's abdomen. He plunged the iron rod into his anus to the very end. Then the tiger howled: "Hi, hi!" Then Anansi said: "Brother tiger, I have nothing against thee; it is the rabbit!"

The tiger said: "Anansi, I have nothing against thee, but I and the rabbit are enemies to the death today." Anansi freed the jaguar, who ran after the rabbit. He saw the rabbit; he said: "Rabbit, thou hast burned my intestine, thou hast deceived me, now we meet!" They ran, they ran until... the rabbit escaped.

*539 No way to catch the rabbit again! The rabbit saw an agouti which had been dead for a whole week, all swollen up and stinking. He slipped into his belly. He began to groan. The jaguar came; he stopped and said: "Brother agouti, good day!" He replied: "How are you?" -- "Only fair." (1) The jaguar said: "Noble brother, what happened to you?" He said: "The rabbit and I fought, he gave me one single blow, and here I am stretched out dead; that is what he did to me."

The jaguar went on his way. He saw the rabbit in front of him, he said: "Today we meet." They ran until... the rabbit escaped. He saw the cadaver of a deer, dead for a week, swollen and stinking. He slipped inside. The jaguar ran until he arrived there. He said: "Brother deer, what happened to you?" He answered: "The rabbit and I quarreled, we fought, then he gave me one single blow and here I am stretched out dead."

The jaguar said: "(I give up.) I and the rabbit, this is the end until the end of the world."

6) Anansi and Death

(One day) Anansi went hunting. He walked until he came out into a large glade. He went ahead until he met a man. He greeted him and said: "Good day, brother!" No answer! -- "Good day, brother!" Nothing; no answer! He said to him: "Hem! Brother! That's meat you have there?" No answer! He said to him: "Since you don't answer me, (it is as though) you were saying to help myself." Comrades, Anansi went up to the cooking-pot and he ate, ate until his belly was full.

*539 He said: "Although you don't answer me, we are father- and son-in-law. Tomorrow I shall bring one of my daughters to you." No answer. "Since he says nothing, it means that he agrees." He went, went until he arrived home. He had made a catouri (2) and taken as much meat as he had been able to ca carry off. The next day he said to his wife Wénon: "I found a place, a good place for hunting. I found a husband for our daughter; he is the one who gave me all that." Wénon said: "That's good."

The following day before dawn, he went to his daughter, said to her: "Take thy work-basket." She got her things ready; they walked, they walked until they /277/ got there. He said: "Son-in-law, good day!" Nothing. He said (to his daughter): "Thou seest how he doesn't answer, he is like that; here is thy husband."

He went to the pot. He ate until his belly was full. He cut palm leaves, wove a catouri, loaded as much meat as he could hold in it. He said: "Son-in-law, I am going away, dwell here with your wife." He loaded up the catouri and went away. The girl saw a very neat trail going to a creek. She took the dirty dish from which her father had eaten, she started on the path. Kwakpwala! The trap was sprung; it was there that Death (for the unknown man was Death) had set his trap.

Death arose, rushed armed with his club, hit her, gbo! It dragged her body to the house, carved it up, put it into the pot, and cooked it. The girl had two rings on her finger as you see I have myself (the narrator shows his hand).

*539 The next day before dawn, Anansi came back: "Son-in-law, good day!" No answer! -- "How is your wife?" No answer. -- "I know, she went to the creek to wash dirty dishes; that's good." He put the pot on the ground and began to eat. He ate until his belly was full. He was turning the pot, looking for the best pieces, when suddenly, fang! he saw the rings. He said: "Mother! I am dead; my daughter has been killed." He seized a strong club which was there, then he hit Death on the tibia, bom! Death rushed up; he fled; they ran until they arrived near the village. Then he shouted: "Climb up into the air (to the top of a tree)! Wénon, Asingébélé, Akpwatitikwati, Bigimofu, climb up into the air." -- "What art thou saying, should we bring thee the big pot?" (1) -- "Imbecile! All those meats we ate, it was not I who killed them; he who killed them is running after me." They climbed (to the top of a tree). Anansi jumped, climbed to the top of the tree. Death arrived there; it sat down at the bottom of the tree. They stayed there some time. Asingébélé said: "Father, my arm can't hold any longer." Anansi said to him: "Look at the brother-in-law below, go on down!" (2) He dropped down.

1. Play on words. Wenon understands paatu, pot, instead of a tapu, in the air.

2. Anansi does not try to save his life by sacrificing his children, he only tells them to be resigned to the inevitable.

Death stunned him gbo! and threw him aside. They remained a certain length of time longer, then Akpwatitikwati said: "Father, I am exhausted." Anansi said to him: "All those meats

*539 we ate, it was he who killed them; look at the brother-in-law below; go on down!" He dropped down. Death stunned him, then threw him aside.

(Same scene; Anansi's last child, then his wife Wenon, drop down in turn. Anansi remains alone at the top of the tree.)

...Anansi stayed. He resisted, resisted until... he said: "Son-in-law, you know what you must do. I have eaten much of your meat, I am fat. Go and get banana leaves and many ashes, so that when I fall, my body may not burst and my fat be lost. If I fall on the bare ground, my body /278/ will burst." Death stood up, vou! cut banana leaves, picked up as many ashes as it could.

"Look well at the spot where I am going to fall, I am coming." Death looked at the pile of ashes! plaou! Anansi fell right in the middle (the ashes spurted out in every direction). In the time that Death took to wipe its eyes, Anansi had fled.

Thus it is that Anansi came to carry Death among us. Before, Death used to stay in the bush; it killed animals but not men. It is because of Anansi that it came to separate and kill men.

7) Anansi, Buchi Mama, and Wata Mama (1)

1. Maleficent divinities of the bush and the water, which are not worshiped.

Anansi, one day, went into the bush. He went to see the Bush-Mama. He said to her: "Bush-Mama, will you have a tug-of-war with me?" /Fr. expression corde raide usually means "tightrope," but gist of story indicates transl. given. -- Tr./ The Bush-Mama said to him: "What? Have you looked at me? Strong as I am, you aspire to a tug-of-war against me?" He said: "Bush-Mama, you lie, you are not capable of vanquishing me. I am sure to pull you as far as the village, step by step, #539 so that the people will see you." She answered: "It is I who will drag you as far as the bush." They discussed it to the insult stage, and wagered. They agreed to set Sunday as the test time; she should pull the end of a rope going out from the village. She said: "Very well." -- "I am proud of my ancestors, Bush-Mama. You will not drag me into the bush, I am the one who will drag you inside the village."

Then he came back to the village and went to the river. He rushed into the water, dyou! he went up to the Water-Mama. He said to her: "Will you have a tug-of-war against me? The Water-Mama answered: "It is I who will drag you into the river." Anansi said: "I am sure to drag you up on land so that the people will see how you look." Again they wagered and set Sunday as the test day. He said: "Very well, on the day set I shall come into the water to hold out the end of a rope to you." The Water-Mama said: "Very well. I shall stay there to take the end of the rope." We shall see who is a man and who is not."

He went back to his village. Saturday afternoon he set up a tyifunga (2) enclosure around the village, as far as the river and as far as the bush behind the village. He cleaned the village completely. He cut a long and strong rope, he went to slip one end of it into the river, he went to put the other in the bush.

[151] [324] [419] [783]

2. Magic enclosure made of pinot palm leaves strung on a cord, to which is attributed the power to stop bad influences. After putting up the enclosure they purify the village by cleaning it completely.

On Sunday the Bush-Mama and the Water-Mama came and each pulled on an end of the rope. Anansi himself was not

*539 pulling, but each one thought: "It is Anansi." Anansi's gita came into his head, he began to sing and dance.

/279/ The two divinities struggled at the rope. The Water-Mama was dragged to the middle of the village, step by step, pata, pata, pata! Anansi jumped into the air, did all sorts of freakish things. Then the Bush-Mama was dragged to the middle of the village, with rocks on her body. Thus all men could see their faces.

Then the Bush-Mama backed out toward the forest, the Water-Mama rushed into the water, d,ou! That is what Anansi did. Since, these divinities have never allowed their faces to be seen by men any more. The Bush-Mama stayed in the bush, the Water-Mama stayed in the water; they hurt men. I have finished, gbolon!

8) Anansi and the Steamboat

There was a king; he had a daughter. He raised her until she became a big girl. Comrades, she was pretty. Men to the last one wanted her for a wife. But to all her suitors she used to say: "I shall belong to the one who will bring a steamboat to my father." In those times men did not know about steamboats; there were none in the country of the Whites, since the country of the Whites did not exist. How to know about the steamboat? All the people of that country, all the animals asked it. To all she would answer: "Since I said that a steamboat was necessary, if you are not capable of finding it, leave me alone!" Anansi said: I shall have that woman, I, Anansi." He went to her, he said: "Sister, thank you very much, come!" The girl ran to the door. He courted her assiduously. She said to him: "Anansi, you, too, know what I have demanded: a steamboat for my father. Bring it and I shall be your wife."

*539 He said: "What? You are at a loss for a little thing like a steamboat? That's a small matter for me. I shall find you that very quickly. Tomorrow, ask your father to give me a kernel of corn." The next day, Anansi arrived and said: "Then give me (the kernel of corn)." She took a whole ear of corn; he said: "I don't want the whole ear, but one single kernel; with that kernel I shall buy the steamboat." He jumped into his boat, he said: "I am going away." He paddled, going down the river, until he arrived at a village. The people shouted to him from the bank: "Uncle Anansi, come to land!" He said: "I can't come, I am carrying a letter from the king." That time Anansi was successful. The people said to him: "Come on, we shall put it in a safe place." He said: "Here I am already, why did you call me?" The people said: "Come with us, brother, we are hungry for you." He said (to the women): "Very well, sisters." They prepared the food. The people said: "Where is the king's letter?" He said: "It is that kernel of corn." They took it and put it in a safe place. He stayed awake until they were asleep, he opened softly, he went to take the kernel of corn. He went to the chicken coop, he threw it to the poultry who picked it up; corn and poultry do not go together.

He slept until morning. He said: "Bachia (1), please give me the letter." The bachia went to get the kernel of corn. Nothing! He said: "Ho, ho, Anansi, we have lost it; we shall give you another." He said: "It is not another that I want, /280/ for I was passing on my way on the river, it was you who called me without any reason; give me a rooster. If you do not give me any rooster, we shall fight to the death in this village." They took a rooster and gave it to him.

1. Assistant head of the village.

#539 He embarked in his boat. He paddled until evening, until he passed in front of a village. The people shouted to him from the bank: "Uncle Anansi, come to land, come to land." He said: "I can't come, I am carrying a letter from the king." They said: "Come on, we shall put it in a safe place." He came alongside, he said: "Why did you call me?" The people said: "Because we haven't seen you for a long time." He said: "Very well." -- "Where is the letter?" -- "It is this rooster."

They took the rooster, they shut it up in a basket. They set the table and served him a good meal. He ate until it was gone. He unpacked his things; he slept until midnight. He opened, he went to the rooster, took it and threw it into a pig-pen, vo! The pigs ate it, gwili-gwolo! He slept until the next day. He said: "Bachia, please give me my letter." The bachia went to get the rooster. Nothing! He did not see it. He said: "We shall give you another." Anansi answered: "That won't do, for I was passing by on the river, it was you who called me and enticed me to land without any reason; give me a pig. If you do not give me a pig today, I shall kill you in this village." They took a pig and put it in his boat.

He paddled, paddled until...he arrived at a village.

(By the same process, Anansi exchanges his pig for an ox.)

....It was about ten o'clock in the evening. He passed before a village where a child had died; a mother's little one was dead, the people were making the coffin. The comrade passed by. The people shouted: "Uncle Anansi, come to land, come to land. Someone has died here; come help us." He said: "I can't, I am carrying a letter from the king." They said: "We shall put it in a safe place." He arrived. They took the ox, they tied it to a branch. They set the table for him. Death was in this village; they put the body into the coffin. They danced until....night.

*539 During the night he got up and went and untied the ox which escaped into the bush.

The next day he said to the bachia: "Bachia, please go and get my ox." The bachia looked for it in vain. He said: "Anansi, the ox has escaped into the bush." We shall give you another." -- "That won't do," said Anansi; "I was passing by on the river and you called me without any reason. Give me the dead child."

They said: "Uncle Anansi, we cannot give him to you, he is already in the coffin." "Let's make an end of it," said Anansi, "you are provoking me." The bachia went to tell the mother (of the dead child) that a misfortune had arrived(1).

1. It is to be noted that it is not from the lineage head that one asks for authorization to dispose of the body, but from the mother alone.

She agreed to it. They broke the coffin and gave the body to Anansi. He put it in the bow of the boat and paddled until he came to a big bend in the river. Once out of sight of the village people, he /281/ made a little paddle. He went to the bow seat of the boat, he fastened the dead child to it with glue. He put the body in a sitting position, as if it were alive, he fastened the paddle in its hand.

He paddled until he heard something like the noise of a boat. He said to himself: "Listen, stand up, perhaps a boat is coming." He placed the boat in the strongest part of the current, he paddled hard, standing in the stern. He heard better, he said: "It is a ship." He shouted: "Ah, ah! Today I meet thee, thou whom I sought for so long." He saw clearly that it was a ship. Comrades, he paddled in the current; the

*539 big boat avoided him. Anansi paddled toward it, paddled until... gbo! (collision) the small boat sank. Anansi in the water shouted: "You have drowned the king's child, give back to me, give back the king's child to me quickly, if not, Whites, who are in that ship, you and I are going to die!(1)"

1. Obvious contradiction with the beginning of the tale where it is said that in those times the country of the Whites did not exist. But none of the listeners appears to worry about it.

They stopped the big boat. They hoisted Anansi on board. They fished out the small boat, but did not find the dead child.

The Whites told him: "We do not find the king's child. What must be done to finish up this business?" He said: "Give me the big boat." They acquiesced.

He went back up the river with the big boat. He arrived at the pier of the king's village. Anansi shot off the cannon. On land, they fired the cannon too. Anansi was received triumphally, the king's daughter put a ring on his finger, and they were married. Thus it was that the king had a steamboat.

9) Pikinbaya (2)

2. This tale is a theme of the Creole Blacks of Paramaribo.

There was a woman; she had a child whom she named Pikinbaya (3). One day she gave him food to take to the market

3. The name means "little comrade."

to sell, bananas and yams. He sold it all and got two sous; he took the two sous and bought a little snake(4). He came back home, they asked him: "Where is the money?" He said: "That is what I bought, a little snake."

[825]

4. Mboma (couleuvre of the Creoles) is the large anaconda water snake.

They whipped him until he was nearly dead. He went into the bush until he found a place; he dug a fine round hole. He filled it with water and put the snake in it. He gave it small fish.

The next day he took food again. He walked, walked until he came to the market. Comrades, again he sold all the food. He saw a woman at the entrance to the market with parrots. He said to her: "Woman, how much is a parrot?" She said: "I sell one for one sou." He said: "Give me this one." He took the parrot. He saw another woman who had rats. He said: "Woman, how much is a rat?" She said: "I sell one for one sou." He bought the rat.

He went back home.

They asked him: "Where is the money?" He said: "That is what I bought, a parrot /282/ and a rat." Comrades! They took the boy, they hit him until he was nearly dead.

His mother said to his father: "All that happens there is thy fault. He must not be given food to sell any more."

The next day, they did not give him any. Pikinbaya kept quiet and busied himself with his snake until the snake told him: "I am hot, I want to go into a brook." He lifted it, put it on his neck. He carried it to the brook and put it in. Then he came back to the village.

He hunted (to feed the snake), caught small fish for it. One day the snake (which had grown) said to him: "Pikinbaya, I don't want to stay any longer in this brook. Take me to a big river." The snake went down the brook, Pikinbaya walking along the bank. They went down until... they came to a big creek. The snake stayed there. The boy went away but came back (regularly) to see the snake. He used to hunt for it and bring it meat. The snake grew bigger! It became adult. One day when he had come to see it, it told him: "Pikinbaya! I want to go to the river, I want to feed on fish like other snakes." It went downstream, Pikinbaya walked along the bank until... they had arrived at the river. The snake said: "Well, Pikinbaya, I am going away."

(A confused and boring passage follows. It takes Pikinbaya along to the village of the snakes and gives him a talisman enclosed in a pot, which will guarantee him luck and prosperity.)

....Pikinbaya stayed there until... he understood that it would come back no more. He set out on the path, walked, walked until he came to his village. His family was poverty-stricken. They did not even have any more salt to eat. The boy arrived. He hung the pot on a cashew apple tree /pommier cajou/.

(Immediately Pikinbaya's village became prosperous.)

Comrades! Even Paris was not so rich as it. Big ships came alongside Pikinbaya's village.

Now this country was governed by a king who was very rich; he said to himself: "That astounds me, Pikinbaya is richer than I. All my workmen leave me to go to him. He pays up to ten florins a day(1). I am going to send my eldest daughter to

1. The Refugee Blacks cannot imagine a king otherwise than as a boss paying his workmen.

1. It is hardly necessary to dwell on the image which the Refugee Blacks conceive of woman, as reflected by this tale. That the king's daughter agrees to give herself immediately to a man she has never seen poses no problem whatever. The narrator, so wordy elsewhere, does not grant a sentence for the description of the woman and her love affair with Pikinbaya.

away." He said: "Good, that's all right!" She said: "Pikinbaya, what makes you so rich?" He said: ""You want to know? It is a pot I have at the head of my bed." She took the pot, enclosed it in an iron case, loaded it into the car, and the boat left the wharf.

Comrades, Pikinbaya's village became dirtier than Boniville (laughs from the audience, for Boniville is a badly

*539 kept village), more overrun by the bush than Puu Mofu (2).

[361]

2. Village abandoned and overrun by the bush south of Boniville.

Pikinbaya no longer had anything to wear but an old rice sack, for it was that pot which used to make the village rich.

The parrot said: "I would gladly go to look for the pot, but I have no teeth." The rat said: "If I had had wings, I would have gone to look for the pot." The parrot said to him: "Come on my back." He jumped on the parrot's back. He flew, flew... until...he alighted on the big mast of the boat, kpwala! The rat reached the iron case. He gnawed it, kwokwo! burst it, took the pot, pa! At the moment when people were beginning to notice the parrot's presence, he flew away, flew, as far as... Pikinbaya's village.

There is Pikinbaya, rich again.

The king's eldest daughter arrived at her father's village. The king came with his automobile to get his daughter and the trunk. They arrived at the palace, he opened the trunk: nothing! He said: "That astounds me. But I must find that pot which makes Pikinbaya rich, I must know where it is." The king had three daughters. He said: "I am going to send the second to him; she will succeed in finding that object."

(The same scene is repeated. The daughter succeeds in seizing the pot which she puts into an iron casket, enclosed in an iron case. The parrot and the rat go and win it back, but the rat breaks one of his incisors.)

*539 Upon arrival the parrot said: "Pikinbaya, if thou allowest another woman to take this pot away from thee, I shall not go any more to find it. My eyes are irritated by the sea wind." The rat said: "Look at my incisors, I used to have four of them, one is broken, three remain. If thou allowest another woman to take this pot, thou wilt remain in poverty until the end of thy days, I shall not go any more."

The king's second daughter arrived in her father's village. The king said: "That astounds me. I am going to send him my last daughter, it is absolutely necessary for me to find this object."

A week later he put his youngest daughter on board a boat provided with three iron trunks fitted one inside the other.

/284/ Pikinbaya came with his automobile to receive her at the wharf and drove her to his house. They stayed there a week. She said: "Now I am going to leave." Pikinbaya said to her: "You wish to leave?" She said: "What makes you so rich?" He replied: "You want to know what makes me rich?" He took a pistol and killed her point-blank. (Laughs from the audience.) He embalmed the body with camphor. He took it, put it in the first trunk, the first into the second. He fastened a paper on the trunk, saying "What the girl had come to get, she found."

The following week the boat came back to the king's village. The king opened the first trunk, kpwa! The second trunk, kpwa! He opened the last trunk and saw his daughter's corpse with the abdomen open.

Then the king said: "I am dead." He took a pistol and killed himself.

10) Anansi and the Pretty Woman (summarized)

There was a very pretty and very much desired woman. She used to say to all her suitors: "I shall be yours if you pledge your word, when I am dead, to be buried alive with me under my coffin." Nobody wanted to take that pledge. Anansi, who desired this woman, came to her and said: "I take this pledge, but I too lay down one condition: Whenever I have left a village, I can no longer return there." The woman agreed to this and they lived together.

One day the woman died. They reminded Anansi of the pledge he had taken. There they are on the way to the cemetery, the coffin ahead, Anansi behind, then the village people. Anansi lay down at the bottom of the grave and the coffin was lowered.

Anansi shouted: "You are crushing me, you hurt me, take away that coffin." Surprised, the people lifted the coffin. Then Anansi reminded them of the condition he had laid down: "Whenever I have left a village, I can no longer come back to it." (It must be understood that he had just left the village of the dead.)

He jumped on the edge of the grave and ran away.

11) Anansi and the Unknown Man (summarized)

One day, Anansi was working cutting his clearing. He heard a voice in a neighboring clearing, which shouted: "Who is there?" He said: "It is I, Anansi." The voice continued: "Dost thou want me to help thee?" He said: "Yes!" He saw a man come whom he did not know. The man began to cut the clearing with him.

They worked thus for some time. Then the man said: "It is time to stop to eat." -- "What shall we eat?" said Anansi. The man replied: "I know only one food: battle. I am going to wrestle with thee."

(It must be understood that this was a bad genie which had taken on the appearance of a man.) /285/

/285/ The man wrestled with Anansi, and as he was much stronger, he threw him to the ground and subdued him. Then, making an iron rod, which was there, red in the fire, he poked it into his anus. Then he went away.

Anansi howled with pain and wept a long time. Then he got up painfully and dragged himself home.

He said to his wife Wénon: "I am tired from cutting the clearing all day long. Tomorrow, it is thou who wilt go to continue the work."

The next day, Wénon was cutting the clearing when she heard a voice which was saying: "Who is there?" She said: "It is I, Wénon." The voice continued: "Dost thou want me to go help thee?" She said: "Yes." She saw a man come whom she did not know. The man began to cut the clearing with her. They worked thus for some time. Then the man said: "It is time to stop to eat." -- "What shall we eat?" said Wénon. The man replied: "I know only one food, battle, I am going to wrestle with thee."

Wénon shouted: "But I am a woman, I cannot wrestle."

The man answered: "Woman or man, it's all the same to me; I want battle." He knocked her down and subdued her. Then, heating the iron rod in the fire, he poked it into her anus.

Wénon howled with pain and wept a long time. Then she got up painfully and dragged herself home.

12) The Brother, the Sister, and the King (summarized)

There was a brother and sister. They were in the greatest poverty. They went through the country looking for work, until they arrived at the king's home. The king told them: "You are looking for something to live on; I wish to see a little elephant, I have never yet been able to see one. Find one and bring it to me, I shall reward you."

Then the brother said to the sister: "I am going to cover thee with cloth, hide thy head, fasten a rope around thy waist."

This he did, and they went on the road to the king's house.

She turned her back to the king and while her brother held her at the end of a rope, danced, as I shall show you.

[522] (The narrator executes a burlesque dance, bent over double, his back turned toward the spectators who shake with laughter.)

Then the king said: "I don't need to see the front of the elephant, he is too ugly." /: /

/286/ 13) Anansi and the Toclo Partridge

The toclo partridge had made a large clearing. Since she used to go to it by flying, she had made no path for going there. One day Anansi passed by, he saw this clearing in the middle of the uninhabited forest, without any road leading to it. He said; "It is God who has made this clearing for me," and he marked out a wide path from the clearing to his house. The partridge arrived unexpectedly and said to him: "It was I who made this clearing." Anansi said to her: "I do not believe you; if it had been you who made the clearing, there would be a road."

*539 They went to plead the case before the grand man. Anansi won.

The partridge decided to take revenge. Some time later, she announced that her mother had died, and invited the inhabitants of the forest to dance for the mourning. They came in crowds.

The partridge had had her mother go up into a tree. She pretended to invoke her spirit, saying: "Mother who art in God's country, do something for me, for I am poverty-stricken. Procure for me tafia and provisions for the guests."

She held out her hand and her mother put in it a bottle of tafia which she showed to those present. Then provisions, and everything needed to treat the dancers.

Anansi saw that, and when he went home he said to his mother Bobilanga: "The partridge's mother, who is in heaven, procures for her all that she needs, and thou who art here, thou art of no use to me, thou dost only eat my food." He took a stick and hit his mother, who fell dead.

He assembled the people of the neighborhood to dance the broko dɛ. He invoked the spirit of his mother as he had seen the partridge do. Nothing! He saw nothing come. The people thought he was making fun of them. They threw themselves upon him and struck him. Thus Anansi killed his mother for nothing.

14) Anansi and the Tortoise (summarized)

One day Anansi invited the animals of the forest to a feast. He had put the dishes on a high table. Only the tortoise could not get up to it. Anansi left her on the ground; she departed, furious.

Some time later, the tortoise announced that she was inviting the animals of the forest to a feast. They came in crowds.

*539 She had placed the table at the bottom of the water. Only Anansi was not able to have access to it, for spiders float on the water (1).

1. This is the only allusion made in this whole series of tales to Anansi as a spider.

Anansi placed in his loincloth a big stone to make himself heavy, and he arrived at the table. The tortoise, who had seen his stratagem, said to the assembled animals: "Before eating, let's undo our belts to be more comfortable."

Anansi, forgetting the stone, undid his belt. The stone fell, and he found himself again floating on the surface of the water. /2 /

Proverbs

You have a sum of money which you like. You take it to buy an object which you will like less.

[454] (Picturesque justification of hoarding which is one of the principle passions of the Refugee Blacks.)

Thou thoughtst thus, but it is not thus that thou camest.

(Thou didst not act according to thy thought.)

I cut a clearing, I take a handful of groundnuts, it fills a chest and a barrel.

(Idea of fertility.)

Pushed and pulled, in what position do you hold yourself erect?

(One must know how to make a definite decision.)

CHAPTER IX

SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE ECONOMY OF THE REFUGEE BLACKS. RELATIONS WITH OTHER POPULATIONS

Influence of the Social Institutions and Psychological Tendencies of the Refugee Blacks on Their Material Life and Their Economy

157 182 Certain psychological tendencies of the Refugee Blacks, in part bound up with their moral and religious conceptions and with the historical conditions under which these societies were formed, directly influence their material life in its various aspects: implantation on the ground, agriculture, paid work, trade.

The principal one of these tendencies is individualism, concern for complete material independence.

157 24 31 Influence on agriculture. We have seen that the clearings of the various households issuing from the same kin group were very rarely grouped together. On the contrary, the Refugee Blacks like to disperse their cultivated lands; even in the recently occupied zones where land is not lacking, it happens that one finds isolated clearings in the middle of primary forest more than a kilometer from the riverbank, at the mercy of predatory animals. Ecological conditions, in particular the concern with protection against the manioc-ant, do not explain this dispersion. The Boni recognize that it would be preferable, for fighting the manioc-ant, to group each year all the plantations of one lineage

157 241 311 in a sector recognized to be undamaged. But objections immediately come to their minds: one would not feel at home, people would be jealous of one another; above all, the children would go pilfering fruit and vegetables in the clearings of other families. The Refugee Blacks are unanimous in thinking that the children of one village put together in a single place would constitute a scourge much worse than the manioc-ant, and that dispersion is the wisest solution for maintaining the peace of families.

562 241 One observes likewise that the total freedom of woman, and the custom which leaves to her /290/ the free disposal of the products of the clearing, contribute toward preventing the development of agriculture with an eye to selling. In order [592] to undertake large clearings farmed jointly by one household, it would be necessary to have very unified and stable households, which is rare.

157 476 Difficulty of grouping for common advantage. The Refugee Blacks are incapable of forming groups voluntarily to undertake the execution of a job with an eye to common advantage. The small groups which get together for fishing, working gold, etc. are formed of intimate friends or near relatives and are hardly larger than four or five persons.

157 454 The Refugee Blacks are still less capable of grouping themselves into societies looking toward future benefits. Putting a part of their resources into a common pot with that of another seems to them not only illusory but immoral. Because of this fact there exists among them no way to group financial assets, sometimes good-sized.

426 Lending without interest is practiced rather commonly, having to do with small sums between near relatives or intimate friends. If a man feels capable of earning his living by buying a motor, he will succeed rather easily in finding the necessary money by borrowing from his brothers or friends, 10,000 francs

426 here, 5,000 there. But these loans are never large and do not constitute an effective process for grouping financial assets.

157 525 The so-called subscription societies so common in Black Africa are totally contrary to the thinking of the Refugee Blacks, in the same way as games of chance. In 1958 the Maripasoula post, on the occasion of a festival, had organized a tombola. When the principle of it was explained to the Boni, they were unanimous in thinking that the Europeans had odd amusements. Few of them agreed to buy tickets, and the ones who had not won anything left embittered, with the feeling of having been involved in an immoral operation.

157 571 High esteem attached to contracts. This inaptitude for forming groups and combining assets contributes very much toward crystallizing the society of the Refugee Blacks in its present form by opposing all large-scale initiative. On the other hand, 157 577 it develops the sense of personal responsibility. The Refugee Blacks are especially strict with respect to money (1). 426

1. This with regard to their mutual relations; as for debts to Europeans, they are not prompt in paying them back; but marked deception, borrowing done for the purpose of swindling, are very rare with the Refugee Blacks.

[829] Custom lays down as a strict principle that everything must be paid for. No one may live at the expense of someone [613] else, no one may borrow without paying back. If a man died before repaying a debt, the members of his lineage would club together to pay it off.

695 The Refugee Blacks have a sense of contract to a high 461 degree, and they bring /291/ to the execution of work to which 157 they have committed themselves qualities of seriousness, initiative, and a sense of duty not found to the same degree in Black Africa.

157 Refusal of any lasting commitment. If the Refugee Blacks honor 671 their contracts, they do not like to commit themselves for a 571 long period.

This attitude results from their desire for independence, but also from the moral and religious law which governs their society.

This law forbids infringing on the liberty of persons, humiliating anyone, and doing anything which might be able to plunge him into anger or affliction. Its effect is to prevent any exploitation of the weak, any creation of a servant or proletarian caste. It even leads to the absence of any permanent subordination of one man to another.

[466] The desire for independence of the Refugee Blacks makes them unwilling to bind themselves definitively to a job, however profitable. When a man judges that he has put aside sufficient savings, he leaves the job which furnished him with these resources.

[464] This tendency makes the search for paid work much more difficult and hazardous; it happens that a man may stay for years without finding gainful work, living in straitened circumstances. But that is the price of independence, and it is accepted without hesitation.

159 Wishing to take advantage of all the possibilities which 464 turn up, the Refugee Blacks are led to learn simultaneously the 463 traditional techniques of their group, boating, boat-building, felling of trees, squaring of wood, and /building/ framework. In these techniques they may be considered specialized workers.

Proud of their strength and knowledge, sure of themselves,
159 the Refugee Blacks are never worried about the future and con-
812 sider life as an exciting adventure, ceaselessly bringing new things. If the past year has been bad, the new year will be better, with God's help. Nobody doubts that he will find gainful work again.

152 Influence of jealousy: absence of specialized professions and 182 trade. Another strong psychological tendency having a direct influence on the economy is jealousy.

152 The effect of jealousy, and the fear of jealousy, is to 828 limit enrichment and to maintain a de facto equality: it often 556 happens that talented people forego undertaking profitable work
953 in order not to give occasion for the jealousy which would render 999 their position in the village difficult and might draw misfortunes upon them; for people have the idea that jealousy draws down illnesses and calamities upon him who is the object of it and on his near relatives, by the action of a natural force, even without sorcery being formulated.

954 Fear of sorcery interferes in the same way; one who be-556 comes unusually rich is almost inevitably accused of being a 441 sorcerer and may be obliged to leave the country. Particularly 829 vulnerable are those, very rare, who engage in trade. People do not suspect of sorcery a man who is seen to become rich by /292/ working ceaselessly. But the trader whose wealth increases without his furnishing obvious work, is quickly regarded as a "committed one," accused of having his good luck as a result of a pact with the devil.

754 In that can doubtless be seen the most likely explanation
522 of the absence, in the tribes of Refugee Blacks, of any internal 441 trade. There are not even markets in the villages. In practice
438 only Creole and Asian traders are patronized.
366

463 The repugnance which the Refugee Blacks have for trad-829 ing with one another contributes toward preventing the develop-[438] ment of specialized professions among them. Specialization does actually exist: one man is particularly good at building boats, another is a competent carpenter, still another devotes himself mainly to fishing; but the Refugee Blacks exercise these specialties with respect to other peoples and not with respect to one another. Nobody fails to build his own boat, his house, to cut his clearings himself. If it were otherwise, classes and castes would rapidly be created, and that is precisely what the 463 moral law of the Refugee Blacks condemns. A special effect
829 of this conception is to preserve family custom from deteriorating, 593 by preventing the rich from becoming great polygamists main-
182 taining idle mistresses. We have never heard it said that a 461 richer man paid someone to perform for him the customary work he owes to his wives, clearings, house, boat. Whatever his wealth may be, he continues to do these jobs by the sweat of his brow, and that contributes toward maintaining in its meaning and value the tacit contract concluded between husband and wife.

182 Thus the geographic conditions, associated with in-157 fluences of a social and psychological order, impose on the 433 Refugee Blacks a unique economy, based on a symbiosis with 648 the coast populations in the form of piece-work or temporary wage-earning.

Relations with the Other Populations

648

The tribes of Refugee Blacks do not constitute a closed world. They have lived since their formation in close symbiosis with the neighboring populations: autochthonous Indians, Europeans, and Creoles. Their traditions and their conception of life have been strongly influenced by these, not because they have lost anything of their interior unity, but because they have accepted, at least collectively, the idea that they have bonds and duties toward other men.

Just as their economy on the material plane is based on exchange, so they consider the symbiosis of their group with the neighboring groups as the normal order of the universe. The misfortunes undergone by their ancestors have given them an extreme horror of violence; they consider peace a precious blessing common to all nations, and their moral principles which forbid harming anyone extend to all men. It is clear that these notions are less clearly understood on the individual level and that there are, as elsewhere, some thefts and abuses of trust. But, on /293/ the collective level, the relations between the Refugee Blacks and their neighbors are established on a base of trust, loyalty, and honesty not found to the same degree in Africa.

152 829 577

Relations with the other tribes. The Boni do not have any well-defined political ties with the other tribes of Refugee Blacks, but the grand men have semiofficial relations through the medium of messengers, and consult one another rather frequently.

[578]

The Boni have harbored a tenacious resentment against the Djuka for having in former times allied themselves with the Dutch against them, but this resentment, chiefly collective in nature, has died down with time; it does not prevent individual relations from being cordial.

619 829 The Saramaka are very highly esteemed everywhere, for it is unanimously assumed that their magic is stronger, their techniques more perfected, than those of the other tribes.

175 648 Relations with the Indians. The relations between the Boni and the Oayana Indians are extremely curious and interesting. They were probably established from the end of the 18th century on. Several writers have stated that Boni and Indians fought each other for a long time; the examination we made of authentic archive documents, unfortunately few in number, capable of throwing light on the history of the Maroni, does not confirm this hypothesis (1). One can think on the contrary that symbiotic 175 726 1. The only combats pointed out took place about 1840 between the Boni and the Wayakulé "Oyaricoulets" Indians, a very primitive tribe who lived on the Oulémari and was itself at war with the Oayana.

175 648 727 The Boni were certainly already allied with the Oayana at the time of the battles on the Maroni in 1793, since after their defeat the survivors, grouped around Agosu son of Boni, took refuge on the Maruini River which they went up as far as the region of its sources, where nobody could catch up with them. Now it was precisely there that the Oayana Indians were living at the end of the 18th century. They would not have tried this maneuver if they had not had the certainty of finding refuge

175 648 727 with their allies. The sites of their villages, marked on Condreau's map (1888) are in immediate proximity to those of former Oayana villages.

175 648 [643] relations must have been created rapidly and in a very natural fashion. The grand man of the Boni is in a way the suzerain of the Indian chiefs; this situation was not imposed by force; it results from the privileged situation of the Boni on the river, which until recent times obliged the Indians to deal through them in order to trade with the outside world.

Although the Boni took advantage of this situation in days gone by to impose arbitrary rates of exchange upon the Indians, this relation must not be imagined as the exploitation of conquered by conqueror. It is based on the absolute respect of each 648 829 group for the beliefs and social structure of the other, and an activity for each befitting its inclination. The proverb says: [439] "To the Boni the river, to the Indians the forest." Thus it is that the Boni traditionally buy arrows from the Indians, while the latter buy paddles from them; the meaning of this symobl is perfectly understood by both.

648 582 Marriages between the two groups, without being forbidden, are regarded as contrary to custom (2).

159 156 643 648 582 2. The marriage of Grand Man Awensay to an Indian woman about 1915 was inspired by complex motives. Toward the end of his life, Awensay could no longer stand the Boni, his imperious personality putting up badly with their individualism and their taste for discussion. He had established the Indian country a farming habitation in which he lived nearly all

643
648
582

year; by taking an Indian woman as his wife he apparently sought to humiliate his subjects.

Awensay's children and grandchildren were all dead in 1957 except for two women, both sterile. There has been no other case of marriage between Boni and Indians.

582

439 /294/ In practice, the basis for commercial exchanges is the following: the Indians furnish hammocks, and above all dogs trained for hunting, to which great value is attached. The Boni furnish boats. In days gone by they also brought imported objects, machetes, axes, and beads, but this form of trade has disappeared since the Indians have had the possibility of getting supplies from the Europeans.

114

Several observers, coming after Coudreau (1890) and Grébert (1937) in particular, have expressed the opinion that these relations were founded on fear and that the Boni, utilizing mysterious means of pressure, used to oppress the Indians.

After seven missions spent in contact with both, we affirm that these assertions are without foundation. On the contrary, one can only admire the way in which these primitive groups have been able to create loyal and trusting relations with one another. The Indians and Boni who have worked with us have always shown themselves happy to be together. To realize this, it was sufficient to hear the animated conversations they used to have in the evening around the campfires about their respective families, the events which took place in their villages, fishing, or hunting.

618 It seems that in these relations, both bring more patience and tolerance to bear than toward the people of their own group. It is excessively rare to see disputes arise between Indians and Boni, when there sometimes are some within each group.

186 The feelings which the Boni have toward the Indians are complex: they feel superior in physical strength, effectiveness, and organization; they make fun of the Indians' puerile eagerness for beads and jewelry, of the begging attitude of certain ones among them. But they admire them for their cleverness, their intimate knowledge of the forest, and fear them for the supernatural powers they attribute to them. Sure of themselves, fearing nothing from the bush, never getting lost, unrivalled hunters and fishermen, the Indians appear to them to be endowed with unique faculties which other men do not possess. We have happened to hear in camp reflections such as this: "It is going to rain, the Indians are making thacks."

829 The Boni feel an intense fear of Indian magic. Not one 152 of them would dare to seriously displease an Indian, and even if he feels he has been wronged, in most cases he will not dare complain (1).

829

1. In the search for the magic causes of death, it happens that divination may incriminate the action of an Indian medicine man. In such a case the legal action of the Boni is extinguished, for the principle is that the Indian medicine man does not hurt anyone without a reason. It is considered that the deceased must have gravely injured him and that he deserved his fate.

/294 cont. /

648 A picturesque incident once more showed us this attitude in the course /295/ of a circuit on the Litani in 1962. When [262] we passed through AloTké village, our four Boni boatmen, who had killed some coumarou, had prepared a very appetizing dish for themselves; they had scarcely begun to eat when several Indians arrived unexpectedly who joined in the conversation, sat down beside them, then began to dip their spoons into the pot. Other Indians came and, continuing to talk things over deliberately and without hurrying, came and took their share of the feast. The Boni were progressively pushed back to the [152] second row and finally gave up. Three of them laughed about [127] this incident which was familiar to them; the fourth was furious but he did not dare say anything, for, said he to us, if he struck the Indians as he wanted to, he risked being bewitched.

648 In truth, what is the nature of the authority that the grand 643 man of the Boni is supposed to exercise over the Indians? Does it involve precise obligations, a tribute, vexatious measures? Not in the least: it is reduced nowadays to two things:

--The principle of the obedience of the Indian village heads to the person of the grand man;

--The interdiction of transport by boat in the Boni fashion.

One can only approve of this interdiction which protects the Indians more than it harms them. As for the personal influence of Grand Man Difu, it is extremely favorable; he has a profound knowledge of the language and customs of the Indians, toward whom he has always exhibited an interest and sympathy which are certainly sincere. When, during the ceremonies at the fraga tiki, he appeals to the ancestors to ask them to watch over the Boni, he does not fail to add: gaã yɔɔka, de mu luku de lligi: Ancestors, watch over the Indians.

648 It is also said of the Boni that they are interested in the Indians only in order to traffic with them. Even if that were true -- we have shown how inexact this assertion was -- we should hold all the same that it is much less dangerous for the 648 Indians to trade with them than with the Europeans and Creoles; the Boni are a graded society in which things tend to take place according to well-defined norms. It suffices to compare the Oayana Indians, who have kept the essentials of their civilization, with the Indians of the Oyapok to be convinced that the Boni have protected the former much more than they have oppressed them.

[164] Relations with the Creoles. The Boni are in constant contact with Creole gold miners and traders, for the benefit of whom they carry out many kinds of work (boating, tree-felling, con-[191] [829] struction). Most of them speak the Creole dialect very well and are well informed on the Creole type of life.

On the whole, relations between the two groups are good.
[829] On the Upper Maroni, it is mainly a matter of Creoles of African blood, who have come from the British West Indies, whom the Boni do not consider to be extremely different from themselves. Many have been settled there for a very long time, and individual friendships have become established; yet the two groups have not the least tendency to merge. /295 4

/296/ The Creoles have only scorn for the civilization of the Refugee Blacks, which reminds them of a detested African past. They have a feeling of superiority and do not cease exhorting the Boni to adopt their clothing and way of life.

829 The feelings that the Boni have toward the Creoles are complex; they clearly perceive that the activity of the gold miners is artificial and that isolated people are incapable of living by their own efforts in the midst of this pitiless forest. When they have become old and sick, the gold miners experience the worst distress and literally die of hunger until they are 888 evacuated to the hospice of Saint Laurent. Among the Refugee Blacks, old men are assured of a decent life in the midst of the members of their lineage, who surround them with affectionate respect.

888 This is a point of view which has great importance in the 829 eyes of the Boni, for whom finishing one's days at the hospice or being reduced to asking for the help of outsiders constitutes the worst downfall.

829 They fear, moreover, as we have shown, Creole magic which they liken to a form of wisi.

On the other hand, they are impressed by the attainments of the Creoles, the real spirit of initiative and the strong personality of some of them; moreover, the Boni who have been to Cayenne have noticed the solicitude of the administration 829 with respect to the population of the communes. For all these 177 reasons there exists among the Boni a certain body of opinion
178 in favor of creolization. But the very unique type of life of the [114] Boni and their desire to keep their special customs attach them to their ancestral form of life; about 1890 the explorer Coudreau, observing the same facts, was predicting imminent creolization of the Boni. In fact, this did not happen, and it is unlikely to.

648 Traditional relations with Europeans. The Refugee Blacks con-
464 stitute an important element in the economic life of the Guianas; on behalf of the administration and European enterprises they perform many jobs (boating, wood-floating, tree-felling).
648 They are not well adapted to other kinds of work, but in these 461 activities which fit with their traditional mode of life they are [465] equal if not superior to any labor. Very highly paid, they work with speed, effectiveness, and intelligence, exhibiting an initiative and sense of duty not commonly found in Africans(1).

[177]

1. It is to be noted that if they stop leading their traditional kind of life, for example if they settle permanently near European establishments, they rapidly lose these qualities.

648 So relations between the Europeans and Refugee Blacks have nothing in common with what one observes in Africa: one notes their faults without indulgence, but one admires them for their strong personality, their art, and their techniques, and one bears an esteem for them which is not feigned.

829 The Refugee Blacks feel neither hate nor jealousy toward Europeans. This /297/ may surprise one at first, for they have had to put up with cruel wars fought against them, which have left a precise memory with them; but the explanation is simple: the Boni have no hate because their life is happy, and they have no jealousy because they do not try to imitate the Europeans and are satisfied with their own civilization.

193 186 On this subject it will be noted that the Refugee Blacks recall the time of slavery without shame and without any inferiority complex; this is simply because they do not have the feeling of being the descendants of slaves; they feel themselves to be the descendants of warriors who imposed their independence by force of arms; the Djuka, exaggerating to themselves the scope of the successes won by their ancestors, even have a certain superiority complex. Proud of their ancestors, the Refugee Blacks do not feel in any way inferior to the white man and behave toward him as equal to equal.

648 084 The Boni, like the Djuka and the Saramaka in Surinam, live under a de facto regime which is equivalent to internal autonomy. This regime was instituted for the Boni from their first contact with the French administration in 1861; it has always been associated with perfect loyalty.

The French administration, which until recent times did not have any permanent establishments in the interior of the country, has never tried to interfere with the interior functioning of the tribes which went on and still goes on according to their own law. The Refugee Blacks have thus been spared that hybrid jurisdiction, applying a customary law altered by European ideas, 648 which in Black Africa has so powerfully contributed toward the destruction of traditional structures.

[829] Truth to tell, the problem was simpler, for the conceptions of the Refugee Blacks, involving no form of oppression of individuals and assuming the right of the woman to self-determination, reduce to the vanishing point the sources of disputes between individuals and groups.

[162] In 1946 the administrative post of Maripasoula was created, near the confluence of the Lawa and the Inini. Since that time, the gendarmerie has administered to the satisfaction of all and without any incident a heterogeneous population of 2,000 persons, gold miners, Refugee Blacks, and Indians, scattered over [743] a vast territory. The medical post created at Maripasoula in 1949 is very much frequented by the Boni and performs an extremely useful function on the psychological as well as on the social level.

The relations of the various groups give rise to very small frictions, one with another, but the Refugee Blacks never give occasion for intervention in the internal affairs of their groups. [505] Respectful of the administration, they carry out punctually their commitments to their employers, insuring all the transport on the river according to a modus vivendi established for a long time (1).

On this subject it is to be noted that disagreeable incidents occur each time the Boni deal with inexperienced travelers who do not know the customs of the river or do not wish to apply them. In a general way the Refugee Blacks, of their own accord respectful of anyone who comes to do a useful job, loathe tourists; they cannot stand being photographed or observed like queer animals.

648 Never do they appeal to the courts to settle their differences, still less their family quarrels; never do they beg for help.

829 The Europeans' material superiority does not impress them: the whites are more able in mechanics, but they are more able in magic, that is all. The efficacy of European medicine does [758] not shake their convictions: if someone has reasons to believe himself victim of the anger of a gadu, he begins by making the sacrifices intended to appease it, then asks it for authorization to have himself cared for by the whites. Personally we have [123] never done anything to disabuse the Boni of this idea which [753] satisfies at the same time the requirements of medicine and those of social discipline, for it must not be forgotten that for them 177 sickness is punishment for an offense. Thus one sees that unless it is deliberately brought to bear against tradition and against the leaders, the influence of Europeans is without appreciable effect on the civilization of the Refugee Blacks. It is no longer the same when contacts become too frequent, tend to alter drastically the way of life, and especially when these influences become openly "civilizing."

178 The Future of the Refugee Blacks

Obliged to solve all the problems of life by their own means, the Refugee Blacks have been able to adapt with intelligence to the evolution of the modern world, and their custom has kept all its vigor and effectiveness. Their future would not 648 seem to be threatened if a wave of opinion had not come to the surface these past years, in French Guiana as well as in Surinam, to destroy their civilization, deemed primitive and barbarous, and to fuse them into the population of the coast. This result would be obtained in particular by schooling and evangelization.

114 Here desirous of remaining on the plane of strict scientific objectivity, we shall avoid entering the discussion of the benefit springing from this action, which, moreover, would necessitate a long development. We shall limit ourselves to showing that it appears to us to be doomed to failure.

871 --The experiment of schooling has been made for more 177 than 30 years among the Boni in the village of Kotika. Half a dozen children, doing well in their studies, left for Surinam and broke with their native group. In the others, the teaching received left only faint traces. As a matter of fact, there is no room in a normal intelligence to receive at the same time the mass of technical knowledge necessary for holding one's own in the society of the Refugee Blacks and ordinary school in-[829] struction. One necessarily drives out the other; now the Boni are extremely fond of their free life on the great river, which assures them very satisfactory material conditions of living.

797 --Evangelization has been carried on with perseverance
177 for more than 200 years with the Refugee Blacks of Surinam. It has not given appreciable results. It has been the same in 184 French Guiana with the action carried on with the Saramaka working /299/ near the communes of the coast (1), and more

[648] 1. The Saramaka not only have no tendency to be converted, but they exert a significant influence on the population of the communes. On recently with the Boni of the Upper Maroni.
[756] the Oyapok the Saramaka healer
[787] has numerous clients, and in spite of the clergy's interdiction, many women go to the possession dances of the Papa gudu serpent gods.

791 The Boni, as we have shown, do not feel that they are pagans. They think they worship the same god as the Christians, in a different way but just as valid; they feel that their moral principles are not inferior to those of the Christians, that they are expressed in practice by the same prescriptions and are in fact better obeyed(2).

2. We report here faithfully the point of view of those concerned without making any judgment of its worth; let us recall that their principles of living do not assume any moral conscience in the individual and rest entirely upon the fear of material punishments in the present life. But even this base gives them great practical effectiveness.

829 Only in their conception of their kinship and the family, in the absence of family life based on the indissolubly united couple, do they recognize that they live under another law. But they do not fail to notice that the populations of the Guianas who profess Christianity hardly put it into practice in their family life: the stability of marriages is appreciably greater among the Refugee Blacks.

787 776 828 As for the cults of possession, the Boni feel that they worship de facto entities whose existence appears as tangible to them as light or weight to us. These ideas are bound up with a characteristic way of perceiving, touching deep zones of the mind which reasoning does not reach (3).

3. Actually, it is observed in Black Africa that where cults of possession exist, the populations are particularly impermeable to Christian influence. Apparently destroyed, these cults soon reappear in another form, sometimes in Christian guise (possession by the saints).

562

Let us add that one of the great strengths of the custom of the Refugee Blacks is the privileged position it gives to the woman. Women, shielded from the direct influence of Europeans and Creoles, and besides practically inaccessible to all reasoning, are hostile to changes which would infringe on their privileges. Now it is they, in fact, who have the education of the children in their hands.

114

Thus it does not appear possible to "assimilate" these populations by destroying their original culture. The attempts inspired by fanaticism for civilizing will have as their only result its impoverishment, pushing the Refugee Blacks to dissimulate their beliefs, to abandon their art, costume, songs, and dances, all that makes up their joy in living. But the social structure based on the fear of ancestors and gods could be destroyed only by violence. We may hope that nobody thinks of coming to that.

114

As for us who have lived a long time in the midst of the Refugee Blacks, we feel a deep esteem for them. By their historic past, the originality of the customs they have developed, the good relations they have been able to create with the other populations, they have proved their creative abilities; they deserve to be allowed to evolve in their own way. /blank page/

128

TABLE OF THE POPULATION OF THE BONI VILLAGES

as of January 1, 1958, arranged in alphabetical order

Classification. The classification of the population has been made by village of residence.

For each woman, we have indicated her successive unions and the children issuing from them. The sign † means deceased, the sign ⊥, divorce. The sign ⊥ † means that the husband is dead, but after the break-up of the union.

The women's listings preceded by an asterisk * indicate that the listing may be regarded as complete from the demographic point of view (children living and deceased).

A double asterisk  indicates that the listing can in addition be regarded as complete from the point of view of successive marriages and divorces.

The name of each individual is printed in boldface once only, where he may be considered as residing habitually. The total of the names in boldface gives immediately the population figure for the village.

Children under 15 years are considered to be living with the persons responsible for their education. If details about this could not be obtained, they are considered to be living with their mothers.

Each listing bears a number, for example Dju D7, permitting one to find the place of the individual in the genealogical table. In the example indicated, reference must be made to the table of the Dju lo, line D, no. 7.

Let us recall that part of the names have been replaced, by request of those concerned, by fictitious names.

BIBLIOGRAPHIE 363

[P. xiV is blank]

INTRODUCTION

Au cours de trois missions de l'Institut Géographique National, en 1948, 1949 et 1952, nous avons vécu en étroite rapports avec la tribu des Boni, qui nous fournissait les porteurs et les équipages de canot indispensables au parcours du pays. Dès les premiers contacts, nous avons éprouvé un profond intérêt pour ce vaillant peuple, constitué au XVIIIe siècle par des esclaves rebelles évadés des plantations de Surinam.

Nous nous sommes efforcés d'étudier, en profitant des rares instants de répit que nous laissaient nos travaux, les divers aspects de leur vie matérielle, sociale et religieuse. Les hommes qui nous accompagnaient étaient pour la plupart des jeunes, qui n'avaient de la tradition de leur groupe qu'une compréhension limitée : d'autre part, les travaux géographiques imposant de constants déplacements en forêt inhabitée, enquêteur et informateurs étaient le plus souvent en proie au souci et à la fatigue.

A l'issue de la mission de délimitation de la frontière Guyane Française-Brésil, en janvier 1957, nous avons pu entreprendre une enquête systématique fondée sur un inventaire détaillé de la population des villages.

Une cinquième mission, faite sous l'égide de l'Institut Français d'Amérique Tropicale (IFAT) d'octobre 1957 à février 1958, nous a permis de combler une partie des lacunes de notre travail. Quelques données complémentaires ont été recueillies en octobre-novembre 1958, à l'occasion d'une autre mission principalement consacrée à l'étude des Indiens du Haut-Maroni.

Le présent travail est exclusivement consacré à la vie sociale des Boni. Les éléments que nous avons rassemblés sur leur vie matérielle et leur art, ainsi que sur leur situation démographique, feront l'objet de publications distinctes.

NOTATIONS PHONÉTIQUES ET TRANSCRIPTION EN FRANCAIS DES NOMS DE LIEUX ET DE PERSONNES

La langue Boni, construite à partir de mots anglais déformés, présente peu de difficultés phonétiques.

Notations. Nous avons fait usage de l'alphabet international simplifié de l'Institut Africain International de Londres (Westerman et Ward).

Voyelles :

- a a antérieur (a français de « natte »).
- a: a long, prononcé très en arrière, analogue à celui de l'anglais « half ».
- ã a nasalisé, an français de « banc ».
- e é français de « périr ».
- ɛ è français de « grève ».
- ẽ e nasalisé (Il ne paraît pas y avoir dans la langue Boni de voyelle centrale orale).
- ɛ̃ è nasalisé, in français de « pince ».
- i i long, comme dans « île ».
- ɔ o ouvert, comme celui de « port ».
- o o fermé, comme dans « obus ».
- ɔ̃ o nasalisé, on du français « bon ».
- u ou français de « poule ».
- ũ ou nasalisé.

Consonnes :

b, d, f, g, k, l, m, n, p, t, z, sont utilisées avec leur valeur ordinaire en français.
h, w, avec leur valeur ordinaire en anglais.
ŋ nasale vélaire (finale de « dancing »).

ng nasale palatale ; gn français de montagnard.

r liquide entendue par les européens tantôt r, tantôt l ; elle paraît empruntée aux langues amérindiennes de Guyane.

s consonne placée entre s et ch français. On entend s à l'initiale devant a et o, ch dans les autres cas, mais il s'agit d'un phonème unique.

Transcription. Les noms de lieux et de personnes ont été transcrits selon les règles indiquées par M. Houis, chef de la section de linguistique de l'IFAN. On a gardé dans les noms de lieux et de personnes u avec la valeur ou français, en raison de la fréquente gémination de cette voyelle[1].

Pour la consonne s définie ci-dessus, on a transcrit s ou ch, selon sa position dans le mot.

(1) Exception faite pour les toponymes notoires (noms des principaux cours d'eau et postes administratifs) pour lesquels nous avons conservé les graphies françaises usuelles.

CHAPITRE PREMIER

L'HOMME ET LE MILIEU NATUREL

Le pays

Les Boni habitent le cours moyen du Lawa, principal formateur du Maroni, au dessus des Sauts Abounasounga. Cette région présente les mêmes caractères que le reste de la Guyane : c'est une pénéplaine très usée qui, vue d'avion, donne l'impression d'un immense plateau d'où émergent de loin en loin des massifs montagneux isolés. Quand on parcourt cette pénéplaine, on s'aperçoit que dans ses formes de détail elle est partout très accidentée ; le terrain se présente comme un moutonnement infini de petites collines aussi anonymes que les vagues de la mer, dont les pentes toujours raides aboutissent à des marécages ou pinotières, drainés par un écheveau infiniment complexe de « criques »[1]; les formes et les dimensions de ces mouvements de terrain dépendent de la nature du sous-sol et leur apparence sur les photographies aériennes permet à elle seule de dresser une carte géologique sommaire. Les zones de « roches vertes » sont marquées par des mouvements de terrain beaucoup plus importants, atteignant 800 mètres d'altitude, aux formes massives et aux pentes très raides.

Les autres types de terrain conduisent le plus souvent à un relief très morcelé, les dimensions des mouvements de terrain ne dépassant guère 300 mètres, avec des dénivelées locales de 50 à 100 mètres.

Cette extrême fragmentation du relief doit être retenue comme un des facteurs écologiques influant le plus directement sur le peuplement humain ; elle rend le transport de lourdes charges impraticable, l'établissement de routes pratiquement impossible. Les hommes sont amenés à s'établir le long des rivières, qui constituent les seules voies de pénétration vers l'intérieur du pays.

Toutes les rivières importantes coulent dans une vallée alluviale, dont la largeur varie de quelques dizaines de mètres à un kilomètre, sèche pendant la plus grande partie de l'année, mais inondée sous plusieurs mètres d'eau pendant les grandes pluies de mai-juin. Cette inondation annuelle rend les terres alluviales impropres à l'agriculture ; les habitants de la Guyane ne cultivent que sur des terrains en pente, et même volontiers sur des pentes très fortes, car un bon drainage du sol est indispensable à la culture du manioc dont les tubercules, qui restent plus d'un an en terre, sont menacés de pourrir.

La zone cultivable est en fait, étroitement limitée autour de chaque village. Pratiquement, elle se limite à une bande de 1.500 à 2.000 mètres le long des rives de chaque cours d'eau accessible aux pirogues. Le transport des tubercules de manioc, que les femmes effectuent plusieurs fois par mois, devient impraticable si la distance à parcourir avec des charges dépasse deux kilomètres au maximum[1].

L'inondation est très variable selon la configuration des rivières et la nature du terrain.

Au village créole de Grigel, situé au fond d'une boucle en doigt de gant de la rivière Waki, l'inondation de juin atteint un niveau de 8 mètres au-dessus du niveau moyen de la saison sèche ; les villages créoles et indiens de la Waki sont installés sur des collines. Au contraire, le long du Lawa, dont le cours est rectiligne, la variation du niveau ne dépasse guère 1 mètres. Le niveau maximum de l'eau dépasse de 50 centimètres à 1 mètre le sol de la terrasse alluviale. Plusieurs des villages créoles et Boni du Lawa sont installés au bord même de la grande rivière ; les maisons sont établies sur pilotis et leurs occupants rentrent en canot chez eux pendant plusieurs semaines par an. La plupart des villages et des habitations de culture sont cependant installés hors de portée de l'inondation, sur des replats situés à environ 5 mètres au-dessus du niveau maximum des eaux, qu'on trouve de place en place au bord du fleuve et qui marquent peut-être des vestiges d'une ancienne terrasse. C'est le cas notamment des villages Boniville et Loka.

L'ensemble du territoire est entièrement recouvert par la forêt équatoriale : forêt continue et dense qui s'étend sur des centaines de kilomètres sans un village, sans une clairière, sans une piste.

La forêt guyanaise est moins élevée qu'on ne le croit d'ordinaire. C'est une succession infinie d'arbres de toutes dimensions et d'espèces très variées, parmi lesquels les véritables géants sont rares ; la hauteur moyenne du couvert est d'environ 30 mètres et les gros troncs sont rares.

La variété des espèces est très grande, et les espèces utiles, peu nombreuses et dispersées, sont difficilement exploitables. Les Noirs Réfugiés, qui ont une connaissance approfondie de la forêt et de ses ressources, n'utilisent guère qu'une dizaine d'espèces sur les quelque deux cents qu'ils différencient, jugeant les autres inutilisables soit parce que leur bois est trop dur pour être travaillé avec les instruments ordinaires, soit au contraire parce qu'il est trop tendre, trop facilement attaqué par les insectes ou a tendance à pourrir. La zone exploitable par les procédés indigènes se limite (car les zones inondables ne comportent pas de beaux bois) à la pente des collines bordant la vallée des cours d'eau accessibles aux pirogues ; au-delà, le charroi des troncs abattus devient impraticable.

1. Les Djuka, très nombreux sur le Tapanahoni, cultivent jusqu'à 3 ou 4 kilomètres du fleuve ; mais d'une façon générale les Noirs Réfugiés préfèrent établir des habitations de culture à plusieurs jours de canot de leur village quand elles leur donnent la possibilité de cultiver à proximité des rives.

Une végétation épiphyte très dense relie les arbres à leur partie supérieure ; c'est là que s'épanouit la vie : fleurs, oiseaux, insectes et singes.

La progression en forêt est très pénible. Le sous-bois, arbustes, broussailles, reliés par des lianes fines et élastiques, offre un obstacle constant, il faut manier le sabre à chaque pas. La nature du terrain, succession de fondrières et de collines aux pentes raides et glissantes, rend exténuante la marche d'hommes lourdement chargés. Sur piste, on parvient difficilement à faire plus de 15 à 20 kilomètres par jour ; en forêt inhabitée on ne peut guère progresser que de 5 à 6 kilomètres par jour, à condition de couper le strict minimum comme on fait à la chasse. L'ouverture d'un tracé permettant le passage d'hommes lourdement chargés ne peut progresser de plus de 3 kilomètres par jour en moyenne.

La grande forêt offre peu de dangers réels, mais c'est un milieu profondément hostile à l'homme, qui n'offre spontanément aucune ressource alimentaire et ne permet qu'au prix de grands efforts l'installation de villages et de cultures.

On rencontre peu d'animaux dans l'intérieur de la forêt, et les ressources à attendre de la chasse sont très limitées ; en revanche il y a peu d'animaux nuisibles ; les fauves sont peu nombreux et ne se manifestent pratiquement pas ; les serpents sont beaucoup plus rares que sur la côte et ne représentent qu'un faible danger. Les dangers les plus réels de la forêt proviennent de la chute des branches et des épiphytes, principalement quand on défriche la forêt en vue des cultures ; il y a chaque année des accidents de ce genre en pays Boni. En outre les travaux en forêt sont l'occasion de multiples plaies qui ont tendance à s'ulcérer.

Le climat est relativement tempéré et bien supporté par l'européen. En forêt le thermomètre ne monte pas à plus de 28° aux heures chaudes, pour redescendre à 20° à la fin de la nuit ; tout le monde dort avec une couverture, les Noirs Réfugiés et les créoles comme les européens. L'humidité est très grande pendant presque toute l'année ; les précipitations atteignent en moyenne 3 mètres par an, soit environ 50 centimètres de moins qu'à Cayenne. L'année est divisée en deux saisons : l'« été » de juillet à décembre, et la saison des pluies le reste de l'année, avec un maximum de précipitations en mai et juin. Le niveau de l'eau varie au cours de l'année dans des proportions considérables (plusieurs mètres). Les populations de l'intérieur, échelonnées le long des rivières, rythment leur vie d'après la hauteur de l'eau ; l'eau commande les transports, la pêche et les cultures ; d'autre part un certain nombre de maladies sont en rapport étroit avec les pluies, en particulier celles qui ont un insecte pour vecteur.

Le sol est presque partout très pauvre en matières organiques et en bases, très délavé, obligeant à pratiquer une agriculture itinérante sur brûlis ; la durée des jachères varie de 2 à 10 ans, l'optimum semblant se situer autour de 6 ans. Les habitants de la Guyane ne peuvent pratiquer de jachères régulières du fait des ravages de la fourmi-manioc, dont l'activité s'exerce surtout sur les zones habituellement cultivées. Des tentatives vaines et coûteuses effectuées par des européens, notamment à Saint-Jean du Maroni vers 1950, ont montré que la fertilité des terrains non brûlés est pratiquement nulle. Les Indiens et les Noirs Réfugiés considèrent que la fertilité du sol dépend exclusivement du poids des cendres déposées au cours du brûlage.

En cultivant sur brûlis, on n'obtient qu'une récolte, mais cette récolte est abondante, et le sol ainsi utilisé peut être regardé comme relativement fertile. L'abattage et le brûlage ne demandant pas un travail considérable, on peut estimer que les méthodes primitives d'agriculture ont un bon rendement. En fait, les diverses populations de la Guyane, créoles et Noirs Réfugiés, ont adopté entièrement les méthodes de travail résultant de l'expérience millénaire des Indiens d'Amérique, et qui semblent les seules utilisables dans l'intérieur du pays.

Ainsi ces populations si diverses ont dans une large mesure la même agriculture et la même alimentation.

Les cultures de base sont le manioc, consommé sous forme de couac (farine grillée et granulée) qui est la base de l'alimentation, l'igname indien, et des tubercules analogues au taro (dachine, « chou caraïbe »). Les Noirs Réfugiés plantent en outre du riz de montagne. Les créoles ne plantent pas de riz, mais ont en revanche une variété plus grande de légumes et de fruits.

Les hommes en Guyane vivent sur les rivières ; c'est sur leurs bords que se trouvent villages et cultures ; partout ailleurs on ne trouve que la forêt déserte ; seuls les orpailleurs créoles, contraints par leur travail, installent quelquefois leurs villages loin des cours d'eau. Les Noirs Réfugiés, comme les Indiens, aiment les rivières où ils trouvent avec l'eau et la lumière, la possibilité de se déplacer sans entraves ; ce sont des peuples de piroguiers ; leurs traditions sont largement influencées par la vie sur le fleuve et leur genre de vie y trouve une profonde originalité.

En fait, en mettant à part les villages d'orpailleurs, on peut dire que les populations des Guyanes vivant de l'exploitation des ressources naturelles du pays ont un habitat linéaire : il peut s'estimer non en surface mais en longueur, car il se limite à une bande d'un kilomètre le long de chaque cours d'eau accessible aux pirogues. Ces cours d'eau sont en nombre limité, car on peut admettre qu'arrivé à une vingtaine de kilomètres de la source de chaque rivière, l'encombrement par les bois tombés et la végétation parasite empêche de circuler commodément.

En fait, vue la densité très faible de la population, les petites rivières ne sont guère utilisées que comme lieux de pêche.

Toutes les rivières sont coupées de sauts et de rapides, qui rendent impossible l'emploi de grosses embarcations. Les pirogues des Noirs Réfugiés, portant 1.000 à 2.000 kilogrammes de charge utile, sont le moyen normal de ravitaillement des placers et des établissements européens de l'Intérieur. L'emploi de moteurs hors-bord sur ces embarcations tend à se généraliser, mais la navigation reste difficile et dangereuse et les Noirs Réfugiés continuent à tirer de ces voyages l'essentiel de leurs ressources.

POPULATIONS

Le Bassin du Maroni est relativement peuplé si on le compare au reste de la Guyane. La population comprend trois groupes humains très différents les uns des autres et qui n'ont aucune tendance à se fondre, tout en entretenant des rapports amicaux.

1) Les Créoles. On appelle ainsi les personnes de couleur qui mènent une vie individualisée et ont adopté en partie les formes de vie européennes, par opposition aux Noirs Réfugiés qui vivent en tribus sous le commandement de chefs. Le sang africain domine chez les créoles, spécialement parmi les orpailleurs.

Les créoles du Maroni ne représentaient plus guère en 1958 que 800 personnes environ, en quasi-totalité orpailleurs ou commerçants, groupées principalement autour du petit centre minier surinamien de Benzdorp ; de très petits villages d'orpailleurs sont disséminés le long des principaux affluents du Maroni, notamment l'Abounami, le Grand et le Petit Inini, la Waki.

Les créoles du Maroni sont presque tous étrangers, en grande majorité originaires des Antilles anglaises, plus spécialement de Sainte-Lucie et de la Barbade ; on trouve parmi eux très peu d'Antillais français et de Guyanais.

Tous parlent des dialectes à base de français, très voisins les uns des autres, mais assez différents du patois très particulier de la côte de Guyane qu'on entend rarement parler dans l'intérieur. Le patois créole de Sainte-Lucie est le plus répandu et c'est lui que les Noirs Réfugiés emploient pour s'adresser aux européens.

Le peuplement créole du bassin du Maroni a été jadis relativement nombreux, et cela depuis une époque ancienne. En 1877, Crevaux parle déjà de l'existence en pays Boni d'un placer occupant un millier d'ouvriers. Lors des rush aurifères du Lawa (1887) et de l'Inini (1902), ainsi qu'au moment de l'exploitation du balata (1920-1925), plusieurs milliers de personnes ont vécu sur des rivières maintenant entièrement désertes. Nombre de créoles vivant actuellement du travail de l'or, sont installés là depuis 50 ans et plus. Pourtant, la population créole de l'intérieur demeure flottante, sans attaches réelles avec le pays. Cela tient à deux causes essentielles :

— L'absence de vie familiale régulière, la plupart des femmes créoles des villages d'orpailleurs étant de la catégorie des maîtresses ;

— L'impossibilité de vivre de l'agriculture à la façon des populations indigènes, parce que cette agriculture ne peut être menée avec un bon rendement que par un groupe familial nombreux. Or, peu de femmes créoles du Maroni acceptent de consacrer l'essentiel de leur temps au travail de la terre.

L'économie des créoles de l'intérieur est donc fondée presque exclusivement sur la recherche de produits d'un prix très élevé (or, et jadis bois de rose, balata) permettant de payer la nourriture importée.

L'épuisement progressif des gisements aurifères exploitables sans moyens mécaniques amène progressivement les créoles du Maroni à quitter la Guyane. Ce mouvement, commencé depuis une vingtaine d'années, s'est poursuivi jusqu'en 1956, aucune forme de vie économique n'ayant pu remplacer l'orpaillage. En 1957 on observait une tendance à la stabilisation, principalement du fait d'un développement récent de l'élevage des bœufs et des moutons.

Depuis une dizaine d'années, des exploitants créoles ont constitué sans aucune aide extérieure un troupeau de plusieurs centaines de têtes, principalement en vue de l'alimentation du centre minier de Benzdorp. L'existence d'un aérodrome et de liaisons aériennes régulières permet d'envisager l'exportation de la viande vers la côte. Le succès de l'élevage dans le Haut Maroni semble pouvoir être attribué à une pluviosité plus faible au total que sur la bande côtière, mais mieux répartie, ainsi qu'à la nature du sol. C'est principalement sur la bande alluviale inondable, qui borde le fleuve sur 500 à 600 mètres de large, que le bétail trouve les conditions les plus favorables, se réfugiant pendant les 3 semaines d'inondation annuelle sur les collines voisines.

Conquérir sur la forêt des pâturages et les défendre contre l'embroussaillement représentent un travail continuel, mais qui peut être effectué sur le Maroni à bien meilleur compte que sur la côte, grâce à la main-d'œuvre des Noirs Réfugiés.

On ne peut encore se prononcer sur la rentabilité de cet élevage. Comme beaucoup d'autres entreprises en Guyane, il est handicapé par son prix de revient trop élevé qui empêche de concurrencer efficacement les produits importés ;

2) Les populations du Maroni, descendant des esclaves rebelles du XVIIIe siècle, que l'on appelle souvent les Noirs Réfugiés, sont divisées en trois tribus : les Djuka, les Paramaka et les Boni, dont les coutumes sont pratiquement identiques et dont les dialectes sont très voisins. Ces dialectes sont des variantes du taki-taki, langue véhiculaire dérivée principalement de l'anglais, dont l'usage avait été répandu au temps de l'esclavage, et qui est devenue la langue nationale de Surinam.

Les Paramaka, au nombre de 700 à 800, occupent la partie inférieure du cours du Maroni depuis le premier saut (Hermina) jusqu'au confluent de la crique Béiman. Ce ne sont pas des navigateurs, mais des cultivateurs et des forestiers, qui fournissent aux entreprises de la région de Saint-Laurent une main-d'œuvre très appréciée.

Les Boni, au nombre de 1.000 environ, occupent le cours du Lawa entre le saut Abonnasounga au Nord et les sauts du Litani au Sud. Leurs « grands villages », c'est-à-dire leurs villages de résidence, sont : Agodé (Boniville), Kotika, Asisi, Loka, Papaiston, Kormotibo, Lapé et l'Enfant Perdu. Trois petits villages de fondation plus récente sont établis sur le cours inférieur du Maroni. L'implantation territoriale des Boni a été perturbée par l'installation sur leur territoire des orpailleurs créoles depuis trois quarts de siècle. Leur situation démographique est médiocre et leur organisation tribale, comparée à celle des autres tribus, a beaucoup perdu de sa force. Pourtant, ils constituent encore un groupement humain plein de force et d'originalité.

Les Djuka, dont les « grands villages » sont en territoire surinamien sur le Tapanahoni, peuvent être évalués à 7 à 8.000 au total. En pleine expansion démographique, ils essaiment leurs villages de culture sur les deux rives du Maroni et sur les îles, pénétrant de plus en plus profondément dans l'intérieur de la Guyane Française, où ils forment par endroits de petits groupements temporaires vivant en symbiose avec les orpailleurs créoles ; les Boni leur reconnaissent le droit de traverser leur territoire mais non celui d'y établir des villages.

L'économie des Noirs Réfugiés est fondée depuis un siècle sur une symbiose avec les européens et les créoles ; ils fournissent un travail spécialisé (constructions, mais surtout transport) en échange de salaires relativement élevés. Cette économie se trouve menacée par la disparition progressive de l'orpaillage ; il se développe une tendance à l'émigration temporaire vers les chantiers européens de Saint-Laurent, analogue à celle des Saramaka de Surinam vers la Guyane Française. C'est une grave menace pour la cohésion intérieure des tribus ;

3) Les Indiens autochtones sont représentés sur le bassin du Maroni par trois groupes :

— Les Arawak et les Kalina (Galibi) (500 personnes environ) résident en aval de Saint-Laurent ; ils vivent en symbiose avec la population de la ville qu'ils alimentent en poisson et en manioc. Un siècle de contact avec la population créole a produit une certaine altération dans leurs coutumes et leur mode de vie traditionnel, mais l'essentiel de leur organisation tribale demeure intact.

Les Oayana ou Roucouyennes (250 personnes environ) vivent sur le Litani, en amont des Boni avec lesquels ils sont en étroites relations. Ils n'ont subi aucune altération ni dans leur race ni dans leur mode de vie.

Les Emerillon, qui appartiennent au groupe Tupi-Guarani, forment un petit groupement en voie d'extinction.

Les Noirs Réfugiés. — Origine ethnique. Aucune étude anthropologique d'ensemble n'a jusqu'ici été entreprise sur les Noirs Réfugiés. Ne possédant pas les connaissances spécialisées nécessaires pour aborder cette étude, nous l'avons laissée entièrement de côté. Il est d'ailleurs douteux qu'elle puisse donner des précisions importantes sur l'origine ethnique des Noirs Réfugiés. L'étude des pièces d'archives concernant la traite des esclaves donnerait certainement des indications plus précises ; il est d'ores et déjà certain que leur origine est très diverse ; les trafiquants d'esclaves se ravitaillaient principalement sur la côte de l'Afrique Occidentale, mais aussi au Congo et dans l'Angola actuel ; les mots africains qui figurent dans les dialectes actuels proviennent des populations de ces diverses régions. Aussi n'est-il pas surprenant de rencontrer chez les Noirs Réfugiés des formes de crâne et des statures assez variables.

Les Noirs Réfugiés sont en général de taille moyenne, celle des hommes adultes étant comprise entre 1 m. 60 et 1 m. 75 ; la moyenne se situant un peu au-dessous de 1 m. 70.

Certains caractères somatiques se rencontrent chez eux de façon fréquente ; la majorité des individus sont dolichocéphales, faiblement platyrhiniens, ont les lèvres hautes, éversées. Ces caractères évoquent plus spécialement les populations de la Côte d'Ivoire et du Dahomey. Les types humains du Congo et de l'Afrique Équatoriale en général se rencontrent rarement chez les Noirs Réfugiés. C'est une constatation surprenante étant donnée la diversité de provenance des esclaves importés à Surinam. Ce fait peut être attribué aux conditions très particulières dans lesquelles se sont formées les tribus des Noirs Réfugiés : bien plus que de révoltes massives, elles sont nées de sortes de « maquis » grossis d'âge en âge de tous ceux qui s'évadaient au péril de leur vie. On peut penser que ces irréductibles devaient provenir en majorité des grandes tribus de l'Ouest africain, plus combatives et plus solidement organisées. Les archives de la colonie de Surinam, comme celles de la Guyane Française, signalaient notamment que les nègres « Coromantin » (c'est-à-dire semble-t-il ceux qui provenaient du pays Ashanti) étaient si intraitables qu'on pouvait à peine les utiliser et qu'on les trouvait à l'origine de la plupart des révoltes.

Si les Noirs Réfugiés ne représentent pas une race au sens rigoureux du terme, ils donnent, comparés aux Noirs d'Amérique en général, une frappante sensation d'homogénéité et d'unité. Il importe de remarquer en effet qu'il n'y a pratiquement chez eux que du sang africain ; les mulâtres étaient rares dans les plantations du Surinam au XVIIIe siècle, car les documents du temps attestent que la plupart de ceux-ci, plus sensibles au paludisme que les Noirs, étaient employés comme ouvriers à Paramaribo. Ils devaient avoir peu d'occasions de s'enfuir, et peu d'entre eux auraient pu supporter longtemps les conditions de vie exceptionnellement dures des rebelles. Les Noirs Réfugiés, envisagés comme représentants de la grand-race négro-africaine, peuvent donc être considérés comme une population homogène. Ce point de vue est confirmé par l'étude de leur démographie qui montre des caractères bien marqués et très différents de ceux des autres groupes ethniques, fait qu'éclaire l'étude de la pathologie.

L'homme et le milieu naturel. Le Dr André Sausse, étudiant les trois populations du Maroni[1], Noirs Réfugiés, Indiens et Créoles, placés depuis des siècles dans le même milieu géographique et menant des genres de vie très voisins, a montré qu'elles présentaient une pathologie entièrement distincte et un comportement tout à fait différent vis-à-vis du milieu géographique.

Les Indiens autochtones ont une sensibilité extrême au paludisme, égale à celle des européens, et l'on peut penser qu'ils vivaient avant l'implantation des nouvelles populations noires et blanches dans un équilibre précaire avec le milieu naturel, que le contact avec les européens a rompu. Extrêmement sensibles aux maladies pulmonaires, ils sont décimés depuis des siècles par des épidémies de pneumonie dues aux germes microbiens importés avec les européens et les Noirs, sans qu'aucune adaptation apparaisse. Leur nombre s'est réduit en trois siècles de plusieurs dizaines de milliers à quelques centaines, sans qu'on puisse incriminer d'autre cause que le paludisme et les épidémies. Seuls ont survécu sans aide extérieure les groupements qui résidaient dans les zones marécageuses proches de la mer ; pour des raisons qui n'ont pas été encore élucidées, mais qui sont vraisemblablement liées aux conditions de vie des anophèles, ces zones sont en effet dans l'ensemble moins dangereuses du point de vue du paludisme que les terres hautes (des observations semblables ont été faites en Indochine).

Les tribus de l'intérieur, en voie d'extinction rapide, ont été l'objet depuis quelques années d'une assistance médicale qui a sensiblement amélioré leur état sanitaire et leurs conditions de vie en général[1]. Mais il importe d'observer que sans cette aide extérieure, ils continueraient à s'éteindre, aucune adaptation biologique n'apparaissant.

Les Créoles, issus de métissages entre les européens et les Noirs, présentent des caractères biologiques et un degré d'appropriation au milieu intermédiaires entre ceux de ces deux groupes. Dans l'ensemble leur résistance au paludisme apparaît sensiblement inférieure à celle des Noirs purs ; les créoles du Haut-Maroni en particulier sont sévèrement impaludés et avant les campagnes de démoustication entreprises depuis quelques années par l'Institut Pasteur de la Guyane, les orpailleurs et leur famille étaient constamment minés par la fièvre ; on observe d'ailleurs à l'intérieur du groupe créole des degrés de résistance très variables ; sur les chantiers aurifères de l'intérieur on ne voit pratiquement travailler que des créoles chez lesquels le sang africain prédomine ; les mulâtres sont en général commerçants, ou pratiquent le petit élevage.

Les Noirs Réfugiés sont la seule population de la Guyane intérieure que l'on puisse regarder comme parfaitement adaptée au milieu et capable d'y subsister par ses propres moyens. Ils présentent une prémunition vis-à-vis du paludisme qui fait que si les enfants souffrent de cette endémie, une résistance apparaît avec l'âge, protégeant les adultes de ses atteintes.

Ils sont sujets à de graves maladies cutanées, et notamment au pian, mais ces maladies ont peu de conséquences démographiques ; seuls les Boni sont sérieusement atteints par les maladies vénériennes. Les Djuka sont en très forte expansion démographique.

La forte organisation tribale de ces populations et leur solide implantation sur le sol rendent efficaces leurs méthodes de travail, de culture, de chasse et de pêche, qui leur assurent non seulement une excellente alimentation mais des moyens d'échange importants et un niveau de vie matérielle supérieur à celui de la plupart des populations de l'Afrique. Les techniques des Noirs Réfugiés, notamment en matière d'équarissage, de sciage et de construction, leur procurent des ressources comparables à celles que les populations de la Côte d'Ivoire tirent du café et du cacao.

(1) Résultats malheureusement remis en question par l'apport de germes microbiens par les touristes, de plus en plus nombreux chaque année. En 1960-61, les Indiens de l'intérieur, qu'on avait cru sauvés, ont présenté de nouveau un bilan démographique désastreux. On peut se demander si, en dépit des moyens mis en œuvre, l'extinction de ces populations pourra être évitée.

CHAPITRE II

ORGANISATION SOCIALE DES BONI

Villages

Localisation. Les principaux villages Boni sont groupés depuis 150 ans sur le Lawa[1], en amont des sauts Abattis-Cottica.

La limite du pays Boni vers le Sud est imprécise. On admet toutefois que l'ensemble des Abattis-Cottica appartient aux Boni. En aval des Abattis-Cottica et jusqu'à Abounasounga coexistent des villages de culture Boni et des villages Djuka. En aval d'Abounasounga commence le pays Djuka proprement dit[2].

Traditionnellement, les Boni considéraient l'ensemble du bassin supérieur du Maroni comme leur domaine, ou tout au moins comme un territoire soumis à l'autorité du grand man. C'est ainsi qu'au moment des rush du Lawa (1890) le grand man Anato faisait payer des redevances aux mineurs créoles qui s'établissaient dans la région. Mais cet usage, abusif si l'on considère la faible portion de ce territoire effectivement occupée par les Boni, finit par tomber en désuétude. Actuellement on est tombé d'un excès dans l'autre, et les Boni ne se voient reconnaître aucun droit coutumier ou autre sur le pays de leurs ancêtres ; le premier venu, même des créoles des Antilles anglaises, peut venir s'établir n'importe où, disloquant la répartition de la terre entre les lignages. Cette situation a été préjudiciable à la vie de la tribu, en contribuant à la dispersion du peuplement. Il n'est peut-être pas trop tard pour y porter remède. Une tribu africaine ne peut pas vivre sainement s'il n'existe pas de rapports définis, comportant des droits indiscutés, entre le groupe et la terre.

(1) Rappelons que le Lawa et le Tapanahoni sont les formateurs du Maroni. Le Lawa constitue la frontière entre le Surinam et la Guyane française.

(2) En réalité c'est une zone de colonisation car le « grand pays » des Djuka est le Tapanahoni. Mais les droits coutumiers qu'ils possèdent sur les terres du Lawa ne sont contestés par personne.

Depuis de nombreuses années s'est établi le modus vivendi suivant :

a) Les Djuka peuvent circuler librement à travers le pays Boni, mais ils ne peuvent y établir de villages ; s'ils veulent y faire des abattis, ils doivent en demander la permission au grand man.

Par ailleurs ils ont le droit de pêche sur le Tanpok et la Waki.

b) Les Créoles peuvent s'établir n'importe où et faire leurs abattis là où les terres ne sont pas utilisées. Mais cela ne modifie pas dans l'esprit des Boni les droits des lignages sur la terre ; cette occupation est regardée comme ne créant aucun droit nouveau ; par exemple l'habitation Doglis est installée sur les terres du village Kormotibo.

c) Les Boni se réservent avec les Indiens Oayana le droit exclusif de pêche sur le Litani et le Maruini. Sur ces rivières les Djuka n'ont pas le droit de pénétrer.

Les Boni peuvent être évalués au total à un peu moins de 1.000 personnes :

— Sur le Lawa un groupe d'un peu moins de 680 personnes est établi sur la rive française (villages de Agodé (Boniville), Asisi, Loka, Tabiki (L'Enfant perdu), Lapé (La Paix) et Papaïston).

— A proximité de ce groupement subsiste sous contrôle hollandais le village de Kotika (Cottica), groupant 150 personnes environ.

— Dans la région de Abounasounga vivent en symbiose avec les Djuka deux petits groupements. Enfin, dans le cours inférieur du Maroni existent trois villages : Apatu, Ma Imma et Wétiti. Le tout représente 150 personnes environ.

Ces villages sont stables : Kotika, Lapé, Asisi, Kormotibo existaient déjà au début du XIXe siècle et leurs noms figurent dans le rapport de la mission de délimitation franco-hollandaise de 1861 ; par contre les habitations de culture se déplacent selon les nécessités de l'agriculture et de la pêche ; grâce à cette organisation, un groupement relativement nombreux peut, dans l'intérieur de la Guyane, en dépit des conditions imposées par le milieu géographique, conserver une complète stabilité et un ferme attachement au sol. Il n'est pas inutile de comparer cette organisation avec la foncière instabilité des Indiens de la Guyane, car elle montre bien que cette instabilité est imputable à des facteurs psychologiques et sociologiques et nullement au milieu géographique.

Les Boni se désignent eux-mêmes par le terme Aluku nènge. Le sens de ce mot est oublié. Il est possible que Aluku ait été le nom d'un ancien chef, ou de l'aïeule fondatrice d'un lignage. Il est à noter à ce sujet que la plus ancienne aïeule connue du lignage Dju, dont on peut penser qu'elle a vécu à la fin du XVIIIe siècle, s'appelait Aluku. Ce nom est employé depuis l'origine de la tribu ; on lit en effet dans l'interrogatoire de la prisonnière faite en 1847 par les Français à l'Oyapok, que son village s'appelait Loukou[1].

VILLAGES ET GROUPES DE PARENTÉ

Entre tous les systèmes de parenté qui existaient dans les tribus africaines dont ils sont issus, les Noirs Réfugiés sont revenus unanimement, et dès l'origine, à la filiation matrilinéaire.

Leur système social est la symbiose, sous l'autorité du grand man, d'un certain nombre de groupes de parenté matrilinéaire localisés.

Les groupes de parenté matrilinéaire des Boni. Chez les Boni le groupement de base est le lignage, au sens rigoureux du terme, entendant par là, l'ensemble des descendants en ligne maternelle d'une même aïeule.

Pour désigner les groupes de parenté, les Boni emploient presque indifféremment les mots lo (troupe, bande) et bex, ventre. En fait ces expressions correspondent à deux variantes de la même notion :

bex : matrilignage au sens le plus large, entendant par là l'ensemble des personnes sachant être issues d'une même aïeule, même si les liens généalogiques sont oubliés, et même si ces personnes sont réparties en plusieurs villages soumis à des commandements différents ; lo : fraction de lignage groupée dans un même village et constituant une unité sociale distincte.

Le lignage porte un nom, dont l'origine est oubliée des Boni actuels ; certains de ces noms font allusion à une plantation ou à un propriétaire d'esclaves ; par exemple Lapé (La Paix : une plantation de la rivière de Cottica) ; pour d'autres, il peut s'agir du nom de l'aïeule fondatrice. Exemple : Kawina (nom du lignage constituant le village de Papaïston).

On compte chez les Boni six lignages[1] de fondation ancienne ; tous, à l'exception d'un seul, sont demeurés des groupements effectifs correspondant chacun à un village ; pour ces lignages les mots bex et lo peuvent être employés indifféremment. Le septième, Dipélu, est réparti en trois villages soumis à des commandements distincts, c'est-à-dire forme trois lo.

Le lo possède un chef (bodeman ou capitaine). Le bex ne possède ni chef ni organisation, mais ainsi que nous le montrerons, ses membres sont unis par des liens religieux et se réunissent pour célébrer des rites communs.

Le chef du lo Dikan est chef suprême — grand man — des Boni.

(1) Il semble qu'autrefois il y ait eu un plus grand nombre de groupes (on continue à employer l'expression bendéyoyo lo, les 12 lo, pour désigner la nation Boni), mais certains se seraient éteints.

lo	Village de résidence	Chef en 1968
Dikan	village Boniville	Difu (grand man)
Dju	village Asisi ; un petit groupe à Boniville	Adiiso
Lapé	villages Loka et Lapé Tabiki ; un petit groupe à Boniville	Popo
Dipélu I	villages l'Enfant Perdu et Apatu ; un petit groupe à Boniville	Babun (l'Enfant Perdu) Saka (Apatu)
Dipélu II	village Kormotibo ; une fraction à Asisi	Poopu
Kotiba (Yakubi)	village Kotiba ; un groupe à Abunasunga	Nachinengé
Papalston (Kawina)	village Papalston ; un petit groupe à Boniville, un petit groupe dans le Bas-Maroni (village Wétiti)	Tafanié

Le principe de localisation des groupes de parenté matrilinéaire, chacun dans un village distinct, reste respecté. Toutefois, comme dans toutes les populations africaines, la structure réelle s'écarte sensiblement de l'organisation théorique :

1° Des fragments de parenté paternelle, ainsi que quelques petits groupes d'origine hétérogène, insuffisamment nombreux pour former une unité distincte, se sont agglomérés aux lo. Tel est le cas par exemple du lignage Toina, petit groupe réfugié de Surinam à la fin du XIXe siècle, aggloméré au lo Papalston ;

2° Des scissions se sont produites à l'intérieur des lo, à la suite de mésententes. Un groupe issu du lo Papalston a fondé le village Wétiti, dans le bas-Maroni, à côté d'Apatu. Un groupe issu du lo Kotika a fondé dans la même région le village Ma Imma. Enfin du lo Dipélu II s'est séparé un groupe qui s'est installé à Asisi. Le village d'Asisi est donc actuellement en fait la juxtaposition de trois villages : Asisi-Dju, Asisi-Awara Bakka, Asisi-Dipélu II, possédant chacun son organisation et son territoire distinct.

Ces scissions n'ont pas de répercussions appréciables sur la vie sociale des Boni, car les groupes ainsi séparés du lo, d'ailleurs très faibles numériquement, ne sont pas reconnus par le grand man comme des unités sociales distinctes. Ils demeurent soumis au chef du lo, auquel les attache le culte des ancêtres.

Outre les villages de résidence, un certain nombre de Boni ont des habitations de culture personnelles, réparties sur les terres de leur lignage, le long des deux rives du fleuve et dans les îles. Ces habitations désignées par le mot kapu, campement, n'ont aucun caractère permanent ; leur existence ne porte pas atteinte au principe de localisation du lignage ; chaque Boni est astreint au moins en principe, à bâtir une maison dans son village natal et à y résider une partie de l'année. Le village d'origine de chaque lignage est dit « grand village » : c'est là que les membres du groupe se réunissent pour prier les ancêtres devant le fraga liki.

Ainsi le lo nous apparaît avant tout comme une unité sociale et politique, fondée en principe sur la parenté matrilinéaire, mais pouvant facilement donner accueil à des éléments hétérogènes. C'est le cadre par l'intermédiaire duquel l'individu se trouve intégré à la collectivité.

Fonctions du lignage (bex).

— Les membres d'un même bex forment un groupe indivis au point de vue juridique, même s'ils ne résident pas dans le même village et sont soumis à des commandements distincts. Ils reconnaissent une responsabilité juridique commune ; par exemple ils sont obligés, au moins en principe, de payer les dettes contractées par l'un d'eux. Réciproquement l'héritage de l'un d'eux est partagé entre eux tous.

— Ils ont une même responsabilité religieuse, c'est-à-dire qu'ils sont soumis aux mêmes kunu. Le kunu est une malédiction exercée sur un groupe par une divinité, depuis une époque ancienne. Il est transmis exclusivement par la mère. Nous montrerons dans la suite de cet ouvrage, l'importance considérable de cette notion dans la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés.

Ils ne peuvent (tout au moins en principe) contracter une union entre eux. Le bex constitue donc en principe l'unité soumise à la loi d'exogamie.

La faute contre l'exogamie, pikadu inceste au sens large, est regardée comme une faute très grave.

Fonctions du lo : Le lo transpose sur le plan matériel les principes juridiques résultant de la conception du lignage : indivision des droits sur la terre, responsabilité juridique commune. Chacun d'eux forme une unité sociale pouvant en principe se suffire à elle-même, possédant un culte des ancêtres qui lui est propre, un chef jouant le rôle de prêtre des ancêtres et de juge, matériellement groupée dans un village, jouissant de droits exclusifs sur un terroir déterminé.

Nous avons dit que les lignages de fondation récente, ne réunissant qu'un faible effectif, ne peuvent constituer une unité sociale distincte et sont placés sous l'autorité de l'un des chefs de lo. Ce n'est pas là une condition imposée par la force ou une coercition morale quelconque, mais une nécessité sociale pratique. Un lignage, aussi réduit qu'il soit, conserve aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés des droits collectifs imprescriptibles, et si ces membres sont d'accord pour se grouper en un village distinct et cultiver un terroir séparé, personne n'y mettra obstacle.

Tels sont les éléments qui se dégagent d'une première étude des groupes de parenté, telle qu'on peut la déduire de l'interrogatoire des chefs de ces unités. Elle laisse non résolus d'importants problèmes :

Les Boni ont l'idée que leurs groupes de parenté sont des lignages au sens réel du terme. Pourtant l'interrogatoire sur les généalogies ne permet pas pour tous de remonter jusqu'à l'aïeule fondatrice. Trois d'entre eux, les plus importants numériquement, s'avèrent à cet égard divisés en plusieurs fractions. Pouvons-nous être sûrs que ces fractions sont bien de même origine, et que les intéressés ne se trompent pas en le croyant? N'y a-t-il pas dans la structure sociale des Noirs Réfugiés des mécanismes conduisant à l'assimilation, à la fusion de groupes d'origine hétérogène?

Nous ne pouvons répondre directement à ces questions. Il est indispensable d'étudier au préalable la conception que les Boni ont des liens de parenté à l'intérieur du matrilignage. Nous examinerons ensuite les tableaux généalogiques des divers lignages, et pour ceux que l'étude des généalogies montre divisés en plusieurs fractions, nous étudierons les rapports de ces fractions entre elles.

La parenté à l'intérieur du matrilignage : Les termes de parenté traduisent un système purement classificatoire. Le principe de la parenté classificatoire a été poussé par les Noirs Réfugiés à sa dernière limite, sans aucune atténuation. Tout est axé sur le nombre de générations séparant de l'aïeule fondatrice. L'âge n'intervient pas. Le fait d'appartenir à une branche aînée ou cadette par rapport à telle ou telle aïeule n'intervient pas non plus. La coutume des Noirs Réfugiés est hostile à toute discrimination qui pourrait conduire à une scission du lignage.

A un même nombre de générations de la fondatrice, on se dit uniformément frère, boala, ou sœur, sisa, sans considération d'âge ni de degré de parenté. Il n'existe aucune nuance dans la langue pour différencier le frère au sens propre et le frère au sens classificatoire.

Les gens plus proches de la fondatrice d'une génération sont appelés uniformément oncles, ligu, ou tantes, liya.

La pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, en matière de parenté, est surtout axée sur la connaissance de ces liens qu'on peut appeler liens horizontaux ; ils les considèrent comme des liens de fait, qu'on leur a fait connaître dans leur première enfance, et peu d'entre eux se préoccupent d'en connaître l'origine exacte. Savoir que N... est leur frère et que M... est leur oncle leur suffit. La connaissance des généalogies demeure le fait des esprits les plus ouverts ; les autres ne s'en préoccupent pas.

Cette conception de la parenté permet de maintenir l'unité d'un lignage alors même que les liens généalogiques sont oubliés, et que le groupe est à cet égard coupé en plusieurs fractions. Les membres du lignage peuvent n'avoir pas conscience de ce fractionnement, ainsi que nous l'avons observé dans plusieurs cas.

Ainsi dans la figure 3 (exemple fictif), Adam sait qu'il doit appeler Baina frère, Afanis oncle et Sota neveu.

C'est pour cela que nous employons pour traduire le mot bex le terme de lignage étendu[1].

(1) Cette conception de la parenté se retrouve chez les Agni de la Côte d'Ivoire et les Fon du Dahomey ; il est possible qu'elle soit largement répandue en Afrique Noire, surtout dans les populations à filiation matrilinéaire.

Cette conception, associée à celle du kunu, s'oppose au fractionnement des lignages sur le plan religieux, alors même qu'une scission est intervenue sur le plan de la résidence. La rigueur du principe posé, la transmission quasi mathématique d'une génération à la suivante d'appellations fondées sur le rang par rapport à la fondatrice, interdit de penser que des éléments étrangers au lignage puissent par un procédé quelconque, être intégrés dans ce système. Cependant il demeure un doute quant à la possibilité d'assimiler des fragments de parenté paternelle, car dans la parenté paternelle règne le même principe de parenté classificatoire, et on fait usage des mêmes appellations. Nous montrerons qu'un tel processus d'assimilation existe effectivement sur le plan social, mais qu'il n'est pas concevable sur le plan religieux, le kunu étant toujours transmis par la mère.

Fig. 3. — Matrilignage éteint

La connaissance des liens généalogiques est très variable d'un lignage à l'autre. En dehors des grandes coupures comme Dipélu I-Dipélu II, nous avons mis en évidence que de petites fractions de quelques lignages ne pouvaient plus être rattachées au tronc principal, les liens généalogiques étant irrémédiablement perdus. Les intéressés ne s'en étaient jamais rendu compte, ils ne s'étaient jamais posé la question. Ce fut le cas notamment :

Des descendants de Samma (Dipélu II, Asisi) ;
Du groupe des descendants de Atili (Lapé, Boniville).

Dans les deux cas la coupure était très récente ; des vieillards morts depuis peu d'années connaissaient les liens généalogiques maintenant perdus.

Situation des lignages en 1958.

Le lignage Dikan, dont le chef est le grand man des Boni, est pratiquement éteint puisqu'il ne comprend plus que le grand man Difu ; à sa mort il aura totalement disparu[1].

Depuis deux générations, les divers lignages ont délégué auprès du grand man quelques-uns des leurs, pour conserver à son village une certaine importance. Ainsi Agodé (Boniville) comprend maintenant des fragments des lignages Kotika, Dipélu, Lapé, Dju et Papalston, formant dans le village autant de petits quartiers individualisés.

Agodé a été fondé par le grand man Ochi, probablement vers 1896, au moment où les Boni furent contraints par le règlement du Contesté du Lawa d'évacuer les villages qu'ils occupaient sur la rive surinamienne. Le surnom de Boniville a été donné par les orpailleurs ; il n'est nullement entré dans l'usage des Boni.

Le lignage Yokubi ou Kotika forme l'important village de Kotika[1]. C'est un de ceux qui sont restés le mieux groupés. Ses membres ont des droits exclusifs sur la région comprise entre le saut d'Abunasunga et leur village. C'est là que depuis plus d'un siècle ils font leurs cultures, et c'est pour cette raison que la région est appelée Abattis Kotika.

Kotika est le plus vieux village Boni. C'est un de ceux qu'avaient fondés les survivants des combats contre les Hollandais quand, vers 1815, ils se réinstallèrent sur le Lawa. Jusqu'en 1895 environ, la presque totalité des Boni s'y trouvaient groupés en un grand village, chaque lignage occupant un quartier différent. Au moment du règlement défavorable à la France du Contesté du Lawa (1895), les divers lignages émigrèrent, fondant notamment les villages de l'Enfant Perdu, Loka, Boniville et Papalston. Seuls les membres du lignage Kotika restèrent, en plein accord avec le grand man, pour que la terre des ancêtres ne fût pas complètement abandonnée. Ainsi les habitants de ce village sont de nos jours d'obédience surinamienne, sans pour cela cesser d'être fidèles au grand man et d'entretenir des rapports normaux avec les autres groupes.

Les généalogies reconstituées en 1957 par l'interrogatoire systématique des anciens du groupe avaient conduit à trois fractions distinctes que nous appellerons Kotika 1, 2 et 3, remontant respectivement à des aïeules nommées Kéněyà, Amawi et Oka. Aucun des membres du groupe ne pouvait remonter jusqu'à la fondatrice commune ; pourtant l'ensemble de ces trois fractions se comporte comme un lignage unique. Tous ses membres connaissent leurs appellations mutuelles « frère », « oncle », etc. Tous sont soumis au même kunu.

La loi d'exogamie est respectée à l'intérieur de chaque fraction, mais il y a sept cas d'unions entre membres de fractions différentes ; ces unions sont réprouvées en principe, mais on les tolère.

Ainsi, en matière d'exogamie, nous voyons la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés se détacher du principe rigoureux sur lequel est fondé leur ordre social. C'est la généalogie effectivement connue qui compte à leurs yeux sur ce point.

En décembre 1958, nous avons pu reconstituer la généalogie complète du groupe (fig. 4) grâce aux souvenirs de la doyenne du groupe, Ma Imma, qui vit isolée depuis très longtemps dans un village de l'estuaire du Maroni. Les données ainsi reconstituées sont en complet accord avec les appellations de parenté entre membres des diverses fractions.

(1) Ce mot fait allusion à la rivière où la rébellion de 1772 a commencé.

Fig. 4. — Généalogie commune des trois fractions lignagère Kotika.

Le cas du lignage Kotika est donc particulièrement intéressant, car nous nous trouvons connaître complètement sa généalogie, alors que ses membres ne la connaissent plus que partiellement.

L'étude de ce groupe montre que l'oubli des liens de parenté est sans conséquence sur le groupement matériel du lignage et sur son fonctionnement en tant qu'unité sociale.

Il n'a de répercussions directes que sur l'observation du principe d'exogamie. Ainsi la façon dont est comprise et observée l'exogamie nous apparaît d'ores et déjà comme un critère secondaire, n'ayant pas de valeur certaine pour la reconnaissance d'une commune origine.

Quelques Djuka et Saramaka se sont établis parmi les membres du lignage Kotika mais à titre individuel.

Le lignage Lapé (La Paix), dont le nom fait allusion à l'une des grandes plantations de la rivière de Cottica au XVIIIe siècle, est partagé entre les petits villages de Lapé Tabiki et de Loka. C'est un lignage bien groupé dont les membres connaissent parfaitement leur généalogie, jusqu'à une aïeule commune nommée Mata qui a dû vivre à la fin du XVIIIe siècle ; seul un petit groupe que nous appellerons Lapé 2 (descendants de Atih), ne connaît pas exactement les liens qui les rattachent au groupe principal. La loi d'exogamie est respectée rigoureusement à l'intérieur de ce groupe ; il n'y a pas un seul cas de mariage entre les deux fractions. Les membres des deux fractions se considèrent comme un lignage unique. Ils ont le même kunu.

Il est à noter qu'il y a chez les Djuka un lo Lapé, regardé comme de même origine.

Aucun élément d'origine hétérogène ne s'est établi dans les villages du lo Lapé.

Le lignage Dju, qui occupe la partie centrale de l'île Asisi, est lui aussi conforme à la définition des groupes de parenté chez les Noirs Réfugiés. Ses membres connaissent entièrement leur généalogie jusqu'à une aïeule commune nommée Aluku, remontant sans doute au milieu du XVIIIe siècle.

Il n'y a chez les Dju aucune fraction séparée du groupe principal.

Il y a également chez les Djuka un lo Dju. Le mot Dju fait allusion aux Juifs, le lignage ayant probablement pris naissance dans les plantations appartenant aux Juifs de Surinam.

La loi d'exogamie est appliquée rigoureusement à l'intérieur du lo Dju.

Aucun élément d'origine hétérogène n'est établi parmi les Dju.

Le lignage Dipélu était autrefois le plus important ; il est au point de vue généalogie scindé en trois groupes dont les membres sont répartis en trois villages, soumis à des commandements distincts.

Généalogie		Villages
Dipélu I		L'Enfant Perdu Apatu (fondé en 1882)
Dipélu II, 1re fraction	scission très récente	Kormotibo
Dipélu II, 2e fraction		quelques éléments à Asisi.

— Dipélu I forme une unité remarquable par l'ampleur de sa généalogie, entièrement connue, qui s'étend sur huit générations et remonte à une aïeule commune nommée Sanyaa, qui a dû vivre au milieu du XVIIIe siècle. L'origine commune des deux groupes étant nécessairement antérieure à cette aïeule, il paraît logique de la faire remonter au début du XVIIIe siècle. Malgré l'éloignement dans le temps de leur origine commune, les membres des deux groupes connaissent avec précision leurs liens de parenté « horizontaux » (frère, oncle, etc.), qui n'ont rien perdu de leur force bien qu'ils aient perdu toute correspondance avec l'âge des intéressés.

— Dipélu II, dont les membres connaissent mal leur généalogie, paraît par contre en voie de désagrégation. Le chef des Dipélu II, qui porte le titre de Capitaine, réside à Kormotibo. Une partie du groupe s'est établie à Asisi à la suite d'une mésentente, sans cesser d'être soumise à son commandement.

On pourrait croire que la séparation matérielle des deux groupes s'est faite en fonction des généalogies, que la 2e fraction de Dipélu II a émigré en bloc à Asisi, laissant à Kormotibo les membres de la 1re fraction. Mais il n'en est rien ; l'examen du tableau généalogique montre que le groupe émigré provient aussi bien de l'une que de l'autre ; c'est là un aspect très remarquable de la structure sociale des Noirs Réfugiés, qui découle directement de leurs conceptions de la parenté classificatoire. Un homme est chez lui partout là où résident ses « frères » et ses « oncles » classificatoires, et si une séparation matérielle intervient dans le groupe, les préférences et les affinités personnelles auront autant d'influence que la proximité de la parenté.

Voici 3 générations. Dipélu ne formait qu'un groupe, sous la direction d'un chef unique résidant à Kormotibo. Le processus de sa désagrégation est un bel exemple de ce que produisent les Européens en s'immisçant dans la vie sociale d'une tribu africaine pour distinguer un homme qui leur paraît plus intelligent et plus actif que les autres.

Le compagnon de l'explorateur Crevaux, Apatu, qui appartenait à ce groupe, fut à son retour comblé d'honneurs, doté du titre de Capitaine et d'une solde ; il entra en conflit avec le chef légitime du lo, fit sécession et fonda un village aux abords de Saint-Laurent, entraînant une fraction du groupement.

Ce village était sans avenir, ses effectifs n'ont fait que fondre depuis un demi-siècle, notamment sous l'influence des maladies vénériennes.

Ni le temps, ni la séparation géographique n'ont provoqué de scission sur le plan religieux, ni sur le plan juridique. A cet égard, les membres de Dipélu I et Dipélu II continuent de se considérer comme un même lignage. Ils demeurent soumis au même kuno.

La loi d'exogamie demeure appliquée rigoureusement à l'intérieur de Dipélu I et à l'intérieur de Dipélu II, mais les unions sont permises entre Dipélu I et II. Il n'y a plus à ce sujet de sanctions sociales, et l'origine commune des deux groupes est si éloignée qu'on ne songe plus guère à leur appliquer le terme de pikadus. Mais elles demeurent exceptionnelles, les intéressés continuant à craindre une sanction suprahumaine.

Aucun élément d'origine hétérogène, fragment de parenté paternelle ou étrangers réfugiés ne s'est établi parmi les Dipélu.

Le lignage Papaiston ou Kawina (village Papaiston) est demeuré parfaitement cohérent et bien groupé. Ses membres connaissent leur généalogie jusqu'à une aïeule nommée Teresa qui a dû vivre au début du XVIIIe siècle. Mais il existe une petite fraction, presque éteinte d'ailleurs, que nous désignerons par Papaiston 2, qui présente une généalogie distincte remontant presqu'aussi loin dans le temps. Personne ne peut préciser l'origine de ce groupe ; on le regarde comme relié par des liens de parenté au groupe principal, mais les membres des deux groupes considèrent qu'ils forment deux kus distincts. Ils n'ont pas le même kuno.

Les unions ne sont pas tolérées à l'intérieur du groupe principal, mais elles sont admises entre membres des deux groupes.

En contrôle avec les Papaiston un petit groupe réfugié du Surimam vers la fin du XIXe siècle, originaire de la tribu Bakabuchi. Ce groupe n'a aucun rapport de parenté avec les Papaiston, mais s'est placé sous l'autorité du chef lo Papaiston. On le désigne généralement par « la famille de Toina », Toina étant la doyenne de ce groupe.

Le lignage Awara Bakka (village Asisi) a une structure plus complexe et particulièrement intéressante. L'étude de sa généalogie montre qu'il est en fait divisé en trois fractions que nous appellerons Aw.B.1, Aw.B.2, Aw.B.1. Les Aw.B.1 connaissent parfaitement leur généalogie, jusqu'à une aïeule nommée Akyé, trisaïeule de la centenaire Kuluba († 1957). Akyé a dû vivre vers la fin du XVIIIe siècle.

Awara Bakka 3 est un fragment de parenté paternelle qui a été « assimilé » au groupe principal par un processus dont il existe plusieurs autres exemples parmi les Boni. Il a été fondé par Anéta, femme Djuka originaire du village de Tabiki sur le Tapanoni, épouse de Pèèyon (Aw.B.1), restée là après la mort de son mari avec sa nombreuse descendance.

Les membres de ce groupe, qui normalement devraient être regardés comme Djuka et étrangers au lo, finissent par être englobés dans l'organisation sociale et le culte des ancêtres des Awara Bakka. Les filles de Anéta et de Pèèyon étaient appelées « sœurs » par les Aw.B.1 au titre de la parenté patrilinéaire. On a transposé ces appellations pour leurs descendants, au point que beaucoup ont fini par perdre de vue leur origine véritable ; mais les Aw.B.3 conservent une responsabilité religieuse et juridique distincte, et sont soumis à un kunu particulier, celui du village Djuka de Tabiki d'où était issue leur aïeule.

En effet, nous le montrerons en étudiant les croyances des Boni, le kunu est irrémédiablement transmis par la mère et aucun processus d'assimilation ne peut jouer à cet égard. Ainsi les Aw.B.3 ne font pas vraiment partie du lignage, ils en sont séparés par un critère net, apparent aux yeux de tous, impossible à méconnaître ou à oublier.

Les Aw.B.2., sur lesquels nous n'avons pu avoir de renseignements certains car ce groupe, très fermé, ne s'est pas prêté volontiers à l'enquête, paraissent être dans une situation très semblable, à cette différence près que leur généalogie remonte beaucoup plus loin dans le temps et qu'on ne se souvient plus de l'origine de cette fraction ni des circonstances qui ont lié son destin à celui des Aw.B.1. Il semble que ce groupe a un kunu distinct.

Le lignage Awara Bakka est dans une situation particulière au point de vue de l'exogamie, car non seulement il y a des mariages d'une fraction à l'autre, mais on en compte deux à l'intérieur de la même fraction, et entre parents relativement proches. Ainsi ce groupe, sans rejeter ouvertement la loi d'exogamie, ne lui attache pas la même importance que les autres.

Le lignage Afi. Ce lignage a été fondé par Afi, épouse d'un homme de Papaïston, venue vivre avec lui. Elle était issue, comme le lignage Toïna, de la petite tribu appelée Bakabuchi, qui vit à Surinam. Cependant les lignages Afi et Toïna ne sont pas de même origine matrilinéaire et les membres actuels de chacun des deux petits groupes n'ont aucun culte commun. Les uns et les autres ont perdu tous liens avec leur tribu d'origine et leur vie sociale est entièrement dépendante de celle du groupe Boni qui les a accueillis.

Afi s'était établie dans les environs de Kormotibo. Cet emplacement est abandonné par ses descendants qui vivent la plupart à Asisi, les autres à Kormotibo.

Le lignage a perdu tout lien avec son groupe d'origine. On admet cependant que si l'un d'eux voulait y retourner, en prouvant sa parenté, il reprendrait tous ses droits et pourrait exiger un emplacement pour faire ses abattis.

Le processus d'assimilation qui se produit pour les Aw.B.3 n'a pas joué pour les descendants de Afi par rapport au lignage Papahton. Ils sont regardés comme un groupe familial distinct, insuffisamment nombreux pour constituer une unité sociale, et dont les membres sont placés sous le commandement des chefs des villages où ils ont élu résidence. Il est possible que plus tard, si leur nombre continu à s'accroître, ils fondent un village distinct dont le chef sera reconnu comme capitaine. Un nouveau kuna se trouverait ainsi créé.

Nature réelle des groupes de parenté matrilinéaire des Boni. L'examen fait de la situation des divers lignages amène aux conclusions suivantes :

L'oubli des généalogies n'entraîne aucun fractionnement des lignages sur le plan matériel ni sur le plan religieux.

Les conceptions des Boni relatives à la parenté classificatoire, ainsi que leur coutume hostile à toute discrimination à l'intérieur du lignage, font obstacle au fractionnement. Quand une séparation s'est produite sur le plan de la résidence et du commandement, elle n'a pas de répercussion sur le culte commun qui cimente le lignage ;

La façon dont est appliquée la loi d'exogamie ne constitue pas un critère valable, l'attitude des divers groupes à cet égard étant très variable ;

Aucun processus d'assimilation ne permet d'intégrer au lignage des éléments d'origine étrangère ; il existe un processus d'assimilation de fragments de parenté patrilinéaire. Mais cette assimilation n'est pas complète, elle ne joue pas sur le plan de la responsabilité juridique et religieuse ;

En définitive, le critère le plus sûr d'une véritable origine commune matrilinéaire est l'unité de responsabilité juridique et religieuse, marquée par le même kunu. Le kunu, transmis irrévocablement par la mère quelles que soient les conditions de son mariage, pesant collectivement sur tous les membres d'un lignage et ne pouvant être conjuré que par leurs prières collectives, est le véritable ciment des groupes de parenté.

De par sa nature même, le kunu s'oppose à toute scission des groupes. Ni le temps, ni la séparation géographique ne peuvent le rompre.

L'exemple de Dipélu I et II est caractéristique à ce sujet car ses membres restent rigoureusement soumis aux mêmes kunu, bien que l'aïeule commune supposée remonte sans doute au début du XVIIIe siècle, et que depuis trois générations ils soient répartis entre quatre villages situés à huit jours de canotage l'un de l'autre. Nous pouvons, avec très peu de chances d'erreur, affirmer qu'ils ont bien une commune origine matrilinéaire et qu'ils constituent effectivement un lignage.

Remarquons à ce sujet que la séparation géographique ne peut jouer le même rôle chez les Noirs Réfugiés que dans les tribus africaines de cultivateurs. Les Noirs Réfugiés, dont l'habitat est linéaire le long des rives du fleuve et qui, pratiquant le canotage, sont sans cesse en déplacements, ne peuvent être complètement isolés les uns des autres.

Dans ces conditions, comment s'expliquer l'existence à l'intérieur de certains lignages de fractions individualisées, soumises à un kunu distinct, comme Papaïdon 2?

Il est permis de croire que ces fractions n'ont pas vraiment le même origine que le groupe principal et qu'elles résultent d'un processus d'assimilation d'un fragment de parenté paternelle.

Nous avons cité l'exemple des descendants de Anéta (Aw.B.3.). Ils sont déjà intégrés à la vie sociale du groupe ; dans deux ou trois générations, personne ne se souviendra plus de leur origine exacte. Mais ils resteront différenciés de la fraction principale des Awara Bakka parce qu'ils demeureront soumis au kunu de leur aïeule.

Tels sont les éléments que nous pouvons tirer d'une étude générale des groupes de parenté chez les Boni. Nous rechercherons d'autres données dans l'étude de l'implantation de ces groupes sur le sol, et notamment de la répartition des terres entre eux ; enfin, nous étudierons la coutume familiale et notamment l'héritage.

Une compréhension complète du système de parenté et de son fonctionnement ne pourra être obtenue que dans l'avenir, en suivant l'évolution des groupes de parenté, la formation de nouveaux villages et la désignation de nouveaux chefs.

C'est ce qui impose un inventaire aussi précis que possible de la population dans son état actuel.

Les groupes de parenté matrilinéaire chez les Noirs Réfugiés Djuka et Saramaka. Les auteurs qui ont décrit la structure sociale des Djuka et des Saramaka, groupements sensiblement plus nombreux que les Boni, ont relevé également l'emploi des mots lo et bu, mais leur donnent un sens tout différent.

L'organisation qu'ils décrivent peut être résumée ainsi :

Avant de constituer des tribus, les rebelles vivaient en petits groupes à proximité des plantations dont ils s'étaient évadés ; ces groupes d'origine composite étaient désignés par le mot lo qui veut dire : troupe, bande ; on emploie le même mot pour désigner une bande d'animaux.

Ces rebelles appartenaient à toutes les nations de la côte occidentale d'Afrique. Il a pu y avoir par endroits, tentative de regroupements d'éléments appartenant à une même nation, comme le prouvent les noms de village Loango, Dahomey, chez les Saramaka. Mais la plupart de ces petits groupes étaient très probablement d'origine hétérogène ; dans chacun de ces lo, le plus brave et le plus capable se trouva désigné comme chef.

Après la reconnaissance des Djuka et des Saramaka par le gouvernement de Surinam et leur regroupement sur les grandes rivières de l'intérieur, ces groupes ont conservé leur unité puisqu'ils avaient une organisation de fait et des chefs. On les désigna tout naturellement par le nom de la plantation dont ils étaient issus. On dit par exemple Dju nènge pour les anciens esclaves des juifs, K3pani nènge pour les anciens esclaves de la Compagnie des Indes Orientales.

Au cours du XIXe siècle, l'effectif des Noirs Réfugiés s'est accru très vite, sous l'influence d'une forte natalité. Les lignages au sens propre du terme, les, entendant par là les descendants d'une même aïeule, ont pris une importance suffisante pour constituer des unités sociales distinctes. Ils se groupèrent en villages distincts et même les plus importants ont éclaté en plusieurs villages dont le chef a été reconnu comme « Capitaine » par le grand man, puis par le Gouvernement. Le nombre des Capitaines Djuka reconnus par le Gouvernement de Surinam n'a cessé de croître, il était ces dernières années de vingt-huit.

Le lo ne représenterait plus une unité sociale effective mais ses membres conserveraient des cultes communs. On dit par exemple que les Dju nènge vont chaque année, pour un rite, chercher de la terre à la Savane des Juifs où leurs ancêtres ont été esclaves.

Cette explication paraît vraisemblable. Le groupe de parenté n'est pas la seule unité sociale connue des Africains ; le lien de l'homme et de la terre possède à leurs yeux une importance égale ; le fait que leurs pères avaient vécu ensemble, qu'ils aient été enterrés dans le même cimetière, créait entre les esclaves rebelles un lien de fait qui a pu suffire, au début de la rebellion, pour fonder des villages et une organisation sociale.

Cependant cette théorie ne peut être admise sans réserves. Elle n'a pu être vérifiée par des études systématiques, les Djuka et les Saramaka s'étant fermement opposés jusqu'ici à toute investigation ethnographique comportant le relevé des généalogies et l'inventaire de la population des villages.

Elle est en contradiction avec ce que nous avons relevé chez les Boni. Dans ce groupement, on compte six grands lignages dont quatre (Dju, Kotika, La Paix, Dikan) ont un nom faisant allusion lui aussi aux plantations dont s'étaient enfuis leurs ancêtres.

Pourtant il s'agit bien de lignages au sens propre du terme, et on ne se souvient pas qu'il ait jamais existé une autre organisation. Aussi, en l'absence d'études systématiques des Djuka et des Saramaka, le problème de l'origine de leurs groupes de parenté demeure obscur. L'avenir permettra de vérifier l'une ou l'autre des deux hypothèses :

1° Le — groupement de fait de rebelles de toute provenance, qui s'est à la longue scindé en lignages, mais qui subsiste sous forme d'un culte commun ;

2° Le — lignage, dès l'origine.

CONCEPTIONS RELATIVES A LA PARENTÉ ET AU MARIAGE

Liens entre l'individu et les ancêtres. Avant d'examiner de façon plus approfondie la structure sociale et familiale des Noirs Réfugiés, il est indispensable d'étudier quels liens religieux sont supposés entre l'individu et les ancêtres. On se trouve ici en présence de croyances de base qui paraissent identiques dans les diverses tribus des Noirs Réfugiés de Guyane, et dont résulte leur structure.

Dans les civilisations de l'Afrique Noire, il est supposé qu'un courant de vie et de force circule par l'intermédiaire des ancêtres de la divinité aux hommes. Chez les Noirs Réfugiés il est admis qu'à cet égard chaque homme n'est relié qu'à ses ancêtres en ligne maternelle. S'il se trouve en proie à la maladie, à l'injustice ou à l'adversité, il ne peut, dans sa prière, s'adresser qu'à eux.

Cela ne veut pas dire que le lien avec le père est méconnu, ou considéré comme de peu d'importance ; il est admis, nous le verrons, que dans la création de l'homme certains éléments psychiques se transmettent du père au fils. Mais le courant de force qui relie l'individu aux ancêtres ne passe pas par le père. On ne peut prier utilement l'âme de son père défunt. Si je me trouve malade et si la divination incrimine l'action de l'âme de mon défunt père, je ne peux adresser directement à lui ni prière, ni offrande ; j'aurai recours pour cela à un de ses proches parents en ligne maternelle.

Un autre principe très important dans l'esprit des Noirs Réfugiés, est que les prières doivent être collectives ; les principales cérémonies, comme la prière du nouvel an, doivent réunir, au moins en principe, la totalité du lignage.

Ces notions ont certainement influencé la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés en ce qui concerne la résidence et le mariage. Le lignage ne peut admettre le départ définitif de la femme hors de son pays natal, et pas davantage celui de l'homme. Dans les populations à filiation matrilinéaire d'Afrique Noire, cette conception se concilie avec les nécessités de la vie pratique de la manière suivante : la femme quitte, sa parenté pour s'établir auprès de son mari, mais ses enfants arrivés à l'âge adulte doivent y revenir. On ne peut donc attribuer à cette seule préoccupation le régime particulier du mariage chez les Noirs Réfugiés, ne comportant pas de cohabitation permanente de l'homme et de la femme. Nous verrons que ce régime a été inspiré par des nécessités d'ordre social et psychologique. Mais le souci de l'unité du lignage, auquel il correspond parfaitement, a certainement contribué à en faire un principe rigoureux de droit coutumier.

La parenté à l'intérieur du matrilignage. Les termes de parenté traduisent un système purement classificatoire. Ils ne dépendent que du nombre de générations séparant de la fondatrice. Sont regardés comme membres du matrilignage et englobés dans le système d'appellation, les fils des femmes issues de la fondatrice en ligne utérine. Les enfants de ces hommes ne font plus partie du matrilignage.

Baala, (frère) Sisa, (sœur)	frères et sœurs au sens classificatoire. Personnes qu'un même nombre de générations sépare de la fondatrice.
Tiyu, liya, (oncle, tante)	personnes plus proches de la fondatrice d'une génération.
Gadla, gauma, (grand-père, grand-mère)	personnes plus proches de la fondatrice de deux générations.
Aro (arrière grand-mère)	femmes plus proches de la fondatrice de trois générations.
Sisa pikin (neveux)	personnes plus éloignées de la fondatrice d'une génération.

D'une façon générale un homme situé sur la ligne n appelle oncles et tantes tous ceux qui sont situés sur la ligne n—1, et neveux tous ceux qui sont sur la ligne n+1.

Exemple (voir tableau généalogique du lo Dju) : Fintiman (F7) considère Aliki (E23) (sa parente au 9e degré) comme sa tante, au même titre que Wima (E3), sœur de sa mère. De même il considère Sosoman (E14), aussi bien que Atikati (E18), comme son oncle, bien que Sosoman soit plus jeune que lui de 10 ans. Il admet que Sosoman peut dans une certaine mesure lui donner des avis et que sa voix est prépondérante sur la sienne.

Il considère Adiiso (F37), son parent au 10e degré, comme son frère au même titre que Klémenti, son frère au sens propre. Paana (G2), Kéwénu (G10) aussi bien que Soalufu (G12) sont ses neveux et nièces, sisu pikin.

A une génération de plus, il dit « mes petits enfants ».

La rigueur même de ce principe semble devoir conduire à une scission des lignages, car on conçoit mal que des gens supportent d'appeler « ma grand-mère » des filles plus jeunes qu'eux, et de leur témoigner du respect ; or cela doit nécessairement se produire au bout d'un certain nombre de générations, car ainsi que nous le verrons, la fécondité des femmes Boni se prolonge parfois jusqu'à l'âge de 50 ans et il y a des cas où l'intervalle entre l'aîné et le cadet atteint 35 ans.

Cependant nous n'avons pas observé en fait, que cette conception de la parenté conduise à des scissions ni même à des froissements sérieux.

Cela tient à la nature même de la hiérarchie et des liens sociaux à l'intérieur du matrilignage ; ils comportent une tutelle collective d'une génération sur la suivante, et de même une tutelle collective des ancêtres sur les vivants. Mais de même qu'est évitée toute prière, toute invocation s'adressant individuellement à tel ou tel ancêtre, la hiérarchie des Noirs Réfugiés ne donne pas naissance à des relations d'autorité d'homme à homme, qui ne seraient pas supportées. Seul, le hedemã ou Capitaine, désigné par l'assemblée du lignage, exerce un commandement personnel ; encore a-t-il soin de le limiter presque exclusivement à des fonctions religieuses.

Les « oncles » exercent collectivement une autorité sur la génération des « neveux ». Ils tiennent conseil, notamment s'il s'agit de mariages. Ils ne votent pas à proprement parler mais l'opposition de 3 ou 4 d'entre eux empêche l'exécution d'un projet. Il n'y a pas de voix prépondérante pour les oncles les plus proches (toutefois en pratique on semble en tenir compte). Mais l'aîné des oncles au sens classificatoire est unanimement reconnu comme prépondérant.

Existence de patrilignages. Les matrilignages ne sont pas les seuls groupes de parenté des Noirs Réfugiés. Chacun reçoit de son père un interdit fondamental -bwasi kina- qu'il devra observer toute sa vie et que lui-même transmettra à ses enfants. Il est unanimement admis que la rupture de cet interdit donne la lèpre (bwasi).

Cet interdit ne se transmet jamais par les femmes. Il se transmet du père au fils ou à la fille. Le fils l'observera et le transmettra ; la fille l'observera sa vie durant, mais elle ne le transmettra pas.

L'existence du bwasi kina divise les Boni en des groupements de fait qu'on peut considérer comme des patrilignages. Ces patrilignages n'ont pas de nom, pas de chef, pas d'organisation ; leurs membres sont dispersés dans les divers matrilignages et s'ignorent pour la plupart les uns les autres.

Ils existent pourtant et s'étendent à l'ensemble des tribus des Noirs Réfugiés.

Leur importance aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés vient de ce qu'ils comportent une loi d'exogamie : un homme et une femme qui ont même bwasi kina ne peuvent se marier ; ce serait pikodu, inceste au sens large, faute contre l'exogamie, au même titre que l'union de deux membres d'un même matrilignage.

Il est difficile d'évaluer le nombre de ces patrilignages qui nous paraît chez les Boni être d'une vingtaine au moins ; en effet, les Boni ne disent pas volontiers leurs bwasi kina, de peur qu'un de leurs ennemis ne mélangent pour leur nuire à leur nourriture une parcelle de la nourriture interdite ; d'autre part, ils ne connaissent pas leur parenté paternelle au-delà de leur grand-père. La reconstitution par interrogatoire des patrilignages paraît donc illusoire.

Les bwasi kina que nous avons pu connaître sont tous d'ordre alimentaire. Ils portent sur le caïman, le « tigre », la tortue, la poule blanche, le pian (awoli), l'anguille. Souvent le caïman est donné en plus d'un autre animal. Mais il est inexact de dire que les Noirs Réfugiés ont un interdit général sur le caïman.

Les relations patrilinéaires ont d'autres incidences importantes que nous exposerons en parlant des croyances des Boni. Du point de vue de la structure sociale, notons :

— Que la relation patrilinéaire n'a aucune influence sur la résidence ni sur l'organisation de la vie matérielle ;

— Que la loi d'exogamie qu'elle comporte n'a qu'une faible influence sur la liberté de choix des couples, en raison du nombre relativement élevé des patrilignages.

Dans la mesure où les liens de parenté patrilinéaires sont connus (en général les gens ne vont pas au-delà de leur grand-père), on emploie les mêmes termes de parenté que dans le matrilignage, avec la même valeur classificatoire.

Appellations. Nous avons vu qu'à l'intérieur du matrilignage les appellations de parenté ne dépendent que du nombre de générations par rapport à la fondatrice.

En parlant familièrement, on emploie pour s'adresser :

— Aux gens de la même génération, l'expression	ba	Untel... (homme)
	sa	Une telle (femme)
— — d'une génération au-dessus, l'expression	liyu,	oncle
	liya,	tante
— — de deux générations au-dessus, l'expression	papa
	mama.

Papa ne veut pas dire père, mais ancien, honorable. De même mama veut dire femme âgée et respectable.

Par exemple pour dire bonjour on dira selon les cas : ba Untel, ɔdio, ou liyu, ɔdio.

Pour parler aux gens d'une génération au-dessous, on dit mati (camarade) ou on les appelle par leur nom sans autre appellation, ce qui serait considéré comme très insolent en s'adressant à ses « frères » ou à ses « oncles ».

Pour parler à sa mère on emploie une expression particulière, souvent formée de ma suivi de la dernière syllabe de son nom.

Par exemple Asakundu (la Lapé) est appelée par ses fils Ma Ndu ou Mama Ndu. Béniti (la Dju, † 1955) était appelée par ses enfants Ma Béniti ou Anti.

Les appellations relatives au patrilignage sont exactement les mêmes, à l'exception de mi la, mon père. Mais comme ces patrilignages n'ont pas de fonction sociale pratique, étant limités à la transmission d'un interdit, les liens de parenté n'y sont pas connus au-delà de la 2e génération et on s'en préoccupe fort peu.

Quand on s'adresse à quelqu'un d'un lignage différent, on emploie, par déférence, les mêmes termes selon que la personne à laquelle on s'adresse paraît de même âge ou plus âgée. C'est particulièrement net pour les gens âgés qu'on appelle uniformément papa et mama. Pour les gens à peu près de même âge, si on les connaît bien on dit ba Untel ou sa Untelle. Pour les hommes qu'on connaît mal on emploie souvent masa Untel (masa = Monsieur). Les Boni sont assez pointilleux à cet égard. Il leur est fort désagréable d'être appelés directement par leur nom ; leurs employeurs européens ont l'habitude de leur parler ainsi, ils l'admettent de leur part mais non sans réticence.

Des appellations particulières résultent du mariage ; les termes utilisés sont réciproques :

Pay — désigne la relation entre beau-père, beau-fils ou belle-fille.
May — la relation entre belle-mère, gendre.
Soagi — la relation entre beaux-frères.

X ayga mi pay veut dire aussi bien : « X est mon beau-père » que « X est mon gendre ».

En règle générale un homme appelle soagi tous ceux que sa femme appelle frères au sens classificatoire, et pay tous ceux qu'elle appelle oncles. Mais le terme may ne s'emploie qu'à l'égard de la propre mère de la femme.

On continue à employer les termes soagi, pay, may même après la rupture d'un mariage, de sorte qu'ils sont d'un usage fréquent. Quant à la femme elle-même, on dit sa Untelle en lui parlant, comme à une sœur.

Le mariage. Les conceptions des Noirs Réfugiés à ce sujet sont remarquables. Le mariage, au sens africain du terme, compris comme un contrat entre deux parentés, n'existe pas chez eux. L'union de l'homme et de la femme ne comporte aucune sorte de contrat entre leurs parentés et par voie de conséquence, aucune compensation matrimosiècle. Les Noirs Réfugiés sont la seule population négro-africaine à notre connaissance, dont la coutume ne comporte aucune forme de « dot », ni en argent ni en nature.

La vie de famille au sens où nous l'entendons n'existe pas ; comme nous le verrons plus loin, le mariage est interdit entre gens du même lignage, ce qui implique que le mari et la femme résident dans des villages différents. L'homme bâtit une maison à sa femme dans le village natal de celle-ci, mais il ne vient pas vivre avec elle ; il lui rend comme à ses autres femmes des visites de quelques jours au cours desquelles il lui fournit les objets d'importation (sel, pétrole, étoffes, etc.) dont elle a besoin, lui apporte son aide pour les travaux pénibles, tandis que, de son côté, elle lui remet les produits de l'abattis. Le reste du temps il vit en célibataire dans le village de sa mère où il bâtit sa propre maison. S'il est très attaché à sa femme, il peut venir résider avec elle et peut même obtenir sans grande difficulté de l'emmener vivre dans son propre village, mais peu de couples usent de cette faculté, car l'homme et la femme tiennent avant tout à leur indépendance.

La vie de l'homme et celle de la femme restent entièrement séparées et leur union a davantage le caractère d'une association temporaire, fondée sur des intérêts matériels, que celui d'un mariage ; la vie familiale de chacun d'eux reste entièrement axée sur son matrilignage.

Cette organisation, comparée à ce que l'on trouve dans la plus grande partie de l'Afrique, est très avantageuse pour la femme qui jouit d'une totale indépendance. Mais elle a pour contrepartie une grande instabilité des unions.

L'union de l'homme et de la femme a si peu le caractère d'un mariage qu'il n'existe dans la langue Boni aucun mot signifiant à proprement parler « époux » et « épouse ». On dit : mi libi anga X = « je vis avec une telle ».

Comment le système social et matrimonial des Noirs Réfugiés s'est-il constitué ? On pourrait croire qu'un des systèmes de l'Afrique Occidentale a été purement et simplement transposé, mais il n'en est rien. Dans ce domaine comme dans celui des croyances, les ancêtres des Noirs Réfugiés ont élaboré à partir de sources nombreuses, une synthèse originale.

Les nations africaines dont étaient issues les rebelles étaient certainement, en grande partie sinon en majorité, patrilinéaires. C'est notamment le cas des Fon du Dahomey, auxquels ont été emprunté d'importants éléments culturels, notamment les principaux cultes de possession. Celles qui étaient matrilinéaires admettaient toutes la résidence patrilocale, c'est-à-dire le départ de la femme hors de son village et son établissement au village de son mari.

Les rebelles du XVIIIe siècle, les archives l'attestent, comprenaient un fort pourcentage de « nègres d'eau salée », nés sur la terre africaine ; tel était par exemple Codio Coromantin, un des lieutenants de Boni ; ceux qui n'étaient pas nés en Afrique avaient, pour la plupart, été instruits dans une tradition africaine, par un père ou un oncle. On peut être certain qu'une fois parvenus à la liberté ils ont cherché à organiser leurs villages selon la coutume familiale à laquelle ils avaient été formés, c'est-à-dire à constituer, les uns une société patrilinéaire et patrilocale, les autres une société matrilinéaire mais à résidence patrilocale. Nous savons par exemple que Boni avait choisi pour successeur son fils Agosu.

Une coutume familiale est chose autrement tenace qu'une langue, une technique, voire un culte. Les hommes s'attachent désespérément au système social et matrimonial qu'ils ont reçu, avec le sentiment que s'ils l'abandonnaient leur univers familier s'écroulerait. Ne voyons-nous pas de nos jours dans les grandes villes africaines, des groupes complètement séparés géographiquement de leur tribu d'origine, soumis parfois depuis plusieurs générations à l'influence européenne, maintenir avec acharnement leur système matrimonial? Pourtant, dans l'ensemble des tribus des Noirs Réfugiés, la filiation patrilinéaire n'a prévalu nulle part, et la résidence patrilocale a disparu, semble-t-il, assez rapidement ; le problème ne peut être éludé par des explications faciles telles que l'influence de l'esclavage ou la rareté des femmes parmi les rebelles[1].

On est obligé d'admettre que des raisons profondes ont rendu les groupes patrilinéaires moins viables que les autres, et ont conduit finalement à leur dissolution. Ces raisons nous paraissent être de deux ordres :

- L'esprit d'indépendance de la femme africaine, soucieuse avant tout de sa liberté à l'égard de l'homme ;

- la loi morale et religieuse sous laquelle s'est faite l'unification des tribus des Noirs Réfugiés, impliquant le rejet de toute forme de violence et d'oppression. Sous cette loi il ne pouvait plus être question d'emmener la femme hors de son village maternel si elle y était attachée, et pas davantage d'exercer sur elle une coercition pour la faire demeurer dans une union qui avait cessé de lui plaire.

La formation des patrilignages a dû être entravée par de nombreux divorces ; de plus, en cas de divorce, la femme, à n'en pas douter, prétendait emmener ses enfants, ne reconnaissant aucun contrat entre les deux parentés qui pût influer sur son libre arbitre ; on peut également être certain que les enfants, consultés, devaient dans la plupart des cas suivre leur mère et se grouper dans leur parenté maternelle. Cette tendance demeure parfaitement observable de nos jours ; nous en verrons toute l'importance en étudiant comment sont élevés les enfants et quelle tutelle est exercée sur eux.

Or il n'y a pas de patrilignage concevable si, en cas de divorce, les enfants ne restent pas avec le père. Il existe des sociétés patrilinéaires où la femme est libre, ne fût-ce que la société Peule, où les divorces sont très fréquents. Mais la coutume africaine veut qu'en régime patrilinéaire, du fait du versement de la dot, la parenté de la femme perde tout droit sur les enfants. Ils sont entrés dans la parenté de l'homme et dans son culte des ancêtres.

La formation de groupements matrilinéaires et patrilocaux a dû elle aussi se heurter à des difficultés analogues, les femmes ne quittant pas volontiers leur village d'origine.

On peut imaginer assez aisément que dans la période initiale de la formation des nouvelles tribus, les différents systèmes matrimoniaux ont coexisté ; puis les groupes patrilocaux, moins viables, se sont progressivement dissous, tandis que la coutume actuelle se constituait.

(1) Les groupes rebelles ont été vite déséquilibrés au point de vue démographique, car ils allaient enlever des femmes sur les plantations.

Ce point de vue est confirmé par un renseignement précis recueilli à la fin du XIXe siècle par l'explorateur Coudreau. A la mort d'Agosu, fils de Boni, c'est son fils Gongo qui lui succéda. Mais après la mort de Gongo, la succession se fit selon le régime matrilinéaire.

Un autre aspect important du système matrimonial des Noirs Réfugiés est l'absence de toute compensation ou prestation. Même s'il arrive qu'une femme quitte définitivement son lignage pour s'établir dans le village de son mari et y faire souche (c'est notamment le cas des lignages Afi et Toïna cités plus haut), cela n'entraîne aucune compensation. C'est contraire à la coutume et mal vu, mais si la femme tient absolument à quitter sa parenté elle est libre de le faire. On ne peut rien réclamer au lignage de son mari.

L'interprétation habituelle de la compensation matrimoniale, regardée comme un mécanisme d'échange de femmes entre les groupes, ne paraît donc pas valable ici. Si une femme quitte définitivement un lignage Boni pour aller faire souche par exemple chez les Djuka, sa descendance est perdue pour le lignage sans aucune possibilité de compensation. Pourtant cette société si profondément enracinée dans la terre africaine ne prévoit en pareil cas aucun versement ou prestation.

Les choses s'éclairent si on considère le lignage non pas en tant que groupement matériel effectif, mais comme communauté spirituelle soumise à une même loi religieuse. Dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, le lien religieux fondamental qui unit l'individu à ses ancêtres en ligne utérine ne peut être brisé quoi qu'on fasse.

Où qu'elle aille, la femme émigrée demeure membre de la communauté spirituelle ; elle reste, elle et ses enfants, soumise au même kunu. Ce lien religieux ne peut pas non plus être transposé sur la parenté maternelle.

Ainsi compris, le mariage ne rompt aucun lien spirituel, il n'en crée aucun ; il ne donne donc lieu à aucune compensation.

Ces considérations montrent que la « dot » africaine, telle que la conçoivent les sociétés patrilinéaires, n'est pas seulement un mécanisme d'échange de femmes entre des groupes matériellement constitués. Elle peut aussi avoir comme but, sans que les intéressés en aient bien conscience, de compenser pour la communauté spirituelle du lignage la perte des enfants à naître de la femme, leur passage à un autre culte.

Un exemple de scission dans un groupe de parenté : la séparation de Dipélu II entre Kormotibo et Asisi. (Voir tableau généalogique des Dip. II).

Cette scission a résulté d'un incident dérisoire : une brouille survenue entre ○ Alawenchi † (E19) et ○ Bongo (E6), à l'occasion d'une houe que la première prétendait lui avoir été volée par Bongo.

Ni l'une ni l'autre ne voulant céder, elles se fâchèrent définitivement et se batirent.

[facing p.38]

△ Agoua, chef du lignage, prenant le parti de Alawenchi, décida de faire sécession et de s'installer à Asini.

○ Pile † (F35) et ○ Sésey † (F38) qui, leur mère étant morte, avaient été élevées par Alawenchi, se joignirent à elles et firent souche à Asini.

C'est ce qui explique la scission actuelle de ce groupe et la répartition bizarre de ses membres entre Kormotibo et Asini. Cette scission n'eut pas de conséquence sur le plan religieux, l'unité étant maintenue par le lien impitoyable du kunu. Actuellement, l'autorité du capitaine Poupu s'exerce normalement sur la fraction d'Asini. L'entente est assez bonne entre les deux groupes.

CHAPITRE III

INVENTAIRE DU PEUPLEMENT DES VILLAGES BONI

Nous nous sommes efforcés d'établir un recensement complet au 1er janvier 1958 des Boni du Haut Maroni, comportant pour les femmes le relevé de leurs unions successives, et de leurs enfants vivants et décédés. Ce recensement est associé à des plans détaillés des villages et à une étude de l'implantation territoriale des groupes de parenté.

Il nous a semblé que dans l'état actuel de la connaissance des Noirs Réfugiés, une étude de portée limitée, mais s'étendant à la totalité de la population, était préférable à l'étude très approfondie d'un petit groupe ; seule l'étude de la population considérée dans son ensemble fait apparaître nettement sa coutume familiale, ses tendances en matière de mariage, de divorce, d'héritage ; seule elle peut conduire à une connaissance précise de ses données démographiques, si importantes même sur le plan social.

Enfin, cet inventaire détaillé constitue une base solide pour suivre dans l'avenir l'évolution de la population.

Recenser les Boni posait un problème beaucoup plus difficile que pour la plupart des populations sans état-civil. Les tribus des Noirs Réfugiés jouissent en fait d'un statut de nations autonomes sous protectorat, et tiennent farouchement à cette autonomie. Jamais l'administration française, pas plus que l'administration de Surinam pour les Djuka et Saramaka, n'a pu les recenser, se heurtant à une mauvaise volonté ingénieuse qui défie tous les efforts.

Ce n'est pas qu'ils craignent l'impôt (c'est une notion pratiquement inconnue en Guyane, même sur la côte[1], et depuis longtemps l'administration française apparaît aux yeux des habitants de l'intérieur comme un bureau de bienfaisance), mais ils obéissent à la vieille maxime africaine de ne jamais dire aux Blancs que la moitié de ce qu'on sait.

(1) Pratiquement, dans l'intérieur du pays, à l'exception des commerçants qui sont astreints à la patente, personne ne paie d'impôt et il n'y a même pas de listes de contribuables. Les créoles de l'intérieur (principalement des Antilais anglais) ne sont connus que dans la mesure où, sujets étrangers, ils sont astreints à des déclarations de changement de résidence ; les citoyens français ne sont guère connus des postes administratifs que dans la mesure où ils s'y présentent pour des actes d'état civil, ou pour l'inscription sur les listes électorales.

En l'absence de tout recensement nominal pouvant servir de base de départ, ce travail présentait des difficultés considérables tenant principalement à l'extrême mobilité de la population :

— Jamais on ne trouve rassemblée simultanément toute la population d'un village ; la proportion des absents atteint fréquemment 50 %, notamment à la belle saison (chasse, pêche, canotage, abattis dans les habitations de culture, etc.) ;

— Nombre d'hommes et de femmes ont 2, parfois 3 noms, employés indifféremment. Fait qu'on ne connaît pas personnellement une partie importante des habitants des villages et qu'on ne dispose pas de tableaux généalogiques établis avec soin, il est impossible de rien comprendre ;

Si les hommes répondent de bonne foi, il n'en est pas de même des femmes, qui sont inaccessibles à tout raisonnement. Les unes cherchent à monnayer les renseignements qu'elles donnent, d'autres refusent obstinément de répondre ;

Nombre d'adolescents et même d'hommes entre 20 et 35 ans n'ont pas de case attitrée. Chaque Boni, homme ou femme, est en principe tenu de bâtir une case dans un des « grands villages ». Mais cette résidence peut être fictive : ce peut être par exemple une case ébauchée qu'on se propose de relever un jour... ou l'auvent de la maison de la mère, ou d'un frère, sous lequel on s'installe les jours où une cérémonie réunit le lignage, résidant le reste de l'année dans une habitation de culture.

Malgré les relations confiantes développées entre le Boni et nous au cours des travaux effectués en commun pendant quatre longues missions, nous n'avons pu faire ce recensement que progressivement et indirectement, en employant simultanément les procédés suivants :

Étude de la généalogie des groupes, en remontant de femme en femme jusqu'à l'ancêtre fondatrice, puis en redescendant. Ces tableaux généalogiques, dont certains s'étendent sur neuf générations et englobent plus de 160 personnes, ont mis en évidence un certain nombre d'absents temporaires et d'individus qui vivaient à l'écart des villages, isolés au milieu des orpailleurs créoles, mais continuant à faire partie de leur groupe ; ils ont mis en évidence également un certain nombre de jeunes gens et enfants orphelins recueillis par des parents éloignés qui n'en auraient pas parlé directement. Mais sur ce point, il subsiste des lacunes ;

Plan détaillé des villages et interrogatoire des chefs de village sur les personnes habitant chaque maison ;

Interrogatoire des femmes sur leurs enfants morts et survivants ;

— Vérification générale à l'aide d'informateurs parfaitement en confiance et possédant à fond la généalogie des groupes.

Le recensement, arrêté au 1er janvier 1968, a porté sur 811 personnes dont 667 des villages de la rive française et 144 de la rive surinamienne (Kotika). Pour ces derniers nous les avons interrogés individuellement quand ils venaient sur la rive française, notamment quand ils sont venus assister aux fêtes de lever de deuil à Bonivile en octobre 1957. Le recensement de Kotika est moins précis que celui des villages français, et d'autre part nous n'avons pu faire le plan du village. Pour cette raison nous ne l'avons reproduit dans le présent ouvrage, où seul figure le tableau généalogique correspondant.

Le principe de constitution des villages Boni est, avons-nous dit, la localisation du matrilignage. Hommes et femmes demeurent dans le village de leur parenté maternelle ; la femme ne quitte pas son village pour rejoindre son mari, qui vient la visiter de temps à autre sans cesser de résider lui-même au milieu de son propre lignage.

La composition de chaque village correspond donc, au moins en principe, au groupe des vivants du tableau généalogique. Mais on observe un certain nombre d'exceptions :

— Un certain nombre d'hommes (une vingtaine sur 800 personnes) ont émigré définitivement et ne peuvent plus être comptés dans la population des villages ;

— Par contre une douzaine de Djuka et Saramaka mariés à des femmes Boni se sont installés à demeure dans les villages et ont été englobés dans le recensement.

Nous nous sommes efforcés d'évaluer avec autant de précision que possible l'âge des intéressés, grâce à des événements de date connue dont ils ont conservé le souvenir, depuis le voyage de l'explorateur Crevaux (1878) jusqu'à la guerre 1939-1945. Nous avons établi une chronologie locale, qui est reproduite en annexe à la fin du présent chapitre.

L'enquête démographique, qui a fait l'objet d'une publication distincte[1], a été conduite parallèlement à l'enquête sociologique.

Nous estimons les lacunes du recensement à moins de 3 %. Ces lacunes portent essentiellement sur les adolescents et jeunes gens orphelins ou élevés par d'autres que leurs parents.

Les adultes de plus de 35 ans nous étaient pratiquement tous individuellement connus. Les enfants de moins de 10 ans ont pu être très exactement recensés grâce aux distributions de lait effectuées depuis 1956 par le centre médical de Maripasoula.

Classement. Le classement de la population a été fait par village de résidence.

Pour chaque femme, on a indiqué ses unions successives et les enfants qui en sont issus. Le signe † signifie décédé, le signe ✦ divorce, Le signe ✦ † signifie que le mari est décédé, mais après la rupture de l'union.

Les fiches des femmes précédées d'un astérisque * indiquent que la fiche peut être regardée comme complète au point de vue démographique (enfants vivants et décédés).

Un double astérisque  indique que la fiche peut en outre être regardée comme complète au point de vue des mariages et divorces successifs[2].

(1) Étude démographique comparée des Noirs Réfugiés Boni et des Indiens Guyana du Haut-Maroni, dans Population, éditions de l'INED, 1950, n° 3.

(2) Nous évitions de poser directement ces questions auxquelles les femmes ne répondaient pas de bonne grâce. Ces renseignements ont été obtenus indirectement par l'interrogatoire des frères et des maris. Ils n'ont pu être obtenus de façon complète que pour 30 % environ des femmes.

Le nom de chaque individu est porté en caractères gras une fois, là où il peut être considéré comme résidant habituellement.

Les enfants de moins de 15 ans sont considérés comme résidant avec les personnes chargées de leur éducation. Si des précisions n'ont pu être obtenues à cet égard, ils sont considérés comme résidant avec leur mère.

Chaque fiche porte un numéro, par exemple Dju D7, permettant de retrouver la place de l'individu dans le tableau généalogique. Dans l'exemple indiqué il faut se référer au tableau du lignage Dju, ligne D, n° 7.

Tableaux généalogiques. Ils sont de valeur inégale selon l'âge et la mémoire des anciens consultés. D'une façon générale ils remontent à trois générations au-delà des plus âgés des vieillards actuels.

Comme les Boni présentent une longévité remarquable et qu'on peut évaluer à 31 ans la différence moyenne d'âge entre deux générations, on peut admettre comme probable que la plus lointaine aïeule connue de chaque lignage est née entre le milieu et la fin du XVIIIe siècle. Par exemple, si on admet que Kuluba, l'aïeule des Awara Bakka, avait environ 100 ans en 1956, on peut admettre qu'elle est née vers 1856 et que son arrière grand-mère est née vers 1760.

La plus ancienne aïeule connue de chaque lignage n'est certainement pas la fondatrice. Il est infiniment probable que la fondation de ces groupes remonte au début du XVIIIe siècle et qu'ils ont pris naissance dans les plantations mêmes où les aïeux des Noirs Réfugiés étaient esclaves ; ce serait là l'explication des noms portés par les lignages, noms qui font presque toujours allusion à une plantation ou à un propriétaire d'esclaves.

D'une façon générale, la mémoire des Boni est très sûre et les renseignements donnés sous la forme : Ma X... a engendré tel, tel et tel, peuvent être regardés comme certains. Par contre, nous avons considéré qu'il y avait une coupure dans la généalogie lorsqu'en remontant dans le temps on arrivait à cette seule donnée : Ma X... était la sœur de Ma Y...., car il pouvait s'agir d'une parenté au sens classificatoire.

Aucune forme de droit d'aînesse n'existant chez les Boni, on observe une certaine incertitude quant à l'ordre de naissance des frères et des sœurs, pour les gens décédés depuis longtemps. Nous avons adopté l'ordre conservé par la tradition orale, sans chercher à le rectifier.

Dans nombre de populations africaines, une tradition spéciale s'attache à perpétuer la mémoire du fondateur, au moins son nom, l'emplacement de sa tombe. Chez les Boni actuels on ne trouve absolument rien de semblable ; ils ne se préoccupent en rien de la fondatrice véritable de leur lignage ; aucun souvenir, aucune légende, pas même un nom n'est parvenu jusqu'à eux. Il semble même que ces aïeux lointains les intéressent peu, étant moins à même d'agir en faveur de leurs descendants actuels. En fait, à chaque génération nouvelle, le souvenir d'une génération ancienne s'éteint. A notre premier voyage en 1948, nous avions relevé, malheureusement sans les noter avec précision, des traditions orales très intéressantes remontant au temps de l'esclavage, notamment les noms des propriétaires d'esclaves qui se montraient le plus cruels. En 1962 le dernier vieillard qui les connaissait était mort, le souvenir même de ce qu'il avait dit était déjà effacé.

En fait la pensée des Boni, strictement pratique et utilitaire, s'attache principalement à conserver le souvenir de la partie de la généalogie indispensable aux vivants pour connaître leurs liens de parenté. Le souvenir des femmes dont la descendance est éteinte et des hommes qui n'ont rien fait de remarquable est éteint dès la seconde génération.

Comme aucun des voyageurs du XIXe siècle n'a compris l'intérêt de relever des généalogies, il est probable que le nom des véritables fondatrices et les circonstances de la formation des lignages (renseignements inestimables qui devaient encore être présents à la mémoire des vieillards de la fin du siècle dernier), sont à jamais perdus.

Pour simplifier la rédaction des tableaux généalogiques, on a éliminé les individus décédés avant l'âge adulte.

Les noms. Pour assurer à nos informateurs l'anonymat nécessaire, sans diminuer la précision de l'exposé, nous avons changé une grande partie des noms. Les noms fictifs sous lesquels les individus sont désignés tant sur les tableaux généalogiques que dans l'inventaire de la population, ont été pris pour la plupart parmi les Djuka, qui appartiennent au même groupe culturel et linguistique ; dans d'autres cas nous avons employé pour « chiffrer » le recensement un procédé plus complexe consistant à échanger les noms de deux personnes. Les enfants de moins de 15 ans sont simplement désignés par une initiale[1].

Malgré ces précautions, nous recommandons aux voyageurs munis de cet ouvrage de ne faire aucune allusion devant les Boni, aux faits qui y sont relatés ; les Noirs Réfugiés sont très fiers et ne peuvent admettre qu'un étranger pénètre de plain-pied dans leur intimité familiale. Cela provoquerait à l'égard de l'indiscret une vive hostilité et gênerait les travaux ultérieurs.

Le tableau de correspondance entre les noms véritables et les noms fictifs est tenu à la disposition des sociologues qui désireraient poursuivre des études sur les Boni.

(1) Il est particulièrement désagréable aux Noirs Réfugiés que les noms de leurs enfants soient connus des européens, à l'exception du médecin. Tout interrogatoire systématique sur ce sujet se heurte à une telle hostilité.

Structure et composition des villages

L'examen que nous venons de faire du peuplement de six villages montre d'importants aspects de l'organisation sociale et de la vie matérielle des Boni.

Les groupes de parenté dans les villages. Nous avons vu que le principe de résidence des Boni était la localisation de l'ensemble du lignage, hommes, femmes et enfants ; ce qui implique l'absence de vie commune du ménage, l'homme et la femme résidant chacun dans son propre village.

Ce principe de résidence matrilocale est effectivement appliqué dans la presque totalité des cas. En 1967, sur l'ensemble des 670 personnes des villages de la rive française, 27 adultes seulement sur 410, soit 6 %, résidaient au milieu de leur parenté paternelle ou s'étaient installées à demeure au village de leur conjoint.

Nulle part on ne voit apparaître de tendance au groupement patrilocal ; les petits lignages issus au cours des deux dernières générations de femmes Djuka ou Bakabuchi venues s'installer définitivement auprès de leur mari n'échappent pas à la loi commune. Leurs membres suivent strictement, par rapport à leur aïeule, le principe de résidence matrilocale.

Une autre conclusion importante se dégage de l'examen des tableaux généalogiques :

Quand une scission s'est produite à l'intérieur d'un lignage, répartissant ses membres entre plusieurs villages soumis à des commandements différents, cette scission n'est jamais complète. Les membres du lignage se trouvent chez eux aussi bien dans l'un que dans l'autre de ces villages, et passent volontiers de l'un à l'autre.

L'exemple de Dipélu I est particulièrement net à cet égard. Ses membres sont répartis en 3 villages : L'Enfant Perdu, Apatu et Boniville (où ce lignage occupe un quartier).

Les descendants de ○ Monika † se sont répartis entre ces trois villages. △ Kwau, l'aîné, après avoir vécu à Apatu jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans, s'est établi en 1968 à Boniville ; ○ Djalufu vit depuis son enfance à L'Enfant Perdu, Cécilia a été élevée à Boniville où elle réside depuis.

Citons encore l'exemple des descendants de Wétili (Papaïston I). Sur ses 12 enfants et petits-enfants adultes vivants en janvier 1968, 7 se sont établis avec elle, dans l'habitation qu'elle a fondée sur l'estuaire du Maroni, à plusieurs centaines de kilomètres du pays Boni, 2 vivent à Boniville (où le lignage Papaïston a délégué quelques-uns de ses membres auprès du grand man, 3 sont revenus vivre à Papaïston. Malgré cette dispersion, l'entente est parfaite entre ces frères et sœurs qui demeurent en relations suivies.

Émigration ; immigration ; fondation de nouveaux lignages. Il n'est pas possible de donner à ce sujet des chiffres rigoureux, parce qu'il est très difficile de faire une distinction nette entre émigrés temporaires et émigrés définitifs. Il arrive qu'un homme parti depuis très longtemps et sur lequel on ne comptait plus revienne reprendre sa place dans la vie coutumière. Il arrive aussi qu'un homme parti pour un court voyage prolonge indéfiniment son absence.

On peut affirmer cependant que l'émigration de longue durée n'affecte qu'un pourcentage très faible des Boni, et presque exclusivement des hommes. Pour 810 personnes recensées, en enregistrant les noms de leurs frères, sœurs et enfants, nous n'avons noté qu'une vingtaine d'émigrés considérés comme définitivement perdus pour leur groupe, dont 4 femmes.

Il convient de mettre à part le cas de O Wétiti (Papaïston) et O Ma Imma (Kotika), qui se sont séparées de leur groupe avec leur nombreuse descendance pour fonder des villages sur le cours inférieur du fleuve. Ces groupes continuent à se considérer comme Boni ; ce sont les noyaux de futurs villages.

Pour les mêmes raisons il est difficile de chiffrer l'immigration. Environ cent Djuka et Saramaka ont fondé des villages de culture dans le pays Boni, mais conservent tous leurs liens avec leurs villages d'origine ; une trentaine d'entre eux sont mariés à des femmes Boni ; on peut estimer qu'une quinzaine ont lié complètement leur sort aux Boni et peuvent être considérés comme intégrés aux villages dans lesquels ils se sont établis.

Au total on peut estimer que l'émigration et l'immigration des adultes hommes, toutes les deux très faibles, se compensent ; elles n'ont pratiquement aucune conséquence sur le plan social (puisque seule la résidence des femmes influe sur le groupement des lignages), ni sur le plan démographique ; chez les Boni la pyramide des âges construite à partir du recensement des villages représente très fidèlement l'état démographique de la population, et se prête à des calculs précis de mortalité[1].

La fondation de nouveaux lignages résulte de l'immigration de quelques femmes Djuka, les unes venues s'installer à demeure auprès de leur mari, les autres élevées par leur père dans un village Boni. A chaque génération on compte une demi-douzaine de cas semblables, mais tous n'ont pas pour conséquence la fondation d'un lignage, soit que les femmes soient stériles, soit qu'il ne reste qu'un ou deux enfants survivants qui retournent vivre dans leur parenté maternelle. Plus une femme a d'enfants, plus elle a tendance à se fixer définitivement avec sa descendance, car le groupe ainsi formé représente une force et peut se suffire à lui-même, tant sur le plan matériel que sur le plan affectif.

Au cours des 50 dernières années, ont été fondés dans l'ensemble du pays Boni 4 nouveaux lignages :

Awara Bakka 3 (Aníta)	16 personnes	au 1er janvier 1958
Afi	25	—
Tolna	9	—
Poti	8	—
TOTAL.....	58 personnes.

Ces nouveaux lignages ne représentent donc que $\frac{58}{810} = 7\ \%$ des Boni.

L'immigration de femmes provenant d'autres tribus demeure donc un phénomène exceptionnel qui a peu de conséquences sur le plan social et démographique. Le développement des Boni en tant que nation ne résulte que du mouvement naturel de la population. L'étude des généalogies oblige à admettre qu'en éliminant les membres de ces quatre petits lignages, l'ensemble des Boni descendent de 6 à 7 femmes seulement ayant vécu à la fin du XVIIIe siècle. On trouve peu d'exemples d'un semblable accroissement.

Absence d'une division des villages en quartiers. Nous avons vu que la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés s'oppose à tout ce qui pourrait altérer le système de parenté classificatoire, et conduire à l'individualisation de segments à l'intérieur du lignage. Ce principe se traduit très nettement dans la structure des villages où l'on n'observe aucune tendance à la division en quartiers séparés, sauf dans les villages comme Boniville, où coexistent les ressortissants de plusieurs lignages. La règle est que dans les villages homogènes, les membres du lignage soient entièrement libres de construire leurs maisons n'importe où. On observe seulement une certaine tendance des enfants à se grouper autour de leur mère, dans la mesure des places disponibles (voir notamment au village de Loka, l'intrication des maisons des descendants de Adédumi, de Awènkina et des autres aïeules appartenant au même lignage.

Dans les villages comme Asisi-Awara Bakka, où sont groupés les membres d'un lo comportant des fractions individualisées, il en est de même.

Ces fractions n'ont aucune tendance à former des quartiers séparés (voir dans le plan d'Asisi l'intrication des maisons des Aw.B.1, 2, 3) pas plus qu'ils n'ont tendance à grouper leurs abattis dans un terroir séparé.

Les Boni disent volontiers : « on ne doit pas élever de barrières entre frères. »

D'une façon générale, l'examen du plan des villages montre que les Boni construisent leur maison à leur fantaisie sans aucune orientation privilégiée et sans les grouper ou les isoler de quelque façon que ce soit. Tout membre du lignage peut construire sur un emplacement laissé libre (par exemple l'emplacement d'une vieille case après la mort de son propriétaire, quand elle a été jugée trop abîmée pour pouvoir être donnée en héritage). Il doit seulement avoir l'autorisation du chef du village, et aussi l'accord des voisins qu'il ne doit pas gêner. Comme les maisons n'occupent que peu de place et que la plupart n'ont pas de dépendances (cuisine ou grenier) cet accord est donné très facilement. Nous n'avons jamais entendu dire que des gens se soient disputés un emplacement.

Il n'existe pas de jardins de case, les conditions de sol et de climat rendant impraticable la culture permanente. C'est tout juste si quelques personnes plantent autour de leur case quelques bananiers, au pieds desquels ils répandent la cendre du foyer. En règle générale les villages sont étroitement enserrés par la brousse secondaire, et les gens font leurs plantations loin les unes des autres et parfois très loin du village.

Si elle n'admet pas l'appropriation de la terre aux individus, la coutume admet en revanche la propriété des arbres. Dans les villages, les arbres utiles (cocotiers, palmiers maripa, manguiers, pommiers-cajou, etc.) ont tous un propriétaire. L'arbre est considéré comme un bien personnel et il est transmis par héritage au même titre qu'un fusil ou un canot. Le procédé employé par les Boni pour la dispersion de l'héritage entre les membres du lignage du défunt a parfois pour effet de transmettre la propriété d'un arbre à une personne qui n'est pas du village. Par exemple, à Boniville, où est établie une fraction du lignage Kotika, deux palmiers caumou ont été légués voici longtemps à des membres du lignage habitant Kotika, qui viennent chaque année faire la cueillette.

CHAPITRE IV

INSTITUTIONS SOCIALES

Les institutions sociales des Noirs Réfugiés s'écartent sensiblement de celles des peuples africains dont ils sont issus. Elles ne comportent ni classes d'âge, ni société des hommes, ni initiation ; le mariage ne comporte ni contrat entre les parentés ni « dot ».

D'une façon générale ces sociétés fondées par des esclaves rebelles qui avaient gardé une horreur extrême de toute oppression, se sont organisées de façon à ne faire peser sur l'individu aucune contrainte matérielle. Leurs institutions sont entièrement fondées sur l'idée d'une protection contre les périls suprahumains ; l'individu demeure parfaitement libre, et il n'y adhère que dans la mesure où il a le sentiment de ces périls. La coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, privée de tout moyen de coercition matérielle, a tendance à développer chez l'individu le sentiment qu'il est constamment menacé, qu'il ne peut se protéger qu'en se soumettant à la loi du groupe. C'est sans doute là qu'il faut voir la raison profonde de l'importance attachée à la mort et au deuil, événements sur lesquels est centrée l'activité des sociétés coutumières, et qui entraînent une véritable mobilisation.

Il serait très difficile de condenser la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés en un code rigoureux. Si l'on voulait le faire, il faudrait écrire comme article 1 : « les vivants se conformeront à la volonté des dieux et des ancêtres, telle qu'elle s'exprime par la bouche des possédés et par les mouvements des porteurs des morts. »

Chacune des tribus des Noirs Réfugiés est formée d'une certain nombre de matrilignages.

Le nombre de ces lignages n'est pas limité et on peut affirmer que si un lignage quelconque détaché d'une autre tribu demande à vivre au milieu des Boni, il sera accueilli. Dès la première génération les enfants se considèrent comme Boni.

On peut citer à ce sujet l'exemple du lignage Awara Bakka 3, et celui du petit lignage fondé à Boniville par une femme Djuka épouse du grand man Ochi. Tous ses descendants se considèrent comme Boni.

Mais seuls les grands lignages qui constituaient la tribu à ses origines sont des unités sociales reconnues par le grand man, et seuls leurs chefs sont appelés à faire partie du conseil.

Nous étudierons d'abord le fonctionnement intérieur du lignage, puis les institutions dépassant le cadre des lignages.

Fonctionnement du lignage

Nous avons vu que le groupe social effectif, lo, fraction d'un lignage étendu, est une unité sociale possédant tout ce qui est nécessaire à un groupe humain pour vivre, régler ses différends et faire valoir ses droits :

- Un culte des ancêtres ;
- Un chef jouant à la fois le rôle de prêtre des ancêtres et de juge ;
- Des droits collectifs sur une portion de terre.

Un lignage pourrait parfaitement vivre indépendant sans aucun lien de dépendance vis-à-vis d'une tribu quelconque. Il existe effectivement, à l'intérieur de Surinam, plusieurs lignages d'origine très ancienne (qu'on englobe sous le nom de Bakabuchi = derrière la brousse) qui vivent totalement indépendants.

Il n'existe à l'intérieur du lignage aucune lignée privilégiée et la seule hiérarchie reconnue est celle de l'âge, ou plus exactement de la proximité de l'aïeule fondatrice.

La tutelle collective des oncles au sens classificatoire, n'est effective que dans le jeune âge, mais le principe en subsiste toute la vie. Dans une délibération un homme doit éviter de contredire violemment un de ses « oncles » et trouver normal qu'on attache plus de poids à l'opinion de cet oncle qu'à la sienne. Nous avons subi en 1956 des incidents désagréables du fait d'un bossman qui se trouvait être l'oncle au sens classificatoire (bien qu'il eût le même âge) du conducteur motoriste de son canot ; le conducteur hésitait à le commander vigoureusement comme il commandait son autre bossman, et lui, de son côté, ne manquait pas de rappeler à son « neveu » le respect qui lui était dû.

Cependant le lignage n'est pas à proprement parler divisé en classes d'âge, et quand les hommes se rassemblent en conseil pour une affaire intéressant la totalité du groupe, tous peuvent prendre la parole sans considération d'âge ni de place dans la généalogie.

Le conseil (Lundu). C'est la principale institution sociale à l'intérieur du lo. Le Lundu est l'assemblée des hommes du lo, sans considération d'âge. Aucune règle précise ne définit à partir de quel âge un adolescent peut y assister, et en principe tous peuvent prendre la parole. Mais la bienséance veut qu'à moins d'être personnellement intéressé à la question ou d'avoir quelque chose d'important à dire, les jeunes laissent parler les anciens.

C'est le capitaine (hedemã) et en son absence l'aîné du lignage, qui préside. Il fait face à l'assemblée, entouré de quelques-uns des plus anciens.

Il a en face de lui un répondant (piki mã) qui salue toutes ses phrases par les approbations rituelles hipa, hipa ha!, na so!, etc., sans lesquelles un Noir Réfugié ne pourrait prononcer convenablement son discours.

Chacun intervient ensuite s'il éprouve le besoin d'exprimer son opinion. Les femmes ne participent pas au conseil, à moins qu'il ne s'agisse du mariage d'une fille, mais il arrive que des hommes quittent la réunion pour aller prendre conseil de leur mère, et reprennent leur place. S'il s'agit d'une question simple et sans intrication surehumaine, comme la fixation du prix d'un travail, la discussion est souvent rapidement prise, mais dans le cas contraire la discussion se poursuit interminablement car il n'y a aucune règle précise pour conclure. Il n'existe qu'une règle négative : l'opposition déterminée d'un quart à un cinquième des membres du conseil empêche l'exécution d'un projet.

Il semble qu'on attende que l'unanimité se produise et qu'au fond (on retrouve ici les mécanismes mentaux particuliers des Noirs Réfugiés), on attende qu'elle se prenne toute seule, qu'elle s'impose comme une évidence. Si rien de tel ne se produit, on se sépare sans avoir rien décidé.

Cette discussion publique de toutes les questions importantes ne résulte pas tant, dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, d'une croyance en la sagesse des assemblées, que de la crainte de la malveillance. Si des questions étaient débattues en petit comité, il se trouverait aussitôt des esprits méfiants et jaloux pour y voir de sombres intrigues. Le souci constant des Noirs Réfugiés, quand ils ont quelque chose d'important à dire, est de trouver des témoins. C'est là en fait le rôle du conseil, et c'est pourquoi il n'y a ni limite inférieure d'âge pour en faire partie, ni règle précise sur la façon de conduire la discussion.

Le Capitaine ou hedemã. Le chef de chacun des grands lignages faisant partie de la tribu depuis son origine est reconnu par le grand man comme hedemã ou « Capitaine » (ce mot était employé depuis l'origine de l'installation des européens en Guyane pour désigner les chefs des tribus indiennes).

Les Capitaines président le kiuli kuulu, conseil suprême dont les fonctions sont principalement judiciaires.

Il n'existe aucune règle précise de succession, et le choix des membres du lignage est entièrement libre à l'égard des liens de parenté. Quand on interroge à ce sujet les anciens, ils répondent ordinairement que le successeur doit être choisi parmi les « neveux », au sens classificatoire du défunt, c'est-à-dire parmi les membres du lignage qui sont éloignés de la fondatrice d'une génération de plus.

Il suffit de consulter les tableaux généalogiques, sur chacun desquels nous avons mis en évidence la transmission de la fonction de Capitaine, pour se convaincre qu'on ne pratique rien de semblable : ce serait du reste impossible en fait. Le conseil choisit entre les « frères » et les « neveux » du défunt. Si la nomination est acquise, elle n'est valable que si le grand man n'oppose pas son veto. Il peut exiger qu'on recommence le conseil.

Le grand man observe pendant environ un an le comportement du nouveau chef, et s'il est satisfait de lui, il le convoque à Boniville avec les membres du lignage. Il lui remet le banc et le bâton de commandement (wuku liki) préparés par le doyen du lignage. Il le prend par la main et le fait asseoir sur le banc en le proclamant chef.

Cette nomination est faite à vie ; une fois nommé un Capitaine ne peut être révoqué.

La succession des trois derniers Capitaines du lo Dju est particulièrement intéressante (Voir le tableau généalogique de ce groupe).

En 1948, à notre premier passage, Diolè (E1) était Capitaine depuis près de 50 ans, succédant à Doomé dont nous n'avons pu situer exactement la place dans le tableau généalogique.

Diolè mourut en 1951, âgé de près de 90 ans. Au moment du deuil, on interrogea son gorko qui désigna (par l'intermédiaire des porteurs du cercueil) comme successeur souhaitable un de ses neveux au sens classificatoire, nommé Loko (F39).

Le conseil réuni dès la levée du deuil de Diolè, en 1952, approuva la désignation de Loko ; mais le grand man s'opposa à cette nomination car Loko s'était rendu coupable d'une faute grave (vol qualifié) et avait encouru une condamnation.

Le choix du conseil se porta alors sur Atikati (E18), le plus âgé d'entre eux (il avait plus de 70 ans), cela bien qu'il y eût d'autres neveux au sens classificatoire de Diolè, parfaitement capables.

Atikati mourut en 1955. Le choix du conseil, réuni en 1956, se porta sur Adiiso (F37), homme d'une soixantaine d'années.

La place des uns et des autres sur le tableau généalogique montre bien qu'il n'existe aucune règle précise de succession, et que le choix du conseil est libre.

De même, en regardant le tableau généalogique de lo Awara Bakka, divisé en 3 fractions, on voit que la fonction de Capitaine peut passer indifféremment de l'une à l'autre. Elle est passée de Asèmbay (Aw.B.2) à Pèèyon (Aw.B.1), puis à Kondoku (Aw. B.1).

Ces observations permettent d'affirmer qu'il n'y a pas, à l'intérieur du lignage, de ligne privilégiée[1].

Les petits lignages de fondation récente rattachés à un lo désignent chacun un chef : par exemple le lignage Afi a pour chef Awéni. Mais ce chef demeure soumis à l'autorité du Capitaine du lo et sa fonction n'a pas d'existence officielle.

(1) Entendant par ligne, faute d'un mot mieux approprié, un cheminement faisant correspondre à un individu, à la génération suivante, un individu unique choisi selon un critère déterminé. On pourrait parler par exemple dans certains types d'organisation de lignes d'aînés, jouant un rôle privilégié par rapport aux autres lignes constituant le lignage. Rien de semblable n'existe chez les Noirs Réfugiés.

La nomination est faite par un conseil -kuulu- du lignage, mais elle n'est valable qu'une fois avalisée par le grand man.

Quand le défunt Capitaine n'a pas de son vivant désigné de successeur, on interroge son gorèn pour savoir qui il préfère. Cela n'a pas force de loi mais peut influencer le conseil.

Le conseil se réunit quelques jours après la levée du deuil du défunt Capitaine. Tous les membres masculins du lignage sans considération d'âge donnent leur avis. On ne vote pas à proprement parler, mais on considère la nomination comme valable seulement si les trois quarts des assistants sont d'accord. Sinon on se sépare sans avoir rien décidé et le lignage peut rester sans chef pendant des années. On peut citer à ce sujet l'exemple du lo Awara Bakka qui est resté sans chef de 1935 (?) à 1953, jusqu'à la nomination de Konduku. Pendant ce temps le grand man avait désigné le Capitaine Popo, chef du lignage Lapé, pour assurer l'intérim. Quant aux fonctions religieuses, elles étaient assurées par le doyen du lignage.

Le capitaine exerce à l'intérieur du lignage les fonctions suivantes :

1) il est prêtre du culte des ancêtres et préside les prières et les offrandes faites devant le frugo liki. Dans cette fonction il est remplacé en cas d'absence par l'aîné du lignage.

En cas de mort d'un membre du lignage sous l'effet du kunu, le Capitaine convoque tous ses gens pour procéder aux prières collectives et aux offrandes destinées à apaiser les dieux ;

2) il exerce un pouvoir judiciaire étendu, car il est admis que le pouvoir judiciaire et politique de la tribu ne peut intervenir dans les affaires entre membres du même lignage, même les affaires de meurtre, car on peut dire qu'à l'égard de la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, le lignage ne représente qu'une seule vie.

Doivent obligatoirement être réglées dans le cadre du lignage :

— Les accusations de meurtre par sorcellerie où victime et meurtrier supposé sont l'un et l'autre membres du lignage ;

— Les contestations sur des terres à l'intérieur des zones possédées effectivement par le lignage.

La façon dont le Capitaine exerce ses fonctions de juge est difficile à connaître, car pour les Noirs Réfugiés, il est extrêmement honteux de révéler les dissensions intérieures à son propre lignage. Et quant à celles des autres lignages, si l'on vient à les connaître, on n'ose guère en parler car si cela venait à se savoir il pourrait vous en cuire.

Les chefs de lignage ont une certaine autorité sur le plan matériel ; ils désignent les hommes chargés d'exécuter les travaux commandés par l'administration, mais à vrai dire il s'agit surtout de choisir entre des volontaires, car ce sont des travaux avantageux. Il n'est pas certain qu'ils parviendraient à imposer des ordres nettement impopulaires.

Le Capitaine désigne pour l'aider un certain nombre de surveillants ou basia. Leur rôle consiste à veiller à la propreté du village, à prendre toutes les dispositions matérielles relatives aux danses et aux enterrements, à convoquer les intéressés aux réunions du conseil.

Le lo constitue une unité au point de vue spirituel, mais il importe de remarquer qu'il ne comporte aucune organisation collective sur le plan matériel. Dans ce domaine règne l'individualisme le plus forcené ; il n'y a pas d'outils d'usage collectif et les gens ne se groupent pour faire leurs abattis que dans la mesure où ils le veulent bien.

Les basia sont les porte-paroles du capitaine, et non pas des adjoints ayant un commandement précis sur une fraction déterminée du village. Ils sont au nombre de 3 ou 4 par village ; en outre il y a une ou deux femmes basia, par l'intermédiaire desquelles le chef du village commande les travaux réservés aux femmes.

Le chef du lignage ne possède pas de pouvoirs religieux sur la terre. Les Noirs Réfugiés admettent que la fécondité du sol dépend exclusivement de divinités locales, que chacun prie pour son compte.

Le Capitaine, pas plus que le conseil, n'a le droit de chasser un membre du lignage, même pour indignité caractérisée. C'est un des aspects les plus remarquables des conceptions juridiques des Noirs Réfugiés, lié à l'idée qu'un lignage ne représente qu'une seule vie. Là encore la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés peut être regardée comme l'extrême opposé de la pensée des Bamiléké, où le chef seul détient les droits sur la terre, l'expulsion constituant la sanction sociale suprême.

Initiation ; classes d'âges ; société des hommes. Ces institutions africaines paraissent totalement ignorées des Noirs Réfugiés. Il n'existe aucune forme d'initiation des adolescents, et aucune cérémonie ne marque collectivement leur entrée dans la vie sociale. La circoncision et l'excision ne sont pas pratiquées. Pour les enfants, garçons et filles, il y a deux étapes : celle du premier vêtement, qui est donné à l'apparition des poils pubiens, vers 12-13 ans, sans cérémonie, et la fin de l'éducation qui coïncide avec le mariage.

La société des Noirs Réfugiés repose pourtant en grande partie sur la hiérarchie de l'âge ; il n'y a pas de classes d'âges à proprement parler, comportant une organisation précise, mais elles existent tacitement :

La classe des jeunes, gupku sama, a des activités précises ; la « mode » c'est-à-dire l'élégance, la danse, le chant ; elle possède un langage spécial fabriqué à partir du taki-taki par interversion ou adjonction de syllabes. Quand le langage commence à être connu hors du groupe des jeunes, on l'abandonne et on en invente un autre. Ces dernières années le langage en vogue était l'akupina, d'origine Djuka ; il avait donné naissance à tout un folklore de chants.

Deux autres classes d'âges paraissent assez nettement différenciées : celle des anciens

-pul sumo- (à partir d'une cinquantaine d'années) dont la voix est prépondérante dans les conseils, et celle des vieillards -gulandi sumo- (à partir de 65 à 70 ans).

Il est admis par tous que seuls les anciens possèdent la sagesse et la connaissance, et en principe, dans une discussion, l'opinion du plus ancien fait force de loi.

On n'aperçoit pas non plus chez les Noirs Réfugiés de sociétés coutumières jouant un rôle comparable à la société des hommes au Soudan par exemple. D'une façon générale leur vie sociale, très individualiste en dépit des apparences, ne connaît d'autre organisation que celle qui résulte des liens de parenté.

Cependant l'organisation des hommes à l'intérieur de chaque village en vue des cérémonies de deuil peut être regardée comme une ébauche de sociétés coutumières :

— Kisimi ou faiseurs de cercueils ;

— Obmi ou fossoyeurs.

Mais ces sociétés sont étroitement spécialisées et leurs pouvoirs coutumiers n'existent que pendant la durée de leur travail effectif.

Hommes et femmes. Même à l'intérieur du lignage où les hommes et femmes s'appellent frère, sœur, tante ... les rapports entre hommes et femmes sont marqués par la défiance.

Il est admis une fois pour toutes que les femmes sont des mégères sur lesquelles on ne peut pas compter et dont on ne peut rien tirer. Les Noirs Réfugiés sont intarissables sur ce chapitre et leur opinion sur les femmes de leur groupe est très semblable à celle des Africains en général : ils les disent méchantes, dépourvues de sentiments affectifs, égoïstes, cupides et infidèles.

D'une façon générale les femmes sont tenues à l'écart de la vie sociale régulière ; il n'existe aucune forme de société coutumière de femmes. Dans les cérémonies de deuil, qui correspondent à une véritable mobilisation du village, elles ne jouent aucun rôle, sinon de préparer les repas.

Les femmes jouent pourtant indirectement un rôle important dans la vie sociale, par le biais des cultes de possession. Les dieux Papa gadu si redoutés ont presque exclusivement pour porteurs des femmes, et nous verrons en étudiant le fonctionnement du kunu, qu'elles en sont les acteurs principaux. Par cette activité qui s'exerce de façon arbitraire, en marge des institutions de la vie sociale régulière, les femmes entretiennent autour d'elles une atmosphère de crainte ; il n'est pas impossible que le fonctionnement de ces cultes soit influencé par le souci des femmes de maintenir leur position privilégiée dans la société des Noirs Réfugiés.

Beaucoup de femmes sont charitables et ont une certaine générosité à l'égard des membres de leur famille, assurant l'entretien des vieillards sans ressource. Mais leur bienveillance est essentiellement subjective, et ne s'étend qu'à un petit cercle d'amis personnels et à leurs plus proches parents. Dès que les anciens font appel à elles pour une question d'intérêt général, prétendent leur donner des ordres ou même des conseils, ils rencontrent une attitude systématiquement malveillante et butée.

Les chefs de lignage évitent de leur donner des ordres directement, car ils risquent fort de se faire insulter, ainsi que nous l'avons observé à maintes reprises.

En mars 1957, Awéni, chef du lignage Afi, établi à Asini, se préoccupa de regrouper les membres de son lignage et notamment de faire rentrer à Asini Magdaléna (c20), femme âgée d'environ 45 ans, qui s'était installée à Kormotibo auprès de son mari L... (? 1956), avec ses enfants et d'autres qu'elle avait élevés. Il se rendit à Kormotibo et lui représenta que son mari étant mort, elle n'avait plus de raison de rester là et qu'elle devait revenir à Asini. Magdaléna l'insulta devant les habitants du village, proclama qu'elle n'avait d'ordres à recevoir de personne, puis comme il insistait, elle s'armait d'un bâton et le poursuivit à travers le village jusqu'au dégrad. Il dut rembarquer précipitamment sous les rires des gens de Kormotibo.

Pouvoir politique et judiciaire

Le grand man. C'est le chef du lo Dikan qui exerce la fonction de grand man des Boni. Le grand man actuel Difu était âgé en 1958 de 67 ans environ.

La tradition orale a retenu le nom de ses sept prédécesseurs :

Gongo (lo Dikan)	1810-1840	dates indiquées d'après Coudreau
Labi (Adam?) (lo Dikan)	1840-1870
Myaba (lo Kotika)	1870-1876
Amato (lo Kotika)	1876-1891
Ochi (lo Dikan)	1891-1915
Awensay id.	1917-1936
Difu id.	depuis 1937.

D'après les renseignements recueillis par Coudreau en 1887, Gongo était le successeur d'Agoso, lui-même successeur de Boni. A la mort de Labi, il n'y avait dans le lo Dikan que des femmes et des enfants. La fonction de grand man est alors passée au lo Kotika avec Myaba et Amato. Elle est ensuite revenue au lo Dikan avec Ochi.

En 1957, le lignage Dikan était pratiquement éteint. Il ne restait plus que le grand man Difu et son frère aîné Samalobi, très âgé.

L'actuel grand man ne connaît pas la généalogie de son lignage au-delà de sa grand-mère.

Fig. 11. Filiation des trois dernies grands mans des Boni

A la mort d'Awenasy c'était Samalobi, aîné des neveux au sens classificatoire de Awenasy qui devait être nommé, mais l'administration française crut devoir s'y opposer, le jugeant trop âgé ; il s'inclina de bonne grâce.

Samalobi, l'aïeul, le patriarche des Boni, est mort en mai 1957, âgé de plus de 100 ans. Bien que très diminué par ses infirmités et presque aveugle, il conservait un grand prestige et aucune décision importante n'était prise sans son consentement.

Fils d'Apatu, compagnon de Crevaux, il avait conservé un souvenir précis de l'explorateur qu'il avait accompagné pendant une partie de sa randonnée en 1877. C'est grâce à ses souvenirs que le prestige de Crevaux est resté si grand sur le Maroni.

Le grand man juge sans appel les contestations entre les membres de lignages différents. Les affaires vraiment sérieuses sont extrêmement rares, si l'on tient compte de ce que :

— Les contestations sur le versement de dot, le reversement en cas de divorce et l'attribution des enfants, qui forment l'essentiel des causes plaidées devant les juridictions coutumières africaines, n'existent pas chez les Noirs Réfugiés ;

— Les contestations sur l'appropriation des terres sont fort rares en pays Boni, vue la faible densité de population.

Nous n'avons jamais vu le grand man tenir autre chose que des audiences de conciliation, relatives à des gens qui s'étaient battus ou menacés. La coutume des Noirs Réfugiés se laisserait en fait difficilement enfermer dans un code. État des personnes et devoirs sociaux découlent si directement des croyances que l'intervention d'un juge n'est pas indispensable au fonctionnement de la société.

Le grand man est supposé détenir un pouvoir sur toutes les terres du pays Boni qui ne sont pas appropriées aux lignages ; c'est en particulier le cas du bassin supérieur des rivières formatrices du Lawa. C'est à ce titre surtout qu'il se considère comme le suzerain des Indiens vivant sur ce territoire. La même conception existe chez les Djuka vis-à-vis des rivières formatrices du Tapanahoni.

La suzeraineté du grand man sur la terre et les eaux est marquée, comme en Afrique, par des droits spéciaux dans le domaine de la chasse et de la pêche. Seul il peut autoriser la pêche en groupe sur le grand fleuve par le procédé de la nivrée. Le même problème ne se pose pas pour la chasse qui est pratiquée de façon strictement individuelle. Mais il est admis que si un tapir[1] est tué en pays Boni, le chasseur doit en porter la tête au grand man ainsi qu'une cuisse.

Un certain malentendu règne entre les européens et les Boni au sujet des fonctions du grand man. Les européens ont tendance à croire qu'il commande la tribu à la façon dont un colonel commande un régiment, qu'il peut désigner un tel pour tel travail, fixer le prix des canots, etc. Le grand man s'efforce de donner satisfaction à l'administration pour justifier la solde qu'il perçoit, mais il y réussit fort mal, car en réalité il ne possède à peu près aucun pouvoir temporel.

(1) Le tapir est le plus grand animal de la brousse.

La morale des Noirs Réfugiés ne connaît en effet que des obligations d'ordre social et religieux. Pour tout ce qui concerne la vie matérielle, chacun a le droit absolu, on pourrait même dire le devoir, d'agir comme bon lui semble, dans la mesure où il ne lèse personne.

Si le grand man donnait un ordre obligeant quelqu'un à agir contre son intérêt, par exemple s'il voulait réduire arbitrairement le prix des canots, cet ordre serait nul de plein droit. Si le grand man a une très grande influence personnelle, il peut persuader les Boni que leur intérêt est d'obéir à telle prescription, mais en aucun cas son commandement ne peut avoir pour effet d'imposer par la force un ordre arbitraire étranger à la tradition sociale et religieuse ; le grand man actuel est par surcroît d'un caractère faible, sensible à l'influence des créoles et très peu porté à faire acte d'autorité.

En réalité la fonction de grand man est d'ordre surtout religieux. Le grand man centralise, si l'on peut dire, la lutte contre les forces mauvaises, et veille sans cesse au salut de la collectivité.

Quand un homme meurt, ses proches viennent rendre compte de l'interrogatoire du gorôo. L'enterrement ne peut avoir lieu qu'après que le grand man se soit assuré que toutes les prescriptions ont été remplies. On vient lui rendre compte une fois encore après l'enterrement pour qu'il s'assure qu'aucun danger surhumain ne subsiste.

Le grand man a un pouvoir particulier sur les gorôo (esprits) des défunts, que les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés placent pourtant sur un plan intermédiaire entre l'humain et le divin. Quand un de ces gorôo exerce contre un lignage une vengeance (kunu) dont la malignité dépasse les bornes habituelles, le grand man l'adjure de cesser ; on affirme que les choses rentrent dans l'ordre, au moins pour quelque temps.

Ce pouvoir attribué au grand man le revêt, aux yeux des Boni, d'un caractère surhumain. Il est le fondement même de son pouvoir politique.

Le grand man fait fonction de chef de terre pour l'ensemble de la tribu. C'est lui qui a la garde du sanctuaire de mama gô et qui prie chaque année en présence d'un grand concours de peuple pour la fécondité du sol.

Le grand man est le prêtre de Odun, divinité que les Boni regardent comme vengeur des fautes contre la loi morale et religieuse ; à ce titre, il est seul qualifié pour faire prêter le serment contre wifi (sorcellerie), et implorer la clémence de Odun à l'égard de ceux qui ont contrevenu à ses lois en se battant à main armée.

Dans ses fonctions religieuses, cet homme habituellement faible et effacé agit avec une autorité et une assurance souveraines, et nous avons vu à plusieurs reprises les gens trembler devant lui.

Si quelqu'un a contrevenu gravement aux lois coutumières, ou s'il a volé, commis l'adultère, donné des coups, proféré des injures graves ou des malédictions, le grand man lui inflige une punition proportionnée à la gravité de la faute, telle que faire des planches, un canot, piler du riz (s'il s'agit d'une femme). Le produit de la punition est acquis au grand man, de même que les amendes en argent qu'il inflige dans des cas moins graves.

Par exemple en octobre 1953, deux adolescents de Boniville, Awétipay et Adyuka, furent surpris alors qu'ils essayaient de s'introduire dans une maison inhabitée ; le grand man les condamna séance tenante à trois jours de travaux forcés, au cours desquels il leur fit nettoyer les abords du village et accumuler à son profit du bois de chauffage.

Il peut aussi punir des jeunes gens désobéissants ou irrespectueux en leur faisant exécuter des travaux réservés aux femmes, tels que le désherbage des abords du village et l'enlèvement des crottes de chien.

Le grand man peut consigner un homme dans les villages Boni en lui interdisant de dépasser l'Enfant Perdu vers le Nord et Kormotibo vers le Sud ; cela s'appelle silufu sama (silufu = captif). L'intéressé, mis hors d'état de gagner sa vie, tombe ainsi à la charge de sa famille jusqu'à ce qu'il fasse amende honorable.

Cela s'est produit notamment pour des gens qui, convoqués pour travailler dans les abattis du grand man, s'acquittaient de leur tâche avec mauvaise volonté.

Vers 1950, M..., du village Papaston, s'était mis en révolte ouverte contre le grand man qu'il avait refusé de conduire à Saint-Laurent. Le grand man le condamna à faire un grand escalier en planches, du dégrad de Boniville jusqu'à l'entrée du village, le mettant en demeure s'il refusait, de quitter le pays. M..., finit par s'incliner et exécuta le grand escalier qu'on voit actuellement au dégrad de Boniville.

Le grand man a un constant souci de son prestige et de sa dignité ; il est presque toujours vêtu à l'européenne et porte dans les cérémonies un uniforme blanc impeccable ; l'administration française lui verse une solde relativement importante et, quand il vient à Cayenne, il est logé à l'hôpital dans les appartements réservés aux officiers.

Pour saluer le grand man on ne le regarde pas en face, mais on se place de profil par rapport à lui.

Le grand man n'a pas de serviteurs (ce serait contraire à la morale des Noirs Réfugiés) et mène une vie très simple. Toutefois, il n'exécute pas de travaux manuels pénibles ; chaque année il convoque un certain nombre d'hommes de chaque lo pour travailler à ses abattis ; il ne les paie pas, car ce travail est une obligation prévue par la coutume, mais il les nourrit largement.

De même, pour ses déplacements, il requiert à tour de rôle comme canotiers deux ou trois de ses sujets. Il lui arrive aussi de requérir des femmes pour aider sa femme au moment de la récolte.

Par contre, pour tous les autres travaux dont il peut avoir besoin (comme la construction d'un grand canot) il faut qu'il paie comme tout le monde et on ne lui fera pas de réduction.

Le grand man actuel, au contraire de ses prédécesseurs, n'a qu'une femme ; celle-ci est vêtue comme les autres femmes et travaille à son abattis comme tout le monde, mais son mariage avec le grand man lui impose des obligations particulières : elle ne peut divorcer, de même qu'il ne peut la répudier.

L'attitude des Boni à l'égard du grand man est un curieux mélange de respect et de dénigrement. Ils le regardent comme le symbole vivant de leur nation, et chacun ressent comme une injure personnelle qu'un étranger ait à son égard une attitude incorrecte. Mais leur esprit frondeur se cabre devant les mesures qu'il est obligé de prendre pour faire respecter la loi coutumière, et même l'autorité d'un homme pondéré et bienveillant comme le grand man Difu, n'est pas acceptée volontiers. En fait les Boni supportent l'autorité du grand man comme ils adhèrent au culte de leurs dieux, par le sentiment d'une absolue et inexorable nécessité ; dans leur esprit le grand man est avant tout le prêtre d'Odjun ; si le grand man n'était pas là ils seraient sans défense contre les wisiman, sans recours contre la vengeance exercée par les gaba des morts des autres lignages.

Le pouvoir politique du grand man est entièrement fondé sur ces croyances, et si elles venaient à s'effondrer il disparaîtrait avec elles. Personne ne se soumettrait à une autre loi qu'à celle du lignage, fondée sur la crainte des ancêtres.

Le lindi kuulu. C'est l'assemblée des hommes, sans distinction d'âge[1] ou de parenté ; ce conseil (lindi = loi) constitue l'appareil judiciaire des Boni.

Un principe essentiel de la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés est que tout citoyen porte en lui la loi. Si quelques hommes sont sollicités d'arbitrer une querelle privée, on dit qu'ils forment un lindi kuulu. Mais ils ne peuvent rendre qu'une sentence de conciliation. Seule l'assemblée générale convoquée par le grand man possède le pouvoir d'imposer sa décision.

Le rôle ordinaire du lindi kuulu est de juger les morts, de s'assurer qu'ils n'étaient pas wisiman (sorciers), de procéder à leur interrogatoire pour donner aux réponses force de loi, notamment en ce qui concerne l'héritage.

Le lindi kuulu se réunit à l'annonce d'un décès ; les premiers arrivés se rendent auprès du grand man qui désigne deux des capitaines pour présider le conseil pour cette fois (car tous les membres sont égaux). En fait, rares sont les conseils où assistent tous les hommes présents dans les villages. La plupart du temps le lindi kuulu ne groupe qu'une trentaine d'hommes, en majorité des vieillards.

Le lindi kuulu se réunit très rarement pour juger un vivant. Cela n'est arrivé que trois fois entre 1948 et 1957.

En 1948 le grand man a convoqué le lindi kuulu pour juger un homme qui, régulièrement convoqué comme canotier pour le conduire à Saint-Laurent, n'était pas venu. Il fut condamné à faire autour de l'habitation du grand man une palissade de pieux qui prit plus d'un mois de travail.

(1) Il n'y a pas de règle précise pour fixer l'âge à partir duquel un adolescent peut siéger dans un conseil. C'est semble-t-il quand il a atteint son plein développement physique et gagne sa vie par ses propres moyens, vers 18 à 20 ans. Il n'est pas nécessaire qu'il soit marié.

En 1953, le conseil s'est réuni pour juger Loko (Dju) qui s'était rendu coupable d'un vol qualifié (naufrage simulé au préjudice d'un commerçant de Benzdorp et revente des marchandises), pour lequel il avait été condamné par la justice française à plusieurs mois de prison. Loko dut faire amende honorable en présence des membres de son lignage rassemblés, puis il fut condamné à faire 50 planches au profit du grand man.

En août 1957, le conseil s'est réuni pour juger Pototo (Asini-Dju), 23 ans, et Amusupé (Asini-Aw.B.), 70 ans, qui s'étaient rendus coupables d'une faute grave : détournement d'un tapir (malpouri) tué par un Djuka qui, ayant de la reconnaissance envers le grand man, avait manifesté l'intention de lui offrir une partie de la viande.

Le Djuka avait tué le tapir qui avait coulé. Pressé par le temps, il avait dû partir, recommandant aux gens d'Asini de le chercher.

Le jour suivant, Pototo et Amusupé trouvèrent l'animal flottant entre deux eaux. Ils le cachèrent en brousse et le firent boucaner pour leur compte. Ils le mangèrent avec leurs femmes (environ 100 kilos de viande).

Cela finit par se savoir et un jaloux les dénonça au grand man.

Convoqués devant le lânti kuulu, ils durent faire amende honorable et furent condamnés chacun à verser à titre d'amende au grand man, une dame-jeanne de 15 litres de tafia (valeur environ 6000 francs) dans un délai de quatre mois.

L'un et l'autre étaient fort en peine de verser cette amende, appartenant à la catégorie des fainéants qui n'ont aucune activité régulière et vivent au jour le jour, vendant de temps à autre quelque poisson ou gibier.

Amusupé s'adressa au capitaine Konduku, chef de son lignage, qui accepta de verser ce tafia pour lui, Amusupé le remboursant petit à petit.

Quant à Pototo, le chef de son lignage refusa catégoriquement de l'aider, parce qu'il avait mangé ce malpouri seul sans en faire profiter sa famille (les gens du village auraient trouvé normal de profiter du délit, mais ils jugeaient immoral qu'un des leurs les eût privés de viande). Après trois mois et demi, Pototo commença à se préoccuper sérieusement d'un travail salarié qu'il eut la chance de trouver, du fait que nous avions besoin d'un boscmaï pendant 15 jours.

En nous racontant cette histoire, les Boni ne faisaient que rire. Les affaires de ce genre, qui ne comportent aucune intervention surhumaine, échappent dans une large mesure à leur morale sociale ; ils ont un certain sentiment de ce qu'il faudrait faire, mais ne s'y soumettent que dans la mesure où ils craignent une sanction matérielle et immédiate.

En fait la société des Noirs Réfugiés n'a pas élaboré de véritables institutions politiques ; c'est essentiellement un groupement de défense collective contre les périls surhumains. Le conseil, comme le grand man, n'a de pouvoir et d'autorité que dans la mesure où il reste étroitement lié à cette fonction.

Absence de subordination. Il n'existe chez les Noirs Réfugiés aucune classe privilégiée et tous sont placés devant la vie sur un pied de rigoureuse égalité ; tous reçoivent la même éducation, doivent cultiver la terre, construire leurs canots et leurs maisons, et vivre de travaux rémunérés. Les différences de niveau de vie que l'on observe de l'un à l'autre tiennent essentiellement à l'intelligence et au travail, et cela, malgré la croyance à la possibilité de s'enrichir par sorcellerie, est clairement compris de tous.

Fig. 15 — Type de maison des Noirs-Bétonnés : village Loulé (Upoko du Haut Lapounchoum)

Bien que les Boni pratiquent volontiers le travail salarié les uns pour les autres en matière de canotage de transport, il n'existe aucune tendance à la formation d'une classe de riches et d'une classe de salariés. Il n'existe pas chez eux de serviteurs et l'on n'observe dans leurs rapports mutuels aucune exploitation des faibles. On n'observe pas non plus qu'un homme riche essaie de faire faire par un autre, moyennant salaire, les travaux coutumiers qu'il doit exécuter au profit de sa femme (abattis, construction de canots). Ce serait très mal jugé. Le grand man lui-même, si son petit-fils n'est pas là pour l'aider, va puiser de l'eau lui-même à la rivière et il le fait ostensiblement, bien qu'il ait un constant souci de son prestige.

Les malheurs subis par leurs ancêtres sont certainement à la base de cette conception car ils ont inspiré aux Noirs Réfugiés un sens particulier de la dignité humaine, que l'on ne trouve pas au même degré en Afrique.

On n'observe traditionnellement chez eux aucune forme de commerce[1], cette activité étant manifestement liée pour eux à l'idée d'exploitation d'autrui ; il n'y a même pas, dans les villages, de marché. Chacun produit, ou trouve auprès des gens de son lignage, ce qui est nécessaire à son alimentation ; quant aux objets d'importation, les Boni les achètent au cours de leurs voyages, aux commerçants de la côte. Cette plaie des sociétés africaines qu'est le pseudo-commerce, le parasitisme, est inconnue des Noirs Réfugiés. De même qu'on ne rencontre chez eux ni loqueteux ni mendiants, on n'aperçoit dans leurs rapports sociaux rien de malpropre ni de bas.

Il y a dans leur vie collective quelque chose de net, de propre, qui frappe dès le premier abord et qu'on ne se lasse pas d'admirer à mesure qu'on pénètre le fonctionnement de leurs institutions.

(1) Depuis 1954, l'un d'eux, enrichi par le canotage de transport, a monté un commerce d'alimentation à Kotika, mais il n'agit d'un homme plus qu'à demi créolisé et qui s'est installé au milieu des créoles.

CHAPITRE V

ÉTUDE DE LA RÉPARTITION DES TERRES ENTRE LES LIGNAGES[1]

L'APPROPRIATION DE LA TERRE DANS LE DROIT COUTUMIER DES NOIRS RÉFUGIÉS

Le principe fondamental du droit coutumier des Noirs Réfugiés, en ce qui concerne la terre, est que seul le lignage peut détenir ses droits réels. L'individu ne peut détenir qu'un droit d'usage, qui disparaît à sa mort.

Ce droit concerne exclusivement le travail de la terre en vue des plantations, et ne s'étend pas, ainsi que nous le verrons plus loin, à la chasse et à la cueillette.

Chaque lignage possède des droits reconnus sur certaines portions de terre, plus ou moins bien délimitées selon la densité de la population, mais connus de tous et ne donnant lieu (tout au moins en pays Boni) à aucune contestation.

Droit d'usage. A l'intérieur de ces zones, il y a indivision des droits entre tous les membres du lignage ; chacun a des droits d'usage sur un certain nombre d'« abattis » qu'il a l'habitude d'utiliser à tour de rôle pour faire ses plantations.

Le droit d'usage peut être donné : par exemple si quelqu'un estime n'avoir plus besoin d'un abattis qu'il cultivait habituellement, il donne le droit de l'utiliser à un autre membre du lignage.

La terre détenue par droit d'usage ne peut être vendue ni louée, mais seulement prêtée. Elle ne peut non plus être transmise par héritage ; ce serait entièrement contraire à la pensée et à la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, hostiles à tout ce qui porterait atteinte à l'indivision juridique du lignage. L'héritage porte exclusivement sur la récolte des abattis en cours. Cette récolte faite, la terre peut être occupée par n'importe quel membre du lignage, homme ou femme, qui désire la cultiver, et s'il y a contestation, elle est obligatoirement réglée à l'intérieur du lignage ; le grand man refuserait de la juger. Le degré de parenté n'intervient pas au moins en principe, du moment qu'on peut se dire « frère », « oncle » ou « grand-père » au sens classificatoire.

(1) Partie rédigée avec le concours de M. P. Fromy, Adjoint technique Géographe.

La seule atténuation prévue par la coutume à la rigueur de ce principe est qu'à la mort d'une femme, ses filles ont un droit de priorité pour utiliser ses terres.

Les Noirs Réfugiés ont une nette tendance à rester fidèles tout au long de leur vie, aux mêmes abattis. L'étude que nous avons faite des abattis du pays Boni renseigne mal sur l'histoire de chaque abattis, car il aurait fallu pouvoir consulter sur place un grand nombre de gens, ce que nous n'avons pu faire ; elle permet cependant d'affirmer qu'au voisinage des villages de résidence, les individus conservent leur droit d'usage sur un abattis tout au long de leur vie.

Voici par exemple la transmission des droits sur les abattis 101 à 112 (voir tableau généalogique du lo Dju)[1].

Abattis étudiés en janvier 1957

	Dernier utilisateur	année	transmission des droits d'usage
101	○ Tembura (G30)	1955	a occupé cette terre à la mort de sa mère.
102	○ Kukusa (F40)	1953	droit créé par Kukusa en défrichant une forêt secondaire ancienne sans usager connu.
103	○ Paana (G2)	1955	abattis défriché par ○ Wima (E3) ; transmis de son vivant à sa fille ○ Tini (F1), puis à ○ Pamasa (E26), élevée par Tini. Pamasa y a cultivé une fois puis a donné son droit à ○ Paana, fille de Tiya.
104	○ Tini (F1)	1954	droit créé par Tini (F1), qui l'a défriché pour la première fois (vers 1930?) ; elle l'a coupé 3 fois en tout ; conserve son droit d'usage.
105	○ Lenga (F37)	1954	défriché par ○ Lenga pour la première fois (vers 1920?). Elle l'a coupé 3 fois en tout ; conserve son droit d'usage.
106	○ Fêni (G3)	1954	a occupé cette terre à la mort de △ Agasbuchi, vieillard du lignage Dju (place sur le tableau généalogique incertaine).

(1) Voir à la fin de l'ouvrage la planche : Répartition des terres au voisinage des principaux villages Boni.

	Dernier utilisateur	année	transmission des droits d'usage
107	○ Tini (F1)	1955	c'est △ Loka (D13) † 1951, qui a défriché cette terre voici longtemps. Il a cédé de son vivant son droit à ○ Tini, qui à coupé 2 fois en tout.
108	○ Tini (F1)	1955	a occupé cette terre à la mort de ○ Asono (E7) † 1953, aïeule qui cultivait là depuis longtemps.
109	○ Félicia (G41)	1954	a occupé cette terre à la mort de ○ Anna † (E22), sa grand-mère.
110	○ Téodore (G20)	1956	a occupé cette terre à la mort de sa mère Dondo † 1954 qui l'avait elle-même occupée à la mort de sa mère Anna (E22).

Donc sur 10 abattis nous ne trouvons que deux cas où un membre du lignage ait donné de son vivant son droit d'usage à un autre ; dans 4 cas le droit d'usage a été repris par une fille à la mort de sa mère ; dans 2 cas il est passé à un parent éloigné.

N'importe qui, homme ou femme, peut détenir des droits d'usage. Mais l'examen des abattis montre que la grande majorité des hommes n'en demandent pas, et que la presque totalité des terres est appropriée aux femmes. Dans l'exemple indiqué, sur 10 abattis, un seul est approprié à un homme. Ceci tient à ce que la plupart des hommes se contentent de couper les abattis de leurs femmes sur les terres de celles-ci, mais ne se soucient pas de cultiver pour leur compte.

Chaque femme détient des droits d'usage sur un certain nombre d'abattis, répartis dans les différentes zones territoriales de son lignage. Il est important d'avoir, si l'on peut dire, beaucoup de cordes à son arc, car il faut pouvoir, selon l'activité des fourmis-manioc, passer d'un secteur à l'autre, ou au contraire reprendre prématurément un abattis qu'on espérait laisser en jachère quelques années.

Par exemple Tini (F1) détient des droits sur 6 à 7 abattis. Pour l'un (n° 104), elle a créé le droit d'usage à son profit en le défrichant sur forêt secondaire ancienne sans propriétaire connu. Pour un autre (n° 107), elle l'a reçu de Loka (D13), parent éloigné, par donation du vivant de celui-ci. Pour les autres (par exemple le n° 106), elle a créé le droit à son profit en les cultivant la première à la mort de leur détenteur.

Le droit d'usage peut être prêté, soit à un membre du lignage, soit même à un étranger. Il est spécifié que ce prêt est fait pour un certain nombre d'années, et qu'il est révocable. En pareil cas le donateur ne perd pas son droit d'usage.

Droit réel. Le principe est que celui qui défriche un abattis sur forêt primaire (ou sur forêt secondaire ancienne sans possesseur connu) crée, en même temps qu'un droit d'usage pour lui, un droit réel imprescriptible pour son lignage.

Ces deux notions sont bien distinctes dans l'esprit des Noirs Réfugiés. L'exercice d'un droit d'usage, même pendant très longtemps, sur une terre déjà reconnue comme possession d'un autre lignage, ne crée aucun droit réel.

Par exemple ○ Béniti † 1963 (E5), vieille femme du lo Dju, avait fondé une habitation de culture au lieu-dit Kuyaku, où elle travailla la terre pendant plusieurs dizaines d'années. Mais comme ces terres, bien qu'inoccupées, étaient regardées comme possession du lo Dipélu II (village Kormotibo), le travail de Béniti n'a créé aucun droit pour le lo Dju. Ses filles ne s'entendent pas et si l'habitation disparaît, ce sont des gens du lo Dipélu II qui pourront occuper les terres.

Conséquences de la scission matérielle d'un lignage. Quand une fraction A' d'un lignage A émigre et va s'implanter sur la terre d'un autre village B qui lui cède une portion de terre, les membres de la fraction A' ainsi isolée conservent tous leurs droits sur la terre d'où ils sont issus. Mais la réciproque n'est pas vraie : les gens restés dans le village d'origine du lignage (A) n'ont aucun droit sur la terre concédée aux A' sur le territoire de B.

Au bout d'un certain temps, et surtout si le lignage (B) n'avait jamais occupé réellement la terre concédée, on admet que le lignage (A') en est possesseur sans restriction.

C'est le cas par exemple de la fraction des Dipélu II qui vers 1930 a quitté le village de Kormotibo pour s'établir à Asisi auprès du lignage Awara Bakka. Les Awara Bakka leur ont concédé des terres inoccupées près du village d'Asisi au lieu-dit Tapo. Cette fraction, forte actuellement d'une trentaine de personnes, considère qu'elle a des droits exclusifs sur ces terres où les gens de Kormotibo ne peuvent venir cultiver, mais elle n'a rien perdu pour autant de ses droits sur le terroir de Kormotibo.

Cas du village de Boniville. Ce village constitue un cas particulièrement intéressant, car il réunit de petites fractions des divers lignages fixées là définitivement. Il permet de comprendre quelle pouvait être l'implantation territoriale des Noirs Réfugiés vers la fin du XVIIIe siècle, au moment où s'élaboraient leurs institutions.

Le principe est que les terres de Boniville appartiennent au grand man, dernier représentant du lignage Dikan ; il a concédé individuellement aux habitants du village le droit de cultiver sur ses terres. Ces habitants ne détiennent donc qu'un droit d'usage, et il ne peut y avoir de concurrence entre eux pour la détention des droits réels. Mais le principe de la transmission du droit d'usage dans le même lignage subsiste pour chaque abattis pris séparément. Par exemple, Klémenti (Dju, F7), qui a défriché un abattis sur la forêt primaire, admet qu'après lui sa terre pourra être occupée par n'importe quel membre du lignage Dju résidant à Boniville, mais pas par les membres du lignage Dju résidant à Asisi.

Peu nombreux sur un secteur territorial relativement vaste, les habitants de Boniville n'ont pas éprouvé le besoin de diviser le secteur concédé par le grand man en zones territoriales précises. Il est difficile de prévoir ce qui arrivera après la mort du grand man Difu, quand les droits d'usage se transformeront en droits réels. Il est probable qu'une division territoriale entre les fractions de lignage établies à Boniville se créera insensiblement, par le simple fait qu'une concurrence s'établira entre elles.

Droit de pêche, de chasse, de cueillette et d'exploitation des minéraux. Ces droits sont totalement distincts du droit de cultiver ; à cet égard les conceptions des Noirs Réfugiés traduisent la précarité des liens entre l'individu et le sol, qui résulte des conditions écologiques.

Le droit de pêche dans certaines rivières est approprié à des lignages ; d'autres rivières sont regardées comme un bien commun aux habitants d'un village, quelle que soit leur parenté.

Par exemple, le droit de pêche dans Kumata Kiiki, petite crique de la rive surinamienne, à proximité du village de Kotika, est réservé aux membres du lignage Lapé (les membres de ce lignage cultivaient là jadis, mais ils ont abandonné ces terres, actuellement cultivées par les gens de Kotika).

Les criques Maripa et Likanaon, en aval de Boniville, sont réservées aux habitants de Boniville.

La crique Asisi est réservée aux habitants d'Asisi (lignages Dju, Awara Bakka et Dipélu H).

Le droit de chasse ne peut être réservé ; chacun a le droit de chasser n'importe où.

Le droit de cueillette et le droit de couper des arbres pour fabriquer des planches ou des canots, est généralement lié au droit de cultiver.

Le droit de recueillir des produits du sous-sol est tout à fait indépendant du droit de cultiver. Par exemple si quelqu'un trouve un gisement de kaolin (pamba) sur les terres d'un autre lignage, il l'exploite librement. Cet aspect des conceptions juridiques des Noirs Réfugiés est fort intéressant car il montre que même du point de vue coutumier, le grand man n'est pas fondé à percevoir des droits sur la production des orpailleurs créoles. Il ne pourrait demander d'indemnités que dans la mesure où ces orpailleurs cultivent des terres sur lesquelles les Boni exercent des droits coutumiers. Les discussions interminables que soulevèrent sur ce point les prétentions du grand man Anato au moment du rush du Lawa à la fin du siècle dernier auraient été évitées par une meilleure connaissance du droit coutumier.

IMPLANTATION TERRITORIALE DES LIGNAGES

Ainsi que nous l'avons montré, les Noirs Réfugiés sont pris entre des impératifs contradictoires :

— Leur pensée juridique, centrée sur l'indivision du lignage, les pousse à répartir la terre entre les lignages en blocs compacts ;

— Le milieu géographique, et tout spécialement les ravages de la fourmi-manioc, les oblige à donner à chaque individu la possibilité de changer brusquement de secteur territorial ou de précipiter le rythme prévu de ses jachères.

La solution qui s'est imposée d'elle-même a été de diviser les terres de chaque lignage en un certain nombre de zones dispersées sur les deux rives du fleuve. Au lieu de trouver de grands blocs d'un seul tenant, nous allons trouver des secteurs parfois assez petits. A cela près, les principes juridiques des Noirs Réfugiés conservent toute leur valeur pratique.

Chaque village possède un certain nombre de débarcadères ou dégrads, d'où rayonnent un certain nombre de chemins. Le dégrad est le centre d'une zone territoriale à l'intérieur de laquelle les membres du lignage rayonnent, poussant leurs abattis de plus en plus loin, jusqu'à ce qu'ils rencontrent les abattis créés par d'autres lignages. A ce moment, une limite de fait se trouve créée, au moins en quelques points[1].

Ce fait est aisément observable aux environs des habitations de culture de création récente. Dans la figure « Répartition des terres... au voisinage du confluent de l'Inini » (voir à la fin du présent chapitre), on voit clairement les terres de l'habitation Antonu réparties le long de deux chemins, un sur chaque rive du fleuve.

Dans les secteurs proches des villages de résidence Boni, anciennement cultivés, ces limites sont partout connues dans leurs grandes lignes. Toutefois, elles sont loin d'être aussi précises que dans les pays africains à population dense, où l'absence de fourmis-manioc permet une rotation régulière des terres. En pays Boni, cette rotation est des plus variables, la durée des jachères allant de 2 ans à 20 ans et plus. De vastes secteurs où l'activité des fourmis-manioc devient soudain plus grande, sont abandonnés pendant de nombreuses années. Quand ils sont repris, on ne se souvient plus des limites exactes des anciens abattis et les nouveaux titulaires coupent leurs abattis à leur guise, se préoccupant seulement de demeurer sur les terres de leur lignage.

(1) Chez les Djuka, il arrive qu'un dégrad soit commun à deux lignages et que la limite soit marquée par un grand chemin perpendiculaire à la rivière partant de ce dégrad ; ce système correspond à un souci de délimitation plus précise entre groupes occupant le sol au maximum. Il ne s'observe nulle part en pays Boni.

ÉTUDE DE LA RÉPARTITION DES TERRES AU VOISINAGE DES VILLAGES DE RÉSIDENCE

RELEVÉ D'UNE PARTIE DES PARCELLES CULTIVÉES OU EN JACHÈRE EN JANVIER 1957

Étude des abattis de Agodé (Boniville). Les terres avoisinant Boniville sont exploitées de façon fort décousue, en raison du caractère composite de la population du village.

Rappelons que Agodé comprend des fractions de 6 lignages :

— Le lo Dikan, lignage du grand man, presque éteint
— Un fragment du lo Kotika
— Un fragment du lo Dju
— Un fragment du lo Lapé
— Un fragment du lo Papaïston — Un fragment du lo Dipélu I

Le lignage Dikan conserve les droits réels sur l'ensemble des terres situées sur la rive Est du Lawa, depuis la crique Puu Mofu au Sud jusqu'aux abords du village L'Enfant Perdu au Nord.

Le fragment du lo Papaïston établi à Boniville est dans une situation particulière ; il possède depuis très longtemps les terres situées au Sud de la crique Puu Mofu jusqu'aux abords du village Loka (lo Lapé). Ce groupe est resté fortement organisé et ses membres ne font pas d'abattis en dehors de leur zone, où ils ont du reste toute la place désirable.

Les membres des autres groupes font leurs abattis sur toute la surface jadis occupée par le lo Dikan. Le grand man a réservé pour son usage personnel les terres situées à proximité de la crique Likanaon, où il a installé une habitation de culture. Les habitants de Boniville font leurs abattis sur tout le reste et sans aucun groupement territorial défini.

Ce finage[1], comme les autres étudiés dans le présent chapitre, a été visité en janvier 1957, soit peu après la fin de l'abattage et au début des plantations.

Étude de quelques abattis du lieu-dit Agodé bakka « derrière Boniville » :

abréviations : (K) Kotika (D) Dikan (Dip) Dipélu
(Dju) Dju (P) Papaïstôn (L) Lapé

(1) Finage : zone cultivée par les membres d'une collectivité.

Étude des abattis de la fraction des Papalston établie à Boniville. Ce groupe résidait autrefois au village Puu Mofu, à l'embouchure de la crique du même nom, abandonné vers 1940 à la suite d'une épidémie. Son installation à Boniville est donc récente. L'aîné du groupe, Bukuman, homme d'une soixantaine d'années, exerce une autorité de fait.

Ce groupe a tendance à ajouter à son finage initial la bande de terre comprise entre le village de Boniville et la crique Puu Mofu appartenant au lo Dikan (cas notamment des abattis n° 12, 13, 14).

A proximité de cet abattis on trouve la limite des terres du lignage, au delà ce sont les abattis du village Loka (lignage Lapé).

Sur les 16 abattis examinés ici, 14 sont occupés par les membres du groupe Papaïston de Boniville, 2 sont des usagers temporaires étrangers au groupe. Sur les 16 abattis, 13 sont appropriés à des femmes et 3 à des hommes.

Terres du village Loka (lo Lapé). Ce village est, avec son annexe Lapé Tabiki, le village de résidence du lo Lapé. Le lo Lapé, dont la généalogie est entièrement connue et qui demeure bien groupé géographiquement, est divisé en deux fractions sans cesser de constituer un lignage (bee) au sens propre du terme. Ses terres sont divisées en trois zones :

Une sur la rive Est du Maroni, derrière le village de Loka, — Une autre sur la rive Ouest (rive surinamienne), en face de Lapé Tabiki, que nous n'avons pu examiner, — Une autre en amont de Maripasoula, où une partie des membres du lignage possèdent des habitations de culture.

La première zone est presque complètement abandonnée depuis une dizaine d'années par suite d'une pullulation exceptionnelle des fourmis-manioc. Nous n'y avons relevé que quelques abattis relativement récents :

Terres du lo Dju (village Asisi) au lieu-dit Ingi Udu. Le lo Dju, dont la généalogie est complètement connue, constitue lui aussi un lignage au sens propre du terme. Il demeure bien groupé géographiquement, à l'exception du petit groupe établi à Boniville auprès du grand man.

Les terres du lo Dju sont réparties en plusieurs zones :

- Une sur la rive Est du Lawa, un peu en aval d'Asisi, au lieu-dit Ingi Udu ;
- Une sur la rive hollandaise en face de Gengé Tabiki ;
- Une en amont de Maripasoula, au confluent de l'Inini où est établie une importante habitation de culture (village Atikati) ;
- Enfin, plusieurs membres du groupe font leurs abattis à proximité de Kormotibo, au lieu-dit Kuyaku, sur les terres du lo Dipélu II.

Les abattis relevés ici appartiennent tous à la première zone.

Les abattis 64, 76 et 77 apparaissent comme des enclaves un peu à l'intérieur du finage des Awara Bakka. En réalité, de par la façon même dont se sont constitués ces finages, on ne doit pas s'attendre à trouver des limites nettes.

Ces 14 abattis sont donc utilisés exclusivement par des membres du lignage Dju habitant le village d'Asisi. Tous, sauf 2, sont appropriés à des femmes.

Il est intéressant d'étudier les liens de parenté des membres du lignage faisant leurs abattis dans les différentes zones. On pourrait croire en effet qu'il y a tendance à l'individualisation de sublignages, et que les descendants de telle femme ont tendance à s'attribuer exclusivement la jouissance de telle zône.

Nous voyons ici qu'il n'en est rien.

Dans la zone 1 (étudiée ici), font leurs abattis : Tini (F1), Paana (G2), Féni (G3), très proches parentes, mais aussi Lènga (F36), Kukusa (F40) et Félicia (G41), dont la parenté avec les premiers est aussi éloignée que possible à l'intérieur du lignage : Félicia et Paana par exemple sont parentes au 12e degré.

La même chose s'observe dans les autres zones, ainsi que nous le verrons dans l'étude des habitations de culture.

Terres du lo Awara Bakka (village Asisi). Le finage du lo Awara Bakka est particulièrement intéressant à étudier car ce lo a une structure plus complexe. L'étude de la généalogie montre l'existence de 3 fractions distinctes que nous avons désignées respectivement par Aw.B.1, Aw.B.2. Aw.B.3. Les fractions Aw.B.1 et 2 se considèrent comme un même lignage au sens strict (bee). Par contre, la fraction 3 peut être considérée au point de vue de la responsabilité juridique comme un lignage isolé. En outre, les membres du petit lignage Afi, vivant avec les Awara Bakka, constituent aussi une unité distincte au point de vue juridique. Il est important d'étudier si cela se traduit dans leur implantation territoriale.

Nous n'avons pu pousser à fond cette étude car la grande masse des terres cultivées par les Awara Bakka sont situées sur la rive surinamienne. Les abattis relevés ici sont groupés dans une zone dite Ingi Udu ; ils sont desservis par deux débarcadères ou dégrads, empruntés exclusivement par les Awara Bakka.

19 sont attribués à des membres de la 1re fraction ;
2 — — à un membre de la 2e fraction ;
2 — — à des membres de la 3e fraction ;
4 — — à des membres du lignage Afi.

On peut donc déduire de cette étude qu'il n'y a aucune tendance à la constitution de finages distincts par les diverses fractions du lo Awara Bakka. Les membres du lignage Afi vivant au milieu d'eux n'ont pas non plus tendance à grouper leurs abattis.

En fait, les habitants d'un village, même ressortissant de lignages différents, possèdent des droits indivis sur les terres.

Sur 14 abattis examinés ici, tous sans exception sont occupés par les membres de la fraction Dipélu II établie à Asiai. Cette fraction est isolée géographiquement des autres lignages du village Asiai, et a constitué un finage distinct ; cela tient à son effectif relativement élevé et à la bonne entente de ses membres (le lignage Afi, d'un effectif analogue mais divisé par des mésententes, n'a pas réussi à constituer un finage distinct).

Sur 14 abattis 13 sont appropriés à des femmes et 1 à un homme.

En 1956-57 la totalité des habitants du village faisaient leurs abattis sur la rive surinamienne.

Seuls ont pu être identifiés quelques abattis remontant aux années 1947-1950.

Le système social éclairé par l'étude de l'implantation sur le sol

L'étude des abattis au voisinage des villages de culture donne sur la structure des groupes de parenté des renseignements précis qui ne peuvent être atteints par l'interrogatoire direct.

— La transmission des droits sur la terre à l'intérieur de la fraction de lignage ayant même résidence constitue un principe juridique imprescriptible, auquel on se référerait en définitive pour trancher tout litige ;

— Le principe du groupement matrilocal est effectivement appliqué dans la presque totalité des cas. Les matrilignages ont presque tous constitué selon ce principe des finages distincts, sur lesquels leurs droits sont bien établis ; la plupart de ces terroirs paraissent de formation ancienne ;

— Les fractions de lignage qui se sont séparées géographiquement de leur groupement d'origine ont constitué des finages sur lesquels leurs membres exercent des droits exclusifs. Par exemple, sur les terres de la fraction des Dipélu II installée à Asisi, on ne relève pas un seul cas d'utilisation par les membres de la fraction principale du lignage établie à Kormotibo ;

— Les habitants d'un village soumis à un même commandement possèdent des droits collectifs sur les terres de ce village et constituent une communauté de fait, même s'ils sont des ressortissants de lignages différents. Nous en avons trouvé deux exemples caractéristiques, Boniville et Asisi-Awara Bakka ; en venant s'établir dans un village et en se soumettant à l'autorité du chef, on entre ipso facto dans cette communauté.

Cette coutume est en contradiction avec le principe des droits exclusifs du lignage sur le sol, mais en contradiction plus apparente que réelle ; elle permet d'intégrer à une collectivité des isolés et de petites fractions incapables de constituer un village distinct.

La situation de fait ainsi créée n'a rien de définitif. Si une fraction de lignage désire s'isoler, soit à la suite d'une mésentente, soit simplement parce que son effectif s'est accru suffisamment, elle en conserve le droit.

Les principes fondamentaux du droit foncier des Boni peuvent donc être résumés ainsi :

« Les droits sur le sol sont indivis à l'intérieur de la fraction d'un lignage dont les membres résident dans le même village, et sont soumis au même commandement ; toute scission d'un lignage en ce qui concerne le village de résidence entraîne une scission des droits sur les terres. La fraction émigrée possède des droits exclusifs sur le terroir qu'elle constitue. Mais elle ne perd pas, au moins en principe, ses droits sur le terroir d'origine. »

L'étude des finages nous donne encore d'importants renseignements en ce qui concerne l'exercice des droits d'usage :

Sur 100 abattis examinés, 81 répondent au processus normal selon lequel la femme fait faire son abattis sur la terre de son lignage[1]. Sur ces 81 abattis, 14 avaient été faits dans des conditions non précisées, 48 avaient été coupés par le mari, 14 par un proche parent (fils, frère, exceptionnellement frère ou gendre), 5 par la femme elle-même.

Dans 5 cas seulement c'est au contraire l'homme qui amène sa femme sur la terre de son lignage.

Un peu plus fréquent est le cas d'un homme coupant un abattis pour son propre compte sur la terre de son lignage.

Enfin le cas où, pour des raisons de commodité, un membre d'un lignage demande à travailler temporairement sur la terre d'un autre lignage, est rencontré 2 fois. Il s'agit donc d'une pratique tout à fait exceptionnelle.

Influence du milieu géographique sur la structure sociale. Ces observations sont à rapprocher de celles qu'on peut faire sur les Indiens Oayana, et sur les Indiens de la Guyane en général, vivant à proximité des Noirs Réfugiés, dans le même milieu géographique et à peu près de la même manière (rappelons que les Noirs Réfugiés ont emprunté aux Indiens l'ensemble de leur culture matérielle).

Les Indiens Oayana sont à demi nomades, déplaçant leurs villages tous les 10 ans en moyenne. Ils n'ont ni centre permanent de peuplement, ni lieu de culte, ni cimetière ; ils n'ont pas de culte des ancêtres, tout au moins aucune conception supposant un lien précis et permanent entre les vivants, les morts et la terre.

Cet état de choses a été imputé par plusieurs auteurs au milieu géographique et notamment aux ravages de la fourmi-manioc ; la fourmi-manioc, pullulant plus spécialement dans les zones anciennement cultivées, rend le nomadisme avantageux. Il en serait résulté une structure sociale et un mode de vie adaptés à ces conditions particulières.

L'exemple des Noirs Réfugiés montre à l'évidence que ces considérations, malgré l'intérêt indéniable qu'elles présentent, ne constituent pas une explication de portée générale ; pour les Noirs Réfugiés, les seuls liens sociaux concevables découlent du culte des ancêtres ; par-dessus tous les impératifs de la vie matérielle, l'individu ressent comme un devoir primordial, celui de se relier au village de ses ancêtres, à la terre qu'ils ont défrichée et qui demeure sous leur protection.

Les difficultés inhérentes au milieu géographique ont été facilement surmontées ou tournées. Plutôt que de vastes zones d'un seul tenant, chaque lignage a divisé son finage en secteurs éloignés les uns des autres. Si ces zones deviennent temporairement inutilisables, les Bonu vont créer des habitations de culture sur le cours supérieur du fleuve, sans cesser pour autant de résider habituellement au village de leurs ancêtres ; il n'en résulte d'autre sujétion que de perdre chaque année une quinzaine de jours en allées et venues sur la rivière.

(1) Pour le secteur indivis de Boulville, on a considéré comme usagers de droits les habitants du village sans distinction de lignage.

RÉPARTITION DES TERRES
AU VOISINAGE DES PRINCIPAUX VILLAGES BONI

Fig 16

Que ce système soit parfaitement viable est suffisamment démontré par l'expansion régulière, depuis deux siècles, des tribus des Noirs Réfugiés, et par le bon fonctionnement de leurs institutions.

On ne peut donc attribuer à la seule influence du milieu géographique l'instabilité foncière des Indiens de la Guyane. Elle provient essentiellement de facteurs sociaux et psychologiques.

ÉTUDE DES HABITATIONS DE CULTURE

Nous allons maintenant étudier le fonctionnement des habitations de culture sous les mêmes aspects :

— Structure (composition de chacun d'eux, rapports de parenté) ;
— Implantation territoriale : nature et étendue des droits sur la terre ;
— Fonctionnement.

Tous les Boni n'ont pas d'habitation de culture ; les deux tiers d'entre eux environ se satisfont des terres qu'ils occupent à proximité des villages de résidence.

Les habitations de culture que nous allons étudier plus spécialement et qui sont situées entre l'embouchure de l'Inini et le Saut Simayé au Sud, groupent une centaine de personnes, appartenant aux lignages Dju, Lapé, Awara Bakka et Papaiston. Un autre groupe d'habitations de culture situées un peu au Sud de Kormotibo, que nous étudierons sommairement et seulement en ce qui concerne leur composition, réunit environ 60 personnes. Enfin, il existe d'autres habitations de culture très dispersées, relevant principalement du lignage Kotika, les unes dans la région de Maripasoula, les autres dans les sauts Abattis-Kotika.

Dans l'ensemble, les habitations de culture Boni ne peuvent être comparées ni comme importance ni comme stabilité aux villages de culture Djuka qui s'échelonnent sur le cours moyen du Maroni, groupant 3000 à 3500 personnes : ceci est facile à comprendre : les Djuka, sans cesse à court de terre, sont obligés sous peine de perdre leurs droits, d'occuper au maximum le sol. D'autre part, installés très loin de leur village de résidence, ils sont amenés à créer des établissements plus durables.

Chez les Boni, les habitations de culture sont peu importantes, construites avec peu de soin pour les désigner on dit kapu (campement), et les groupes qui travaillent là sont peu stables.

Toutefois les principes d'établissement et de fonctionnement des habitations de culture sont exactement les mêmes chez les deux tribus, et répondent dans l'ensemble aux lois coutumières qui, chez les Noirs Réfugiés régissent la possession de la terre :

1° Quand un homme coupe un abattis dans une zone vierge de tout établissement humain, il crée en même temps qu'un droit d'usage pour lui-même un droit réel imprescriptible pour son lignage (bee), ou plus précisément pour la fraction du lignage résidant dans le même village et soumise au même commandement ;

2° Ce droit est indivis ; à la mort d'un individu, n'importe qui de cette fraction de son lignage peut occuper les terres qu'il cultivait habituellement. S'il y a contestation elle est réglée obligatoirement dans le cadre du lignage ;

[p.101]

HABITATIONS DE CULTURE BONI
AU SUD DU CONFLUENT DE L'ININI

Fig. 17.

3) L'étendue de la zone sur laquelle s'exerce ce droit n'est limitée que par les zones sur lesquelles s'exercent d'autres droits.

Nous avons vu quel mode d'occupation du sol résultait de ces lois au voisinage des « grands villages ». Ici la répartition des terres entre les habitations de culture suit pratiquement les mêmes lois, dont les effets sont moins rigoureux, compte tenu de la très faible densité de l'occupation du sol.

1) On admet qu'un établissement isolé dans une zone quasi déserte ne crée pas de droits durables. S'il vient à disparaître, n'importe qui peut venir s'installer là après s'être assuré auprès du premier occupant qu'il n'a plus besoin de la place (tel est le cas des établissements très dispersés au Sud du Saut Simayé jusqu'au pays indien ; ils ne créent pas de réels droits territoriaux au profit d'un lignage quelconque.

2) Par contre, dès que l'occupation d'une région devient habituelle, même par des groupes de faible importance numérique, on se préoccupe de l'attribution des terres. Ainsi on admet que la rive Ouest du Lawa, au Sud de l'habitation Atikati jusqu'au Saut Simayé, appartient depuis la fin du siècle dernier au lo Lapé, qui l'occupait en 1957 par les habitations Paako, Samo, Pwen, Saléni et Makélé.

3) A l'intérieur de chaque zone les droits demeurent indivis et n'importe qui du même lo peut venir s'installer là. Ainsi les habitations de culture se déplacent, mais à l'intérieur d'un secteur déterminé. Ainsi par exemple, Kwaku (Lapé) a abandonné en 1954 son habitation située dans les terres du lignage Lapé (elle était trop humide en saison des pluies, il préfère se contenter des terres du « grand village »). Il ne perd pas pour autant ses droits. S'il décide ultérieurement de revenir, il s'installera n'importe où dans la zone attribuée au lo Lapé.

Il va de soi que si la population était plus dense, un tel principe serait malaisément appliqué et qu'il s'élèverait de sérieuses contestations. Mais ce mode d'occupation du sol convient parfaitement dans leur situation présente, aux tribus des Noirs Réfugiés, car il leur permet d'exercer, avec un minimum de frictions, le semi-nomadisme qu'impose le milieu géographique et notamment la fourmi-manioc.

Les zones occupées par les habitations de culture sont rarement d'un seul tenant : le plus souvent elles sont divisées en secteurs isolés de part et d'autre du fleuve.

En fait, comme nous l'avons vu autour des « grands villages », chaque lignage possède un certain nombre de dégrads ou débarcadères, autour desquels rayonnent des sentiers. Chaque dégrad est rigoureusement réservé aux membres d'un lignage. Les occupants d'un village de culture rayonnent autour de leur débarcadère jusqu'à ce qu'ils rencontrent les abattis des gens d'un autre lignage ; une limite de fait est ainsi créée, qu'on respectera désormais.

Par contre plusieurs villages de culture ressortissant d'un même lignage peuvent avoir leurs abattis totalement intriqués (c'est le cas par exemple de ceux des habitations Antonu et Adiiso). Ceci est conforme à la règle d'indivision de la terre à l'intérieur du lignage.

Organisation. Le groupe réuni dans une habitation de culture est réuni par affinités mutuelles, et ne comporte d'autre hiérarchie que celle qui découle des liens de parenté : autorité de la mère sur ses filles ; autorité des « oncles » sur les « neveux ».

Le groupement le plus conforme à la structure matrilinéaire des Noirs Réfugiés est constitué par une vieille femme, ses fils non mariés, ses filles et les filles de ses filles, leurs maris venant en renfort au moment des abattis mais ne faisant pas partie du groupe. Souvent c'est cette vieille femme qui dirige l'habitation, mais souvent aussi c'est un vieil oncle, son frère au sens classificatoire, qui travaille avec elle depuis longtemps. Parfois cette vieille femme est venue s'installer avec ses filles sur l'habitation fondée par son mari.

Les habitations portent les unes des noms d'hommes, les autres des noms de femmes. Le nom qui prévaut peut être tout à fait en désaccord avec les droits réels exercés sur la terre (Ex. : nom de Adiiso donné à l'habitation de sa femme où Adiiso n'a aucun droit). Cela n'a pas grande importance aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés, la seule chose importante étant la possession collective de la terre par le lignage.

Pour les groupes relativement nombreux et réunis plus par les affinités mutuelles que par des liens de parenté, le minimum d'autorité nécessaire à la bonne entente et à l'organisation du travail est exercé par le fondateur. Par exemple, Atikati a exercé un commandement à ce titre sur le groupe disparate réuni autour de lui, et à sa mort, il a légué cette fonction à sa sœur Adyidya.

De même Antonu exerce une autorité indiscutée sur trois groupes du lo Awara Bakka installés à l'embouchure de l'Inini, car c'est lui qui a pris l'initiative de créer un établissement en cet endroit. S'il y a contestation, c'est lui qui défendra les droits du lignage Awara Bakka.

L'autorité exercée par le fondateur de l'habitation de culture ne s'exerce pas dans la vie matérielle, qui demeure soumise aux principes strictement individualistes des Noirs Réfugiés. Il ne peut imposer à personne de l'aider à faire ses abattis ou de faire à son profit un travail quelconque.

Habitations de culture du lo Awara Bakka (Antonu, Adiiso, Kakyé) au voisinage du confluent de l'Inini

Ces habitations exploitent un terroir dont le premier utilisateur a été Antonu, du lo Awara Bakka (fraction 1), qui est regardé comme appartenant à ce lignage. Antonu s'est installé là en 1945 (il trouvait qu'il y avait trop de monde cultivant les terres proches de Asisi).

Pour assurer ses droits, Antonu a placé sur sa terre deux groupements dont la situation est fort différente :

1) Dans sa propre habitation il a installé sa femme Asakundu, et il s'est constitué autour d'elle le groupe de travail le plus courant chez les Noirs Réfugiés : groupe formé par la mère, ses fils et ses filles, les maris des filles venant en renfort au moment des abattis. Mais il importe de remarquer que ce groupe n'a aucun droit sur la terre : si Antonu et sa femme viennent à se séparer, le groupe de la femme quittera l'habitation.

2) A proximité, il a installé l'habitation de sa sœur Irma mariée à Adiiso (Dju). Ce village est appelé improprement Adiiso, mais Adiiso n'y a aucun droit. En cas de rupture avec sa femme, il quitte l'habitation.

3) Enfin, Kakyé, vieille femme du lignage Awara Bakka, s'est installée à proximité avec ses filles et son fils.

Structure et fonctionnement de l'habitation Antonu. Cette habitation comprenait en janvier 1957, en faisant abstraction des enfants :

○ Antonu (Aw.B.1, E47) ;
○ Asakundu, sa femme (L2, E55) ;
○ Kapéeki (L2, F60) ;
○ Angisa (L2, F61) ; filles de Asakundu, mariées ;
△ Sindu (L2, F62), fils de Asakundu ;
△ Maliki (L2, F63), fils de Asakundu ;
○ Yundu, fille de Kapéeki, mariée ;
△ Anato, fils de Kapéeki ;
○ Agata, fille de Akom.

Les femmes de Maliki et de Sindu qui n'ont pas d'habitation personnelle, viennent travailler là, mais elles ne doivent pas être considérées comme faisant partie du groupe. Elles n'ont pas de case.

De même les maris de Kapéeki, Yundu et Angisa viennent aider temporairement au moment des abattis.

Structure de l'habitation Adiiso. Cette habitation appartient en fait à Irma, femme de Adiiso, du lignage Awara-Bakka 1 (E37), qui a été installée là par Antonu dont elle est la sœur au sens classificatoire.

Travaillent avec Irma, en faisant abstraction des enfants :

— Son mari Adiiso (Dju, F37) ;
— Sa fille Chitaïna (Aw.B.1, F43), mariée à Déési (L1, F45) ; — Son fils Lawa, non marié ;
— Son fils Maïna, marié.

La femme de Maïna, Mbéma, qui n'a pas d'autre habitation, fait faire son abattis là, mais elle n'a pas de case en propre et ne fait pas partie du groupe.

Habitation du lo Dju
au voisinage du confluent de l'Inini

Structure de l'habitation Atikati (lo Dju). Importante habitation fondée par Atikati, du lo Dju, possédant un finage étendu, fragmenté en plusieurs blocs sur les deux rives du Lawa.

Cette habitation a une composition anormale car Atikati y travaillait avec ses filles, ce qui est contraire à la coutume, et avec des amis.

Atikati dirigeait le village avec son vieil ami Bernardin (K1, D62), † en 1958, qui était fils d'un homme du lo Dju et vivait parmi les Dju depuis son enfance.

Le groupe de base de cette habitation est formé par des gens du lo Dju. Depuis la mort de Atikati (1955), c'est sa sœur Adyidya (Dju, E19), qui dirige le village.

Membres du lo Dju :

○ Adyidya
○ Baawé (Dju, E13) } toutes les deux sans enfants vivants
△ Loko (Dju, F39)

△ Atikati travaillait avec ses filles et petite-fille :

○ Wilèlmina (P1, F1) ;
○ Kumata (P1, G1), fille de Wilèlmina.

A ce groupe s'ajoutaient en 1957 :

△ Bernardin (K1, D62), élevé avec les Dju ;
○ Asumé (Dip. I, F2), fille de △ Bernardin et de ○ Mimen †.

Enfin, deux femmes de Kotika mariées à des Djuka ont demandé la permission de s'installer là et y font couper leurs abattis. Mais elles n'ont aucun droit sur la terre :

○ Nèlla (K1, D44) ;
Maké (K1, E35), sa fille.

La composition de ce village est donc entièrement aberrante, du point de vue de la coutume, et fondée entièrement sur des sympathies personnelles. Mais la règle coutumière n'en est pas moins présente à la pensée de tous : le fondateur étant du lignage Dju, la terre est aux Dju. Le fait par exemple que Bernardin (Kotika) et ses filles (Papaïston), aient travaillé là depuis très longtemps, ne crée aucun droit pour l'un ou l'autre lignage.

Si des dissensions se produisent dans le groupe, les étrangers au lignage Dju doivent partir.

HABITATIONS DU lo PAPAISTON AU VOISINAGE DU CONFLUENT DE L'ININI

Structure des habitations Sawen et Agodéba (lo Papaiston).

Habitations occupant une zone étendue, attribuée depuis au moins 60 ans au lignage principal de Papaiston.

Travaillent avec Sawen (P1, E7) :

— Ses nièces Héléna (P1, F2) et Emilia (P1, F3) ; — Son neveu Aguundé (P1, F4).

Travaillent avec Agodéba (P1, E1) :

— Sa sœur (au sens classificatoire) Kamen (P1, E14) ;
— Sa nièce (au sens classificatoire) Gou (P1, F8).

En outre, est installé là un groupe centré sur Toïna, femme de Agodéba, représentant les restes du lignage Bakabuchi, presque éteint :

○ Toïna, femme de Agodéba ;
○ Mangoto, fils de Toïna ;
○ Apuulobi.

Habitations du lo Lapé
(Paako, Samo, Chii, Pwen, Saléni)

Ces habitations occupent un terroir appartenant depuis la fin du XIXe siècle au lo Lapé.

L'habitation Kwaku est abandonnée depuis 1943, ses occupants faisant leurs abattis aux environs de Loka.

Habitation Paako. L'habitation Paako est occupée seulement par deux femmes, Paako (L1, E29) et sa fille Dona, qui y font faire leurs abattis par leurs maris.

Habitation Chii. C'est Chii (L1, D24) qui dirige l'habitation où elle travaille avec son fils Topo, ses filles Yaana, Madu et Koko. Les maris des filles viennent en renfort au moment des abattis.

Habitations Pwen. A la suite de dissensions, Pwen (L1, E33) demeure tout seul dans cette habitation.

Habitation Saléni. Elle est dirigée par Saléni, vieille femme du lo Lapé (E25), qui travaille là avec son fils Tingo, ses filles Kayé et Ananta.

Structure de l'habitation Samo dite Pikin Tabiki (lo Lapé).

Habitation occupant une autre portion du finage du lo Lapé.

Font leurs abattis là plusieurs hommes et femmes de Lapé :

△ Tamu (L1, F32), qui y amène sa femme Kaala (Dip.II)
△ Fosé, son frère (L1, F33)
○ Mélita, sa tante au sens classificatoire (L1, E32) ;
○ Téké, fille de Mélita (L1, F44)
○ Akomédi, fille de Paako (L1, F34).

Les maris de Mélita, Téké, Akomédi, viennent travailler au moment des abattis mais ne font pas partie du groupe.

La composition de ce village est donc entièrement conforme à la coutume.

Activité en 1955-56 :

Habitations de culture en aval de Maripasoula

Plusieurs habitations sont installées au lieu-dit Kuyaku, région très fertile donnant des rendements élevés en manioc[1].

Appartenance de la terre : lo Dipélu II (village Kormotibo).

Plusieurs habitations côte à côte :

○ Nanay (Dip. II) †; habitation disparue à sa mort en 1953 ;

[1] Cette fertilité s'explique par la nature du sous-sol (flons de dolérite).

○ Béniti (Dju) † en 1955 ; habitation reprise par ses enfants et petits-enfants : ○ Eliana, △ Doni, ○ Kulina, ○ Maria ;

○ Tini (Dju) ;

○ Kotoïda (lignage Afi) † ;

△ Poopu, établi là depuis longtemps. Avait abandonné l'emplacement en 1948 ; revenu en 1952.

La composition des groupes est la suivante :

1) ○ Béniti † (Dju, E5) : ses filles Maria, Kulina et Eliana. La case de Béniti a été reprise par son petit-fils Doni qu'elle élevait.

2) ○ Tini (Dju, F1) ; habitation groupant Tini, Ata (Dju, F2) et leurs filles.

3) ○ Kotoïda † ; habitation groupant Kotoïda († oct. 1956) (lignage Afi), son frère Kenkina, son mari Empalé, sa nièce Samabun.

Autres habitations :

Ma Efa (Papaiston), installée sur les terres du lo Dipélu II en amont de Kormotibo (rive française), depuis une trentaine d'années. Ma Efa (P1, D4) travaillait avec ses fils.

Gengé Tabiki (rive hollandaise, en amont du village Asisi ; petite habitation fondée par ○ Aliki (Dju, E23), avec Lènga ○ (Dju F36) et ○ Diana (Dju, E9).

Fonctionnement des habitations de culture

Structure. Sur les 13 habitations de culture étudiées ici, 12 ont une structure conforme au principe de résidence des Noirs Réfugiés, impliquant le groupement des filles et des fils non mariés auprès de la mère ; une seule a une structure anormale :

Atikati (filles résidant avec leur père, groupes d'amis n'ayant pas de droits sur la terre).

Il semble que des exceptions de ce genre ont toujours existé chez les Noirs Réfugiés, mais elles ont vraisemblablement tendance à se faire plus nombreuses.

Elles ne paraissent pas dues à un changement de conception sur la structure familiale, mais à un développement des tendances individualistes. Ces groupes de structure aberrante sont particulièrement instables.

Stabilité ; déplacements. Il n'y a pas sur ce point d'usage précis. Certaines habitations de culture sont anciennes, telles celles de Sawen et de Atikati, qui datent certainement du début du siècle. La plupart paraissent durer de 5 à 10 ans. D'autres, comme celle de Kwaku, n'ont eu qu'une existence éphémère.

Les déplacements d'habitations qui se sont produits dans cette région depuis 1950 ont des causes très variables :

[p.118]

GROUPEMENT DES MEMBRES DU LIGNAGE DJU
EN SECTEURS ET HABITATIONS DE CULTURE

Fig. 30

△ Dyakata (Dip. I) a quitté la région pour vivre dans le bas Maroni chez les Paramaka, pour convenances personnelles.

○ Chili (Dip. I) est allée s'installer près de Maripasoula. A renoncé à son habitation du saut Simayé en raison des fourmis-manioc.

△ Kwaku (L) Son habitation était trop humide et l'activité des fourmis-manioc trop grande. Réside désormais toute l'année à Loka.

△ Akwadé (L) N'avait pas d'habitation, en a créé une en 1954 à proximité du saut Simayé. Recherchait un emplacement favorable pour la pêche, dont il vit presque entièrement.

Dans l'ensemble, on peut estimer que la durée moyenne d'une habitation de culture est d'une dizaine d'années. Dans ces déplacements, l'épuisement des terres ne paraît jouer aucun rôle : vu la faible densité de la population, on peut soit pratiquer des coupes sur forêt primaire, soit pratiquer le régime de jachère que l'on désire.

On peut attribuer la plupart des déplacements à deux causes d'importance égale :

— L'activité des fourmis-manioc ; nous avons dit que depuis une quinzaine d'années, le terroir principal du lo Lapé, situé à proximité du village de Loka a dû être totalement abandonné par suite d'une activité exceptionnelle des fourmis-manioc. Il en est résulté la création sur le terroir du lo Lapé étudié ici, de plusieurs habitations de culture ;

— Des motifs personnels, parmi lesquels vient en premier lieu la mésentente entre les membres d'un groupe. Par exemple ○ Kulina et ○ Bakamaman (Boniville, Dju) faisaient jusqu'en 1950 leurs abattis avec leur mère Béniti, au village de culture de celle-ci au lieu-dit Kuyaku (au Sud de Kormotibo).

En 1950 une brouille est survenue. Kulina et Baïkom font depuis ce temps leurs abattis à l'habitation de leur père Malobi (Lapé).

Il arrive notamment qu'à la mort de son fondateur, une habitation de culture disparaisse ou change entièrement de composition, parce que des brouilles surviennent.

Une autre cause de déplacement des habitations de culture est le changement d'activité de leurs occupants. Par exemple un homme vieillit, il ne trouve plus de travail salarié, il crée une habitation pour se consacrer à la pêche (cas de Akwadé). Arrivé à l'extrême vieillesse, il abandonne son habitation pour se retirer auprès des siens (cas de Samalobi, premier occupant des terres cultivées actuellement par le village Antonu).

CHAPITRE VI

COUTUME FAMILIALE

La coutume familiale des Noirs Réfugiés présente plus d'unité que leurs croyances. A l'encontre des Noirs du Brésil et de Haïti, chez lesquels ont dominé les influences du Dahomey et du pays Yorouba, les Noirs Réfugiés de Guyane ont emprunté l'essentiel de leur coutume familiale à l'aire culturelle Agni-Ashanti. On retrouve notamment des traits caractéristiques tels que la prohibition de l'héritage des veuves, les coutumes relatives à la naissance, l'isolement des morts dans des cimetières à l'écart des habitations.

Mais sur plusieurs points essentiels :

— Le régime du mariage.

— Les institutions relatives à la mort et au deuil, et la place centrale qui leur est donnée dans l'ensemble des institutions coutumières.

Les Noirs Réfugiés se sont nettement séparés des conceptions de leurs ancêtres, et les conceptions qu'ils ont élaborées peuvent être dans une large mesure considérées comme une création originale.

Naissance

Croyances. Dès qu'une femme est enceinte, son mari est astreint à des obligations particulières. Il ne peut se servir d'une pelle, ni enfoncer des clous. Ces opérations qui, chez les Noirs Réfugiés, ont pour but principal de creuser des fosses et de faire les cercueils, seraient supposées faire mourir l'enfant. Ni lui ni sa femme ne peuvent se couper les cheveux ; il est astreint à des interdits alimentaires, notamment le malpouri (tapir).

Les rapports sexuels sont poursuivis pendant toute la grossesse, car ils sont réputés indispensables à la formation de l'esprit de l'enfant qui, semble-t-il, est supposé venir du père ; aussi ne peut-il être question pour un homme dont la femme est enceinte, de l'abandonner, ni même de partir pour un voyage lointain sans la permission du chef de lignage de celle-ci.

Prévision de la naissance. Des rites divinatoires sont effectués dès les premiers mois de la grossesse, pour prévoir si l'accouchement sera facile ou non. On se rend pour cela chez un ancien qui « connaît » un de ces remèdes. Il y en a plusieurs : l'un consiste à faire un petit trou au centre d'une croix tracée par terre, à y verser une décoction d'herbes magiques tenue secrète, et à y placer un œuf. Le maître du remède dit alors : « Si l'accouchement doit être facile, l'œuf doit être écrasé aussitôt que mon pied appuiera dessus. » On affirme que quelquefois l'œuf résiste à l'écrasement : on en déduit que l'accouchement sera difficile.

Quand le moment de l'accouchement arrive, les préoccupations sont centrées sur le danger des entités maléfiques humaines, ɔgi sani, qui cherchent à s'incarner dans l'enfant. La femme est enfermée dans la maison dont toutes les issues sont obstruées et on appelle des ɔbiaman pour effectuer des rites de protection tout autour de la maison. Si l'accouchement est difficile, on attribue cela au fait qu'une de ces entités a réussi à pénétrer dans la maison malgré les précautions prises.

On appelle les ɔbiaman pour « laver » la femme à l'aide de remèdes appropriés. Ce n'est que dans des cas graves qu'on fait entrer des hommes dans la maison. En règle générale, pendant les huit premiers jours, seules peuvent entrer des femmes de la parenté de la mère (On se préoccupe même dans la mesure du possible de prendre pour accoucheuse (menu) une vieille femme de la parenté de la mère).

Observation à Maripasoula, le 3 novembre 1966. La femme de Baïna, canotier de la mission de délimitation, est accouchée à Pikin Tabiki, petit village de culture où elle travaille avec sa mère et le mari de celle-ci. Baïna est allé assister à l'accouchement.

Celui-ci a été très long et dramatique. D'après Baïna, une ɔgi sani était entrée dans le corps de l'enfant, le rendant raide et impossible à extraire. En désespoir de cause, on a appelé un voisin, T.... connu pour avoir une bonne gila. Il a appelé son gadu qui a révélé un remède efficace, puisqu'après avoir lavé le corps de la malade avec les feuilles indiquées, l'accouchement s'est heureusement terminé.

Restait à trouver quelqu'un pour remplir à sa place, puisque nous partions en tournée, un des devoirs du mari : couper la provision de bois destinée à chauffer l'eau nécessaire aux douches chaudes qu'on va donner à la mère plusieurs fois par jour pendant environ 3 mois. Il s'est entendu pour cela avec Kwata, mari de sa belle-mère, auquel il versera environ 1000 francs.

Présentation de l'enfant. Le 8e jour, c'est la grand-mère maternelle (ou l'arrière grand-mère si elle est encore vivante) qui prend l'enfant et le donne à une autre aïeule du même lignage, placée devant la maison. Celle-ci le présente à la famille. Puis, le chef du lignage, sans prendre l'enfant, va au fraga tiki faire une offrande de tafia, demandant aux ancêtres de le protéger.

Par exemple, pour la naissance de A... (Village Lapé Tabiki), fils de ○ Yundu (L2, G50), c'est Asakundu, grand-mère de Yundu et arrière-grand-mère de l'enfant, qui est venue le prendre dans la maison et l'a remis à sa sœur Térésa (L2, E57) pour le présenter à la famille (Voir le tableau généalogique du lignage Lapé, fraction 2).

Interruption des rapports conjugaux après la naissance. Pendant trois mois après l'accouchement, la mère doit se tenir à l'écart des hommes et même éviter de les toucher. Les rapports conjugaux doivent être interrompus jusqu'à ce que l'enfant commence à marcher seul (11 à 14 mois). On tolère cependant (mais en réprouvant) qu'ils soient interrompus le temps que l'enfant commence à se traîner sur les genoux

(8 mois). On cite l'exemple de la femme de Baïna qui à la suite de grossesses à intervalles trop faibles, a des enfants débiles.

En fait, l'interruption des rapports conjugaux a tendance à se réduire de plus en plus, les femmes disposant de lait condensé et ayant tendance à réduire la durée de l'allaitement.

Chaque femme agit à cet égard comme elle l'entend ; le mari n'a aucun pouvoir pour la contraindre.

Le nom

Existence de plusieurs noms indépendants. Chaque Boni a deux noms, le gad nem ou grand nom, donné par le père, et le pikin nem ou petit nom, donné par la mère.

Ces deux noms sont donnés de façon totalement indépendante. C'est généralement le pikin nem qui est donné le premier ; autrefois on attendait que l'enfant fût âgé de 6 à 8 mois ; actuellement, on le donne au bout de quelques semaines. Le chef du lignage n'intervient pas dans le choix ni dans l'imposition du nom.

En fait, près des trois quarts des Boni sont désignés par un seul nom, soit que le père et la mère se soient mis d'accord pour donner le même nom, soit que l'une des deux appellations soit tombée en désuétude.

A ces deux noms principaux peuvent s'ajouter un nombre quelconque de noms et de surnoms donnés par les grands-parents et plus tard les amis ou les épouses ; souvent l'un des noms finit par s'imposer et supplanter les autres, mais dans de nombreux cas, ces noms sont employés concuremment ; en général un individu est désigné dans sa parenté maternelle par son pikin nem tandis que les gens des autres villages le désignent par son gad nem ou par un surnom. Il nous est arrivé maintes fois, au cours de la même conversation, d'entendre désigner le même individu sous deux ou trois noms différents.

Il va sans dire que cette coutume rend impraticable tout recensement des Noirs Réfugiés, car tant qu'on ne connaît pas individuellement les membres d'un lignage et leur généalogie, il est impossible de rien comprendre.

Pourtant, il ne faut pas voir là une réaction de défense à l'égard de l'administration européenne. Les Noirs Réfugiés trouvent tout à fait normal d'avoir concurremment plusieurs noms, car ils n'ont pas la notion de l'identité d'un nom et d'une personne.

Ainsi l'un de nos canotiers était Fintiman pour la parenté maternelle, Gobiyo pour son père et une partie de ses amis, Loamba pour son grand-père paternel et Nakiyu pour sa première femme.

Choix des noms. Les noms sont très variés et leur choix ne répond à aucune règle fixe ; il est du domaine exclusif de la fantaisie.

Un grand nombre sont constitués de simples onomatopées : Tyutyu, Dada, Dodo, Dudu, etc. (qui peuvent s'appliquer indifféremment à un homme ou à une femme). La mère de Dodo nous expliqua la raison de son choix : dodo était le refrain d'un air qui chantait souvent dans sa tête quand elle était enceinte.

On relève encore :

— Des noms ou prénoms européens plus ou moins déformés : Afayèl (Rafaèl), Modèl, Pasensi (Patience), Félisi (Félix), Sophie, Toïna (Antonia). Certains noms sont des noms propres européens déformés ; par exemple : Sota pour Chotard (nom d'un fonctionnaire de Saint-Laurent) ;

— Des noms africains (Musa, Kodyo, Kofi, Akuba, Afiba, etc.), la plupart semble-t-il provenant de la côte occidentale d'Afrique.

— Quelques noms indiens : Omiikan, Païké. Ce dernier nom avait été donné à un jeune homme d'Asisi par son grand-oncle, en souvenir d'un chef indien avec lequel il était très lié ;

— Des noms de plantes, d'animaux ou d'objets usuels, soit en taki-taki, soit en français :

Ex. Kapachi (tatou), Aguti (agouti, un rongeur), Babun (singe rouge), Kwata (singe atèle), Chii (graine), Maisi (maïs), Tutu (bambou), Sépina (épinards), Polimichi (réchaud), Balansi (balance), Tambour, Kédé (caisse), Mandolina (mandoline), Kokoti (tatouage), Gunnkaala (perle bleue), Klarinèt (clarinette), Alapu (flèche), Bisiklèt, Tomobil, etc. ;

— Des mots européens dont le sens est plus ou moins compris mais qui sonnent agréablement aux oreilles des Noirs Réfugiés :

ex. : Manifèst, Komisèr (commissaire), Nètwayé (nettoyé), Machinn (Machine) ;

— Des termes de parenté ou des termes de relations sociales, associés souvent à un qualificatif :

Ex. : Maman, (mère), Baakamaman (mère noire), May (belle-mère), Pikin pay (petit-gendre), Pikin baala (petit camarade), Bachi (maître), Michi (demoiselle), Baakamichi (demoiselle noire), etc.

— Des expressions se rapportant généralement aux particularités de l'enfant durant ses premiers mois :

Ex. : Kundu mofu (petite bouche), Kundu uman (femme courte), Alébiédé (tête rouge), Alobikyé (il aime pleurer), Alobilafu (il aime rire), Koouman (femme froide), Amoyuman (jolie femme), Dansiuman (danseuse), Hafukii (à moitié mort), etc. ;

— Des noms faisant allusion à une qualité, mais c'est pure fantaisie ; il ne faut pas croire qu'on recherche par là à la faire entrer dans l'enfant. On voit Séyéuman (femme sérieuse), Abété (le meilleur), Poyman (homme fort), etc. ; dans la même signification on donne souvent des noms tels que Goutu uman (femme en or) ;

— Souvent enfin, le nom est la contraction d'une courte phrase exprimant une plaisanterie ou une association d'idées saugrenue :

Agimianèm (donne-moi un nom), Nàfiimoo (ce n'est plus pour vous), Afumidichi (c'est pour moi celui-là), Sanidialobi (chose qu'il aime), Agoabuchi (il va en brousse), etc.

Woochia est la contraction de sa u ɔ si ya? (que verrons-nous là?) exprimant la surprise d'une femme qui se voyait enceinte pour la première fois après 15 ans de mariage stérile.

Dans ce genre de noms, il s'agit dans plusieurs cas d'une plaisanterie à l'égard de l'enfant, dont il pourra avoir à souffrir toute la vie.

Ex. : Amoyanéti (il est joli la nuit), nom donné à un enfant qui était très laid.

Poété (forçat) est le pikin nem de B..., homme âgé en 1957 d'environ 42 ans ; il n'a jamais compris clairement pourquoi sa mère lui avait donné ce nom dont il n'a pu se débarrasser, ses camarades se faisant un malin plaisir de l'appeler par son pikin nem.

Cette mauvaise plaisanterie a eu tant de succès qu'elle a été rééditée deux fois : il y a actuellement en pays Boni deux Poété et une Poétéuman !

Cet exemple, associé à bien d'autres, montre la légèreté avec laquelle les Noirs Réfugiés choisissent les noms de leurs enfants. Nous avons assisté plusieurs fois à des discussions concernant le choix de ces noms ; elles se déroulent dans une atmosphère de grosse farce. B.. dont il vient d'être question, qui avait eu à souffrir du nom que sa mère lui avait donné, appela un de ses neveux Canada, parce que c'est le pays où sont fabriqués les moteurs Evinrude qu'il admirait beaucoup.

Transmission des noms. Il semble qu'autrefois, on donnait de préférence aux enfants le nom d'un de leurs oncles au sens classificatoire dans le lignage du père. Cette coutume est encore nettement observable mais sa pratique n'est pas générale. En effet, sur environ 670 personnes recensées dans les villages de la rive française, dont environ 250 enfants de moins de 14 ans, il ne s'en trouve que 64, soit moins de 25 %, qui portent le nom d'un adulte vivant ou décédé. Ces 64 cas se répartissent ainsi :

	Lignage de la mère	Lignage du père	Autres lignages
Nom pris parmi les frères et sœurs au sens classificatoire de l'enfant.	0	3
Nom pris parmi les oncles et tantes au sens classificatoire de l'enfant.	3	37	11
Nom pris parmi les « grands-pères » et les « grands-mères » de l'enfant.	2	8

Sur ces 64 noms, 44 sont pris dans le lignage du père, 5 seulement dans le lignage de la mère.

Ce tableau n'a qu'une valeur de simple indication. Pour aller plus loin, il aurait fallu étudier à part le nom donné par le père et celui donné par la mère, ce que nous n'avons pas pu faire (rappelons que 75 % des individus sont désignés sous un seul nom, soit que le père et la mère se soient mis d'accord sur le même, soit que l'un des deux noms soit tombé en désuétude dès les premières années de l'enfant).

Retenons simplement qu'il y a une nette tendance à choisir le nom dans la parenté paternelle de l'enfant[1].

Il semble qu'on évite de donner le nom d'une personne très âgée ou d'une personne décédée depuis peu de temps.

Il ne semble pas que dans cette transmission du nom il y ait autre chose qu'une marque d'affection à l'égard d'un parent. Aucun lien n'est créé entre l'enfant et l'adulte dont il porte le nom. Manifestement, il n'y a rien dans les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés qui impose la perpétuation des noms et leur transmission des morts aux vivants.

Quand on veut donner à un de ses enfants un nom porté par une personne d'un autre lignage, il faut demander l'accord de celle-ci, qui ne le donne pas forcément (elle peut craindre que son nom soit ainsi porté plus tard par un voleur ou un fainéant).

Si elle donne son accord cela ne comporte pas à proprement parler un paiement, mais on peut lui offrir un petit cadeau.

Il n'y a besoin d'aucune autorisation pour prendre un nom porté par une personne du lignage de la mère ou du lignage du père de l'enfant.

Le seul cas où la coutume impose le choix du nom est celui des jumeaux.
Les jumeaux mâles sont appelés Adam et Agosu.
Les jumeaux garçon et fille sont appelés Adam et Efa[2].
Les jumelles sont appelées Chimba et Sisi.

Rapports sociaux a l'intérieur du lignage

Tutelle L'enfant, jusqu'à ce qu'il soit en âge de travailler, est placé sous la responsabilité de la mère et, à un échelon de plus, sous celle de l'aîné de ses oncles au sens classificatoire. Tous les oncles ont à un degré moindre, autorité sur l'enfant ; la tutelle est collective.

La coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, hostile à toute division du lignage, ne reconnaît aucun droit particulier aux frères de la mère (toutefois, en fait, on paraît s'adresser de préférence à eux pour les affaires de peu d'importance). Pour les affaires graves, comme autoriser un mariage, les oncles au sens classificatoire se réunissent et délibèrent ; ils ne votent pas à proprement parler mais l'opposition avérée de trois ou quatre d'entre eux fait abandonner le projet.

C'est à la mère qu'on viendra se plaindre de l'enfant, et non au père. C'est elle qui décide d'en référer aux oncles si la chose est grave (exemple de Doni, 18 ans, qui défiora Elina, 15 ans. C'est à la mère de Doni que la mère de Elina est venue se plaindre. La mère de Doni est allée prévenir son frère aîné Fintiman qui a pris l'affaire en mains.)

Il faut bien distinguer cette tutelle principale, qui est imprescriptible, de la tutelle secondaire déléguée par les oncles à celui ou celle qui est chargé d'élever l'enfant.

[2] Ceci se rattache à un mythe dérivé de la tradition biblique, que nous exposerons ci-après.

Désignation du tuteur. Quand un enfant atteint 5 ou 6 ans, la mère et les oncles décident qui sera chargé de son éducation et deviendra son tuteur. La pensée des Noirs Réfugiés est qu'un enfant est beaucoup mieux éduqué s'il se trouve isolé et placé directement sous la responsabilité d'un adulte.

Pour décider qui élèvera un enfant, on ne fait pas une réunion générale du lignage. Tout est réglé entre la mère et ses frères au sens propre, la grand-mère maternelle et l'arrière-grand-mère si elle est encore vivante. Les oncles au sens classificatoire de l'enfant ne sont consultés que s'il n'y pas d'oncles au sens ordinaire. Les aïeules ont une influence prépondérante dans cette décision, comme pour tout ce qui concerne l'enfant pendant ses premières années. L'influence des oncles va en augmentant à mesure que l'enfant avance en âge.

Il n'y a pas de règle précise pour la dévolution de cette tutelle, et nul ne peut se prévaloir d'un droit sur l'enfant.

Le tuteur ou la tutrice exerce la responsabilité de l'éducation, mais il ne peut prendre aucune décision sans demander l'avis des oncles dont la décision est sans appel. La tutelle peut toujours être retirée.

Cette tutelle est exercée par une seule personne, homme ou femme.

C'est très souvent la mère. Dans un grand nombre de cas, la mère élève seule ses enfants, garçons et filles, avec le concours de son mari qui souvent est un autre que le père. Le mari n'exerce en fait aucun droit. Que les enfants soient à lui ou non, il les entretient indirectement en entretenant sa femme. Il n'a qu'une autorité précaire. Tout lien avec les enfants disparaît en cas de divorce.

La tutelle est souvent exercée par la grand-mère maternelle, par une tante ou même par une sœur aînée.

Si la grand-mère maternelle (ou l'arrière-grand-mère si elle est encore vivante) insiste pour élever un enfant, la mère ne peut refuser ; on voit un assez grand nombre de cas de femmes qui n'ont qu'un seul enfant et l'ont donné à élever à leur mère ; il est vrai que l'une et l'autre vivant ensemble, ce n'est pas un grand sacrifice pour la mère.

On voit ainsi des femmes de plus de 70 ans, ayant eu une dizaine d'enfants, élever 3 ou 4 de leurs petits-enfants. L'aïeule du village d'Asisi, Kuluba († 1957), après avoir eu 12 enfants, éleva au cours de sa longue existence une dizaine de ses enfants et petits-enfants ; quand elle mourut en 1957 âgée de 100 ans, elle élevait encore un enfant, un de ses arrière-petits-fils âgé de 12 ans. Bien entendu, elle ne travaillait plus depuis longtemps et était nourrie par sa famille ainsi que l'enfant. Mais c'était elle qui exercait sur lui le pouvoir de tutelle.

Si c'est le père qui est chargé de l'éducation de l'enfant, il l'emmène dans sa propre famille maternelle. Ses sœurs l'aideront à élever l'enfant tant qu'il aura besoin de la présence d'une femme.

Le père exercera dès lors une tutelle correspondant à celle qu'exerce habituellement la mère, sous la responsabilité des oncles.

On voit quelquefois un homme élever une fille. D'une façon générale, si un homme a eu d'une femme 3 enfants ou plus, on admet qu'il est normal qu'on lui en donne un à élever, mais cela ne constitue pas un droit ; il ne peut rien exiger.

Un des lieux communs de la littérature ethnographique est le sentiment de frustration qu'éprouverait en régime matrilinéaire le père séparé de ses enfants. Des réflexions entendues de loin en loin pourraient laisser croire à l'existence d'un tel sentiment chez les Noirs Réfugiés. Par exemple Baïna, du village Asisi, nous dit un jour avec amertume : « j'ai eu 8 enfants, tous vivants, et on ne m'en a donné qu'un à élever ». Mais ce n'est qu'une apparence. Aucun Noir Réfugié ne songe sérieusement à élever les 5 ou 6 enfants qu'il a eus au cours de sa vie de trois ou quatre femmes différentes. Cela lui serait d'ailleurs matériellement impossible, compte tenu du mode de vie des Noirs Réfugiés et de l'obligation pour les hommes adultes de se déplacer sans cesse à la recherche de travaux salariés. Par exemple, en poussant Baïna à dire le fond de sa pensée, il n'était pas difficile de comprendre qu'il aurait souhaité élever 2 ou 3 de ses 8 enfants (nés de quatre femmes différentes), ceux qu'il aimait pour des raisons subjectives : les autres ne l'intéressaient guère et, qu'ils fussent élevés ici ou là lui était indifférent.

En réalité le sentiment paternel chez les Noirs Réfugiés est chose assez subjective ; élever un fils ou élever un neveu, cela ne fait qu'un à leurs yeux. Le même sentiment paternel se développera, et dans les deux cas on dira « mon fils » et « mon père ».

Les mères donnent leurs enfants à élever avec la plus grande facilité, spécialement à l'intérieur du lignage.

Par exemple Eliana (Dju, F8), âgée en 1957 d'environ 45 ans, qui avait 9 enfants vivants, n'en élevait que quatre :

△ Alilo 1937 élevé par son père Matapi (Asisi-Aw. B.) ;
△ Doni 1939 élevé par sa grand-mère maternelle Béniti (Dju, E5) ;
○ Agoba 1940 élevée par Lènga (F36), sœur au sens classificatoire de Eliana (parenté au 10e degré) ;
△ A... 1943 élevée par son père Yusu (Papaïston) ;
○ S... 1947 élevée par Kulina, sœur de même mère de Eliana (Dju, E9) ;
○ S... 1947 élevée par sa mère et 3 jeunes enfants élevés par leur mère.

On voit des situations peu banales comme celle de Mimi (Boniville, Kotika), qui a donné son unique enfant à élever à sa sœur et élève un autre enfant à la place.

En 1957, Téké (L1, F44, ve Loka) qui avait 7 enfants vivants, n'en élevait aucun.

△ C... 1945 élevé par Mélita, mère de Téké (L1, E32) ;
△ A... 1947 élevé par Akomédi (L1, F34), sœur au sens classificatoire de Téké ;
△ M... 1950 élevé par Mélita ;
△ C... 1952 élevé par son père Baïna (Dip. II) ;
○ K... 1953 élevée par △ Mato (Aw. B. 1), père de son père Baïna ;
○ F... 1956 élevée par Mélita.

Baïna, que nous connaissons depuis longtemps, était incapable de donner la moindre explication de l'étrange comportement de sa femme. Il avait du reste renoncé depuis longtemps à comprendre la psychologie des femmes Boni.

Par contre un certain nombre de femmes refusent obstinément de se séparer de leurs enfants, décidant de les élever tous, filles et garçons, par leurs propres moyens. C'est le cas par exemple de Magdaléna (Kormotibo) femme d'un caractère intraitable, qui éleva elle-même ses 8 enfants au prix des pires difficultés. En pareil cas, on dit de la mère que c'est une femme égoïste et qu'elle a mauvais caractère, mais il n'est nullement question de lui enlever un enfant de force. Personne ne s'y risquerait, pas plus ses frères ou ses oncles que le chef du lignage. Seule sa mère le pourrait, et les femmes qui agissent ainsi ont généralement perdu leur mère.

Les conditions dans lesquelles sont élevés les enfants jettent une vive lumière sur la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés relativement à la parenté, et méritent une étude particulière.

Au cours d'une enquête menée d'octobre à décembre 1957, nous avons pu relever avec précision dans quelles conditions avaient été élevées 311 personnes se répartissant ainsi :

Sexe masculin	nés avant 1936 (éducation terminée)	73
	nés de 1936 à 1949 inclus (éducation en cours)[1]	88

Récapitulation :

70 % des garçons
85 % des filles — sont élevés dans le lignage de la mère

27 % des garçons
13 % des filles — sont élevés dans le lignage du père

3 % des garçons
2 % des filles — sont élevés par des étrangers aux deux lignages.

Il est important d'autre part de mettre en évidence dans quelle proportion les enfants sont élevés par des femmes ou par des hommes :

67 % des garçons
86 % des filles — sont élevés par des femmes

33 % des garçons
12 % des filles — sont élevés par des hommes.

Cette part prépondérante des femmes dans l'éducation des enfants est un des aspects fondamentaux de la structure sociale des Noirs Réfugiés. En fait les femmes considèrent que les enfants leur appartiennent, et si elles en donnent quelques-uns à élever à des hommes, c'est dans la mesure où elles le veulent bien. [illegible] nception, que l'on retrouve largement répandue chez les Noirs d'Amérique, au[illegible]s comme en Guyane, explique, bien plus que la fréquence des divorces, l'impossibilité pour eux de constituer, en l'absence de coercition exercée sur les femmes, des patrilignages.

Plusieurs indications importantes peuvent encore être tirées de ces tableaux :

1) ils montrent la continuité et la vitalité de la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés. La proportion des garçons et filles élevés par la mère, la grand-mère paternelle, le père, etc., est sensiblement constante d'une génération à l'autre. Il n'y a aucune tendance à l'accroissement de la proportion des enfants élevés par le père ; elle semble même aller en décroissant, ce qui peut être rapproché de l'instabilité croissante des unions. En fait, en dépit des influences européennes, on n'observe chez les Noirs Réfugiés aucune évolution vers des structures patrilinéaires.

2) Le fait qu'une partie des enfants sont élevés hors de leur lignage a peu de conséquences pour l'unité des groupes, car la plupart d'entre eux, leur éducation terminée, viennent se fixer dans un des villages dépendant de leur lignage.

Sur 88 hommes nés avant 1936, 28 ont été élevés hors de leur lignage ; 21 d'entre eux y sont revenus ; 7 seulement, soit moins de 8 %, se sont fixés dans d'autres lignages.
Sur 78 femmes nées avant 1936, 12 ont été élevées hors de leur lignage, sur lesquelles 4 seulement, soit 5 %, se sont fixées définitivement hors de leur groupe.

Éducation des enfants. Si l'éducation des filles ne nécessite pas un apprentissage difficile, il n'en est pas de même pour les garçons ; la somme de connaissances que doit posséder un Noir Réfugié pour exercer valablement les techniques de son groupe, est considérable. Il doit notamment :

— Connaître plus de 200 espèces d'arbres avec leur utilisation, la façon de les abattre, la façon de travailler leur bois ;

— Etre capable de construire des canots d'au moins 10 barils (1.000 kilogrammes de charge). Cette seule technique demande plusieurs années d'apprentissage ;

— Acquérir une connaissance suffisante du travail de charpentier pour construire sa maison et celle de sa femme ;

— Apprendre la manœuvre des canots sur la rivière et les techniques du canotage de transport.

A ces connaissances traditionnelles qui demeurent indispensables, s'ajoutent depuis quelques années des connaissances sérieuses en mécanique, l'emploi des moteurs hors-bord devenant de plus en plus courant ; ces connaissances sont transmises de façon empirique, comme elles ont été acquises. On doit constater que les moteurs marchent et qu'ils sont bien entretenus.

Le système d'éducation employé par les Noirs Réfugiés est d'une efficacité certaine ; leurs enfants sont excessivement turbulents et très difficiles quand ils sont en groupe. Quand ils sont répartis individuellement au milieu des adultes, ils sont placés dans les meilleures conditions pour apprendre les techniques et les traditions de leur groupe.

La personne chargée de l'éducation d'un enfant ne le confie pas volontiers à une autre et l'emmène dans tous ses déplacements. Cependant, par un souci de décence, la tutrice envoie coucher dans d'autres maisons les enfants dont elle a la charge, les jours où son mari vient la visiter. Les garçons vont dormir chez un frère, un oncle, un camarade ; les filles impubères de même ; mais il n'en est pas de même des filles arrivées à la puberté, qui sont soumises à une stricte surveillance.

C'est une des raisons pour lesquelles les Boni répugnent à mettre leurs enfants à l'école (école française de Maripasoula, école surinamienne de Kotika). Sans vouloir aborder ici dans toute son ampleur ce douloureux problème, on doit constater que cet enseignement, entièrement inadapté et dispensé par des instituteurs qui méprisent les Noirs Réfugiés, a des résultats à peu près semblables à ceux que l'on observe généralement en Afrique, le principal étant de rendre les enfants étrangers à leur famille et inadaptés à leur propre pays. Il est pratiquement sans exemple que la nation Boni ait bénéficié du passage à l'école d'un des siens : si l'enfant réussit, il part à Paramaribo et ne revient plus jamais. S'il échoue, il a beaucoup plus de mal ensuite à apprendre les techniques de son groupe car les années où l'esprit est le plus malléable ont été perdues à cet égard ; quant aux connaissances acquises à l'école, elles sont tellement étrangères à la vie des Noirs Réfugiés qu'il n'en reste plus au bout de quelques années que des bribes informes.

D'une façon générale, le procédé d'éducation employé chez les Noirs Réfugiés est l'imitation de l'adulte. Il est rare qu'on donne à l'enfant une leçon à proprement parler. Il voit faire, il essaie de sa propre initiative et petit à petit il apprend. Par exemple il voit son tuteur faire un canot, on lui demande simplement d'aller chercher des palmes sèches et d'enlever les copeaux ; il entend les adultes discuter la poursuite du travail. Vers l'âge de 12 ou 13 ans, il essaie de faire un premier canot pour lui, avec l'aide d'un camarade plus âgé. Il acquiert progressivement la connaissance de cette technique.

Les garçons commencent à participer aux travaux agricoles dès l'âge de 6 ou 7 ans, principalement pour sarcler et planter. Vers 10 ou 11 ans ils commencent à manier le sabre et aident à sabrer la brousse ; vers 12 ans ils commencent à manier la hache et apprennent à abattre des arbres. A 14 ou 15 ans, ils commencent à faire de petits canots. Un adolescent de 16 ou 17 ans est en général capable de couper un abattis pour sa mère ou pour sa sœur.

Le tuteur prend le plus souvent son rôle très au sérieux, se préoccupant d'enseigner à l'enfant tout ce qui lui est nécessaire. Si c'est une femme, elle demande à ses frères d'enseigner les techniques de canotage et de construction.

Le principe est de développer très tôt le sens de la responsabilité chez l'enfant, en le mettant progressivement dans la nécessité de gagner sa vie. Le tuteur ne fournit pas d'argent de poche, et à l'exception d'un hamac tous les deux ans, pas d'objets manufacturés (les enfants jusqu'à 11-12 ans n'étant pas vêtus, il n'a guère de frais d'habillement à supporter). Mais il donne progressivement à l'enfant des occasions de gagner quelque argent par son travail. A partir de 10 ans, l'enfant commence à rendre quelques services : par exemple pour la construction d'un canot, il aide à transporter les palmes sèches destinées au brûlage. S'il s'agit d'un canot destiné à la vente, le tuteur lui remettra une petite somme sur l'argent gagné. A 14 ans un adolescent commence à subvenir à presque tous ses besoins.

Par exemple, de juin à décembre 1956, Tasa (14 ans), fils de Fintiman (Boniville) avait gagné environ 13.000 francs :

juin	aidé son père à construire un grand canot pour l'administration (45 jours)	6.000
octobre	allé à Saint-Laurent comme bossman auxiliaire	3.000
décembre	aidé à convoyer un canot de la mission de délimitation renvoyé à vide sur Maripasoula	4.000
		13.000

Son père, chargé de son éducation, le laissait employer cet argent à sa guise ; il nous fit remarquer avec orgueil que pour la première fois en 1956, son fils avait pu subvenir entièrement à ses besoins, mais qu'il importait de le maintenir sous une ferme autorité jusqu'à ce qu'il fût capable de faire seul des travaux d'homme : pour cela 5 ou 6 ans d'apprentissage ne seraient pas de trop.

En fait, nous avons eu maintes fois l'occasion de le constater, c'est dans cet apprentissage prolongé que se développent le sérieux et l'habileté technique si remarquable des Noirs Réfugiés ; à 20 ans la plupart d'entre eux ne savent encore rien faire de bon, et ce n'est guère avant 25 ou 27 ans qu'ils deviennent capables d'un travail soigné ; à cet égard, la tendance actuelle des jeunes garçons à une émancipation précoce (l'âge du mariage des hommes descend à 20 et même 18 ans) risque d'avoir des conséquences très fâcheuses pour l'avenir des Noirs Réfugiés.

La personne chargée de l'éducation d'une jeune fille exerce à son égard les pouvoirs de la mère. C'est elle qui l'autorise à se marier et en lui remettant le pdŋgi, vêtement des femmes mariées, lui donne symboliquement sa liberté de femme. C'est à elle que le premier mari verse le prix de la virginité de la jeune fille.

L'autorité du tuteur était, jusqu'à une époque toute récente, demeurée très forte et se prolongeait fort tard ; il avait le droit de frapper son pupille pour le faire obéir, et il exerçait ses pouvoirs jusqu'au moment où, jugeant l'éducation terminée, il l'autorisait à se marier, ce qui n'arrivait guère autrefois avant 25-27 ans.

Fintiman (de Boniville), âgé en 1958 d'environ 50 ans, raconte que son père, chargé de l'élever, ne l'autorisa pas à se marier avant qu'il fût complètement confirmé comme charpentier et constructeur de canots, vers l'âge de 27 ans. Jusqu'à cet âge il demeura soumis à l'autorité la plus tyrannique ; son père entendait notamment lui interdire de sortir le soir, et il devait pour entretenir une liaison clandestine, prétexter des parties de pêche nocturne !

Quand le tuteur d'un garçon juge son éducation terminée, il l'aide à construire sa maison et lui remet des outils, une cantine contenant des vêtements, et un hamac. Le garçon doit faire désormais son chemin dans la vie.

Sa vie durant, il continuera à témoigner le plus grand respect à la personne qui l'a élevé et souvent, parlant d'elle, il dira : « mon père » ou « ma mère ».

Quand un Noir Réfugié, au cours d'une conversation vient à dire : « Mon père faisait ceci », il veut souvent parler de l'homme qui l'a élevé ; s'il veut parler de son véritable père, il dira : « Mon père même, qui m'a fait ». De même quand il dit : « Mon grand-père », il veut en général parler d'un grand-oncle. Cette confusion rend aléatoires les recherches sur la vie familiale, tant qu'on ne possède pas de recensement nominal ; il semble qu'elle ait induit en erreur plusieurs auteurs, leur faisant croire que chez les Noirs Réfugiés le père élève lui-même ses enfants, alors que c'est au contraire l'exception.

Le tuteur garde toute sa vie, sur son pupille devenu adulte, un certain pouvoir. Il est le conciliateur, auquel on s'adressera en première instance si on a à se plaindre de son pupille.

Ce pouvoir de conciliation est légué par le tuteur à sa mort, comme la tutelle elle-même.

Rôle de la mère. Le lien sacré par excellence est, pour les Noirs Réfugiés, celui qui les rattache à leur mère, et par elle aux ancêtres du lignage. Il se traduit à l'égard de la mère par un sentiment d'affection délicat et profond, qui s'adresse aussi, moins directement, aux proches parents du côté maternel et à tous les membres du lignage. Ce n'est pas en vain qu'à l'intérieur du lignage les hommes se disent frères ; les obligations qu'ils ont les uns vis-à-vis des autres sont acceptées par tous avec joie, et chacun met à les remplir le meilleur de lui-même, car il y transpose le sentiment d'amour qu'il éprouve à l'égard de sa mère.

Le terme de matriarcat a été souvent employé à tort à l'égard des Noirs Réfugiés, laissant croire que la femme y exerce une autorité ; c'est une erreur, la femme n'intervient pas dans leurs conseils et au point de vue politique elle n'existe pas à leurs yeux ; la femme n'a d'influence et d'autorité qu'en tant que mère, et sur ses propres enfants.

L'autorité de la mère reste très grande sur ses fils devenus hommes ; aucun d'eux ne se lancera dans une entreprise importante ou ne partira pour un grand voyage sans avoir pris conseil de sa mère ; si sa mère est formellement opposée à ce projet, il n'osera guère passer outre. Nous avons entendu en décembre 1952 un homme de 45 ans, M..., sérieux et intelligent, nous dire avec regret : « J'irais bien avec vous jusqu'à Cayenne, mais ma mère ne veut pas ».

La même année, G..., homme d'une cinquantaine d'années, particulièrement sérieux et travailleur, avait économisé de quoi acheter un moteur hors-bord ; sa mère, âgée de près de 75 ans, lui déconseilla formellement cet achat, lui représentant qu'il serait l'objet de la jalousie et qu'il risquait d'être victime de maléfices ; il renonça à son projet. Il n'osa le mettre à exécution qu'en 1957, après que le deuil de sa mère (morte en 1955) eût été levé.

Laisser sa mère dans le besoin est considéré comme une honte ; si une mère a plusieurs fils, ceux-ci se répartissent les achats à effectuer à son profit ; chaque année l'un d'eux coupera l'abattis destiné à la mère ; celle-ci en échange fournira du couac et des légumes, tant que ses forces lui permettront de travailler.

D'ordinaire chacun des fils, arrivé à 20 ou 25 ans, se construit dans son village une maison où il vit seul. Mais il arrive souvent qu'un homme arrivé à l'âge adulte continue à habiter la maison de sa mère ; par exemple en 1952, au village Loka, Ayaubédé, âgé d'environ 40 ans, vivait avec sa mère Chii.

Quant à l'autorité de la mère sur ses filles, elle est beaucoup plus stricte encore et dure toute la vie. La fille ne peut se marier sans l'autorisation de sa mère, ou de sa tutrice si elle n'est pas élevée par sa mère. La fille mariée dispose d'une maison que son mari lui a construite, mais cette maison est située à proximité de celle de sa mère. Comme la vie du ménage est intermittente et réduite à sa plus simple expression, elle reste placée sous la dépendance de sa mère jusqu'à la mort de celle-ci. Elle ne peut notamment voyager sans sa permission.

L'autorité des mères sur les filles était autrefois tyrannique ; il arrivait, dit-on, de voir une mère octogénaire requérir le bras d'un vieillard du lignage pour frapper sa fille sexagénaire qui lui avait désobéi. Mais actuellement cette autorité est battue en brèche par le développement de l'individualisme. Il en résulte un dévergondage croissant des filles et une instabilité croissante des unions.

La nature des rapports avec la mère est montrée par la coutume de l'héritage.

Si un homme meurt alors que sa mère est encore vivante, ses biens font retour à la mère. Elle peut les garder ou les partager entre les membres du lignage.

Rôle du père. Le père n'a aucun pouvoir sur les enfants, mais en général il est respecté d'eux et ses fils ne prennent aucune décision importante sans solliciter son avis.

Dans le cas très fréquent où la tutelle des enfants est confiée à la mère, le père exerce une autorité de fait tant que dure le ménage. Mais en cas de rupture il perd tout droit sur les enfants.

En général le père aime bien ses enfants, mais à la façon dont chez les européens on aime ses neveux ; il évite de se mêler de trop près à leur éducation qui est sous la responsabilité des oncles, lesquels pourraient l'inviter à ne pas s'occuper des affaires de la famille.

Mais si le père a reçu la tutelle d'un ou de plusieurs enfants, la situation est complètement différente. En cas de rupture du ménage, il les emmène avec lui. D'ailleurs, en règle générale, même s'il fait bon ménage avec sa femme, il installe dans son propre village les enfants dont on lui a confié la tutelle, auprès de sa famille maternelle ; c'est lui qui désormais pourvoiera entièrement, non seulement à leur entretien, mais à leur nourriture ; à l'exception des périodes où le mari séjourne avec eux auprès de sa femme, celle-ci n'a plus à les nourrir.

Si le père a reçu la tutelle d'un enfant, il peut lui-même la déléguer, sous sa responsabilité, à quelqu'un de son lignage. Nous avons relevé plusieurs exemples de cette pratique. Par exemple Afoondo (Aw.B.1, F56), âgé en 1957 d'environ 23 ans, avait été confié à son père Koniman (Lapé) qui l'avait lui-même confié à sa propre mère Awènkina.

Le fait que des enfants passent sous la tutelle de leur père ne modifie rien à leur position vis à vis du culte des ancêtres, et n'entraîne de la part du père aucun versement ou compensation quelconque. L'enfant devenu grand pourra revenir résider dans sa parenté maternelle (ce qu'il fait le plus souvent), ou rester dans le village de son père. Il n'y a sur ce point aucune obligation coutumière précise.

Le père joue un rôle important auprès des enfants quand ceux-ci arrivent à l'âge d'homme ; il leur procure leurs obia et leur transmet les connaissances et les pouvoirs magiques qu'il a lui-même reçus de son père.

Héritage de la tutelle. A la mort du tuteur, sa fonction est léguée, au même titre que ses biens, et selon le même principe de dispersion de l'héritage. S'il élevait plusieurs enfants, la tutelle de chacun d'eux sera léguée individuellement.

Par exemple Béniti († 1944) élevait ○ K... 1944, fille de sa fille Baïkom, et ○ W... 1942, fille de son fils Fintiman et d'une femme du village Papaïston. Elle légua le premier à sa fille Kulina, la seconde à sa fille Baïkom établie au village Loka. W... se trouvait ainsi emmenée dans un village qui n'était ni celui de sa parenté maternelle, ni celui de sa parenté paternelle. De tels cas ne sont pas rares. Les oncles de l'enfant, qui pourraient en principe reprendre la tutelle, ne paraissent jamais s'opposer, en pratique, à ce qu'elle soit léguée.

Le pouvoir spirituel que le tuteur conserve sur son pupille devenu adulte est légué de la même façon. Ainsi, dans l'exemple précédent, Béniti († 1955) légua la tutelle spirituelle qu'elle conservait sur chacun de ses fils et filles adultes qu'elle avait élevés elle-même, en partie à des personnes étrangères à son lignage.

Elle légua ainsi sa tutelle sur Fintiman (46 ans) au grand man sur Klémenti (43 ans) à Samalobi, frère du grand man sur ○ Kulina (38 ans) à Samalobi sur ○ Eliana (40 ans) au grand man.

Mais elle ne légua rien en ce qui concernait ses deux derniers enfants, ○ Baïkom (35 ans) et ○ Maria (28 ans) respectivement élevées par △ Malobi, mari de Béniti, et par ○ Aliki, une vieille femme du lignage Dju. Il appartiendra à ces deux personnes de léguer, à leur mort, la tutelle spirituelle sur les filles qu'elles ont élevées.

Le mariage

C'est faute d'un mot mieux approprié que nous employons le mot de mariage à l'égard des Noirs Réfugiés ; le mot de concubinage est d'un emploi déplaisant, pourtant il conviendrait mieux à ce que représente, dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés comme dans leur vie sociale, l'union de l'homme et de la femme.

Dans l'organisation que nous venons de décrire, il n'est supposé aucun lien stable et permanent entre l'homme et la femme.

Les Noirs Réfugiés paraissent en fait, à de rares exceptions près, peu capables d'associer un lien affectif fort et durable à l'union sexuelle. Ce sont à cet égard des instables, toujours en quête d'aventures nouvelles et ne se fixant à aucune. Leurs unions sont davantage inspirées par un souci matériel (se procurer les vivres qui leur sont nécessaires) que par un mobile sentimental. Il est bien rare de rencontrer chez eux l'apparence d'un amour sincère et durable à l'égard d'une femme ; cela se voit quelquefois mais c'est l'exception.

Ce n'est pas assez dire qu'ils ont peu de sentiments affectifs à l'égard de la femme. Dans les conversations que l'on entend le soir autour des feux de camp, s'exprime à son sujet un profond mépris ; il leur arrive de parler des femmes Boni comme d'une nation étrangère et presque ennemie ; ils les considèrent d'ailleurs comme à demi-irresponsables. Cette attitude transparaît dans la coutume concernant l'adultère, qui veut que l'on batte l'amant mais non la femme.

Le mariage chez les Noirs Réfugiés est en fait un contrat d'entretien, passé entre l'homme et la femme, qui prévoit l'exécution de tel ou tel travail par l'un au profit de l'autre, et pour la femme l'obligation d'être fidèle. Ce contrat est résiliable unilatéralement, sans indemnité d'aucune sorte. Il n'engage pas directement les parentés des conjoints ; il ne les engage qu'en cas de mort du conjoint, car le conjoint survivant doit supporter la sujétion du deuil. C'est principalement pour cela que le mariage doit être connu officiellement des deux lignages, et que le divorce doit être proclamé sans délai.

Exogamie. Le mariage est défendu entre personnes du même lignage. En exprimant cette défense, les Noirs Réfugiés emploient le mot bes (lignage au sens restreint) et non le mot lo.

Ainsi que nous l'avons vu en étudiant la situation des divers lignages, les divers groupes de parenté Boni suivent à cet égard des règles différentes :

— Le lignage Dju, qui ne forme au point de vue généalogique qu'un seul groupe, n'admet pas de mariage entre ses membres ;

— Le lignage Lapé est divisé au point de vue généalogique en deux groupes ; mais le mariage demeure prohibé entre ces deux fractions. La loi d'exogamie est respectée rigoureusement à l'intérieur de ce groupe ;

— Le lignage Kotika, qui tend par l'oubli de la généalogie à se scinder en trois fractions, tolère l'union entre membres de fractions différentes, dont il existait en 1958 sept cas. Par contre l'union n'est pas admise entre membres de la même fraction ;

— Le lignage Dipélu I, dont la généalogie est complètement connue, n'admet pas de mariage entre ses membres, bien qu'il soit depuis plusieurs générations coupé en deux unités sociales distinctes, les villages L'Enfant Perdu et Apatu, entièrement séparés géographiquement et possédant chacune son chef ;

— Il en est de même pour Dipélu II, mais le mariage est permis entre Dipélu I et Dipélu II ;

— Le lignage Papaïston admet la possibilité d'union entre la fraction principale et la petite fraction Papaïston 2. Mais il n'y a aucune union entre membres de la fraction principale ;

— Le lignage Awara Bakka au contraire tolère les unions non seulement entre les membres de ses trois fractions, mais encore depuis une époque récente à l'intérieur de la fraction principale :

○ Abenkina (Aw.B.1, F21) et △ Boofo (Aw.B.1, E 31)
⌒ Kyéti (Aw.B.1, E30) et △ Pitipiti (Aw.B.1, F3).

Cette situation est un objet de scandale de la part des autres groupes, et il ne semble pas qu'on assiste là au début d'une transformation générale.

Il est à noter qu'on admet la possibilité du mariage entre les membres des groupes présumés de même origine, mais séparés depuis très longtemps, comme Dipélu I et Dipélu II.

D'une façon générale, on peut dire que la loi d'exogamie est maintenue fermement à l'intérieur des fractions qui connaissent complètement leur généalogie. L'union entre « frères » et « sœurs » classificatoires appartenant à des fractions différentes demeure toujours prohibée en principe, mais comme pour l'ensemble des institutions des Noirs Réfugiés, la prohibition cesse d'être observée si la crainte de sanctions suprahumaines s'affaiblit.

C'est ce qui explique la différence d'attitude entre les lignages. Dans le lignage Awara Bakka, on ne se souvient pas que des mariages entre fractions aient été suivis de maladies ou de malheurs, et pour cette raison on ne les craint plus.

Dans le lignage Kotika il en était de même, mais un événement survenu en 1956 jeta la consternation. Une jeune femme, Awini (K1, E37, Boniville), mourut subitement, et la divination montra qu'elle avait été frappée par le kunu pour avoir épousé son frère classificatoire Sintamann (K3, E145, Boniville). Pourtant ils appartenaient à deux fractions différentes et leur parenté commune était la plus éloignée qui fut possible dans le lignage (parents au 10e degré).

Pikodu. La faute contre l'exogamie, pikodu[1], inceste au sens large, est considérée comme une offense contre la société et contre la loi religieuse ; elle expose le lignage à la vengeance des dieux qui exercent sur lui le kunu. Mais dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, si l'inceste déclenche le fonctionnement des kunu existants, il n'en crée pas de nouveaux. Ce qui a été écrit à ce sujet par plusieurs auteurs nous paraît inexact, tout au moins pour les Boni. Dans l'exemple exposé ci-dessus, c'est au kunu exercé depuis longtemps par le yoko d'un homme jadis assassiné par un membre du lignage qu'a été attribuée la mort de Awini.

Commettre pikodu est une des fautes les plus graves que puisse commettre un Noir Réfugié ; bien entendu, comme dans le reste des prescriptions morales, on ne fait appel à aucun principe abstrait : les anciens enseignent aux enfants dès leur plus jeune âge : « si tu commets pikodu, tu tomberas malade ou tu mourras. » Par surcroît, le chef du lignage inflige de sévères punitions aux coupables : pour l'homme, confectionner à l'herminette un nombre élevé de planches ; pour la femme, préparer et vanner en vue du prochain broko de plusieurs touques de riz, travail long et fastidieux.

Cependant, si malgré injures et coups un homme et une femme de même bee tiennent absolument à se marier, on finit, de guerre lasse, par accepter le fait accompli. On se rend au fruga tiki pour faire une offrande de tafia aux ancêtres, leur demander de pardonner la faute commise. Aucune réprobation ne s'étend aux enfants nés de cette union.

Dans le lignage Awara Bakka, qui a pratiquement rejeté la loi d'exogamie, le principe d'une sanction subsiste et il y a un simulacre de poursuite des coupables à travers le village.

Ne pouvant employer la coercition et n'ayant pas le droit de chasser un membre du lignage, Capitaine et conseil ne peuvent exercer aucune sanction matérielle.

La même notion de pikodu s'attache aux unions entre personnes d'un même patrilignage, bien que ces patrilignages n'aient aucune organisation effective et n'existent que par la transmission de l'interdit fondamental, bwosi kina.

Avant de conclure une union officielle ou même clandestine, l'homme et la femme s'assurent qu'ils n'ont pas le même bwosi kina et en pareil cas renoncent à leur projet ; cela, même s'ils sont de tribus différentes, par exemple une femme Boni et un Saramaka.

(1) Ce mot paraît provenir du portugais pecado, péché.

Cette prohibition est d'ordre purement religieux et ne comporte pas de sanctions sociales ; les intéressés sont convaincus qu'en pareil cas, une sanction surhumaine les frapperait, sous la forme de maladie ou d'accident.

Prohibitions limitant le mariage. En dehors du grand interdit, pikodu, qui s'attache aux unions à l'intérieur d'un même matrilignage et à l'intérieur d'un même patrilignage, on trouve chez les Noirs Réfugiés deux prohibitions limitant le mariage, qu'ils expriment ainsi :

Je ne peux avoir deux femmes en même temps dans le même lignage. Par exemple il m'est interdit d'épouser à la fois deux « sœurs », mais si je rompe avec ma femme, je peux épouser sa « sœur » au sens classificatoire ou n'importe quelle autre femme du même lignage ; — Je ne peux avoir de rapports, même passagers, avec une femme qui a été mariée avec mon frère de même mère ; en particulier, si mon frère vient à mourir, je ne pourrai épouser sa veuve.

Les Boni ne sont pas capables d'expliquer les raisons profondes de ces interdits, mais ils les interprètent comme des défenses purement sociales et non religieuses. L'infracteur est simplement menacé d'être battu.

La première de ces règles semble très largement admise en Afrique Noire, tant dans les sociétés patrilinéaires qu'en régime matrilinéaire.

La seconde de ces règles est caractéristique dans l'aire culturelle Akan (Agni, Baoulé), et montre que la coutume familiale des Noirs Réfugiés se rattache beaucoup plus directement à celle du groupe Agni-Ashanti qu'à celle du Dahomey.

On peut remarquer que cette règle est exactement contraire à la coutume des Saramaka, qui oblige la veuve à épouser l'un des frères du mort ; cette coutume a été interprétée par plusieurs auteurs comme provenant de l'imitation du lévirat des Juifs, que certains rebelles connaissaient (on sait en effet que parmi les propriétaires d'esclaves, il y avait de nombreux Juifs).

Quelle que soit son origine, il importe de remarquer que la coutume Saramaka n'a aucun rapport, en ce qui concerne son contenu juridique, avec le lévirat, ni avec l'héritage des veuves, tel qu'il se pratique dans de nombreuses sociétés africaines. Elle ne correspond en rien à la transmission d'un droit sur la veuve, puisque ce droit n'existe pas ; elle résulte probablement de l'idée que la veuve est mieux protégée des effets de la jalousie du défunt en épousant l'un de ses frères. Elle a d'ailleurs le choix entre tous ses frères au sens classificatoire, dans le matrilignage comme dans le patrilignage, ce qui lui assure un choix étendu. Elle peut rompre cette union sans aucune compensation après quelques mois de vie commune, et reprendre son entière liberté.

Statistiques des mariages entre les groupes de parenté. Nous avons relevé sur le tableau ci-contre la totalité des unions pour lesquelles nous avons pu identifier avec certitude la parenté des conjoints, y compris celles qui ont été rompues par le divorce et par la mort. Leur nombre total est de 411.

Le tableau met en évidence la plus ou moins grande fréquence des unions entre tels et tels groupes de parenté, ainsi que la fréquence des unions entre femmes Boni et hommes des autres tribus, DJUKA, PARAMAKA et SARAMAKA.

Sur un total de 411 unions de femmes Boni, on relève :

327 avec des BONI (80 %) ;
50 avec des DJUKA (12 %) ;
21 avec des SARAMAKA (5 %) ;
5 avec des PARAMAKA (1 %) ;
8 avec des créoles de Surinam (2 %).

La proportion des mariages intertribaux (20 %) est élevée ; elle résulte de la présence fréquente sur le Maroni de canotiers Djuka ou Saramaka venant effectuer des transports. La réciproque n'est pas vraie, les mariages entre hommes Boni et femmes des autres groupements sont peu fréquents ; cela tient à ce que les Boni n'ont guère l'occasion de fréquenter le Tapanahoni, où l'activité économique est nulle.

Pour 123 hommes mariés des villages de la rive française on comptait en novembre 1958, 11 unions avec des femmes Djuka, soit 8 %. Il n'existait aucun mariage avec des femmes Saramaka ou Paramaka.

Le tableau confirme par ailleurs que les mariages entre membres de parentés différentes sont entièrement libres et ne sont soumis à aucune préoccupation d'échange ou de réciprocité. Par exemple sur 60 unions entre femmes Boni du lignage Lapé et hommes Boni, on relève :

6	avec des hommes du lignage Dipélu I
7	— — — Dipélu II
7	— — — — Papaïston
11	— — — Awara Bakka
4	— — Dju
5	— — Dipélu I
20	— — — Kotika

En fait, c'est la proximité géographique des villages qui influe le plus directement sur les unions.

Par exemple une proportion élevée de femmes de Kormotibo (Dip. II) ont épousé des hommes de Papaïston et réciproquement.

Cela tient à ce que ces villages sont proches l'un de l'autre et isolés des autres. Il en est de même pour Kotika et L'Enfant-Perdu (Dip. I). Dans le petit lignage Afi, réparti entre les villages de Kormotibo et Asisi-Awara Bakka, plus de la moitié des femmes sont mariées avec des habitants de ces deux villages.

Certaines affinités personnelles et habitudes de vie influent indirectement. Par exemple c'est à Asisi-Awara Bakka que les canotiers Djuka de passage en pays Boni ont l'habitude de séjourner, parce qu'ils sont reçus chez quelques-uns d'entre eux installés là depuis longtemps. Ils nouent des relations avec les gens d'Asisi, et cela favorise de nouvelles unions. C'est ce qui explique la proportion élevée d'unions entre les femmes de ce village et les Djuka (13 sur 75). Par contre on n'observe presque aucun mariage avec des Djuka au village de Papaïston, où aucun Djuka n'est installé à demeure.

La demande en mariage. Le prétendant est obligé de demander leur accord à sa propre mère et à ses oncles (tout au moins l'aîné de ses oncles au sens classificatoire) ; en général il demande aussi à son père.

Si deux des oncles au sens classificatoire sont formellement opposés, le projet doit être abandonné. Mais il n'y a pas de sanction possible pour désobéissance.

Le prétendant ne fait pas sa demande lui-même ; après s'être assuré de l'accord de la jeune fille, il envoie deux personnes, un de ses oncles ou frères et une de ses sœurs au sens classificatoire.

Ces envoyés parlent à la mère et aux oncles de la femme réunis. S'ils sont d'accord, ils vont demander l'accord du chef du lignage. Les hommes et les femmes du lignage de la femme réunis boivent un litre de tafia apporté par les envoyés. Avant de boire, le doyen du lignage en verse un peu par terre en invoquant les ancêtres, leur demandant de conserver l'accord du ménage et de leur accorder santé et fécondité. On fait cette cérémonie sur place et on ne se rend pas au fraga liki, car on aurait peur de se présenter de nouveau au fraga liki en cas de rupture ; la prière faite n'importe où dans le village n'engage pas.

Les deux envoyés, homme et femme, jouent un rôle très précis. L'homme représente le postulant (c'est une sorte de mariage par procuration).

Le chef du lignage appelle une sœur au sens classificatoire de la jeune fille. Il la prend par la main et la conduit à l'envoyé du demandeur, disant : « Je te donne cette femme ».

Puis il appelle un frère au sens classificatoire de la jeune fille. Il le conduit à l'envoyé du demandeur, disant : « Je te donne cet homme ».

Cette seconde partie de la cérémonie est purement symbolique ; il n'est aucunement question que cet homme et cette femme se marient. Elle semble avoir pour but de montrer la parfaite égalité de l'homme et de la femme dans le mariage.

Les paroles prononcées dans l'invocation aux ancêtres sont : « Nous donnons (cette) femme à (cet) homme ; qu'ils vivent ensemble, qu'ils ne soient pas malades, qu'ils aient des enfants, des enfants qui vivent ».

Il n'y a pas besoin de l'accord du père de la femme.

S'il s'agit du premier mariage d'une jeune fille, le fiancé vient, aidé de ses amis, lui construire une maison. Il lui construit un canot et lui achète ce qui est nécessaire à la vie du ménage. Quand la personne qui élève la jeune fille juge le temps venu, elle lui remet le pãŋgi, vêtement des femmes mariées, autorisant ainsi la consommation du mariage.

Le mari qui a construit la maison demande aux anciens du lignage de sa femme de venir devant la maison jeter du tafia, demander aux ancêtres que le couple soit fécond et demeure longtemps dans cette maison.

Voici par exemple comment s'est déroulé en 1948 la demande en mariage de Chitaïna (Aw.B.1, F43, village Asisi) par Déési (L1, F45, village Loka).

Déési avait envoyé pour le représenter son frère au sens classificatoire Tamu (L1, F32) plus âgé que lui d'une quinzaine d'années, et sa tante au sens classificatoire Yaana (L1, E39). (Voir le tableau généalogique du lignage Lapé).

Les envoyés, après avoir fait prévenir la veille, se présentèrent à 10 heures du matin au village Asisi-Awara Bakka. Étaient présents Irma, mère de Chitaïna, Alémin (Aw.B.1, E40), oncle au sens propre, Antonu (Aw.B.1, E47), un des plus âgés des oncles au sens classificatoire, Namu (Aw.B.1, E48), tante au sens classificatoire, et les frères et sœurs de même mère de la jeune fille.

Tamu prit la parole, développant les mérites de Déési et affirmant qu'il avait des intentions sérieuses. L'aîné des oncles déclara accepter. Chitaïna s'étant enfuie selon la coutume, il prit par la main sa jeune sœur Boomi qui n'avait que 5 ans et la conduisit à Tamu en disant : « Je te donne cette femme. » Puis il prit par la main Abéni, frère aîné de Chitaïna, et le conduisit à Yaana, disant : « je te donne cet homme ».

Puis on versa du tafia à terre en invoquant les ancêtres en faveur du ménage.

Le litre de tafia apporté par Déési fut partagé le soir symboliquement entre tous les habitants du village y compris le lignage Afi.

Pour l'installation du ménage, comme il n'y avait plus de place à proximité de la maison d'Irma pour construire, celle-ci donna une des deux maisons qu'elle possédait.

Voici encore un autre exemple concernant les deux femmes de Fintiman (Dju, F6, village Boniville).

Pour sa première femme Mimi (K3, E156, Boniville) il envoya ses frère et sœur de même mère Klémenti et Eliana, qui s'adressèrent à la mère de Mimi et à son oncle au sens classificatoire Lébiman.

Auparavant, Fintiman s'était assuré de l'accord de son propre père Malobi (Dip.I, E50) qui l'avait élevé, de sa mère Béniti et de son oncle Diolè (Dju, E1), aîné des oncles au sens classificatoire.

Pour demander sa seconde femme Bugi (Aw. B.1, F41, Vse Asisi-Awara-Bakka) il avait envoyé Dosu (Dip. I, E4, Boniville), frère au sens classificatoire de son père Malobi (quoique parent très éloigné) et sa sœur cadette de même mère Kulina, qui firent la demande à la mère de Bugi et à ses oncles au sens classificatoire Antonu et Mato.

Age du mariage. Il y avait autrefois une coutume très précise à ce sujet. Les hommes n'étaient pas autorisés à se marier avant 30 ans environ, constituant jusqu'à cet âge la force armée immédiatement mobilisable. Les femmes n'étaient autorisées par leur mère à se marier que lorsqu'elles avaient atteint leur complet développement physique, soit entre 20 et 22 ans. C'était la défense d'une société dépourvue de tout secours médical contre le risque obstétrical, particulièrement grave pour les très jeunes femmes. Quand le fiancé avait émigré temporairement pour gagner sa vie, le mariage pouvait être reculé jusqu'à 25 ans et plus. Ce mariage tardif des jeunes filles se rencontrait encore il y a peu d'années chez les Djuka, plus fidèles à la coutume. Il y avait en moyenne 5 à 10 ans de différence d'âge entre le mari et la femme.

Depuis une dizaine d'années, sous l'influence du relâchement de la discipline familiale, l'âge du mariage s'est abaissé considérablement, tant pour l'homme que pour la femme. Presque toutes les jeunes filles mariées ces deux dernières années avaient de 15 à 17 ans. On peut admettre que l'âge moyen du mariage des filles est de 16 ans[1].

Environ un tiers des jeunes gens se marient entre 18 et 20 ans, presque tous les autres avant 25 ans.

Cependant une partie des jeunes filles choisissent pour maris des hommes sensiblement plus âgés qu'elles, de sorte que la différence d'âge moyenne entre mari et femme demeure voisine de 6 ans.

A mesure que l'homme et la femme avancent en âge, cette différence d'âge moyenne de 6 ans se maintient au cours des remariages successifs, jusqu'à la vieillesse. Elle va ensuite en s'atténuant par le seul effet des facteurs démographiques, la proportion des femmes dans les tranches d'âge élevées étant de plus en plus forte.

Sur 37 femmes de plus de 60 ans des villages Boni de la rive française, 14 seulement étaient mariées ; toutes les autres étaient veuves ou divorcées depuis longtemps.

D'une façon générale, la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés considérait comme immoral le mariage d'une très jeune fille avec un homme âgé, ou d'un très jeune garçon avec une femme adulte. L'affaiblissement de la morale familiale est clairement démontré par deux évènements survenus au cours de l'été 1960. Un garçon de 13 ans et demi, K... de Boniville, quitta son tuteur pour rejoindre une femme d'Asisi, A..., de 20 ans son aînée, et de fort mauvaise réputation par surcroît ; quelques mois après, son exemple fut imité par un garçon de 14 ans qui se mit en ménage avec une femme de 29 ans. Jamais on n'avait rien vu de semblable, et l'on cria au scandale ; mais dans l'un et l'autre cas, tuteurs et chefs de lignage s'avérèrent incapables de faire respecter leur autorité par la force.

Mariage des jeunes filles. On peut dire encore (bien que les choses soient en train d'évoluer rapidement) que les jeunes filles, kweyi umã, occupent une place à part dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés ; la réprobation qui englobe les femmes ne s'étend pas à elles. On dit que les jeunes filles « ont de bonnes manières » et, de fait, la plupart d'entre elles, bien que nues à l'exception d'un petit tablier, ont une attitude réservée, un maintien décent qui contrastent avec l'attitude des femmes mariées. A vrai dire, cette vertu n'est pas tant due à des dispositions naturelles qu'à la ferme vigilance dont les entourent leurs mères. Celles-ci ne les quittent littéralement pas des yeux, ne permettant à aucun homme de leur adresser la parole hors de leur présence. « Jusqu'à l'aurore, jusqu'à ce que le coq chante, elle veille », dit la chanson, évoquant la mère qui veille sur la vertu de sa fille. Si une jeune fille vient à perdre sa virginité sans avoir été régulièrement épousée, pɔli na ɔsu, mise dans une maison, c'est un déshonneur pour sa mère et pour ses proches.

Alors qu'on laisse libres de leurs allées et venues les fillettes impubères, les jeunes filles sont l'objet d'une surveillance constante. Elles sont toujours sous la surveillance d'un de leurs proches nommément désigné. Si elles ont la permission d'aller danser dans un autre village, elles doivent se présenter dès l'arrivée à un oncle, une tante, un frère aîné qui veillera sur elles toute la soirée.

Quelquefois on construit pour une jeune fille une petite maison où elle dort seule... mais on l'y enferme à double tour pour la nuit.

A la tombée de la nuit, quand leurs mères sont affairées par la préparation du repas, on envoie les jeunes filles chercher de l'eau ou pêcher à la ligne ; il y a flottement dans la surveillance, et les séducteurs savent en profiter.

Jusqu'à une époque récente, les jeunes filles étaient tenues par leur mère dans les liens d'une stricte autorité, et bien que fiancées très jeunes, elles n'étaient pas autorisées à se marier avant d'avoir atteint leur complet développement physique.

Il arrivait souvent qu'une jeune fille fût promise par sa mère à un homme dès ses premières années (on dit encore, bien que cela ne se pratique plus, pɔli mɔfu na umã, mettre sa bouche sur une fille, entendant par là avoir reçu une promesse de mariage). Ce projet restait toujours soumis à l'accord de la fille devenue grande et ne constituait pas à proprement parler un contrat ; il ne comportait aucun versement ou compensation quelconque. On ne pouvait pas obliger une fille à un mariage qui lui déplaisait absolument, mais l'autorité de la mère était assez grande pour faire aboutir ces mariages dans la plupart des cas.

Si une jeune fille n'avait pas été promise, le jeune homme qui désirait l'épouser s'efforçait d'attirer son attention au cours d'une danse et d'échanger avec elle quelques mots. Plus tard il lui offrait une pagaie portant des symboles de fécondité et la représentation d'une maison et d'un canot. Si la jeune fille acceptait la pagaie, il pouvait la demander officiellement en mariage.

Le mariage d'une jeune fille ne comporte aucune dot au sens africain du terme, mais il comporte le versement à la mère du prix de la virginité. Ce versement est fait après consommation du mariage (ou après la défloration s'il y a eu union clandestine). Il comporte sept pièces d'étoffe, une dame-jeanne de tafia et divers objets d'importation (le tout représentant en 1958 environ 8.000 francs, ce qui est relativement peu important pour les Noirs Réfugiés). Il s'agit bien du prix de la virginité, car rien n'est reversé s'il y a rupture. L'homme donne d'autre part à la jeune fille des perles blanches, de l'étoffe rouge et des sucreries qui constituent le paiement de son akka.

Le prix de la virginité est versé à la personne qui a élevé la jeune fille, même si c'est un homme. Cette personne le partage par moitié avec la mère, ou, si celle-ci est morte, avec les sœurs de la mère.

Par exemple pour ○ Baïkom (Dju, F10), élevée par son père Malobi au village Loka, son mari Moomu (Kotika) a versé le prix de la virginité à Malobi qui l'a partagé avec sa femme Béniti.

Aucun versement n'est fait aux oncles ni au chef du lignage.

Le fait qu'une fille entretienne une liaison clandestine et soit déflorée sans avoir été régulièrement demandée en mariage, est considéré comme une honte pour la mère ; mais si le séducteur avoue et verse le prix de la virginité, l'honneur se trouve réparé.

La défloration n'entraîne pas forcément le mariage, car le séducteur n'entend pas toujours se charger de l'entretien du ménage.

Si la fille est déflorée trop jeune, la mère ne lui donne pas le pdygi et continue de lui interdire les rapports sexuels, car elle craint qu'elle ne devienne enceinte. Or, pour une fille, devenir enceinte sans avoir conclu un contrat d'entretien avec un homme, est une honte extrême, car cela signifie qu'elle ne vaut rien.

Si la jeune fille est enceinte, il ne peut être question pour l'homme de l'abandonner : cela ferait une grosse affaire entre les deux parentés : il doit rester avec elle au moins jusqu'à la naissance de l'enfant.

Actuellement, chez les Boni, les choses ont tendance à se passer tout autrement que ne le prévoit la coutume. L'opinion générale est qu'on ne peut plus tenir les filles, qu'elles échappent de plus en plus à l'autorité de leur mère ; nombre d'entre elles commencent à se dévergonder vers 14 ou 15 ans et on est obligé de les marier précipitamment à 15 ou 16 ans. Il est difficile de dire quelle est la proportion de ces mariages précipités, mais les récriminations qu'on entend de toutes parts au sujet du dévergondage des filles laissent penser qu'il va croissant. Dans les villages de la rive française, sur neuf jeunes filles mariées en 1958, on ne comptait que quatre mariages régulièrement conclus ; les cinq autres avaient été précipitamment arrangés soit parce que la jeune fille était enceinte (deux cas), soit parce qu'elle avait donné prise au scandale.

Presque toutes les jeunes filles mariées entre 1952 et 1956 avaient de 15 à 17 ans.

Voici à peu près comment les choses se passent :

L'homme qui est attiré par une jeune fille s'efforce d'échanger quelques mots avec elle à l'insu de sa mère. Il y a des formes spéciales pour ces déclarations. On parle à voix basse, très vite, en employant des formules particulières. Voici comment un de nos canotiers s'adressait un soir d'octobre 1952 à la jeune Lomé, âgée de 15 ans, du village de Boniville, qui s'était éloignée de sa mère sous prétexte d'aller nous chercher de l'eau.

— « Femme, je t'aime, je désire vivre avec toi, je désire t'épouser. Ce que Dieu a mis en moi, je ne peux le retirer[1]. Je ne sais pas si tu m'aimes, si tu vas répondre oui ou non ; peut-être ne suis-je pas aussi beau que toi, mais je ne peux m'empêcher de t'aimer. Si tu m'aimes, dis-le moi clairement. Voici que je suis venu, j'ai attaché mon canot à une roche, j'ai mouillé mes pieds avant d'arriver à terre[2]. »

— « Reviens demain, reviens, je ne peux pas te répondre aujourd'hui, je ne peux pas. »

— « Je sais pour aujourd'hui, mais ne sais pas pour demain[3], cède-moi, sois mienne, je te donnerai le vêtement[4]. »

Notre départ en tournée le lendemain mit fin pour un temps à ses entreprises !

Il arrive souvent que la jeune fille se laisse séduire ; la mère ne tarde pas à l'apprendre par les gens du village. Elle entre dans une grande colère, bat sa fille pour obtenir un aveu sans lequel elle ne peut rien obtenir du séducteur supposé. C'est une honte extrême pour une mère que de ne pas recevoir le prix de la virginité de sa fille : les autres femmes se moqueront d'elle et quant aux hommes, ils seront unanimes à rire cruellement du nouveau tour joué aux femmes. Or, certaines filles refusent obstinément d'avouer, ou elles ont déjà eu plusieurs aventures, de telle sorte qu'on ne parvient pas à savoir la vérité. Après force récriminations et disputes, l'affaire en reste là.

Si le séducteur a pu être identifié avec certitude, la mère, s'armant d'un bâton, va le rechercher de village en village ; ses oncles s'interposent et finissent par arranger l'affaire, en demandant à la mère d'accepter, puisqu'il n'y a rien d'autre à faire, le paiement de la virginité. Il faut absolument que ce paiement soit versé : si le jeune homme n'en était pas capable, ses oncles le verseraient à sa place, quitte à se retourner ultérieurement contre lui ; la mère accepte le paiement, l'honneur est sauf.

Dans beaucoup de cas, le couple se considère comme uni, au moins temporairement ; l'homme se met en devoir, s'il est travailleur, de bâtir une maison à sa femme. S'il n'est pas travailleur, il promet simplement de lui en faire une un jour : en réalité il s'est épargné ce gros travail ; la femme devra attendre des années, à moins que sa mère ou un de ses oncles ne meure, lui léguant sa maison.

(1) Ce qui signifie : je ne peux pas changer, il faut me prendre comme je suis.

(2) Paroles ampoulées auxquelles on ne peut attacher une signification précise ; c'est une sorte de musique verbale dont les formules varient à l'infini.

(3) Il faut comprendre : c'est aujourd'hui qu'il faut décider.

(4) L'homme dépose un de ses vêtements chez la femme qui a accepté de l'épouser.

Observation à Boniville en octobre 1956 :

Une femme du village vient se plaindre à Fintiman que son neveu et pupille Doni a défloré sa fille Elina, 15 ans, en juillet de la même année. Elle l'a appris indirectement et la fille a formellement avoué. Doni a reconnu les faits, il a promis de verser l'indemnité à la fin de la mission de délimitation de la frontière quand il aura touché sa solde. Elina continue à porter le kwey jusqu'à nouvel ordre et ne manifeste aucune gêne. Doni est de retour le soir. J'entends Fintiman le gourmander, mais pour la forme seulement : « Déflorer une fille alors qu'on n'a pas l'intention de vivre avec elle, ce sont des choses qui ne se font pas ». Il conseille à Doni avant tout de remettre à la fille le paiement de son akka, soit 2 camisas, 1 rang de perles blanches qu'elle portera au poignet gauche, et une bouteille de sirop qu'elle offrira à son akka tout en la buvant. Doni ne se soucie pas d'affronter la mère et n'a pas l'intention de revoir la fille, c'est sa sœur Maria qui se chargera de la commission.

Cela fait, la mère admettra le fait accompli et ne marquera pas sa colère. Elle attendra le paiement.

On entend aussi parler assez souvent de la consommation clandestine d'un mariage régulièrement conclu, les fiancés voulant ainsi forcer la main à leurs tuteurs et obtenir plus tôt leur liberté.

Mariage des femmes veuves ou divorcées. Il ne donne lieu à aucun paiement, mais la femme est demandée en mariage à ses oncles et au chef de son lignage dans les mêmes formes qu'une jeune fille. Il ne s'agit plus en pareil cas de demander une autorisation (il faudrait qu'un homme eût la pire réputation pour que le lignage de la femme refusât le mariage) mais d'obtenir sur le ménage la bénédiction des ancêtres. D'autre part, il est très important que les chefs des deux lignages soient avertis de cette union, car en cas de décès d'un des conjoints, l'autre aura à supporter le poids du deuil.

Les femmes sont guidées dans leur choix par l'attrait sensuel, mais largement aussi par l'intérêt. Elles ont le souci d'épouser un homme qui ait, comme on dit chez nous, de l'avenir, une situation. Les possesseurs de moteurs hors-bord ne manquent pas de passer à vitesse réduite devant les villages pour être admirés par les femmes.

Les hommes qui ont la réputation de « travailler fort » (car le travail est la seule richesse en pays Boni), sont fréquemment choisis par les jeunes filles, bien qu'ils aient déjà une ou deux femmes.

Le ménage. La vie du ménage est une association limitée, librement consentie entre deux êtres qui demeurent totalement indépendants l'un de l'autre, la vie affective de chacun d'eux restant presque entièrement centrée sur sa famille maternelle. Elle comporte des devoirs réciproques :

— Pour l'homme, bâtir une maison à sa femme dans le village de celle-ci, lui construire un canot neuf tous les trois ou quatre ans, lui couper un abattis chaque année et aider à le planter, lui fournir les denrées d'importation, étoffe, sel, pétrole, outils, dont elle a besoin, ainsi que de la viande de chasse et du poisson boucané ;

— Pour la femme, exploiter l'abattis et fournir à son mari, quand celui-ci vient la visiter, le couac et les légumes nécessaires à son alimentation. (L'homme, habitué à vivre en célibataire, possède ses propres ustensiles de cuisine et la plupart du temps prépare lui-même ses repas.)

Ce système de vie conjugale intermittente semble assurer aux Boni un parfait équilibre, en même temps qu'il leur permet de satisfaire leur goût du changement. Les hommes partagent leur vie entre le travail, les visites à leurs différentes femmes, les expéditions de chasse et de pêche ; leur vie est ainsi constamment renouvelée et ils sont protégés contre les tendances à l'apathie et à l'inertie mentale.

En général, tant que dure le ménage, la femme remplit exactement ses obligations ; bien que le produit de l'abattis soit sa propriété et que l'excédent de la récolte soit vendu à son profit exclusif, l'homme est assuré de trouver auprès d'elle tous les vivres dont il a besoin. Par contre, beaucoup d'hommes, par paresse, se dispensent de construire une maison à leur femme et celle-ci continue à habiter avec sa mère. Dans les villages de la rive française, on observait en 1958 une vingtaine de cas semblables. On note même plusieurs cas où dans une même maison cohabitent une femme âgée mais ayant encore des enfants non mariés, une ou deux de ses filles et les enfants de celles-ci. Par exemple, au village de Asisi, 9 personnes cohabitaient dans la très petite maison de leur mère et grand-mère Tini.

Rien ne marque mieux le peu de place que tient dans la vie d'un homme le lien conjugal ; que l'on s'imagine le supplice que représente pour chacune de ces femmes cette cohabitation forcée et cet entassement ! Les Boni d'aujourd'hui, bien plus riches que leurs ancêtres et mieux outillés, sont singulièrement plus paresseux pour construire des maisons : on ne voit plus personne sculpter et décorer avec amour les façades ; quand un homme, après force récriminations, se décide à bâtir une maison à sa femme, il se contente maintenant la plupart du temps d'un simple abri aux murs tressés, qui ne demande pas 30 jours de travail.

Comme nous l'avons dit, chaque homme peut prendre autant de femmes qu'il le désire, à condition de pouvoir subvenir à leurs besoins ; mais en pratique, l'entretien d'un ménage est une charge si lourde que la plupart des hommes n'ont qu'une ou deux femmes ; un seul à notre connaissance en a trois. En effet, il est contraire à la coutume de se libérer par le paiement des travaux qu'on doit accomplir pour sa femme. Jamais nous n'avons entendu dire qu'un homme riche (nombre d'entre eux ont des centaines de milliers de francs d'économies) ait versé de l'argent à la place d'un travail, ou ait payé quelqu'un pour l'exécuter à sa place. Particulièrement lourde est la fourniture des objets d'importation, spécialement les étoffes, les ustensiles de cuisine (les femmes Boni raffolent des objets en aluminium) et éventuellement les bijoux. Les Boni admettaient en 1958 que l'entretien d'une femme revenait à 30 à 40.000 francs par an au moins. Si l'on considère qu'un homme travailleur gagnait 120.000 francs par an environ, qu'il dépensait 30 à 40.000 francs par an pour lui-même, qu'il devait souvent de plus subvenir aux besoins de ses parents âgés, et participer aux dépenses des fêtes du lignage, on voit qu'il ne pouvait pas avoir plus de deux femmes en même temps. Quant aux hommes les moins travailleurs, qui n'ont pas plus de 60 à 80.000 francs d'argent liquide par an, ils ont bien du mal à faire face à l'entretien d'un seul ménage, et nombre de divorces n'ont pas d'autre cause.

On voit chez les Noirs Réfugiés quelques couples très unis, qui passent toute leur vie ensemble et qui, sur leurs vieux jours, ont tout à fait uni leurs destinées, vivant dans la même maison, soit dans le village de la femme, soit dans le village de l'homme : par exemple, au village de Lapé Tabiki, Butu et sa femme Asamani, âgés en 1952 d'environ 70 ans, unis depuis 45 ans et ayant eu 8 enfants. Mais de tels cas sont exceptionnels. Ils ne sont pas d'ailleurs admirés et donnés en exemple comme on pourrait le croire ; cet homme et cette femme se convenaient, ils sont restés ensemble ; s'ils viennent un jour à ne plus s'entendre ils divorceront, voilà tout.

Polygamie. La polygamie au sens africain du terme, c'est-à-dire l'entretien simultané de plusieurs ménages réguliers, est exceptionnelle chez les Noirs Réfugiés, en raison de leur mode de vie :

— La femme est pratiquement entièrement à la charge de son mari ; une économie fondée principalement sur le salariat, et comportant un niveau de vie relativement élevé, met la plupart des hommes dans l'impossibilité d'entretenir plus d'un ménage ;

— Même si un homme disposait d'importants moyens financiers, il ne pourrait guère entretenir plus de deux ménages, car il n'est pas admis, tout au moins actuellement, qu'on fasse faire par d'autres les travaux prévus par la coutume, abattis, canots, maison.

Au 1er janvier 1958, sur 134 hommes de plus de 20 ans des villages de la rive française dont la vie nous était bien connue, on comptait :

Hommes entretenant trois ménages	1	1 %
— — deux ménages	18	13 %
— — un ménage	104	77 %
Célibataires, veufs ou divorcés récents	11	8 %
	134	100 %

En s'en tenant aux statistiques, on pourrait dire que les Noirs Réfugiés sont monogames dans la proportion de 85 %. Mais il s'agit d'une monogamie apparente, car les unions ne sont pas stables ; leur durée moyenne est d'une dizaine d'années ; en fait les Noirs Réfugiés pratiquent une polygamie dans le temps.

Un homme qui prend une autre femme s'excuse auprès de la première et lui offre un litre de tafia, lui demandant de vivre en bonne intelligence avec la coépouse. Un certain nombre de femmes n'admettent pas de coépouses et divorcent.

La plupart des hommes ont eu, en général successivement, 4 ou 5 femmes. La plupart du temps ces ménages ont été rompus du fait de la femme.

Exemple S... (65 ans en 1957), a eu au moins 7 femmes :

— Nanay (Dip.II) †	1 enfant	divorcé
Baakauman (K) †	3 enfants	—
1 femme Paramaka	1 enfant mort	—
Saumè (Dip.I)	1 enfant	—
Paata (Boniville)	pas d'enfant	—
Emma (Asisi-Aw.B.)	—	—
Masé (K)	—	mariage subsistant en 1958

Kwami (50 ans en 1958) a eu 4 femmes :

— Apinda (Asisi)	pas d'enfant	divorcé
Saayé (Dip.I)	plusieurs enfants	—
Do (Lapé)	1 enfant mort	—
Noémi (Asisi-Aw.B.)	1 enfant	mariage subsistant en 1958

Exemple de la vie familiale de G... (âgé de 50 ans en 1958). G... épousa vers 1935 M... (Kotika) femme sérieuse et intelligente qui lui était très attachée. Cependant il eut vers la même époque une liaison clandestine avec S... sœur au sens classificatoire de M... qu'il rendit enceinte (avortement). Comme il est interdit d'avoir 2 femmes à la fois dans le même lignage, cela fit un scandale et ses oncles durent s'interposer pour qu'il ne fût pas battu.

Après cela, sans quitter M..., il prit officiellement une autre femme, A... (Papaiston). Ils vécurent ensemble près de 8 ans, mais A... commença à le tromper pendant qu'il était en voyage. La première fois il la menaça seulement, à la troisième fois il la répudia.

Il prit de nouveau, officiellement, une autre femme, T..., une Djuka du Tapanahoni.

Une année après, A..., qui le regrettait, fit intervenir ses oncles pour rentrer en grâce. G.... par déférence pour ses oncles, accepta à contre-cœur.

Il se trouvait ainsi engagé dans trois unions, M..., A... et T... Il réfléchit que cette situation le menait à la ruine et sacrifia T..., bien qu'il n'eut rien à lui reprocher.

Quelque temps après, A... se mit à le tromper de nouveau et il la répudia définitivement.

Il prit enfin une dernière épouse, B... (Asisi), dont il n'eût pas d'enfant.

A chacune de ces entreprises il eut à subir des scènes violentes de la part de sa première femme M..., qui lui était très attachée et aurait voulu le garder pour elle seule. Cependant elle ne divorça jamais et ne provoqua pas de difficultés avec ses coépouses.

Il eut un enfant de M... après plus de 15 ans de mariage stérile.

En 1958, G... vivait avec M... et B..., qui entretenaient de bonnes relations. Il ne recherchait plus de nouvelles aventures.

Rapports du mari et de la belle-mère. Comme on l'observe couramment en Afrique, le mari a le devoir de respecter sa belle-mère, d'avoir à son égard une attitude réservée.

Il existe à ce sujet chez les Noirs Réfugiés une curieuse coutume : Si par mégarde il arrive au dégrad du village au moment où elle se baigne, il doit lui verser une amende sous forme d'une camisa. C'est une obligation réciproque.

Il peut dormir sous le même toit qu'elle en cas d'affluence dans le village, mais pas de façon habituelle.

Par contre, la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés se sépare nettement des coutumes africaines sur un point important : elle ne prévoit pas d'obligation matérielle à l'égard de la belle-mère, ni des frères de la femme. Le mari n'est nullement tenu de leur faire des cadeaux ni de contribuer à leur entretien. En fait, la femme remet à sa mère une partie de ce que son mari lui offre.

L'adultère. La coutume des Noirs Réfugiés concernant l'adultère est des plus curieuses. Le mari outragé a le droit d'infliger à l'amant une correction publique, qu'il doit supporter sans se défendre. En l'absence du mari, son frère est qualifié pour frapper à sa place. Cette correction doit avoir lieu dans un village, en présence de témoins, capables d'intervenir si la punition dépassait les limites admises.

On ne doit faire usage que des poings nus.

Un homme peut toujours échapper à une correction trop brutale en se réfugiant dans l'eau. Son adversaire ne peut l'y poursuivre sous peine d'une sévère punition du grand man. Il peut aussi se réfugier dans la brousse.

L'honneur du mari étant ainsi publiquement réparé, la querelle est terminée ; on voit en pareil cas des hommes battre leur femme par surcroît, mais ce n'est pas le cas général ; la vraie coutume veut qu'on ne batte pas la femme, considérée comme irresponsable. On peut soit la répudier, soit la menacer de la répudier en cas de récidive. La règle est de la répudier, sous peine de ridicule.

En 1951, G..., du village Kotika, fut averti que sa femme A..., du village Asisi, âgée de 25 ans, le trompait avec un garçon du même âge nommé K... La première fois qu'il rencontra K... dans un village, il le prit à partie ; K... avoua sans difficulté. G... lui envoya un fort coup de poing qui le jeta à terre, et ce fut tout. Il n'administra pas de correction à sa femme mais lui signifia sur-le-champ qu'il la répudiait. Quelque temps après, K... demanda à se réconcilier avec lui. Il lui demanda pardon et lui offrit une bouteille de tafia (c'est obligatoire pour la réconciliation). Depuis, les deux hommes sont de nouveau amis.

Il arrive aussi que le grand man inflige au coupable une amende plus ou moins forte.

D'après les anciens, autrefois l'adultère était rare ; si une femme était lasse de son mari elle divorçait ouvertement mais elle ne le trompait pas. Actuellement, il paraît assez fréquent.

Le divorce. On divorce chez les Noirs Réfugiés aussi facilement que l'on s'unit ; c'est la femme en général qui décide de rompre l'union, parce qu'elle trouve son mari trop pauvre, trop paresseux, ou simplement parce qu'elle désire en changer.

En cas de divorce la femme conserve la totalité de ce que son mari lui a donné ou construit (ustensiles, maison, canot), mais bien entendu l'homme conserve tous ses biens propres ; cette rupture ne change rien à la possession des biens puisqu'aucun objet n'était indivis.

La règle est la suivante : au moment du mariage, l'homme dépose symboliquement quelques objets personnels (étoffes, ustensiles) chez la femme. Tant que ces objets sont chez elle, l'union reste conclue, la femme est tenue à la fidélité ou tout au moins, s'il y a adultère, il est regardé comme tel et entraîne la sanction relatée ci-dessus. Mais la femme a le droit absolu, même en l'absence de son mari, de rompre unilatéralement le contrat, en rapportant au chef du lignage de son mari les objets laissés chez elle. Dès ce moment, il n'y a plus rien à lui dire, elle n'est plus coupable d'adultère et elle peut prendre un autre mari séance tenante ; en cas de mort du premier mari elle n'aura pas à supporter le poids du deuil. Tout ce que son mari a fait pour elle : maison, canot, etc... est conservé sans contrepartie.

Aucun Boni partant en voyage de 3 mois n'est sûr de retrouver sa femme. Il peut très bien trouver un autre homme installé à sa place, officiellement, sans qu'il puisse rien dire. Quant à ceux qui partent pour longtemps, c'est à peu près assuré.

C'est un malheur qu'ils prennent d'ailleurs philosophiquement, pensant surtout au travail fourni pour rien. Ce qui les préoccupe le plus, c'est de ne pas être trompé clandestinement, car le résultat final est le même : ils sont pratiquement obligés de répudier la femme en pareil cas, car il est indigne d'un homme de pardonner, et de plus ils seront la risée de la population.

Plusieurs de nos canotiers ont tenu à leur femme, au moment de partir pour une tournée de deux mois, le discours suivant : « Si tu en as assez de moi en mon absence, si tu ne peux pas m'attendre, va déposer mes affaires chez tel frère, je ne me fâcherai pas et ne te ferai rien au retour. »

La coutume est si favorable aux femmes que pratiquement rien ne garantit le contrat privé passé entre l'homme et la femme au moment du mariage. Puisque ce contrat est essentiellement fondé sur une association matérielle, l'homme coupant l'abattis et la femme l'exploitant, on pourrait croire que la femme est tenue de remplir son contrat même en cas de rupture, mais il n'en est rien.

Pour ce qui est de l'abattis déjà coupé et planté, s'il est sur la terre de la famille de la femme, l'homme ne peut rien demander. Toutefois, quelques femmes continuent après rupture à fournir du couac pendant un an.

Si l'abattis est sur les terres du mari, la femme continue à l'exploiter normalement. Mais elle est tenue de fournir des vivres comme si il n'y avait pas eu rupture. C'est pourquoi les hommes qui se méfient de leur femme insistent pour couper l'abattis sur la terre de leur lignage.

Nombre de femmes attendent pour divorcer que leur mari ait coupé l'abattis de l'année ! En janvier 1967, au retour de la mission de délimitation de la frontière Sud, l'un de nous a entendu M..., femme d'une quarantaine d'années, parler en ces termes de son mari T..., âgé de 60 ans, qui avait tout fait pour elle et venait encore de participer à des travaux pénibles pour lui procurer de l'argent : « il se fait vieux, il va falloir que j'en cherche un autre. »

Observation à Maripasoula, 5 nov. 1956.

Mutété, canotier du poste de Maripasoula, se lamente devant ses camarades : sa femme vient de le faire prévenir, sans indiquer aucun motif, qu'elle rompait avec lui. Elle ne s'est même pas dérangée pour le lui dire, et elle a attendu qu'il ait fini de lui couper l'abattis de l'année ! Ses camarades expriment une fois de plus leur rancœur contre l'avarice, la méchanceté et l'inconstance des femmes Boni, êtres inférieurs qu'ils ont une fois pour toutes renoncé à comprendre.

Chez les Noirs Réfugiés on divorce à tout âge, à 70 ans aussi bien qu'à 18. C'est ainsi que le capitaine Diolè († 1951), chef du lo Dju et sa femme Efa, du lo Papalston, divorcèrent vers 1940, alors que l'un et l'autre approchaient de 70 ans et qu'ils étaient restés ensemble plus de 35 ans : en vieillissant leurs caractères ne s'accordaient plus.

De même Pèèchina, âgée en 1957 de près de 70 ans, s'est séparée de Nachinengé (Kotika) après avoir passé la plus grande partie de sa vie avec lui et en avoir eu six enfants.

Pour pouvoir rompre ainsi une union ancienne sans subir un effondrement moral, il faut bien que l'affectivité de chacun soit entièrement centrée sur sa famille maternelle.

Fréquence des divorces. Cet aspect essentiel de la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés n'est pas facile à saisir par l'interrogatoire direct. Les femmes ne parlent pas volontiers de leurs unions passées, et passent sous silence celles qui sont restées stériles. Nous avons pu cependant reconstituer avec une assez grande certitude la vie passée d'une centaine de femmes (mères, proches parentes ou épouses de nos informateurs les plus sûrs). Ces hommes sont marqués d'un double astérisque  dans la liste de la population des villages.

Il est utile de les classer par tranches d'âges en fonction de l'année de naissance, car nous allons voir que la fréquence du divorce semble s'être accrue avec le temps. Les tranches choisies sont les mêmes que pour l'enquête démographique que nous avons menée parallèlement à l'étude sociologique :

Femmes nées de	0 div.	1 div.	2 div.	3 div.	4 div.	vie irrégulière	total
1926 à 1935 incl.	13	8	8	0	0	2	31
1916 à 1925 —	9	7	10	1	0	3	30
1896 à 1915 —	1	12	6	3	0	1	23
avant 1896	3	9	5	1	2	(?)	20
						TOTAL....	104

En supposant que les divorces sont régulièrement espacés au cours de la vie, et qu'ils cessent vers 65 ans en moyenne, on peut parvenir à une estimation du nombre moyen de divorces atteint par une femme Boni arrivée à la vieillesse.

Femmes nées de	âge moyen fin 1957	nombre moyen de divorces	nombre probable arrivé à l'âge de 65 ans
1926 à 1935 incl.	27 ans	0,8 en 10 ans[1]	3,8
1916 à 1925	37 ans	1,0 en 17 ans	2,8
1896 à 1915	52 ans	1,5 en 32 ans	2,1
antérieur à 1896	70 ans		1,5 (?)

L'estimation du nombre moyen de divorces pour les femmes nées avant 1896 est probablement inférieur à la réalité, leurs premiers divorces étant mal connus de nos informateurs. Il est probablement voisin de 2.

L'augmentation de la fréquence des divorces chez les jeunes femmes est frappante. Elle est en rapport avec l'affaiblissement de l'autorité, autrefois très forte, qu'exerçaient les mères sur leurs filles.

Voici deux exemples concernant deux jeunes femmes que nous connaissons depuis leur enfance.

Lomé (L2, F74, Boniville) née en 1938, a commencé à faire parler d'elle en 1954. Elle a été déflorée par N... qui ne voulait pas l'épouser. Ensuite, elle a eu des relations avec Asadam (K, Boniville) qui ne voulait pas l'épouser non plus. On l'a battue, elle continuait à le voir. Or, c'est extrêmement honteux pour une fille, parce que c'est se placer en état d'infériorité par rapport à un homme, alors que sa dignité est de conclure un contrat d'égal à égal.

Son frère Amèmbé l'a battue, et elle a fini par conclure mariage avec Pitipiti (Aw. B.2, village Asisi), qui l'a demandée officiellement en 1956. Ce mariage a duré moins d'un an. En 1957 Lomé divorçait pour épouser Djoni (village Kotika).

Aguba (Dju, G14), jeune fille du village Asisi-Dju, née en 1941, avait été demandée en mariage dans les formes régulières en mai 1956 par Paltiki (L2, village Loka), jeune homme de 18 ans. Il était convenu que les fiancés attendraient deux ans. Mais Paltiki n'a pas attendu et a consommé clandestinement le mariage au bout de quelques mois. La tante et tutrice de Aguba, Lènga, est entrée dans une grande colère et l'a battue. Elle ne lui a donné le pàggi qu'en mai 1957. Le mariage n'a duré que quelques mois.

(1. L'âge moyen du mariage est de 17 ans pour cette tranche d'âge de femmes, de 20 ans pour les tranches antérieures.

Fin 1957 Aguba rompait avec Païtiki et commençait ouvertement à rechercher des aventures.

Si l'on envisage l'ensemble des femmes Boni sans distinction d'âge, on peut estimer qu'en moyenne elles ont divorcé 2,5 fois au cours de leur vie entre 18 et 65 ans. La durée moyenne des ménages (compte non tenu des unions rompues par la mort d'un des conjoints) pouvait être évaluée, pour la période antérieure à 1950, à environ 15 ans. Elle tend à baisser à mesure que parvient à l'âge adulte une génération élevée dans une discipline moins stricte[1].

Dévergondage des femmes. Il semble que la plupart des femmes soient fidèles à leur mari pendant la durée de l'union. Mais comme elles ont la possibilité de rompre cette union sans avoir besoin de l'autorisation de quiconque, elles quittent leur mari avec une grande facilité, soit qu'il ait cessé de leur plaire, soit qu'elles aient l'intention de se remarier avec un homme plus riche.

Une femme qui vient de divorcer ne se remarie pas immédiatement. Il peut se passer plusieurs mois, parfois une année et plus, entre deux unions, période pendant laquelle elle ne songe qu'à « vivre sa vie », s'offrant toutes les aventures qu'elle désire. Cette attitude est considérée comme normale et les anciens n'ont rien à lui dire, pourvu qu'elle ne tombe pas dans pikodu, qu'elle ne cause aucun scandale et que cela ne dure pas trop longtemps.

Nous avons cité l'exemple de Aguba, jolie fille de 18 ans, qui, fin 1957 venait de rompre avec son mari Paitiki après 1 an seulement de vie commune. Elle demeurait chez Lènga qui l'a élevée ; elle coupait un petit abattis elle-même. Pour le reste, elle n'avait d'autre souci que de s'offrir toutes les aventures qui lui plaisaient. Les hommes venaient la solliciter discrètement, retenant leur jour. A l'un elle demandait une camisa, à l'autre du savon, du pétrole, etc.

Sa tutrice Lènga la pressait de reprendre un mari, mais elle ne pouvait lui interdire de vivre ainsi, lui ayant donné avec le pdygi sa liberté de femme.

Elle a conclu un nouveau mariage en mai ou juin 1958, ayant mené une vie irrégulière pendant plus de six mois.

En fait, les choses se passent avec une grande discrétion. Un homme est averti en secret par sa sœur ou sa cousine qu'une telle l'a remarqué au cours d'une danse, qu'elle l'attendra chez elle telle nuit. La nuit, sur le fleuve, on aperçoit des canots qui rasent la rive, avançant silencieusement. Dans chaque village il y a des accès secondaires qui permettent aux visiteurs nocturnes d'arriver la nuit sans être remarqués et de repartir avant l'aube.

(1) Le docteur Étienne Bois, rivivant en septembre 1960 notre fichier arrêté à fin novembre 1958, a enregistré pour les villages de la rive française 28 divorces, survenus au cours de cette période de 1,8 année. Le nombre de femmes de ces villages en âge d'être mariées étant d'environ 180, ce chiffre correspond à 0,1 divorce par femme et par an, soit à une durée moyenne des unions d'environ 10 ans

Si une femme manque à cette discrétion et si sa vie est ouvertement dissolue, sa mère la battra et le chef du lignage lui infligera des punitions, mais on ne la chassera pas ; en aucun cas on ne peut expulser quelqu'un de son village natal.

Si des enfants naissent de ces liaisons irrégulières, la mère se préoccupe de savoir avec certitude quel est le père, car s'il y avait doute, l'enfant, respectant un kina qui ne serait pas le sien, serait atteint de la lèpre. Les Boni ont à ce sujet une croyance remarquable : ils pensent que c'est le premier homme avec lequel une femme a eu des rapports après la fin d'une période menstruelle qui est susceptible de la rendre enceinte.

Ces aventures comportent toujours des cadeaux en nature (étoffe, bijoux) ; aussi les hommes qui ont le plus de succès auprès des femmes sont-ils toujours à court d'argent.

Une femme qui a vécu ainsi de façon notoire a un peu plus de mal qu'une autre à retrouver un mari, mais si elle est jeune et agréable elle y parvient.

La prostitution proprement dite est très peu répandue en pays Boni, et les femmes qui s'y livrent ouvertement (trois ou quatre pour l'ensemble des villages de la rive française), ont généralement quitté la tribu pour s'établir dans les villages d'orpailleurs. Le dévergondage n'est pas considéré comme déshonorant par les Noirs Réfugiés, quand il s'exerce à l'intérieur de la tribu et quand il n'a d'autre but que le plaisir, mais la prostitution est jugée honteuse.

Mises à part ces quelques prostituées, nous n'avons jamais entendu dire qu'une femme Boni ait eu des relations avec un européen ; sur ce point la discipline tribale est observée avec une rigueur extrême.

Conclusion. La durée moyenne des ménages, qui était de 15 à 20 ans pour la génération précédente, tend à s'abaisser et peut être évaluée actuellement à environ 10 ans. En dépit de cette évolution, la stabilité des ménages chez les Noirs Réfugiés demeure sensiblement supérieure à ce qu'on observe dans les populations noires d'Amérique du Sud. On n'observe pas chez eux cette forme de prostitution si répandue en Amérique du Sud, la maîtresse entretenue, ne travaillant pas et vivant entièrement à la charge de ses amants successifs.

La femme Boni, pauvre en sentiments affectifs, et jalouse de son indépendance à l'égard de l'homme, met son orgueil à subsister par ses propres moyens.

Les jeunes femmes, même les plus libres de mœurs, restent fermement attachées à leur village, à leurs plantations et au mode de vie qu'elles ont reçu de leurs aïeules. En fait, de par sa structure et ses coutumes, la société des Noirs Réfugiés a beaucoup moins à souffrir des poisons répandus par la vie moderne que les sociétés patrilinéaires d'Afrique Noire

La mort ; les rites mortuaires

La mort est pour les Noirs Réfugiés un événement d'une gravité extrême.

Pour conjurer le danger et permettre au gadu du défunt de prendre sa place parmi les ancêtres, le concours sans restriction de chacun est exigé.

Les cérémonies qui se rapportent à la mort et au deuil sont de loin les plus importantes de la vie coutumière des Noirs Réfugiés ; elles représentent pour chacun une charge matérielle très lourde, qui est acceptée sans récriminations. C'est en fait une véritable mobilisation, qui s'effectue dans le cadre du village et non du lignage. L'appareil mis en œuvre est indépendant du lignage car il doit pouvoir fonctionner de la même façon pour un étranger, Djuka ou Saramaka, mort au cours d'un voyage.

Participer aux rites mortuaires est pour tous un devoir religieux essentiel. Dès leur enfance, les Boni sont préparés à cette tâche et deviennent les uns kisimã (faiseurs de cercueils), les autres ɔbɔmã (fossoyeurs), quelques-uns musimã (laveurs de mort).

Kisimã et ɔbɔmã. On peut dire que dans chaque village, ɔbɔmã et kisimã constituent des sociétés coutumières, pourvues d'une organisation et détenant de véritables pouvoirs pendant la durée de leur travail.

— Les kisimã commandent le village pendant toute la durée de la fabrication du cercueil et peuvent requérir n'importe qui pour les aider ;

— Les ɔbɔmã sont maîtres de la rivière pendant la durée de leur travail. Ils peuvent notamment requérir pour les aider les voyageurs de passage et même confisquer leurs vivres. C'est piisi, plaisanterie. Mais, ainsi que le fait observer M. W. F. Van Lier, cette coutume a un sens profond ; elle rappelle à tous que participer à l'enterrement d'un mort est un devoir religieux fondamental.

L'organisation de ces sociétés coutumières est, tout au moins chez les Boni, très rudimentaire.

Dans chaque village il y a un chef des ɔbɔmã qui connaît la topographie du cimetière et les rites à accomplir (hedemã fu ɔlo).

A Boniville, c'était en 1958 Bukuman (Papalston) ;
A Loka, Tabiki †, pas remplacé début 1958 ;
A Asiai, Antonu (Awara Bakka).

S'il est absent, on envoie chercher le chef des ɔbɔmã d'un autre village.
De même dans chaque village, il y a un chef des kisimã :

A Boniville, c'était Fintiman (Dju) ;
A Asiai, c'était Boofo (Awara Bakka) ;
A Kormotibo, c'était Aténi.

Les gens se prêtent volontiers assistance d'un village à l'autre, sans même qu'il soit besoin de demander du renfort, et même s'il s'agit d'enterrer un étranger au pays, un Saramaka ou un Djuka par exemple, mort en pays Boni. Pour faire le cercueil, il est rare qu'une quinzaine de kisimã ne se trouvent pas spontanément réunis, alors que 4 ou 5 suffiraient. Ce travail, qui se déroule dans une atmosphère de joyeuse surexcitation, au milieu d'une assistance admirative, leur plaît beaucoup.

Selon la morale des Noirs Réfugiés, tout travail doit être payé. Le travail des abasi et des kisimã n'échappe pas à la règle : le mort doit payer ce qu'on fait pour lui ; à cet effet, les frères du défunt prélèvent dans sa cantine des pièces d'étoffe (une trentaine, si le défunt était riche) et comme cela ne suffirait pas, les parents et les amis du mort viennent grossir ce fonds en offrant d'autres étoffes.

Si le défunt était très pauvre et ne possédait plus d'étoffes en bon état, les gens du lignage doivent en offrir un nombre suffisant pour que 6 au moins soient données aux kisimã et une dixaine aux abasi. Si les pièces d'étoffe sont trop peu nombreuses pour que chacun puisse en recevoir une entière, on les découpe en petits morceaux, mais il est absolument indispensable que, même symboliquement, chacun soit payé.

Déroulement des rites mortuaires. Ces rites sont complexes et les cérémonies dans lesquelles ils se déroulent sont toujours très confuses. Même si l'on en connaît la trame générale et si l'on comprend assez bien la langue, elles sont fort difficiles à suivre. Pour la clarté de l'exposé, nous en donnerons d'abord un résumé, que nous ferons suivre d'observations recueillies dans des cas précis.

Le jour de la mort est occupé par les pleurs et les lamentations et l'envoi de messagers aux villages voisins.

Aussitôt la mort annoncée, les kisimã construisent à la hâte un plateau appelé papay[1], en attendant la construction du cercueil qui sera entreprise le lendemain.

Les musimã lavent le mort à l'eau tiède après l'avoir transporté à un emplacement spécial du village. Un trou est creusé pour l'écoulement de cette eau et refermé après. Cette place est strictement réservée à cet usage, on n'y va pas en temps normal (à Bonville c'est derrière la case n° 5).

Les musimã sont au nombre de deux, deux hommes et deux femmes ; dans chaque lignage il y a au minimum 1 homme et 1 femme connaissant ce travail.

Les musimã enlèvent au mort tout objet (métal, abia, etc.) et le revêtent de vêtements propres. On lui met du coton dans les narines et une mentonnière qui seront enlevés au moment où on fermera le cercueil (pour que le yorku du mort ne soit pas entravé dans sa vie d'outre-tombe).

Le corps placé dans le papay est porté sous le hangar mortuaire (krupau = maison des pleurs). On prélève une touffe de cheveux et les ongles, qui sont enveloppés dans un linge et suspendus à l'intérieur du krugɔsu.

(1) Papay = bois canon (Couropita Sp.), arbuste à croissance rapide semblable au parasolier africain ; on l'emploie pour la construction du plateau en raison de la grande légèreté de ses tiges.

Le conjoint du mort, ses plus proches parents et ses enfants viennent suspendre leur hamac à l'intérieur du krugɔsu où ils demeureront jusqu'au broko de (huitième jour après la mort).

Les gens du village commencent les chants et la danse lukku, qui durera une partie de la nuit, tandis que les amis et les proches du mort se lamentent assis, la tête recouverte d'une étoffe.

Le 1er jour après le mort, dès le matin arrivent les kisimã qui commencent à fabriquer le cercueil, en utilisant des planches d'acajou toujours tenues en réserve par les soins du chef de village.

Les femmes du lignage du mort préparent un repas qui est offert aux kisimã vers 13 heures à la fin de leur travail.

Pendant que le cercueil est fabriqué, les amis et les parents éloignés du mort arrivent en foule des villages voisins, apportant en offrande des étoffes et du tafia. Deux kisimã déposent ces étoffes à mesure sur le corps en disant « Untel vous enterre ».

On fait une part de ces étoffes, une quinzaine sont mises dans le cercueil par les kisimã, une part sert au salaire des kisimã, une au salaire des ɔfamã ; une autre enfin sert à habiller le veuf et ses coépouses (ou la veuve), marquant ainsi que pendant toute la durée du deuil, ils demeurent sous la dépendance du mort.

Les kisimã ferment alors le cercueil sans que d'autres rites soient effectués. Les retardataires qui apportent encore des étoffes frappent le cercueil en disant : « je vous enterre » et les déposent à terre.

Le travail des kisimã est terminé ; ils apportent le corps à l'extérieur du krugɔsu, devant lequel s'est rassemblé le conseil appelé lãnti kuulu, qui constitue l'appareil judiciaire des Boni.

Ce tribunal est chargé d'établir les causes de la mort et de rendre à ce sujet une sentence qui aura force de loi. Mais il est surtout chargé de juger le défunt, de reconnaître s'il a bien vécu, s'il a le droit d'être enterré selon les rites et d'être invoqué en tant qu'ancêtre, ou si au contraire c'était un wisimã.

Le grand man désigne un ou deux des chefs de lignage pour présider le conseil et « commander » le défunt jusqu'à l'enterrement.

Le grand man désigne qui dirigera l'assemblée et « commandera » le défunt jusqu'à l'enterrement.

Ce ne peut pas être le chef du lignage du défunt car nul ne peut être à la fois juge et partie.

[facing p.162]

Le 2e et le 3e jour après le mort sont consacrés à l'interrogatoire du mort qui, le soir du 1er jour, a été à peine commencé.

Les rites de cet interrogatoire sont variables d'un village à l'autre ; dans certains villages on commence à porter le mort avant même la construction du cercueil ; les questions ne sont pas posées partout de la même façon.

Le mort est interrogé par des procédés largement répandus en Afrique Occidentale et qui s'apparentent au spiritisme : le cercueil est porté sur la tête de deux hommes, les pieds en avant. Le mort est supposé pousser les porteurs en avant pour dire oui, et leur faire incliner la tête de gauche à droite pour dire non. En principe le porteur de devant (qu'on appelle bossman, par analogie avec un canot), doit appartenir au lignage du mort. A cette restriction près, les porteurs peuvent être (et sont en fait) des gens quelconques, la seule condition requise étant d'être extrêmement vigoureux, la charge qu'ils portent étant à la limite de leurs forces.

La fraude peut exister dans des cas isolés, mais dans la grande majorité des cas la bonne foi des porteurs ne fait aucun doute ; ils donnent des réponses contradictoires, vont en avant et en arrière interminablement, jusqu'à ce qu'épuisés, ils soient relevés par d'autres. En fait, l'interprétation de ces mouvements automatiques ne diffère pas essentiellement de n'importe quel procédé de divination.

Le mort est interrogé à partir de l'âge de 4 ou 5 ans. Si c'est un très jeune enfant, on ne l'interroge pas, mais on recherche en interrogeant les possédés, les causes de sa mort et s'il y a lieu, on apaise le kunu de la même façon.

Au début de l'interrogatoire, le tribunal cherche à s'assurer si le mort n'était pas un wisimi. Après avoir envoyé les porteurs à l'autre bout du village, le président de l'assemblée fait cacher deux jeunes gens dans des cases ; puis il fait appeler les porteurs, disant au mort : « J'ai perdu Untel et Untel », trouve-les ». Si le mort était un juste, il doit avoir acquis une lucidité surhumaine lui permettant de diriger d'emblée ses porteurs vers les cases en question. S'il était un wisimi il sera comme aveugle, ses porteurs vont errer en vain de case en case.

On affirme que cette épreuve réussit toujours.

L'interrogatoire se poursuit interminablement. On aborde les causes de la mort. La première question est : est-ce un dieu qui t'a tué ? La réponse est presque toujours oui, et on procède par élimination pour arriver par exemple à savoir que c'est un Ampuku, que c'est l'Ampuku porté par Untel. Par quoi le kunu a-t-il été déclenché, comment l'apaiser, n'est pas l'affaire du tribunal. Ce sont les gens du lignage du mort qui devront régler cela entre eux après les obsèques. Le rôle du tribunal est de rendre officielle la cause de la mort et de lui donner force de loi.

On aborde ensuite l'héritage, en présence des proches du mort. On pose les questions successivement : « A qui laisses-tu ton canot...? A qui laisses-tu ton fusil[1]...? » Le cercueil se dirige chaque fois vers un des assistants.

(1) Après a-t-on que le défunt n'ait avant sa mort, devant témoins, formellement indiqué la répartition de ses biens ; en pareil cas il n'est posé de questions que pour les objets dont l'attribution n'avait pas été nettement spécifiée.

A la fin du 3e jour après la mort est préparé l'enterrement ; on demande au mort dès le lever du jour s'il est prêt pour cela, sinon on peut remettre au lendemain.

Les ɔlɔmɑ̃, depuis le début du jour, travaillent au cimetière. Ce sont des hommes jeunes et forts qui doivent travailler lentement, car il ne faut pas qu'une goutte de sueur tombe dans la fosse, leur akka risquerait d'y rester prisonnière.

Vers 16 heures les porteurs promènent une dernière fois le mort dans le village pour un suprême adieu. Les proches se rendent au dégrad. Le mort est embarqué dans une pirogue tandis que le tambour apinti appelle son yɔrka pour qu'il ne demeure pas dans le village.

Vers 17 heures le cercueil arrive au dégrad du cimetière et est remis aux ɔlɔmɑ̃. Aucun autre rite n'est effectué. Il est placé au fond de la fosse, une couche de rondins l'isole du tas de terre qui est ramené par-dessus. L'enterrement est terminé vers 18 heures.

Notes prises à l'enterrement de Way à Kormotibo (25 janvier 1957) (1er jour après la mort).

J'arrive à Kormotibo à 9 heures. Il y a deux morts au village : Sokodo, 37 ans, qu'on doit enterrer le lendemain, et Way, 65 ans, morte à Maripasoula, dont le corps a été transporté la veille.

Quand nous avions accosté, j'avais remarqué à l'extrémité Sud du village, les porteurs du cercueil de Sokodo, seuls et immobiles. En arrivant à proximité du hangar mortuaire, je trouve le capitaine Kondoku, qui préside le lãnti kuutu, et le capitaine Poopu, chef du village. Kondoku me dit qu'il est en train de procéder à une nouvelle épreuve sur Sokodo ; il vient de faire cacher deux jeunes gens, M... et G..., et le mort est appelé à les trouver sans hésitation.

Je regarde autour de nous. Il n'y a personne à proximité ; quelques femmes vaquent à leurs occupations, indifférentes à une scène maintes fois observée. Il semble bien que Kondoku fasse cela pour lui-même.

Les porteurs du cercueil apparaissent, venant de l'autre extrémité du village. Sans hésitation, ils se dirigent vers le hangar mortuaire, y pénètrent et l'extrémité du cercueil s'arrête devant le hamac, couvert d'une grande moustiquaire déployée jusqu'à terre, où se trouve assis le veuf de Way, le Saramaka Gamba.

A ma grande surprise j'en vois sortir les deux jeunes gens. Rien ne décelait leur présence sous le hamac, et Kondoku qui parlait avec moi n'a rien dit ni fait qui puisse orienter les porteurs. Personne de l'assistance n'a pu donner une indication quelconque. Comment d'ailleurs aurait-il eu le temps de se faire comprendre de deux hommes marchant à toute vitesse, écrasés par leur lourde charge et regardant droit devant eux ?

Ceci renverse toutes les idées que je m'étais formées de cette épreuve. La seule hypothèse qui reste est que les porteurs ont été prévenus par celui qui a été les chercher (un vieillard du conseil). Mais, se peut-il qu'une aussi grossière supercherie soit pratiquée couramment ? Les Boni sont loin d'être stupides, leur méfiance est sans cesse en éveil et ils sont trop bavards pour que de pareilles tromperies ne soient pas dévoilées par leurs auteurs mêmes.

Dans ces conditions, comment peut s'exercer cette suggestion collective qui explique la plupart des rites des Noirs Réfugiés? Je ne peux me l'expliquer.

Fabrication du cercueil. — Les kisimã sont rassemblés autour d'un tas de planches. Ils sont au nombre d'une quinzaine, commandés par Boofo, chef des kisimã d'Asisi, et Aténi Asisi-Dipélu II). Un tas de planches est à leurs pieds ; les uns travaillent à la scie égoine, d'autres à l'herminette ; l'ajustage se fait au sabre.

Fig. 21 — Le cercueil Boni.

Ils prennent des mesures avec une pointe sèche. La planche de fond est découpée la première, puis les tableaux avant et arrière. Le tracé du tableau arrière, en forme de losange tronqué, résulte d'une construction au compas assez complexe que je n'ai pas le temps de relever.

Le travail se fait bruyamment, dans une atmosphère de grosse farce. Tout le temps qu'il dure, les kisimã exercent un véritable commandement sur le village. Les cocotiers de Ivorumolibo sont mis au pillage à leur profit. Les femmes du village préparent le riz pour le repas qui devra, selon la coutume, leur être offert à l'achèvement du cercueil vers midi.

Je vois le chef des kisimã préparer l'ajustage des volets latéraux inférieurs. Il place, sans le clouer, le tableau arrière sur la planche de fond, lui donnant l'inclinaison convenable. On place la planche qui devra servir de volet. Une ficelle élastique enduite de noir de fumée est tendue entre a_1 et a_2 ; on la pince par le milieu et en retombant elle trace la ligne a_1a_2 sur le volet.

Le découpage du volet se fait à la scie et l'ajustage au sabre, puis au rabot.

Vers 11 heures on commence à clouer les volets. Selon les rites, plusieurs kisimã accompagnent en cadence, en frappant sur le cercueil avec des morceaux de bois, le bruit des coups de marteau. Pourquoi ce rite? Aucun des kisimã n'est capable de l'expliquer. Peut-être serait-il considéré comme dangereux pour un homme d'effectuer seul une des opérations se rapportant le plus directement à la mort.

Pendant que les kisimã travaillent, les amis et les parents de Way ne cessent d'arriver, leurs canots encombrent le dégrad. Les gens se dirigent vers le hangar mortuaire, les hommes d'un côté, les femmes de l'autre. Ce sont les femmes qui apportent des étoffes (y compris celles offertes par leurs frères et leurs maris) ; les hommes portent du tafia dans des bouteilles.

En arrivant, les femmes s'asseoient, se couvrent le visage et se lamentent quelques minutes, puis s'asseoient avec les autres devant le hangar mortuaire. De l'autre côté du hangar les hommes sont assis, immobiles sur leurs petits bancs. Un ancien s'occupe de rassembler dans une grande dame-jeanne le tafia apporté. Il servira aux danses qui auront lieu le soir même.

Vers 13 heures le cercueil est presque fini, les volets supérieurs sont ajustés et prêts à être cloués. C'est à ce moment que selon la coutume, le repas doit être servi. Mais il n'en est rien, les femmes du village ont parlé plus que travaillé et leurs préparatifs sont loin d'être achevés.

Le temps passe, le mécontentement grandit chez les kisimã qui menacent de suspendre leur travail. Vers 14 heures les femmes viennent en procession, conduites par les plus âgées, s'excuser de ce retard ; elles sont mises à l'amende d'une bouteille d'huile de maripa, moyennant quoi les kisimã acceptent de manger ; la scène dure au moins 30 minutes, dans un flot de paroles dont la transcription in extenso occuperait un volume.

Avant le repas, est effectué un rite d'offrande ; deux des plus jeunes parmi les kisimã font lentement le tour du hangar mortuaire, portant un plat de nourriture ; tout en mangeant ils jettent de la nourriture à terre, sans prononcer aucune parole. Puis ils vont jusqu'au fleuve où le plat est lavé.

Après le repas, le cercueil est consacré par le sacrifice d'un coq. Le chef des kisimã asperge de son sang d'abord le fond arrière, puis les volets latéraux supérieurs.

L'offrande des étoffes, commencée depuis midi, s'achève. Deux kisimã sont debout à côté du corps, une femme du lignage leur tend, en les déployant, les étoffes offertes par les assistants.

Les kisimã saisissent l'étoffe et la déploient. L'un d'eux prononce ces paroles : « N... beli yu, umã (N... vous enterre, femme) ». Cela, s'ils reconnaissent l'étoffe offerte par N..., sinon ils disent simplement : « quelqu'un vous enterre, femme ». Puis ils posent l'étoffe sur les précédentes déjà entassées sur le corps. On comptera ainsi 126 camisas[1] et 15 grandes pièces d'étoffe. Une trentaine de camisas ont été prises dans la cantine de la défunte, les autres ont été offertes par les assistants, les proches parents en donnant plusieurs, les simples relations une seulement.

Les kisimã, leur travail terminé, brûlent les copeaux et les restes de planches. Ils passent leurs outils à la flamme pour les purifier des souillures de la mort.

(1) Pièces de cotonnade d'environ 1 m. 10 × 0 m. 75. Ces étoffes sont fabriquées spécialement en Hollande pour la clientèle des Noirs Réfugiés.

Vers 15 heures le cercueil est apporté par les kisimã dans le hangar mortuaire. Les kisimã, qui dirigent entièrement cette phase des obsèques, comptent les étoffes et font le partage. Une partie servira à leur salaire, d'autres serviront au salaire des fossoyeurs. Quinze pièces d'étoffe et une dizaine de camisas ordinaires seront placées dans le cercueil. Le reste servira à habiller le veuf qui, pendant tout le deuil, restera ainsi symboliquement sous la dépendance du mort ; s'il en reste, on le distribuera aux membres du lignage de la défunte.

Mise en bière. — Vers 15 heures quatre des kisimã se placent à côté du cercueil ; ils se ceignent les reins d'une camisa, comme font toujours les Noirs Réfugiés avant d'accomplir un acte religieux. Dans le plus grand silence, ils étendent à l'intérieur du cercueil, retombant à terre à droite et à gauche, les quinze grandes pièces d'étoffe. Puis deux d'entre eux soulèvent le corps, tandis que les autres glissent le cercueil dessous le corps doit rester pendant toute la durée des cérémonies mortuaires, à la place exacte où on l'a déposé. Le cercueil ne repose pas directement sur le sol, mais il est posé sur une natte par l'intermédiaire de deux rondins. Ce rituel semble avoir pour but de limiter pour le village la souillure de la mort).

Le corps est reposé dans le plus grand silence, avec la plus grande précaution, à l'intérieur du cercueil. Un coussin est placé sous la tête.

Les assistants ne manifestent aucune émotion. Le veuf, le Saramaka Gamba, qui depuis le matin est resté assis dans son hamac, tournant le dos au corps de sa femme, ne fait pas un mouvement.

Les kisimã ramènent sur le corps le bord des pièces d'étoffe et placent encore par-dessus quelques camisas du format ordinaire. Avant de placer les volets supérieurs du cercueil, l'un d'eux enlève doucement les tampons de coton qui avaient été placés dans les narines de la morte.

Puis on cloue les volets supérieurs du cercueil, toujours selon le même rite, des coups frappés en cadence avec des morceaux de bois accompagnant les coups de marteau.

Le rôle des kisimã est terminé, ils remettent la défunte au conseil, lãnli kuulu, chargé de la juger.

Recherche des causes de la mort. — La cérémonie commence vers 16 heures dans la plus grande confusion, ainsi qu'il est de règle chez les Noirs Réfugiés ; il est impossible de comprendre qui fait partie réellement du conseil, qui n'en fait pas partie, tout le monde parlant à la fois.

Je crois comprendre que le grand man a désigné pour présider la cérémonie les capitaines Kondoku (Asisi-Awara Bakka) et Tafanié (Papaïston). En fait, ce n'est ni l'un ni l'autre qui commence l'interrogatoire, mais un homme du village Papaïston, Agudèba, vieillard vénérable dont le torse est moulé dans un déplorable maillot de pacotille représentant un match de rugby.

Le cercueil est placé au bord du hangar mortuaire, l'avant tourné vers les spectateurs. Agudèba s'asseoit devant l'avant du cercueil. Selon le rite, il entre en contact avec le yɔrka de la morte en versant de l'eau sur le sol devant le cercueil et en l'appelant par son nom. Il prononce plusieurs fois les mêmes phrases sous des formes différentes : « Tu as vécu ici... tu as eu des enfants dans ce village ; maintenant la mort t'a tuée. Tu dois nous dire qui t'a tuée. »

Deux hommes, B... (L'Enfant Perdu, Dipélu I) et A... (Asisi-Awara Bakka) s'avancent, se ceignent les reins d'une camisa et, aidés de plusieurs autres, soulèvent le cercueil. B..., qui est du lignage de la morte, se place à l'avant.

Pendant une dizaine de minutes, les deux porteurs s'efforcent de se mettre dans un état de passivité leur permettant de recevoir convenablement les impulsions de la morte ; aucune question n'est posée. On les voit faire des mouvements contradictoires, aller vers l'avant tout en basculant le cercueil de gauche à droite, ce qui veut dire à la fois oui et non. Parfois, une impulsion subite paraît les entraîner loin de l'assistance, on les voit aller de case en case, faire volte-face, s'en aller de nouveau.

Enfin ils reviennent. Agodéba demande : « Est-ce un dieu qui t'a frappé ? La réponse paraît être oui. « Est-ce un Papa gadu, un Ampuku, un Kānlasasu? Réponses contradictoires, l'assistance penche pour la négative.

Agodéba reprend : « Est-ce un yɔrka qui t'a tuée ? ». Mouvements confus et contradictoires du cercueil. Agodéba recommence : « Est-ce un dieu ? » Quelqu'un dans l'assistance crie : « Vous ne voyez pas qu'elle voulait dire oui en parlant du yɔrka? Agodéba se fâche, prend son chapeau et quitte la réunion. Brouhaha général. Il faut une demi-heure de paroles, coupées de mouvements divers et de fausses sorties, pour l'amener à reprendre sa place.

On change les porteurs et l'interrogatoire reprend, toujours aussi confus. Le capitaine Tafanié, qui arrive sur ces entrefaites, pense que la défunte ne veut pas parler devant une assistance si nombreuse. Il lui demande de désigner ceux des assistants qui formeront un comité restreint. Je vois l'avant du cercueil s'arrêter devant un vieux Saramaka nommé Yasu, puis successivement devant une dizaine d'assistants d'âge et d'origine quelconque. Ils se lèvent, prennent leur petit banc à la main, et vont rejoindre Tafanié sous un grand arbre dans un endroit écarté ; l'interrogatoire reprend ; à la tombée de la nuit on a acquis une certitude : Way a été tuée par un dieu. On reprendra le lendemain pour savoir de quel dieu il s'agit et comment l'apaiser.

Notes prises aux funérailles de Kotoïda (lignage Afi), les 22-23 octobre 1956 (2e et 3e jours après la mort).

J'arrive à Asisi le 22 à 8 heures. Kotoïda est morte le 20 ; on a achevé la première partie de la cérémonie.

C'est Tafanié, chef du village de Papaiston, qui préside le lānli kuulu.

Tafanié a dirigé lui-même la fabrication du cercueil (il est kisimā) à l'aide de planches tenues en réserve sur place. Le travail était terminé à 9 heures du matin.

On a placé aussitôt le corps dans le cercueil, et après l'offrande des étoffes, on en a cloué les volets.

Quand j'arrive au dégrad, le cercueil est placé dans le hangar mortuaire. Les proches du défunt (fils, filles et neveux) ainsi que le mari et la coépouse astreinte au deuil, sont assis dans leurs hamacs attachés aux poteaux du hangar. Les premiers ne manifestent aucune douleur apparente. Mari et coépouse au contraire sont entièrement voilés et manifestent par leur état de prostration la plus vive douleur. Chacun d'eux est assisté d'une parente qui les soutient quand ils ont à se déplacer, car ils sont supposés être trop accablés pour se déplacer seuls.

L'interrogatoire sur les causes de la mort a déjà eu lieu la veille, mais Tafanié en proclame devant moi le résultat aux derniers arrivés : la défunte a été frappée par un yɔrka qui poursuit le lignage de son kunu. Elle avait déjà reçu plusieurs avertissements sous forme de maladie, le yɔrka avait exigé un paiement qu'elle et ses proches avaient négligé de fournir. Impossible de rien savoir d'autre avant de pouvoir interroger ce yɔrka, dont le porteur habituel est parti à Saint-Laurent. Il faut attendre son retour pour désarmer la colère du yɔrka.

Vers 10 heures, les membres du lãnli kuulu se dirigent vers le fraga liki du lo Awara Bakka, devant lequel tous s'asseoient sur leurs tabourets. Je remarque qu'aucun homme du lignage de la morte ne figure au premier rang. J'y reconnais Popo (Lapé), Poopu Dipelu II, Kormotibo[1], Tafanié (Papaïston). Celui qui parle est un étranger de passage, un Djuka très âgé et respecté.

Les anciens invoquent Masa Gadu et les ancêtres en général, leur demandant de les protéger à l'avenir contre l'adversité ; puis a lieu l'offrande de l'eau et du tafia (pas de jus de canne). Je remarque qu'on en verse un peu sur chacun des fraga liki secondaires élevés à l'intention de chacun des ancêtres qui poursuivent de leur kunu un autre lignage. Cela dure un quart d'heure environ.

Ensuite on va demander à la défunte à qui elle lègue le dieu Papa gadu qui se manifestait en elle ; car on lègue les dieux comme le reste de l'héritage, même s'il s'agit de divinités qui exercent le kunu contre le lignage. Le dieu ratifie ou non ce legs ; en général il suit, dit-on, les intentions de son porteur et se manifeste quelque temps après chez l'héritier désigné.

Le cercueil est placé sur la tête de deux hommes : Tafanié pose les questions avec autorité. Il commence d'abord par s'assurer de la passivité des porteurs, invite la morte à pousser leurs têtes en avant pour dire oui, à leur donner une impulsion de droite à gauche pour dire non.

Le cercueil avance et recule à plusieurs reprises ; son poids est à la limite de ce que les deux hommes peuvent supporter. Deux porteurs secondaires aident le porteur arrière, empêchant la chute du cercueil.

La morte entraîne soudain ses porteurs à travers le village. Nous le voyons revenir un quart d'heure après, accompagné d'une femme d'environ 35 ans, Moni; devant laquelle il s'est arrêté.

(1) Rappelons que ce lignage, trop peu nombreux pour constituer une unité sociale distincte, vit avec les Awara Bakka, avec lesquels il n'a aucun lien de parenté ni d'alliance.

Tafanié demande s'il veut lui laisser son dieu ; la défunte confirme. Le visage de Moni à l'énoncé de ce legs ne reflète aucune allégresse, aucune crainte non plus.

On m'explique que l'héritière désignée ne peut en aucune manière refuser ce legs. Elle doit séance tenante commencer son instruction auprès d'un maître pour devenir un porteur convenable. Les frais de son instruction sont à la charge de son lignage. Ils seront payés quand la gila aura été « arrangée », c'est-à-dire aura perdu le caractère bestial du début et quand le dieu pourra s'exprimer de façon intelligible.

Séance tenante on s'occupe de transférer le dieu hors du corps de la défunte. Un ɔbiaman réputé dans le culte des Papa gadu, Goutu (Dju) et son élève Balan (Aw.B.) viennent avec des calebasses contenant des infusions de feuilles. Quatre ou cinq femmes ayant un Papa gadu viennent se ranger derrière eux. L'héritière, l'air profondément contrarié, se place parmi elles, revêtue des emblèmes du dieu de la défunte ; elles vont appeler leurs dieux qui vont danser en l'honneur du dieu de Kotoïda.

L'ɔbiaman et son élève, pendant plusieurs minutes, font couler l'infusion d'herbes sur le cercueil, se servant des paquets d'herbes comme d'une éponge, puis ils « lavent » les femmes y compris la postulante ; il leur donne à boire le reste de la calebasse. Une des femmes, Samabun, tombe aussitôt à terre, prise de la forme la plus inférieure de la possession : elle se traîne sur le ventre comme un serpent (ce sont les premières formes de la gila quand elle n'a pas encore été « arrangée ». Il y a quatre ans que cela dure pour elle, contrairement à ce qui se passe d'ordinaire. La scène était certainement prévue car elle avait mis un slip européen. Les autres femmes boivent aussi mais ne sont pas prises de possession ; elles partent se mettre en tenue de danse.

Le tambour agida extrait de la chapelle du dieu commence à battre, accompagné de deux apinti.

Les porteuses de Papa gadu arrivent au son de l'agida, enduites de pemba et portant les insignes du dieu. Au total il en viendra six. Elles ne sont pas en état de possession, deux seulement y parviendront. La première possédée rampe toujours sur le sol, se rapprochant à tâtons du tambour qu'elle étreint, couchée sur le dos. On l'en arrache. Les ɔbiaman continuent à venir la « laver » de temps à autre pour aider le dieu à se manifester. La foule se presse autour des danseuses qui exécutent les figures les plus variables. Par moments elles s'étreignent deux à deux à la façon dont les Boni s'embrassent. L'assistance trépigne de joie.

La scène dure une demi-heure environ, puis, au signal donné par l'une d'elles, les possédées se dispersent et se mettent à courir à travers le village : c'est le moment pour les dieux de payer les musiciens. Chacun se précipite pour cacher ses affaires car les dieux vont voler n'importe quoi dans le village, sans qu'on puisse les en empêcher : c'est leur manière de payer.

Les possédées reviennent bientôt, déposant aux pieds des musiciens un amas d'objets hétéroclites : calebasses, étoffe, pagaies, etc., que leurs propriétaires viennent récupérer moyennant des bouteilles de bière et des œufs. Puis celles qui étaient vraiment possédées reviennent à leur état ordinaire et toutes rentrent chez elles.

Cette danse n'a pas été un succès, les assistants pensent que c'est parce que les porteuses avaient bu du tafia, ce que les Papa godu détestent.

Héritage. — On demande à la défunte à qui elle lègue ses abattis. Elle répond : « à sa famille », ceci étant compris parce que les porteurs se déplacent parallèlement à l'assistance sans désigner personne. Dans ces conditions, les biens doivent être partagés (Kotoïda n'ayant pas d'enfants) entre ses neveux au sens classificatoire. En fait, les plantations encore exploitables iront à Samabun, fille de sa sœur.

L'héritage de la maison ne se pose pas car la morte vivait dans la maison de son mari Empalé.

Le canot est laissé à Samabun.

Sont réservés les objets personnels, argent, bijoux, étoffes. A la levée du deuil, l'aîné des frères ou sœurs survivants au sens classificatoire fera la répartition entre les proches.

Il est bien net dans le cas de Kotoïda que l'héritage se fait à l'intérieur du matrilignage au sens rigoureux, bee. Seuls les membres du lignage Afi auquel elle appartenait peuvent en bénéficier.

Enterrement. — Vers 14 heures, les femmes du lignage qui depuis le matin préparaient la nourriture des obomã, partent en pirogue en direction du cimetière.

A 15 heures, commencent les derniers préparatifs. Les occupants du hangar mortuaire, entièrement voilés et soutenus par leurs proches, vont prendre position au dégrad pour les derniers adieux (car ils n'iront pas au cimetière).

Le cercueil est une dernière fois porté à travers le village. Ce sont les adieux de la défunte à sa famille. Les objets ayant servi au deuil sont soigneusement ramassés, le sol du hangar gratté partout où a pu tomber la sanie cadavérique et le tout mis sur le papay qu'on place sur la barque mortuaire.

A 15 heures un tambour apinli est placé au dégrad pour appeler le mort (il s'agit évidemment d'empêcher le yorka de rester au village). Le mort se présente au dégrad. Le cercueil passe par-dessus un tronc de bananier fraîchement coupé, placé à la limite du village et de la plage. C'est le passage symbolique du mort hors du monde des vivants. Il est placé sur la pirogue tandis que retentissent les lamentations de ses proches. La scène ne manque pas de grandeur.

La pirogue s'éloigne lentement, le joueur de tambour placé à l'avant, tandis que les assistants descendent en long cortège se laver dans le fleuve des souillures de la mort.

A 16 heures on arrive au cimetière. Les porteurs du mort qui ont pris place dans la pirogue passent leur fardeau aux obomã venus au bord du fleuve. Ceci pour marquer que ce sont les ɔlɔmã qui commandent au cimetière. Les porteurs assisteront seulement à la cérémonie.

Les femmes qui étaient venues porter la nourriture des ɔlɔmã s'en vont, leur travail terminé. Seules restent deux d'entre elles, pas spécialement âgées.

Nous arrivons sur un petit espace dégagé où a lieu un dernier interrogatoire. C'est Antonu, chef des ɔlɔmã de Asisi qui parle, tandis que Tansia (Dipélu I) et Tyolo (Dju), basia c'est-à-dire chef d'équipe des ɔlɔmã d'Asisi, servent de porteurs.

On demande à la morte les instructions pour le choix des hommes qu'elle désigne comme busimã (chasseurs, pêcheurs), destinés à procurer la nourriture aux invités le jour du broko de. Le cercueil s'avance successivement vers 6 hommes. Chacun de ceux-ci demande : « Est-ce bien moi ? » Je vois le porteur de tête, les yeux étrangement fixes, avancer la tête dans leur direction.

A 16 heures, nous arrivons devant la fosse, à environ cent mètres de la rive. Elle est creusée à bords francs ; sa profondeur est d'environ 2 mètres, sa longueur 2 m. 50 et sa largeur 1 mètre. Elle a la forme trapézoïdale du cercueil.

On coupe en deux un banc d'un coup de sabre pour confectionner deux supports placés au fond de la fosse.

Le cercueil est descendu au fond à l'aide des cordes d'étoffe qui l'enserraient. Ces cordes sont ensuite retirées. Plusieurs coups de fusil sont tirés. Aucune parole n'est prononcée. Une dizaine de gros rondins d'environ 20 centimètres de diamètre sont placés côte à côte sur la fosse et la terre jetée dessus. Les ɔlɔmã travaillent à la pelle et à la houe, le tas de terre atteint rapidement un mètre de hauteur.

Le chef des ɔlɔmã arrête alors le travail. Il passe plusieurs fois sur la fosse en sautant à pieds joints. Puis, passant plusieurs fois autour de ses jambes le paquet de cordes d'étoffe, il s'adresse aux akka des assistants, les adjurant de ne pas rester dans le trou.

Le travail est ensuite repris. Les assistants non ɔlɔmã, moi compris, sont invités à jeter quelques pelletées de terre. On place au sommet du tertre le papay et les objets ayant servi au deuil, surmontés du banc de la défunte. Puis les assistants s'en vont sans hâte et se lavent au dégrad. Plusieurs coups de fusil sont encore tirés tandis que les canots s'éloignent.

Les tombes sont espacées de 10 mètres environ. Les morts ne sont pas groupés par lignages ; à mesure des besoins on étend le cimetière et on place le mort à la première place disponible. Ainsi Kotoïda (Awara Bakka) est placée à côté de Asoïda (Lapé), femme centenaire morte quelques mois auparavant.

On me montre les tombes de chefs de village que j'ai connus, Diolé († en 1951), Atikati († en 1953). Les tertres sont déjà à demi-tassés, la brousse y atteint un mètre de haut.

Un de mes canotiers verse un peu de tafia sur la tombe de sa mère qui est au bord du chemin. Aucun des assistants ne s'écarte du groupe pour aller sur la tombe de ses parents.

CÉRÉMONIES DE REMERCIEMENT. — Le 23 à 8 heures, le lànli kuulu est rassemblé et siège au bord du hangar mortuaire.

Les ɔlɔmò et d'une façon générale ceux qui ont travaillé au profit du mort (il n'en reste qu'une dizaine, les autres sont partis travailler) sont assis en face des hommes du lignage de la défunte.

C'est toujours Tafanié qui parle. Béna (Dju), assis devant les ɔlɔmò, tourné vers l'orateur, joue le rôle du répondant. Tafanié remercie tous ceux qui ont travaillé au profit du mort, en détaillant longuement les divers travaux, puis en citant les divers lignages : il répète la même chose sous plusieurs formes et son discours est interminable. Quelquefois il s'interrompt pour placer une bonne plaisanterie ou boire une rasade de tafia. On voit une dame-jeanne de 15 litres circuler à l'intérieur du hangar. Un incident éclate soudain. Baafu (Lapé) insinue que Agidibon (Aw.B.) se sert sans discrétion. Des paroles injurieuses sont échangées. Agibidon quitte le conseil. Brouhaha général. Le tumulte s'apaise après un quart d'heure.

L'orateur remercie maintenant les étrangers de passage, Saramaka et Djuka, qui ont assisté aux obsèques.

On dépose à terre une pagaie sur laquelle est attaché un paquet entouré d'étoffe. C'est la pagaie de la morte et le paquet contient ses cheveux. Ils sont conservés jusqu'au broko da (il semble bien en fait que ce soit la raison de cette fête) afin de conserver le contact avec le yɔrka de la défunte pour les questions complémentaires que l'on peut avoir à lui poser[1].

Ensuite, quelques ɔlɔmò iront au cimetière enfoncer le paquet à l'intérieur du tertre.

L'assistance se dirige vers un endroit ombragé, car il est près de midi et le soleil est accablant.

Sosoman porte le devant de la pagaie et Tansia l'arrière. Sans qu'aucune question soit posée, ils circulent longtemps dans le village. Je les vois à plusieurs reprises faire des mouvements contradictoires, incliner la tête à la fois en avant et sur le côté.

Les voici de retour auprès de Tafanié. A ma grande surprise Tafanié pose des questions à voix basse, mettant ses mains en cornet devant sa bouche.

On voit à plusieurs reprises la pagaie répondre affirmativement, puis négativement. Aucun des assistants ne peut comprendre ce qui se dit, mais aucun ne manifeste d'impatience ni de doute.

Tafanié ordonne soudain à ses assesseurs de couper des baguettes : la défunte a demandé qu'on fustige les gens de son propre lignage, coupables d'avoir négligé les avertissements du yɔrka. A la vue de ces préparatifs les gens du lignage de Kotoïda

(1) Il semble que sur ce point la coutume envisage surtout le cas des proches parents du défunt en voyage sur la rivière au moment du décès, et qui n'ont pu assister à l'enterrement.

s'enfuient en désordre de toutes parts tandis que leurs adversaires les poursuivent, l'air de s'amuser beaucoup. Les uns se réfugient dans l'eau, d'autres dans la brousse ; aucun ne peut être rejoint.

Correction toute symbolique d'ailleurs, car au bout de 10 minutes on les voit reparaître et reprendre leurs places dans l'assistance.

Les obsèques sont terminées. Seuls les proches de la morte restent assis dans leur hamac sous le hangar mortuaire. Ils resteront là jusqu'au broko dɛ.

Paiements des ɔbɔmã. — Les ɔbɔmã se partagent un lot d'étoffes en tenant compte de ce qu'ils ont reçu dans les obsèques précédentes. Cela ne paraît pas soulever de discussion. Si ensuite quelqu'un qui n'a pas fourni de travail désire prendre une de ces étoffes, il le peut, en offrant du tafia à l'assistance.

Funérailles des gens morts en voyage. Si un homme meurt au cours d'un voyage lointain, on prélève sur le cadavre avant de l'enterrer, ses cheveux et ses ongles, qui seront rapportés à son village natal ; il est admis en effet que tant qu'une parcelle du cadavre n'est pas enterrée, le yɔrka y reste attaché ; cheveux et ongles permettront donc l'interrogatoire du yɔrka et seront enterrés au cimetière avec les rites habituels.

Broko dɛ. Le huitième jour après la mort, a lieu une cérémonie appelée broko dɛ, qu'il ne faut pas confondre avec la levée du deuil. Cette cérémonie marque la fin des rites mortuaires proprement dits ; quand elle est terminée, on ne peut plus interroger directement le défunt ; la période du deuil commence.

C'est une cérémonie très simple qui attire peu de monde et se passe presque entièrement dans le cadre du lignage.

A la tombée du jour on commence à raconter des Anansi toli, ces contes traditionnels qui font vibrer en commun les assistants et créent une ambiance particulière. Puis viennent les danses sɔ̃ngɛ, susa et awasa qui durent toute la nuit.

Le lendemain chacun s'occupe à de menus travaux dans le village, tandis que les femmes préparent le repas. C'est la cérémonie dite lowɛ nyã, qui a lieu au bord du hangar mortuaire, vers 4 heures de l'après-midi. Chaque femme du lignage apporte un grand bol de riz et un petit bol contenant soit un morceau de viande cuite en sauce, soit du poisson. Le plus âgé des hommes du lignage fait étendre par terre au bord du hangar, de grandes feuilles de bananier ; il prend un peu de chaque plat et le dépose sur les feuilles, tout en s'adressant aux ancêtres dans la langue ordinaire, sur le ton d'une conversation familière : « Morts de la famille, venez, venez manger aujourd'hui. »

Cela dure peut-être un quart d'heure, tandis que les assistants sont assis, immobiles et recueillis. Les ancêtres sont supposés manger la partie spirituelle de la nourriture — kaaka fu nyã.

Puis les anciens font ranger au bord du hangar 5 ou 6 petits enfants d'une dizaine d'années, dont chacun tient une cuvette renversée. Un homme les maintient alignés à l'aide d'une longue baguette. Puis, à un signal, il relève la baguette et les enfants se précipitent avec des rires et des cris sur la part des ancêtres, chacun emportant tout ce qu'il a pu recouvrir de sa cuvette. La cérémonie se termine par un joyeux repas pris en commun par tout le lignage, symbole de la communion entre les morts et les vivants.

Les cimetières. Il y a deux cimetières en pays Boni : l'un sur les terres du lignage Dikan pour les gens habitant la rive française, l'autre en aval de Kotika pour les habitants de ce village. Ce sont des endroits quelconques que rien n'annonce de la rive, car ils sont couverts comme le reste du pays par la forêt secondaire. Les morts y sont enterrés dans des tombes alignées parallèlement au fleuve, à peu près à 7 mètres de distance les unes des autres. Les morts sont placés la tête tournée vers le fleuve. Il n'existe pas de séparation par lignage à l'intérieur du cimetière.

Les tombes ne sont marquées par aucun ornement et au bout d'une dizaine d'années le terre s'étant tassé, aucune trace de l'ensevelissement ne subsiste.

Jamais on ne nettoie les tombes. Seuls les chefs ɔlɔmã, qui ont reçu une instruction spéciale, connaissent les tombes des principaux chefs et les limites du cimetière.

Les Boni ne se rendent jamais au cimetière individuellement, et ne font pas d'offrandes sur la tombe de leurs proches. Quelqu'un qui fréquenterait le cimetière individuellement serait soupçonné d'être un wisimã cherchant à capturer le yɔrko d'un mort.

Les cimetières, même s'ils sont à proximité immédiate des villages, ne leur sont jamais reliés directement par des chemins, et les morts sont transportés en canot. En procédant ainsi, on espère isoler les villages des influences maléfiques.

Si quelqu'un est mort noyé, on l'enterre à l'écart du cimetière. D'après M. W. F. van Lier, chez les Djuka tous les noyés sont supposés avoir été victimes d'un kunu ; les Boni n'ont pas cette conception et déclarent avoir perdu le sens de cette coutume ; on remarque du reste qu'ils observent le deuil des noyés selon les rites habituels.

Les enfants ne sont enterrés avec les cérémonies normales qu'à partir de 6 ans environ. La règle est la suivante : un enfant est enterré au cimetière et on fait broko de pour lui si l'enfant suivant de la même mère commence à marcher.

Les enfants en bas âge sont enterrés sans cercueil à un emplacement spécial en bordure de chaque village ; on place simplement une planche sur le corps avant de combler la fosse. On a l'idée que les enfants très jeunes n'ont pas de force vitale, et que leur yɔrko ne peut nuire.

Le deuil

Après l'enterrement, les femmes du mort (ou le mari si c'est une femme), les plus proches parents du côté maternel, ainsi que les enfants, séjournent encore huit jours dans le hangar mortuaire, jusqu'au broko da.

Les obligations du deuil se limitent dès lors, pour les proches parents du mort, à s'abstenir pendant un an de danser, de porter des bijoux ou de trop beaux vêtements ; il en va tout autrement pour le conjoint du mort ; les Noirs Réfugiés admettent en effet, comme les Créoles de Surinam, la persistance de la jalousie sexuelle du mort, dont pendant un an le yorku est supposé demeurer en contact des vivants.

Condition du conjoint en deuil. Le principe est que le conjoint survivant, jusqu'à la levée du deuil, est soumis à la volonté du mort. Pour matérialiser cela de façon évidente, il ne peut, pendant toute cette période, porter ses vêtements habituels, mais doit s'habiller exclusivement des étoffes prélevées à son intention sur celles que le défunt possédait, ou données par les plus proches parents maternels du défunt.

Pendant la durée du deuil, toute incartade du conjoint survivant attirera sur lui la vengeance impitoyable du yorku ; il importe qu'il se fasse oublier, qu'il ait un maintien modeste et décent. Le mort pourrait lui en vouloir d'avoir gardé sa santé et sa beauté. Aussi va-t-on s'efforcer de donner au conjoint survivant l'aspect d'un être misérable et malheureux. La parenté du mort est spécialement intéressée à ce que cette discipline soit observée, car dans le cas contraire le yorku du mort retournerait sa vengeance contre son propre lignage. Pendant tout le deuil l'ensemble du lignage se considère comme en danger. Aussi la coutume veut-elle que pendant toute cette période le veuf (ou la veuve) soit placé sous le commandement du lignage du mort.

En cas de concubinage, le deuil est pris par le conjoint, même si les relations n'ont pas été rendues officielles. On cite l'exemple de Way (Boniville) qui avait pris le deuil d'un Djuka avec qui elle avait commencé à vivre, avant qu'il n'ait pu la demander officiellement.

Conditions des personnes en deuil. La condition d'un veuf est exactement semblable à celle d'une veuve, ce qui tend à montrer qu'aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés les défunts, hommes et femmes, ont le même niveau d'être, et le même pouvoir sur les vivants.

Le conjoint survivant est placé sous la protection des ancêtres du lignage du conjoint défunt. Sans cette protection assurée par les prières des gens de ce lignage, il se trouverait sans défense. La preuve en est que la principale sanction contre lui est de lui lever le deuil prématurément, en allant au fraga liki dire aux ancêtres qu'on se désintéresse de lui. Cela revient indirectement à le maudire (voir ci-dessous l'exemple de Gamba).

Le conjoint en deuil est extrait temporairement de son lignage et placé sous la protection du lignage du conjoint défunt, dans une condition correspondant à celle du client de la société antique.

Fig. 21 – Généalogie de la fraction Lapé 2. Fonctions résultant de la mort de Yundu.

Il ne peut plus prier ses propres ancêtres. S'il est malade, il demande aux anciens du lignage du conjoint défunt de prier pour lui leurs propres ancêtres.

L'homme en deuil est dispensé de certaines obligations et responsabilités :

— Il ne peut prendre part à un conseil de son lignage ;

— S'il y a bagarre entre son lignage et un autre, il ne peut être pris à partie ;

— On ne peut prélever une partie de sa pêche en cas de grande ivrée ;

— Il est dispensé de ses obligations funéraires en tant que ziemd ou kisimd.

L'homme en deuil est placé sous le commandement collectif du lignage de sa femme, mais en fait sous le commandement des proches parents de celle-ci : mère, grand-mère, oncles et tantes au sens propre. C'est la parenté naturelle qui joue en matière de deuil, la parenté classificatoire n'intervient que si tous les proches parents sont décédés.

Ce sont en général de vieilles femmes de cette proche parenté qui sont chargées de surveiller le comportement du veuf, et en contrepartie de veiller à ce qu'il ne manque pas du nécessaire.

Par exemple Alémin (Aw.B.1) était marié à Yundu (L2, G60) de la fraction Lapé 2, vivant au village de Loka. Quand elle mourut en mai 1957, il a été placé sous le commandement de Asakundu (L2, E55), grand-mère de sa femme, et de la sœur de Asakundu, Téréza, vivant à Boniville. Comme il n'avait pas encore construit de case pour sa femme, on lui enjoignit de venir spécialement se bâtir une petite cabane au village Loka, pour résider auprès de Asakundu. S'il était malade, c'était △ Baafu (L2, E58), aîné du groupe, qui devait prier pour lui. Alémin n'a eu affaire ni au chef du lignage Lapé, ni aux oncles au sens classificatoire de sa femme du groupe Lapé 1.

Pour Diamanti (Aw.B.2, E56, † en 1955), son conjoint Booki (K3, E133) passa le deuil dans la maison que Diamanti s'était fait construire par un précédent mari. Ce furent ○ Emma, mère de Diamanti, et Sanéti, sœur cadette d'Emma, qui exercèrent la surveillance sur lui, sous la responsabilité de △ Akodo, frère de la morte (tous les oncles au sens propre étant morts). Booki n'eut affaire ni aux oncles au sens classificatoire, ni au chef du lignage Awara Bakka.

Quand Atuku (Aw.B.1, D20) mourut (1956), son mari Nétali fut placé sous le commandement de Kondoku, frère de Atuku, tous les oncles au sens propre et au sens classificatoire étant morts.

La sujétion qu'entraîne ce deuil ne doit pas être considérée comme symbolique. Elle pèse sur le conjoint survivant d'un poids intolérable que seule permet de supporter la conviction qu'elle est l'unique moyen de protection contre la jalousie du défunt. Non seulement le veuf (ou la veuve) ne fait rien pour s'en s'affranchir, mais au moindre malaise il ajoutera de sa propre initiative à la rigueur de sa condition.

Le veuf ne peut plus utiliser ses vêtements et ustensiles personnels ; il conserve son hamac et son fusil. Tout le reste, vêtements (prélevés sur le deuil), ustensiles divers, lui est fourni par le lignage de la morte. Chaque femme de ce lignage doit lui donner un peu de ce qu'elle prépare. Lui-même ne doit rien demander.

Il ne peut se déplacer sans l'autorisation de ses surveillantes, et seulement pour un motif précis. Par exemple, quand Alémin a trouvé du travail auprès d'un européen en octobre 1957, les deux vieilles femmes qui étaient chargées de sa surveillance sont venues le livrer à son employeur comme un prisonnier, précisant notamment qu'elles lui interdisaient de débarquer dans tels ou tels villages où il n'avait rien à faire.

Alémin a été autorisé à assister au deuil de sa mère, mais il n'a pris part à aucune des cérémonies. Il n'a pas assisté à l'interrogatoire de la morte portée dans son cercueil, et n'a pas été mis au courant des dispositions prises pour partager l'héritage.

L'homme en deuil n'habite pas forcément dans la case qu'il avait fait bâtir pour sa femme, mais dans une case qu'on lui désigne. Il peut (c'est le cas de Alémin) être invité à construire une petite case qui, à la fin du deuil, deviendra la propriété de sa belle-mère.

Quand la maison a été léguée, l'héritier ne peut en prendre possession que si le conjoint n'a pas reçu l'ordre d'y résider. Ce n'est qu'à la fin du deuil qu'il entre pleinement en possession de ses droits.

L'homme en deuil ne peut sortir de sa maison à la nuit tombée, spécialement les nuits où l'on danse après avoir appelé tous les ancêtres. Il aurait tout à craindre des gadu.

Il peut circuler dans le village et adresser la parole à qui le veut, mais ne doit pas plaisanter ni assister à des réjouissances quelconques, pas même entendre des contes. Non seulement il ne peut faire la cour à une femme, mais encore il lui est interdit de faire des ouvertures discrètes, même par personne interposée, en vue d'un remariage.

Il ne peut se promener torse nu et tête nue ; Alemin portait en permanence un affreux tricot et un béret troué.

Il ne peut ni danser ni chanter (même seul). S'il a un gadu, ce gadu est appelé et invité à ne pas monter à la tête de son « maître » pendant la durée du deuil. C'est le doyen du lignage de l'intéressé qui prononce cette adjuration.

Toutefois il existe une restriction. Si on a absolument besoin de consulter ce dieu, on demande au veuf de retirer ses vêtements de deuil et de reprendre pendant quelques heures ses propres vêtements. La consultation a lieu en privé dans une case, puis le deuil reprend.

Il observe l'interdit fondamental (bwosi kina) de la défunte en plus du sien.

Il doit absolument passer la fête goli (jour de l'an) dans la famille de la défunte.

Telles sont les principales obligations et interdictions qui régissent la vie de l'homme en deuil, pendant une période d'au moins 18 mois, qui peut même se prolonger jusqu'à deux ans et davantage (fin 1958, le deuil de Yundu, † en mai 1957, n'était toujours pas levé, et Alémin n'espérait pas en être libéré avant le printemps de 1959).

Ces obligations se trouvent encore aggravées pendant les trois premiers mois par des dispositions particulières.

Pendant ces trois premiers mois, le dipi baaka ou deuil profond, l'homme en deuil doit conserver l'attitude de la plus vive douleur. Il ne quitte la maison qui lui est attribuée que pour les travaux indispensables, et ne s'éloigne pas du village de la défunte ; il reste les yeux baissés, ne regardant personne en face sinon les membres de la famille de la morte. L'usage voulait même qu'il s'appuyât sur un bâton comme une personne éguinée, mais le grand man actuel a supprimé cette coutume.

Après 3 mois, on fait une offrande auprès du fraga liki du lignage du mort, lui exposant combien son conjoint a respecté sa mémoire et lui demandant la permission d'alléger les manifestations de sa peine. Le deuil est alors allégé, mais l'homme en deuil continue à porter un bandeau autour de la tête ou à tout le moins un vieux béret.

L'homme en deuil, pendant les premiers mois, n'a d'autre responsabilité que de chasser et de pêcher sur ordre du lignage de la défunte. Il fait lui-même sa cuisine avec les aliments qu'on lui remet ; il coupe un abattis pour sa belle-mère ou une autre femme de la parenté de la défunte, qui l'exploitera avec lui. Ensuite, il reçoit l'ordre d'aller gagner l'argent nécessaire à l'importante contribution qu'il doit apporter à la fête de levée du deuil. Pendant toute la durée du deuil il doit rendre compte de ses travaux et de ses déplacements.

Quand approche la fin du deuil, il doit faire un travail au profit de sa belle-mère, en général refaire la toiture de sa maison, ou encore lui construire un canot.

Ces dispositions ne comportent aucune sanction matérielle. Comme le reste de la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés, elles reposent entièrement sur la crainte d'une sanction suprahumaine.

Après la levée du deuil, la personne en deuil peut se remarier sans autre délai.

Conditions des veuves et des coépouses d'un veuf. La condition d'une femme en deuil est à très peu de chose près identique à celle d'un veuf. Elle réside pendant la durée du deuil dans la maison de son mari décédé, sous la surveillance des proches parents maternels de celui-ci. Le lignage du mort lui prête tous les objets dont elle a besoin, et lui fournit les denrées d'importation (sel, pétrole, savon) dont elle fait usage. Elle peut par contre user librement des produits de l'abattis que son mari avait coupé pour elle, puisqu'il est admis que ces produits sont la propriété exclusive de la femme.

La veuve, avant de sortir du deuil, doit se procurer au minimum l'argent nécessaire à une dame-jeanne de tafia, comme contribution à la fête de levée de deuil. Elle doit faire à la mère de son mari un cadeau de quelques touques de couac.

Une femme enceinte prend le deuil exactement selon la loi commune. La coutume décrite par plusieurs auteurs chez les Saramaka, selon laquelle la femme enceinte doit rejoindre un des « frères » de son mari, ne s'applique pas aux Boni.

Il y a quelques atténuations à la rigueur du deuil en ce qui concerne les femmes âgées. Par exemple en 1956, Lémiki (70 ans), habitant Boniville, était en deuil de son mari Tabiki (Awara Bakka, mais résidant depuis son enfance auprès du lignage Lapé, à Loka où il avait été élevé par son père). Lémiki passait alternativement trois semaines dans sa maison et trois semaines dans celle de son mari. C'était Asamani, sœur de même père de Tabiki, qui exerçait le commandement sur elle.

Cet exemple remarquable montre qu'en matière de deuil (droits et devoirs), le principe de résidence joue un rôle essentiel. Celui qui a été élevé par son père est à cet égard extrait de son lignage, qui perd tout droit et tout regard sur la conduite du deuil.

Les coépouses d'un veuf sont soumises au deuil au même titre que lui, et pour le même motif, puisqu'elles sont visées par la jalousie du gaku de la défunte.

Cependant elles sont autorisées le plus souvent à demeurer dans leur famille maternelle. Passée la période du dipi boaku, elles peuvent reprendre des relations conjugales avec leur mari, mais à des intervalles de plusieurs semaines et sans qu'il puisse passer la nuit avec l'une d'elles. Chaque fois il doit demander la permission du chef de lignage de la défunte.

Un incident. En 1957, le Saramaka Gamba (75 ans), veuf de Way (Dip. I), a causé un incident sérieux en refusant à plusieurs reprises l'obéissance qu'il devait au lignage de celle-ci, sous prétexte qu'il était âgé et savait se conduire.

Son fils Maliki (né d'une femme Saramaka) qu'il élevait, marié à la fille de Way, était allé à la pêche en haut du Litani. Au retour, Kwau (80 ans), frère aîné de Way, lui reprocha d'être parti sans autorisation, lui faisant remarquer que son père, Gamba, étant par le deuil placé sous son commandement, lui-même s'y trouvait aussi de ce fait. Gamba n'admit pas ce raisonnement et les deux vieillards se battirent. Ce fut un beau scandale. Kwau et les anciens du lignage de Way vinrent devant le fraga liki du village de L'Enfant Perdu, pour lever son deuil séance tenante (ce qui, rappelons-le, équivaut à le maudire, en le livrant à la vengeance du gaku de la défunte).

Des membres de la famille de Way allèrent casser les carbets de Gamba et de son fils, qui demeurèrent cachés dans la brousse quelque temps. Puis Gamba fit intercéder les chefs de village et obtint son pardon. Les anciens du lignage de Way allèrent au fraga liki prononcer les paroles remettant les choses dans l'ordre.

La levée du deuil. La fête de levée du deuil -puu boaku- est célébrée 18 mois à 2 ans après l'enterrement. Le délai peut être un peu plus long car le plus souvent le village célèbre cette fête pour plusieurs de ses morts en même temps. C'est une lourde charge car les fêtes de levée de deuil attirent beaucoup de monde et il faut que chaque assistant trouve à manger et à boire à discrétion.

Cette fête est célébrée dans le cadre du village et non dans celui du lignage. Elle sera célébrée de la même façon pour un Djuka mort dans un village Boni, pourvu qu'il ait résidé là suffisamment longtemps. En pareil cas les dépenses sont réparties également sur tous les habitants du village. Mais si le défunt avait dans le village des proches parents, enfants, neveux ou frères, ce sont eux qui supportent la charge principale. Les membres du lignage du défunt établis dans d'autres villages contribuent également aux dépenses et à l'organisation de la fête, mais de façon symbolique.

Un conseil (kunda) des habitants du village fixe la date ; pendant les 15 jours qui précèdent, chacun est à l'œuvre. Les femmes décortiquent et vannent le riz, préparent de grandes quantités de couac et de jus de canne à sucre. Les basimã parcourent la brousse et font boucaner viande et poisson. Chacun selon ses moyens achète tafia, sucre, chocolat et autres denrées appréciées des Noirs Réfugiés.

La célébration des rites occupe toute une semaine. C'est que, dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, l'influence du mort ne peut être éliminée que progressivement, par la répétition du rite de séparation.

Le premier jour, on appelle par des formules frappées sur le tambour apinti le gaka des morts dont on va lever le deuil. Puis ont lieu des danses de possession.

Le deuxième jour est réservé à la préparation matérielle des cérémonies qui vont suivre.

Le troisième jour, le conjoint en deuil, s'il y en a un, est conduit par les membres du lignage du défunt sous le hangar mortuaire. On l'habille de rouge et il est félicité pour avoir bien gardé le deuil. Puis on le mène à la rivière et de vieilles femmes du lignage du défunt commencent à le laver en adjurant le gaka de se séparer de lui.

Le quatrième jour, à la tombée de la nuit, tous les assistants se rassemblent au hangar mortuaire. On récite des contes (Anãsi tali), des improvisations (mado) et des énigmes (ado). Cette phase de la fête a pour but de concentrer l'attention des auditeurs ; elle crée une chaude atmosphère collective qui imprègne les assistants, amenant chez eux des émotions intenses et colorées.

Viennent ensuite les danses, toujours dans l'ordre, singe, susu, amusu, rythmées sur le tambour apinti. Ces danses ne sont pas des danses de possession et ne paraissent pas avoir elles-mêmes de sens religieux ; toutes comportent des chœurs dans lesquels les chanteurs ne s'accompagnent d'aucun instrument ; ces chants n'ont d'autre sens que d'exalter la vie ; les Noirs Réfugiés y trouvent leur meilleure expression artistique. Nombre d'entre eux témoignent d'une fantaisie éblouissante ; les sujets en sont très variés et chaque année on en crée de nouveaux. Mais il est un certain nombre de « classiques » qu'on voit revenir dans chaque fête. Citons : l'homme qui appelle son chien perdu dans les bois ; le chant de la rivière Balen ; la femme qui veille sur sa fille, etc. Ces chants sont d'une grande beauté et dans les grandes fêtes de deuil, il est difficile de les entendre sans émotion. Chants et danses se poursuivent sans interruption jusqu'au retour du soleil. C'est ce qu'on appelle broko de, « casser un jour ». Ce rite, qui a une valeur essentielle aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés, paraît être l'affirmation par le groupe du triomphe de la vie sur la mort.

Le 5e jour, on sert aux invités sous le hangar mortuaire, une sorte de buffet. L'après-midi il y a l'offrande de nourriture aux ancêtres, bwe nyã ; ce rite est une communion entre les morts et les vivants.

Le 6e jour au matin, la cérémonie se termine par l'offrande de l'eau, célébrée non au fogu liki mais au bord du hangar, à l'intention des ancêtres. On invoque une dernière fois le gorko du mort (ou de la morte) en lui demandant de se séparer définitivement de son conjoint et de le laisser en repos ! « U puu a umd a bonko; yu dyga umd yu pooli lido, na: mu siki, na: ud sani mu du dy, a mu de bâ. (Nous levons le deuil de (cette) femme ; toi et la femme vous vous séparez aujourd'hui ; elle ne doit pas être malade, il ne doit rien lui arriver, elle doit aller bien) ».

On s'adresse ensuite au défunt au nom des gens de son village : « Nous en avons fini avec toi, reste là où Dieu t'a placé. »

Le conjoint en deuil est de nouveau lavé à la rivière par de vieilles femmes ayant «les-mêmes» supporté le deuil.

Puis on s'adresse aux gorko des ancêtres et aux entités de l'au-delà qui sont supposés être venus en foule : « Ala sani di kam ya, yu mu luku ala dyga bâ ; u kobo dyga yu; yu sa: mako ala pesi ; (Chacun des êtres qui êtes venus, sois bienveillant envers nous tous ; nous avons fini avec toi, tu peux aller n'importe où) ».

Le 7e jour, la plupart des assistants commencent à se retirer. Une cérémonie intime réunit les proches parents du défunt dans la maison même où il est mort. Ils pleurent et se lamentent une dernière fois. Puis on fait une dernière offrande de nourriture dans la maison même, et on répète l'adjuration : « Nous en avons fini avec toi ; reste là où Dieu t'a placé. »

Le 8e jour, le conjoint dont on vient de lever le deuil est reconduit solennellement à son village par les gens du lignage du mort. On le congratule, il offre à boire et à manger à toute l'assistance. Ce qui pouvait lui rester d'économies disparaît à cette occasion.

Il doit dormir trois nuits dans son village, toujours sans pouvoir avoir de relations avec une femme. Ce délai passé, il vient rendre les vêtements rouges que le lignage du mort lui avait prêtés. C'est alors seulement qu'il est libre.

Notes prises à Boniville en nov. 1957 à l'occasion de la levée de deuil de Bénili. Cette fête est donnée pour la levée de deuil de ○ Bénili (Dju, E5, habitant Boniville, † en 1955 à 75 ans), de △ Tito, (Kotika, Boniville, † en 1955, à 15 ans) et de △ G..., garçon de 10 ans, fils d'une femme du village l'Enfant Perdu (Dip.I), mort à Boniville où il était élevé par Térésa. La fête est donnée plus de deux ans après la mort. Parfois, quand il n'y a pas de conjoint soumis au deuil (ce qui est le cas ici), on attend davantage encore pour pouvoir grouper les levées de deuil de plusieurs défunts du même village en une seule cérémonie. Le déroulement des rites montre qu'on attache bien plus d'importance à Bénili qu'aux deux jeunes garçons ; en fait, la cérémonie lui est consacrée à peu près exclusivement.

Les cérémonies de levée de deuil à Boniville sont particulièrement intéressantes, car ce village comprend des ressortissants de 5 lignages différents. La répartition des fonctions et des charges permet de mieux comprendre la pensée des Boni relative à l'organisation sociale ; le principe de résidence joue le rôle déterminant. La cérémonie a lieu au village où les défunts résidaient, quel que fût leur lignage. La charge de l'organisation est répartie à peu près également entre tous les habitants du village. Les membres des lignages des défunts habitant les autres villages assistent à la cérémonie, mais leur contribution est beaucoup moins importante.

Le 8 novembre (journée dite busimd kom), à midi, la fête commence par l'arrivée des buchiman qui, la semaine précédente, avaient pêché et séché du poisson pour la fête.

Les buchiman sont placés sous le commandement de △ Tofloto (K). Ce sont tous des volontaires (celui qui se dispenserait de rendre ce service serait exposé à être abandonné seul le jour où il aurait à supporter le poids du deuil d'un de ses proches parents). Le poids principal du deuil est supporté par le village de Boniville. Les gens de la fraction principale des Dju (village Asisi) fournissent une contribution assez importante quant au temps passé à la pêche, mais symbolique quant à la fourniture de tafia et de vivres importés.

Ces buchiman étaient à l'œuvre depuis le 25 octobre, pêchant et salant du poisson :

pour Boniville	pour Asisi-Dju
Fintiman, Klémenti, Doni, Alibi — fils et petits-fils de Béniti (Dju)	3 hommes de plus de 20 ans
4 jeunes gens du lignage Kotika	4 à 5 adolescents
1 — — Dip. I
2 — — Lapé
1 — — Papalston
2 — — Poti

Au total ils ont fourni quinze jours de travail mais chacun a recueilli pour son compte environ 15 kilogrammes de poisson sec.

Les buchiman, montés dans cinq grandes pirogues ornées d'oriflammes multicolores, approchent du dégrad de Boniville où se trouvent massés tous les jeunes gens du village, les hommes armés de leurs fusils, les femmes brandissant des bannières faites de camisas neuves. Les hourrahs retentissent, ponctués de centaines de coups de fusil. Dans une ambiance enthousiaste, les buchiman font leur entrée dans le village et vont rendre compte de leur mission au conseil rassemblé sous le hangar mortuaire. Selon la coutume ce conseil est improvisé au dernier moment par les anciens se trouvant là, sans distinction d'origine, et ne comporte pas de commandement défini.

4 paniers de poisson séché sont déposés au bord du hangar, pour la fête de levée de deuil, puis chacun va chercher et ranger dans sa maison un gros panier personnel.

Les poissons destinés à la fête sont distribués entre les femmes chargées de les préparer.

Vers 14 heures, les anciens sont rassemblés dans la partie Ouest du hangar ; dans la partie Est, les proches des défunts dont on va lever le deuil se lamentent.

Plusieurs tambours apinli sont apportés et placés latéralement.

Les buchiman exécutent la danse kwadyo qui semble être une danse guerrière africaine ; ils tiennent un bâton devant eux et font le geste de mettre en joue.

Cela dure environ une demi-heure.

Les invités continuent d'arriver isolément et s'installent aux abords du hangar mortuaire, assis sur leurs petits bancs.

Vers 15 heures, les tambours recommencent à battre. C'est Bukuman, maître dans l'art de parler avec le tambour, qui frappe les formules d'appel, les autres lui donnent la réplique.

Le tambour parle longuement[1]. Un ancien me traduit approximativement : « Autres villages, taisez-vous, car il y a une grande fête au village du grand man ».

« Nous qui sommes vivants actuellement, nous allons faire ce que nous ont appris nos ancêtres voici longtemps ».

Aux morts dont on va lever le deuil, on s'adresse directement ensuite, les appelant par leur nom si ce sont des hommes ; pour les femmes comme Béniti, qu'on ne peut appeler directement car les femmes n'ont pas de nom de tambour, on appelle un de leurs proches défunts, ici Diolé †, frère de Béniti : « Dis à ta sœur que nous allons nous séparer d'elle, car voici longtemps que nous portons son deuil et c'est la coutume, telle que les ancêtres l'ont faite avant nous ».

« Ancêtres, venez, approchez-vous de nous, nous allons verser pour vous le tafia et le jus de canne. »

(Des libations sont faites à l'intérieur du hangar). Le tambour s'adresse ensuite aux assistants :

« Vous qui avez des obia pour que le sabre ne vous coupe pas, pour que le verre cassé ne vous blesse pas, qu'attendez-vous ? Vous restez assis, avez-vous peur ? ».

A ces mots, plusieurs des assistants se dressent et se mettent à danser, cherchant la transe de possession. Quelques-uns courent dans le village et reviennent en courant, portant des tiges de bananiers. D'autres traînent des spathes épineuses d'awara ; deux brandissent un vieux canot démoli.

Le tambour bat furieusement le rythme de Kumenti. Une partie des danseurs, pris d'un délire furieux, sautent et trépignent. Certains prennent sous le bras des spathes épineuses d'awara[2] ou se les passent autour du cou.

Une partie des assistants sont pris à leur tour de transes, dont les gens d'âge mûr et de caractère sérieux, comme Fintiman, qu'on emporte évanoui.

Deux possédés, un homme (Ernest, Kotika) et une femme (Awini, Boniville), enduits de pemba, sont en proie à des contorsions extraordinaires. Ernest se casse une bouteille sur la tête avec une force telle que les morceaux jaillissent à plusieurs mètres. L'un et l'autre dansent sur les genoux pendant un temps appréciable (le lendemain du reste Awini viendra se faire soigner). L'assistance manifeste une joie frénétique.

(1) Il s'agit davantage de formules conventionnelles que d'un langage ; deux sons différents peuvent être obtenus du tambour, en frappant respectivement avec les doigts et avec la paume.

(2) Palmier épineux (astrocaryum vulgare) dont les épines acérées, longues de près de 10 centimètres, sont particulièrement redoutables. Il est impossible de ramasser à mains nues une spathe d'awara sans se blesser.

Vers 17 heures commence la danse zinge. Trois tambours apinli sont placés sur la face Ouest du hangar. L'orchestre est complété par un vieux canot retourné que sept à huit hommes frappent avec des bâtons.

Les figures sont à peu près semblables à celles de la danse aseme, sauf que les danseurs avancent en frappant du pied gauche.

Suivent des chants, mais entièrement couverts par le tambour et sans grand intérêt musical.

2e jour, 9 nov. Journée appelé pau de (« on retire une journée »). Ce jour-là aucun rite n'est exécuté. Chacun vaque à ses occupations. Les femmes pilent et vannent du riz.

4e jour, 11 nov. Journée dite poli ala sani na a kruy zou (« mettre toutes choses dans le hangar mortuaire »).

Vers 14 heures les jeunes gens qui ont été couper du bois de chauffage reviennent dans des canots ornés de fanions, au milieu des hourrahs et des coups de fusil.

A 15 heures les basia circulent dans le village, appelant les femmes qui apparaissent de toutes parts, portant de lourds paniers de cassave.

Les vivres préparés pour la fête sont apportés au bord du hangar. Nombre d'assistants ont apporté une bouteille de tafia. Les basia accumulent tout le tafia dans de grandes dames-jeannes. Au total il y aura 6 dames-jeannes de 15 litres de tafia et autant de jus de canne.

Vers 8 heures du soir, les assistants se rassemblent autour du hangar mortuaire où sont assis les joueurs de tambour et les conteurs de malo (Anansi Toli). Amèmbé, du village Loka, commence à raconter une histoire qu'on n'écoute guère, l'assistance restant bruyante et distraite. Les répondants ponctuent son discours d'approbations : « hiya ba ! na so ! ». A quelques passages de l'histoire (quand Anansi a réussi à tromper sa victime), l'assistance s'esclaffe, les tambours battent, le conteur et ses répondants chantent et dansent. Peu à peu l'assistance s'échauffe, participe intensément à l'histoire.

Un autre conte suit, raconté par Adiuso, chef du lignage Dju (Asisi). L'assistance est surexcitée, les intermèdes de danse se font de plus en plus nombreux et plus longs, tout le monde, hommes, femmes et enfants y prend part.

Vers 11 heures les danses vont commencer dans l'ordre aseme, zinge, aseme; à six heures du matin le lendemain les danses aussi se poursuivent. Une partie des assistants descendent au dégrad pour rentrer chez eux, ne manifestant aucune fatigue apparente.

(1) Quand il y a un conjoint en deuil, c'est ce jour-là qu'il est amené au hangar mortuaire par le lignage du défunt, lilicité et revêtu de vêtements usés de couleur rouge.

5e jour, 12 nov. Rien ne se passe le matin. Les assistants prennent quelque repos.

A 15 heures les jeunes gens circulent vêtus de leurs plus beaux atours ; on se rend visite d'une maison à l'autre, on boit et on chante.

Vers 15 h. 30 les basia circulent dans le village, appelant les femmes pour apporter le repas cérémoniel. Des tables sont disposées sous le hangar. Les femmes apportent chacune un grand bol ou une cuvette de riz cuit (environ 2 kilogrammes de riz). Certaines y ajoutent un bol de sauce ou de poisson cuit. Pas de viande.

Les basia disposent tout cela sur les tables. On compte environ 60 bols ou cuvettes (ce qui représente un bel effort, la récolte de riz ayant été mauvaise), une cinquantaine de bouteilles de soda, quelques boîtes de biscuits et fromages de Hollande.

Fintiman dirige la cérémonie. Il partage tous ces mets sans distinction de provenance en plusieurs lots, un pour chaque lignage.

Tous les invités descendent au dégrad se laver au fleuve, puis revêtent des vêtements neufs avant de participer au repas cérémoniel.

Les gens de chaque lignage vont manger de leur côté ; un bol est porté aux gens en deuil, comme Alémin, qui restent confinés chez eux. Mais les proches des trois défunts dont on va lever le deuil prennent part à la cérémonie.

Vers 16 heures on voit de nouveau apparaître les femmes, portant un petit bol de riz accompagné d'un peu de poisson et de sauce aux arachides. Elles les disposent à terre au bord du hangar mortuaire.

Des feuilles de bananier sont disposées au bord du hangar (face Nord, du côté de la rivière).

Les anciens, assis sur leur petit banc, se réunissent en demi-cercle. Fintiman et Bukuman prennent un peu de chaque bol, le répandent sur les feuilles de bananier. Ils appellent par leur nom les défunts dont on lève le deuil, Béniti et les jeunes garçons Tito et G..., leur parlant sur le ton d'une conversation familière, comme à des vivants qu'on convie à manger.

Quelques personnes viennent manger un peu de la nourriture.

A 17 heures, Fintiman fait ranger cinq petits garçons de 5 à 7 ans, munis chacun d'une cuvette, devant la nourriture étalée par terre. A un signal donné ils se précipitent, chacun emportant ce qu'il a pu recouvrir de sa cuvette. Ils en laissent un peu qui restera là toute la nuit. On y ajoutera le lendemain les restes du buffet préparé pour les vivants.

Le soir, les jeunes gens dansent devant les maisons de quelques hommes qui ont offert le tafia, mais cela n'a plus le caractère d'une cérémonie. Tout est terminé à onze heures du soir.

Le 6e jour, 13 nov., à sept heures, les anciens se réunissent de nouveau devant les feuilles de bananier où reste un peu de la nourriture offerte la veille (chiens et poules en ont mangé une partie).

Un long palabre commence, décousu et déconcertant, dont le but m'échappe. Ce qui en résulte de plus clair est que les Capitaines exposent ce que le grand man (absent de la cérémonie) leur a dit le matin. Ils remercient le grand man de cette fête qui s'est passée sans aucun incident ; disent qu'on pourra compter sur eux si quelque deuil se produit dans un autre village.

Todo s'excuse auprès du grand man parce que les jeunes gens étaient habillés selon une nouvelle mode (grands calimbés allant jusqu'à terre), et ont dansé quelques danses créoles. Il dit à l'assistance que ce n'est pas conforme à la coutume et que les vraies danses Boni sont aɔygɛ, suza, awasa.

Puis Fintiman verse doucement de l'eau sur les feuilles de bananier en appelant les morts dont on lève le deuil. « Nous versons de l'eau pour vous, veillez sur les gens de votre famille, sur le grand man et sur ceux qui ont travaillé pour le deuil, qu'ils soient en bonne santé, qu'il ne leur arrive rien de mauvais.

Nous en avons fini avec vous ; restez là où Dieu vous a mis ».

En prononçant ces paroles, Fintiman brise le banc et la vaisselle de sa mère défunte (pour les garçons décédés on n'avait rien apporté). Il ne s'agit pas seulement de marquer la rupture avec les vivants, mais de procurer à la défunte ce qui lui sera nécessaire dans l'au-delà. A cet effet on brise aussi une pagaie que son fils Klémenti a préparée pour elle, et des calebasses préparées par ses filles.

Comme il n'y a pas de conjoint en deuil (Béniti était divorcée depuis longtemps) la cérémonie s'arrête là.

Puis les assistants se dispersent dans le village, allant danser, manger et boire les uns chez les autres. Ils ont l'air satisfait de gens qui viennent de réussir un important travail.

Le 7e jour une cérémonie intime réunit les enfants et petits-enfants de Béniti dans la maison de sa fille Kulina, où elle est morte. Après une offrande de nourriture, ils pleurent et se lamentent une dernière fois. Puis Fintiman, son fils aîné, répète la formule de séparation :

« Nous en avons fini avec vous ; restez là où Dieu vous a mise. »

Levée de deuil de Béniti. Répartition des dépenses. Béniti appartenait à la fraction du lignage Dju établie à Boniville ; le poids principal du deuil devait donc être supporté par cette fraction, l'autre (celle d'Asisi) apportant une contribution symbolique.

Béniti laissait 2 fils et 2 petits-fils adultes :

En fait le fils aîné Fintiman a supporté à lui seul la moitié des frais, le fils cadet étant malade et sans ressources régulières. Aucune contribution en argent n'est demandé aux femmes, qui doivent par contre puiser largement dans leurs réserves de riz.

	Fintiman	Klémenti	Alibi	Doni
dames jeannes de tafia de 15 l	4 = 14.800 fr	1 = 3.700 fr	1 = 3.700 fr	1 = 3.700 fr caisses de soda (1.000 fr)	4 = 4.000 fr	3 = 3.000 fr	1 = 1.000 fr	1 = 1.000 fr
fromages Hollande	1 = 1.000	néant	néant	néant

sucre, kg.	10 = 1.000	—	—	—
canne à sucre	3.000	—	—	—
	25.600 fr	6.700 fr	4.700 fr	4.700 fr

A peu près la moitié du tafia a été apportée au hangar mortuaire pour servir pour les danses, l'autre moitié a été distribuée aux visiteurs au cours des visites intéressées qu'ils venaient faire à domicile aux gens du village.

Les 3 gendres de Béniti ont donné chacun 3 litres de tafia.

Les hommes de Boniville appartenant aux autres lignages ont donné 1 litre chacun, sauf les deux principaux basia (adjoints au grand man pour le commandement intérieur du village), Todo et Tofioto, qui ont donné chacun deux litres. En outre, chacun a conservé 1 litre ou deux pour offrir aux visiteurs à domicile.

Quant aux hommes du lo Dju de Asisi, ils ont apporté 1 litre chacun, y compris le chef du lignage.

Toutes les femmes de Boniville et toutes les femmes de Asisi-Dju ont apporté leur contribution sous forme de nourriture.

Au total il est venu environ 150 visiteurs adultes.

On peut compter qu'il s'est bu environ 200 litres de tafia, soit un peu plus d'un litre par personne, ce qui pour 5 jours de fête n'est pas énorme.

Mais comme certains boivent fort peu, on peut estimer que les plus portés à l'ivrognerie ont bu jusqu'à 3 et 4 litres.

Héritage

La coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, hostile à tout ce qui peut diviser le matrilignage, ne peut admettre la notion d'un héritier unique entrant en possession de tous les biens du défunt et le remplaçant dans ses fonctions. Cette notion de l'héritier unique considéré comme substitut du défunt, telle qu'elle existe chez les Bamiléké, qui conduit à l'individualisation d'une ligne à l'intérieur du lignage, peut être regardée comme l'extrême opposé de la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés.

Dans la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, l'héritage doit être dispersé entre les membres du matrilignage au sens strict (bee) du mort, et ses enfants.

La coutume de nombreuses sociétés africaines veut que les hommes héritent des hommes et les femmes des femmes. Cette notion est totalement contraire à la pensée juridique des Noirs Réfugiés. Une maison, un objet, un canot, peuvent passer d'un homme à une femme ou inversement. Il en est de même des dieux inférieurs dont le défunt pouvait être possédé.

Si le défunt n'a pas indiqué avant sa mort, devant témoins, la répartition de ses biens, on emploie le même procédé divinatoire que pour la détermination des causes de la mort : le cercueil étant porté sur la tête de deux hommes, on fait ranger devant les membres du matrilignage au sens restreint du défunt, et ses enfants. Le président du lànli kuulu demande : à qui laisses-tu ta maison ? Le cercueil s'avance vers l'un des assistants, puis : « A qui laisses-tu ton canot ? » A qui laisses-tu ton fusil ? » A qui laisses-tu tes abattis en cours de récolte ? ».

Les héritiers partiels ainsi désignés peuvent entrer immédiatement en possession de leurs legs.

Sont réservés ce que les Boni appellent le « matériel » du défunt c'est-à-dire ses objets personnels, son linge, son argent, qui seront répartis après la levée du deuil.

La règle coutumière est la suivante :

Pendant la durée du deuil, ces objets enfermés dans une malle sont placés sous la garde de l'aîné des enfants s'il s'agissait d'une femme, de l'aîné des neveux au sens classificatoire s'il s'agissait d'un homme. Après la levée du deuil, la répartition est faite par la mère du défunt, si elle est encore vivante, sinon par l'aîné des oncles ou tantes au sens classificatoire et s'ils sont tous morts, par l'aîné des frères ou sœurs survivants au sens classificatoire du défunt.

Exemple : Quand △ Atikuti (Dju, E18) est mort en 1953, âgé d'environ 75 ans, sa maison alla à sa sœur Adyidya (E19), son fusil à Kéwénu (G10), son canot à sa sœur au sens classificatoire Aliki (E23), âgée de 85 ans.

A la levée du deuil de Atikuti, c'est Aliki, à titre d'aînée des sœurs survivantes au sens classificatoire, qui a fait la répartition de ses objets personnels et de son argent ; par exemple un bracelet de fer est allé à Sosoman (E14)[1].

En voyant la répartition de cet héritage sur le tableau généalogique, on se rend compte que la parenté classificatoire n'est pas un vain mot et qu'en fait, à l'intérieur du matrilignage (bee), la répartition se fait strictement au hasard, sans considération de sexe, d'âge ou de proximité de parenté, ce qui est strictement normal, vu le procédé divinatoire employé.

Une conclusion analogue se dégage de l'étude de l'héritage des dieux ; le dieu Papa gadu de l'aïeule ○ Sapiké (D5) est passé dans Pamasa (E26), sa parente au 7e degré. De même le dieu Ampuku de △ Agoabuchi, passant d'un homme à une femme, est allé à Dabisa (G45), sa parente au 10e degré au moins (Agoabuchi n'a pu être situé avec certitude sur le tableau généalogique). Le dieu Kumânti de △ Antinon (D9) est allé à Achiké (F13).

(1) Voir le tableau généalogique du lignage Dju.

L'étude de l'héritage des maisons amène à des conclusions analogues.

Le seul cas où on voit apparaître un certain systématisme est celui de l'héritage des femmes ayant des enfants adultes. Il semble (mais ce n'est pas un principe juridique) que ces enfants reçoivent l'essentiel de l'héritage.

Une tendance qui se fait pour ces dernières années en ce qui concerne les hommes consiste à léguer de son vivant l'essentiel de ses biens aux enfants que l'on a élevés.

Héritage des fonctions et des pouvoirs. A la mort d'un chef de lignage, on demande au yorka du défunt qui il désire voir nommer. Le conseil se réunit ensuite pour procéder à la nomination ; il demeure libre de son choix. la volonté d'outre-tombe du défunt n'a pas force de loi ; en fait il semble qu'elle soit suivie le plus souvent.

Pour la fonction de Capitaine qui est commune à l'ensemble des fractions d'un même lo, l'héritage peut passer d'une fraction à une autre.

Ex. : pour le lo Awara Bakka, la succession :
Asembay (Aw. B.2) ;
Pèèyon (Aw. B.1) ;
Kondoku (Aw. B.1).

CHAPITRE VII

CROYANCES

Origine des croyances des Noirs Réfugiés

La vie spirituelle des Noirs Réfugiés des Guyanes est intimement liée à leur vie sociale, et la division que nous sommes obligés de faire pour la clarté de l'exposé est bien souvent arbitraire. Aussi nous efforcerons-nous de mettre en évidence ces connexions partout où elles sont essentielles.

Ce qui constitue la religion des Noirs Réfugiés est une synthèse d'éléments provenant de divers peuples de l'Ouest africain, notamment des Ashanti, des Agni, des Mina et des Fon et aussi d'éléments congolais. Cette synthèse semble avoir pris naissance chez les Saramaka, première tribu constituée au début du XVIIIe siècle, et avoir été adoptée ensuite avec des modifications de détail par les Djuka, tribu créée vers 1760. Les Boni, dernière tribu constituée, ont probablement reçu ces croyances pendant le temps de servitude qu'ils ont passé sous la tutelle des Djuka, de 1815 à 1860. Les croyances des Boni et celles des Djuka ont un fondement identique, les rites et leurs incidences sur la vie sociale sont exactement les mêmes. Toutefois les Djuka, près de 10 fois plus nombreux, ont pu garder des conceptions très différenciées et des cultes spécialisés, comportant des prêtres au sens propre du terme.

Les Boni n'ont gardé que l'essentiel, et beaucoup de conceptions, notamment les mythes qui servent de support à l'ensemble de la tradition, se sont fortement estompées chez eux.

Les Boni s'imaginent volontiers que les Africains ne constituent qu'une nation, et qu'ils ont hérité en bloc des traditions et des formes sociales de cette nation. Ils savent maintenant (notamment pour avoir fréquenté les tirailleurs sénégalais de la mission française de 1937) qu'il y existe de nombreuses tribus, mais cela n'a pas ébranlé la vénération qu'ils portent à l'Afrique, source pour eux de toute connaissance et de toute force. Pourtant, presque rien n'est parvenu jusqu'à eux de la culture propre à chacune des grandes tribus ; aucun nom de nation africaine n'est resté dans leur mémoire et aucune des langues de leurs pays d'origine ne s'est conservée[1] ; partout a prévalu la langue véhiculaire imposée aux esclaves. Cela n'a rien d'étonnant, puisque les propriétaires d'esclaves s'efforçaient, pour empêcher les révoltes, de mélanger au maximum les Noirs des diverses tribus.

Un certain nombre d'hommes initiés à des degrés divers à des cultes africains se trouvaient parmi les rebelles. Ils se sont efforcés de conserver et de transmettre ces rites, que leurs descendants ont plus ou moins transposés ou déformés[2]. Autant qu'on puisse en juger par les langues secrètes attachées à ces cultes, où se reconnaissent de nombreux mots déformés de la langue ordinaire, et quelques mots indiens, ces cultes dans leur état actuel, doivent différer sensiblement de ceux qui leur ont donné naissance. En fait, la seule chose que les Noirs Réfugiés aient authentiquement gardée, ce sont des concepts, des idées métaphysiques et morales.

C'est précisément ce qui fait le grand intérêt des formes religieuses des Noirs Réfugiés, que l'on retrouve d'ailleurs dans une large mesure, mélangées avec les idées chrétiennes, chez l'ensemble des Noirs de l'Amérique du Sud. Elles semblent mettre en évidence un fonds commun très important de conceptions communes aux civilisations ouest-africaines.

Ce n'est certainement pas par hasard si les diverses tribus des Noirs Réfugiés ont adopté des formes sociales et religieuses si voisines. On doit admettre l'action de quelques fortes personnalités qui ont su, avec un instinct presque surhumain, dégager dans le fatras des croyances qu'apportaient les esclaves révoltés, ce qui était nécessaire à la vie de la nouvelle société ; mais cette nouvelle religion ne se serait pas implantée sous des formes si stables et si cohérentes si tous n'avaient pas eu intimement conscience d'être d'accord sur un minimum de concepts communs.

Il importe d'observer que les Noirs Réfugiés, qui ont emprunté aux Indiens et aux Européens la plupart de leurs techniques, sont restés rigoureusement fidèles dans leurs croyances et leurs rites au fonds africain, dont ils ont tiré un ensemble homogène et vivant. Bien que les croyances des Indiens leur soient connues dans leurs grandes lignes, ils ne leur ont presque rien emprunté ; il est par contre certain que des réminiscences chrétiennes ont influé sur la conception qu'ils ont du dieu suprême, Masa Gadu, et sur leur loi morale et religieuse. Mais elles ont été introduites dans un système de pensée africain, et en fait, les croyances qui influent directement sur la vie individuelle et sur la vie sociale proviennent en droite ligne de la terre africaine.

Conceptions métaphysiques. A travers les rites des Noirs Réfugiés transparaissent des conceptions métaphysiques très comparables à celles qui ont été relevées dans les populations de l'Ouest africain.

(1) On observe pourtant qu'un certain nombre de détails décousus de la vie africaine leur sont parvenus par tradition orale ; c'est ainsi qu'ils ont gardé une description assez exacte de l'éléphant (lea) et du gorille (malégrenu).

(2) Le seul fait que la végétation et la faune différaient totalement de celles de l'Afrique obligeait déjà à une modification du rituel, qui fait appel à des infusions de feuilles de nombreuses plantes auxquelles sont attachées des propriétés magiques précises.

Les Noirs Réfugiés considèrent les êtres et les choses comme répartis sur plusieurs niveaux :

— Le dieu créateur ;
— Les dieux inférieurs ;
— Les ancêtres ;
— Les hommes ;
— Les animaux ;
— Les plantes et les choses inanimées.

A chacun de ces niveaux correspondent un niveau de vie et un niveau de force (kaakili). Une force supérieure peut agir sur une force inférieure, mais non l'inverse.

On peut dire que les cultes des Noirs Réfugiés ont pour but de capter la force vitale des dieux et des ancêtres et de la ramener au niveau des hommes, leur donnant force, chance et fécondité. Accroître ainsi sa force vitale peut être défini comme le bien. Le mal (la magie négative, wisi) c'est au contraire capter la force vitale d'un autre homme pour accroître la sienne.

L'idée qu'on a du wisimã, c'est qu'il se sert d'une force supérieure (du yorka d'un ancêtre notamment) qu'il a réussi à capturer par magie et à soumettre à sa volonté, pour dominer autrui. Réduit à sa seule force, il ne pourrait rien.

La magie des Noirs Réfugiés pourrait laisser croire qu'ils pensent agir directement sur les hommes par l'intermédiaire des plantes auxquelles seraient attachées des vertus magiques. Ce serait une profonde erreur ; dans leur esprit, animaux et plantes sont placés à un niveau inférieur absolument incapable par lui-même d'agir sur l'homme. Les plantes ne sont supposées agir que dans la mesure où elles paraissent capables d'attirer, de fixer comme des accumulateurs, la force vitale émanée des dieux.

Une idée couramment répandue sur l'animisme laisserait penser par exemple qu'avant d'abattre un arbre, un Noir Réfugié lui adresse des paroles et des offrandes. Cela est entièrement absent de sa pensée : ou bien cet arbre est susceptible de servir de support à un dieu, auquel cas on ne peut y toucher qu'après des rites complexes ayant pour but de transférer ce dieu ailleurs, ou c'est simplement un arbre, et on le coupe sans autre forme de procès.

Un aspect très net de ces conceptions est le dagu kunu, malédiction résultant du meurtre d'un chien. On peut tuer impunément n'importe quel animal mais non un chien, parce qu'« un chien, c'est presque un homme ».

A l'opposé du véritable kunu, malédiction s'étendant à tout un lignage, le dagu kunu ne porte que sur la personne coupable, et n'attire sur lui que des malheurs limités.

Aucun sentiment à l'égard du chien n'intervient dans cette conception, mais seulement l'idée qu'il est placé sur un plan particulier, proche du plan de l'humain et de son niveau de force.

LES GRANDS DIEUX

Les Boni reconnaissent un Dieu suprême, Nana[1], plus communément appelé Masa Gadu, et Kedi Amu, Kediampon en langue Kumanti. Il a créé les dieux inférieurs et tout ce qui vit sur la terre.

Voici comment les vieillards Boni racontent le mythe de la création du monde :

Dieu créa un frère et une sœur, Adam et Efa. Ils étaient jumeaux. Il les plaça dans un lieu où ils vivaient heureux sans travailler. Mais il leur interdit de toucher au fruit du corossolier.

Un jour, le diable vint sous la forme du serpent dapome. Il leur dit : « Mangez les graines de cet arbre et vous connaîtrez toutes choses comme Dieu même ».

Adam se laissa tenter et mangea un corossol, il en fit manger à Efa. Il trouva ce fruit bon et dit : « Dieu nous avait trompé ». Son cœur changea, il cessa de regarder Efa comme une sœur et s'unit à elle. Elle devint enceinte.

Quelque temps après, Dieu vint sur la terre et vit ce qui s'était passé. Il dit à Efa : « Tu enfanteras dans la douleur ». Et à Adam : « Tu ne mangeras que ce que tu auras récolté à la sueur de ton front ». Il lui remit une hache de pierre et lui dit : « Va sur la montagne voisine ; tu trouveras les plants de ce que tu devras planter désormais pour te nourrir ».

Efa eut deux jumeaux qu'elle appela de nouveau Adam et Efa, et d'autres enfants. C'est de ces enfants que sont issus tous les hommes.

Ce mythe biblique, transposé dans la pensée africaine, explique les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés concernant les jumeaux. Ce sont deux jumeaux que Dieu créa les premiers. Les jumeaux sont aimés de Dieu et participent à sa nature.

L'idée la plus communément répandue parmi les Boni est que Masa Gadu est la source de force à laquelle s'alimentent tous les êtres vivants ; les hommes lui sont reliés par l'intermédiaire des ancêtres.

Il arrive à Masa Gadu d'intervenir directement dans la vie des hommes et en pareil cas il agit nécessairement selon l'équité, sans qu'aucune magie puisse protéger le coupable. Mais dans la plupart des cas il n'intervient pas, témoignant par là d'autant d'arbitraire que les dieux inférieurs.

Les grands dieux Gwangwéla et Gédéosu des Djuka ne sont pas connus des Boni.

Il n'existe pas à proprement parler de culte de Masa Gadu. Aucun édifice ne lui est réservé, il n'a pas de prêtres et on ne fait pas de cérémonies collectives à son intention. Il est pourtant constamment présent dans la vie religieuse des Boni, associé au culte des ancêtres. Toute cérémonie du culte des ancêtres comporte une invocation à Masa Gadu. De temps à autre, pour des motifs précis, comme la maladie d'un membre du lo, on va spécialement au fraga tiki pour invoquer Masa Gadu. C'est le plus ancien de le qui officie, tandis qu'un plus jeune verse un peu d'eau et de tafia au pied du fraga tiki; l'ancien s'adresse à Masa Gadu dans la langue ordinaire, en des termes simples, sur le ton d'une conversation familière, lui demandant la guérison des malades ou la fin des calamités. Les assistants assis en demi-cercle ponctuent la fin du discours de quelques applaudissements rythmés en prononçant la formule rituelle de remerciements : « Gad bigi bigi fi gu, Masa Gadu ».

(1) Ce terme provient des Agni.

En dehors de ces cérémonies qui ne dépassent guère le cadre du lignage, chacun peut s'adresser directement à Masa Gadu, en priant à haute voix, si par exemple il se trouve isolé en brousse et en proie à la maladie. Jamais on ne s'adresse à Masa Gadu autrement que pour un motif matériel précis. La prière intérieure dans un but de perfection spirituelle n'existe pas à notre connaissance chez les Noirs Réfugiés.

On s'adresse directement à Masa Gadu quand on se croit victime d'une iniquité (voir malédiction). Pourtant, bien que les Noirs Réfugiés aient un sens très vif de l'équité, ils ne prennent jamais à témoin Masa Gadu des vengeances cruelles et arbitraires (kunu) que sont supposées exercer sur eux les divinités inférieures. Il est admis que tout ce que font ces divinités est conforme au rôle que Masa Gadu leur a assigné et que les souffrances qu'elles infligent aux hommes sont indispensables à la bonne marche de l'univers.

Les lois de Odun. Le culte de Odun (Odû) est la clé de voûte de l'édifice social et religieux des Noirs Réfugiés. C'est un culte très secret ; ses rites ne sont pas pratiqués en présence d'étrangers et toute curiosité à son égard rencontre une franche hostilité. Les Boni, qui parlent assez volontiers des cultes de possession, sont muets au sujet de Odun, et l'on peut passer des années parmi eux sans même entendre prononcer ce nom.

Le culte de Odun est commun aux Boni et aux Saramaka (c'est peut-être ce qui explique les relations conflantes qui existent entre les deux groupements). Chez les Djuka, il est remplacé par le culte de Gwangwéla (Grantata), qui possède exactement les mêmes fonctions et les mêmes rites.

Odun ne doit pas être confondu avec le Dieu créateur Nana (Masa Gadu). Les mythes expliquant les relations de ces deux entités n'étaient pas connus de nos informateurs, mais il est clair que Odun a été envoyé aux hommes par Masa Gadu comme législateur et justicier.

Les lois de Odun ont une profonde originalité, tant par leur contenu que par les sanctions qui les accompagnent. Il n'est pas excessif de parler d'une doctrine religieuse et morale des Noirs Réfugiés.

Ces lois se présentent sous une forme négative. Un certain nombre d'actes et de comportements sont défendus à ceux qui sont entrés dans la société des Noirs Réfugiés en prêtant un serment qui les engage définitivement. Les infracteurs seront punis sans intervention directe des hommes, par l'action toute puissante de Odun, qui les tuera ou les frappera de maladies. En règle générale, le châtiment de Odun est la mort ; c'est ce qui explique la crainte qu'inspire son nom.

Odun défend :

La sorcellerie, wisi, au sens le plus général, c'est-à-dire toute action magique ayant pour but de tuer, de rendre malade et d'une façon générale de nuire à autrui.

— La vengeance ; si quelqu'un se croit victime d'un maléfice, il ne doit en aucun cas faire de contre-maléfice, ou invoquer ses ancêtres contre son ennemi. Il ne peut demander que la protection des shin. C'est Odun qui le vengera en tuant tôt ou tard, le malfaisant.

La violence sous quelque forme que ce soit. Il est regardé comme une offense particulièrement grave aux lois de Odun de frapper à main armée et de faire couler du sang humain[1]

Toute atteinte à la liberté des personnes, par une coercition matérielle ou morale ; en particulier ni homme ni femme ne peut être contraint de demeurer dans une union qui a cessé de lui plaire ; personne ne peut être contraint de résider ici ou là.

Les formes de magie si courantes parmi les Antillais, visant à capter l'amour d'une personne, sont à ce titre réprouvées par les Noirs Réfugiés et considérées comme une forme de wisi.

Toute évocation des esprits des morts, même pour leur demander protection, autrement que dans les cérémonies publiques prévues par la coutume. Ainsi personne ne doit se rendre au cimetière pour prier individuellement sur la tombe de ses parents. Quiconque ferait cela serait immédiatement considéré comme wisimd.

Le châtiment de Odun n'est pas regardé comme immédiat. Il peut être différé pendant un certain nombre d'années, pour des motifs connus de lui seul, mais il survient inévitablement.

La violence peut être pardonnée, si le coupable se repent et fait une offrande. L'offrande réparatrice (par exemple si quelqu'un a menacé son adversaire d'un sabre ou l'a frappé au point de faire couler du sang) est d'une dame-jeanne de tafia, ou d'une certaine quantité de tabac en feuilles exposée dans la chapelle de Odun.

Mais il n'y a pas de pardon pour les wisimd. Même si les hommes pardonnent, Odun reste impitoyable. Personne ne peut donc avouer être coupable de wisi, car il n'y a pas de réparation possible ; d'ailleurs nul n'oserait supplier la clémence de Odun en faveur d'un wisimd, car ce serait s'associer avec lui et s'exposer à être frappé par le dieu de la même façon.

Les wisimd seront tués par Odun, et les hommes devront s'associer au châtiment en refusant au corps l'inhumation dans le cimetière, et en allant le jeter en brousse. S'ils se refusaient à obéir à cette loi, Odun considérerait qu'ils ont renié sa doctrine et les frapperait soit dans leur personne, soit en tuant un membre quelconque du lignage coupable.

Ainsi, quand mourut en 1952 une vieille femme nommée A..., du lignage Lapé, qui s'était établie au village créole Hermina, il apparut qu'elle avait wisi; mais comme elle vivait parmi les créoles, ses proches n'osèrent pas intervenir et on l'enterra au cimetière d'Hermina. Plusieurs années se passèrent sans incident, puis des malheurs survinrent ; des décès survenus dans le lignage, notamment celui de P... (1955), et de T... (1957), et un accident survenu à un enfant en 1958, furent reconnus comme des châtiments exercés par Odun sur le lignage Lapé.

Le lieu de culte de Odun est une chapelle minuscule à proximité de la maison du grand man. Elle ne contient qu'un poteau grossièrement sculpté en forme de buste, sans aucun ornement.

Les rites du culte de Odun ne sont connus que du grand man, et d'un vieillard qui le remplace quand il est en voyage. Ils ne sont pratiqués qu'à l'occasion du serment collectif contre wisi, renouvelé tous les deux ou trois ans, et quand il faut implorer la clémence de Odun à l'égard d'un infracteur. L'officiant lave le corps de celui-ci avec une macération de feuilles qu'il est seul à connaître.

Pour interroger Odun et savoir s'il pardonne, on fait usage d'un objet sacré nommé afaloku, placé sur une planche posée sur la tête de deux hommes. Les réponses par oui et par non sont déduites de l'interprétation des mouvements des porteurs, comme pour l'interrogatoire des morts.

Le serment devant Odun est pratiqué également comme épreuve judiciaire, permettant à un homme injustement accusé de vol ou d'un méfait quelconque de se justifier.

Ainsi, en novembre 1959, B..., de Asisi, accusé par deux Djuka d'être responsable de l'incendie d'un carbet où se trouvaient entreposés des objets de valeur, demanda à se justifier devant Odun.

Les lois de Odun, qui ont pour effet d'interdire la violence, la vengeance et toute forme d'oppression, donnent à la société des Noirs Réfugiés une atmosphère particulière de dignité et de sérénité, qu'on ne trouve pas au même degré dans les sociétés animistes africaines. La plupart des sociétés africaines réprouvent la sorcellerie et le meurtre, mais elles admettent la vengeance et des formes diverses d'oppression. Il est probable que les hommes qui, voici deux ou trois siècles, au fond des forêts de Surinam, élaborèrent ces lois, se sont inspirés plus ou moins consciemment de notions chrétiennes ; mais ils les ont introduites dans un système de pensée africain, les associant à l'idée de sanctions matérielles dans la vie présente, sans laquelle elles auraient été sans pouvoir.

Les lois de Odun créent un clivage irréductible entre les Noirs Réfugiés et les créoles. Les créoles de Surinam, comme les orpailleurs antillais du Maroni, professent le christianisme, mais ils en ont une conception particulière, associant aux idées chrétiennes des croyances d'origines diverses et souvent des pratiques de magie. Si en quasi-totalité ils réprouvent la magie visant à nuire sans raison, ils admettent très généralement :

— La contre-sorcellerie inspirée par la vengeance ;

— Les « invocations » envers les esprits des morts, et diverses recettes magiques dans lesquelles on suppose capter la force vitale de ces esprits pour en faire une utilisation pratique ;

— Les charmes ayant pour but de forcer l'amour d'une personne qu'on désire.

Les créoles sont aussi attachés à ces conceptions que les Noirs Réfugiés aux lois de Odun, qui leur sont absolument contraires. Elles ont une telle importance dans la pensée des uns et des autres qu'il serait impensable de faire vivre durablement ensemble, intégrés dans la même organisation, un groupe de créoles et un groupe de Noirs Réfugiés. Les tentatives faites à cet égard, notamment à Surinam, ont toujours échoué. Quand une activité économique les attache au même travail, dans une même localité, créoles et Noirs Réfugiés forment deux groupements distincts, vivant chacun selon sa propre loi.

Si des Noirs Réfugiés quittent leur groupe durablement pour s'établir au milieu des créoles, s'ils ne reviennent pas périodiquement renouveler le serment de Odun, on admet qu'ils ont renié ses lois et qu'ils sont suspects de wisi. Il arrive que des gens ayant passé toute une partie de leur vie au milieu des créoles reviennent vivre dans leur village natal, parce qu'ils sont en proie à l'adversité ou à la maladie ; on les accueille toujours (le lignage ne peut chasser un de ses membres), mais ils ont les plus grandes chances d'être déclarés wisimd à leur mort. Ce fut notamment le cas d'une vieille femme de 90 ans, A..., morte à Asisi en janvier 1957. Ayant vécu avec des créoles dans sa jeunesse, elle était revenue vivre dans son village natal depuis au moins trente ans, et n'avait jamais donné lieu à aucune remarque défavorable. Pourtant à sa mort, il apparut qu'elle avait wisi.

Attitude envers le christianisme. Les Noirs Réfugiés, qui connaissent mieux qu'on ne pourrait le croire les conceptions des populations au milieu desquelles ils vivent, ont un net sentiment de la parenté qui existe entre leurs conceptions métaphysiques et morales et celles du christianisme. Ils pensent qu'ils adorent le même dieu que les chrétiens, d'une façon différente mais toute aussi valable. Ils n'ont aucune animosité à l'égard du clergé catholique et protestant, et la plupart d'entre eux acceptent volontiers de porter des croix ou des médailles. Mais ils n'ont pas la moindre intention d'abandonner pour autant leurs croyances. Ils ne perçoivent pas la contradiction et ne comprennent pas qu'on veuille les obliger à un choix.

Comme les orpailleurs créoles, ils attachent une grande importance au baptême, considéré comme un rite protégeant contre les dangers de la brousse. A Noël 1957, ils furent fortement impressionnés par la mort accidentelle d'un Djuka chrétien vivant à l'école de Kotika. Il refusait d'observer le deuil de sa femme selon la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés, et allait boire dans les cabarets des villages créoles. Le soir de Noël, étant ivre, il se noya. Cela fut attribué à un châtiment surhumain. Nous avons entendu à ce sujet la réflexion suivante : « Il était baptisé et il s'est noyé quand même. Cela ne vaut donc pas la peine ».

En fait, la structure matrilinéaire des Noirs Réfugiés et leur conception du mariage constituent un clivage irréductible, qui apparaît immédiatement dès qu'on quitte les conceptions métaphysiques pour passer sur le plan de la vie pratique. Les Noirs Réfugiés changent aussitôt d'attitude dès qu'on leur parle de mariage. Hommes et femmes sont unanimes à considérer le mariage comme une atteinte intolérable à la liberté individuelle, et comme un lien sans objet ; ils en parlent avec une véritable indignation, ayant même le sentiment d'une offrage contre la morale.

Les cultes de possession

Les phénomènes de possession sont extrêmement fréquents chez les Noirs d'Amérique (possession par les saints, ou inspiration par le Saint-Esprit, chez les Noirs du Brésil et des États-Unis, culte du Vaudou en Haïti). Chez les Noirs Réfugiés ils constituent la base même de la vie religieuse, au point d'être le moyen normal de communication entre les dieux et les hommes ; ils ont des incidences profondes dans l'ensemble de la vie sociale.

Les cultes de possession pratiqués par les Noirs Réfugiés de Guyane diffèrent de ceux des Noirs du Brésil et de Haïti, et ne paraissent pas se rattacher directement à ceux des cultes africains qui ont été décrits.

Nous ne donnerons ici que des indications très succinctes sur le rituel de ces cultes et nous nous efforcerons principalement de montrer leur place par rapport aux institutions des Noirs Réfugiés, et leur fonctionnement.

La possession est supposée être l'entrée dans un homme d'une entité surhumaine (divinité, esprit d'un ancêtre) qui, pendant un temps variable, généralement assez court (quelques minutes à quelques heures), se sert du corps de cet homme et s'exprime par sa bouche. On dit que l'homme est devenu le cheval -kasi- de la divinité. On dit aussi : telle divinité est entrée dans sa tête. Le possédé est dit gadu mô (gadu umô pour une femme). Ce mot a été traduit improprement par prêtre dans les premiers ouvrages traitant des Noirs Réfugiés.

Les phénomènes de possession existent chez d'autres populations des Guyanes et notamment chez les Amérindiens, mais ils ont chez les Noirs Réfugiés des formes bien définies et particulières.

— Pendant la durée de la possession, la conscience ordinaire de l'homme est totalement abolie. Revenu à lui, il ne se souvient plus de rien et il faut que les assistants lui répètent ce que la divinité a révélé. Cette perte totale de conscience pendant la possession paraît être un phénomène très constant chez les Noirs, tant en Afrique qu'en Amérique. Le Pr. de Granje fait remarquer que l'homme-médecine indien, au contraire, ne perd pas conscience pendant ses transes et qu'il est censé recevoir lui-même les révélations des esprits.

Quand un homme est possédé par une divinité, aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés il n'est plus là, ce que son corps peut faire ne lui est en rien attribué. On dit : le godu fait ceci, dit cela, danse de telle façon. Si le godu blessait quelqu'un (cela n'arrive pratiquement jamais du reste), ou cassait quelque chose, son porteur ne supporterait aucune responsabilité.

— La divinité s'exprime en une langue qui lui est propre ; nous verrons plus loin qu'il y a quatre catégories de divinités susceptibles de s'incarner dans les hommes, ce qui correspond à quatre langues secrètes dont en pratique deux seulement sont connues des Boni, tout au moins des plus âgés d'entre eux.

Le porteur de la divinité, dans son état de conscience habituel, connaît en général cette langue, qu'il a apprise d'un maître s'il s'agit d'une possession désirée et obtenue à l'aide de pratiques précises.

Mais il y a aussi de nombreux cas de possession non provoquée (dans le kunu notamment) et l'on affirme que dans ce cas, la divinité parle tout aussi bien sa langue, quoique son porteur ne l'ait jamais apprise ;

— La possession se manifeste par des sortes de transes qu'on appelle gila ou kimfo, d'une nature variable selon la divinité dont il s'agit, qui comportent parfois des phénomènes d'insensibilité et des actions impossibles à exécuter dans un état normal ;

— La première fois que la divinité pénètre dans un homme, elle lui impose un kina (un interdit) qui sera désormais la marque de son appartenance. C'est ce qu'on appelle un godu kina. Ce kina est variable d'une divinité à une autre, mais en principe une divinité donnée impose le même kina à ses divers porteurs. La divinité se nomme, et elle indique à son porteur un moyen de la rappeler en cas de besoin : faire tels gestes, répandre tel liquide ou telle poudre.

Tout cela est enregistré par les assistants qui le révèlent au possédé quand il est revenu à lui.

Il est admis que le dieu protège son porteur tant que celui-ci respecte les lois de son culte et observe son kina (dans le cas contraire le dieu peut le punir cruellement). Réciproquement il est admis que l'homme a un certain pouvoir, un certain droit sur le dieu qui le possède. On dit qu'il en est le maître, masa, mot qui est employé habituellement dans le sens « être propriétaire de ». A sa mort, il peut léguer ce dieu dans les formes et selon les lois qui régissent l'héritage des biens. Bien entendu le dieu peut ne pas entériner cette division et il est libre de se manifester en qui il veut. Mais on affirme que dans la plupart des cas il suit docilement le choix de son porteur. Nous verrons que cet héritage des dieux joue un rôle essentiel dans le fonctionnement du kunu.

Apprentissage de la possession. Quels buts poursuit l'homme qui désire avoir ainsi un godu? Avant tout il recherche la force. Réussir dans la vie, être protégé contre ses ennemis, être respecté : Tels sont les buts couramment poursuivis et ouvertement reconnus par les Noirs Réfugiés qui « ont un godu ».

On trouve souvent aussi comme but avoué l'idée d'être utile à son lignage.

Les élans mystiques désintéressés paraissent totalement absents de ces cultes.

Mais ce n'est là qu'un aspect des phénomènes de possession ; ils semblent bien être, dans une large mesure, inconscients et involontaires. Tout le monde peut essayer d'obtenir un godu, mais tout le monde ne réussit pas ; il faut avoir une certaine prédisposition. « On ne peut pas obliger un godu à entrer dans un homme », disent les Boni ; il semble bien en fait que dans près de la moitié des cas, la possession survient spontanément et parfois à la grande terreur de l'intéressé : c'est ce qu'on observe notamment dans le kunu.

Mimi, femme âgée en 1958 d'environ 46 ans, du lignage Kotika, était possédée par deux godu, un Ampuku et un Papa godu. Voici comment ses proches relatent la façon dont ils sont venus en elle.

Une dizaine d'années auparavant, Mimi donnait des signes de dérangement mental. Elle avait des absences, quittait parfois le village pour courir dans la brousse au hasard, prononçait des paroles sans suite[1]. Puis elle tomba très malade (pleurésie ?). Les anciens consultèrent alors les oracles et s'aperçurent que Mimi était victime d'un Ampuku nommé Maogan, qui depuis très longtemps poursuivait de sa vengeance (kunu) le lignage Kotika. Pour se protéger, elle chercha à se faire donner un dieu plus puissant et elle devint élève d'un obiaman spécialisé dans le culte des Papa godu. Elle eut ainsi un Papa godu nommé Ayaémé, divinité d'un caractère bienfaisant à laquelle dans les cas difficiles sa famille s'adresse pour obtenir conseils, protection et remèdes. Elle a fait construire à côté de sa maison une petite case où le dieu va se reposer quand il a fini chacun de ses voyages au pays des hommes. Ayaémé a imposé à Mimi son kina qui concerne un poisson. Mais elle n'était pas pour autant débarrassée de son kunu de l'Ampuku, et un jour, ce qu'il n'avait pas encore fait, ce dernier se révéla en elle et parla par sa bouche. Il annonça qu'il continuerait à exercer son kunu contre le lignage Kotika. On l'apaisa par des sacrifices d'étoffes rouge et de bière ; depuis, il paraît calmé et plutôt de bonne humeur. Il vient de temps en temps en Mimi et parle en langue Saramaka. On a très peur de lui mais on n'hésite pas à le questionner et à lui demander des remèdes, qu'il indique quelquefois. Il a imposé à Mimi 3 godu kina concernant l'acourhi, l'agami et le tatou.

Organisation des cultes de possession. Il n'existe pas en pays Boni de confréries religieuses à proprement parler ; il y a seulement des maîtres -bas[2]- qui ont reçu leur pouvoir d'un autre maître et qui enseignent un petit groupe de disciples -kindi-, sans distinction de villages ou de lignages, et sous leur seule responsabilité ; chacun, homme ou femme, est absolument libre de suivre son enseignement.

(1) Il faut remarquer à ce sujet l'idée très répandue chez les Nègres Réfugiés comme chez les créoles, que certaines formes de déséquilibre mental sont dues à l'action d'une entité qui cherche à se manifester dans un homme et n'y parvient pas. Pour guérir cet homme, il faut le « lever » avec les feuilles appropriées, pour que le dieu puisse venir se manifester en lui ; le reste du temps il sera normal.

(2) Il ne paraît pas indiqué de traduire ce mot par « prêtre ». Dans l'esprit des Nègres Réfugiés, il s'agit bien d'un maître enseignant des élèves ; ils emploient le même mot pour désigner un instituteur européen ou créole.

Ces maîtres ne sont pas eux-mêmes possédés, mais ils sont supposés connaître les procédés qui permettent au néophyte d'obtenir la possession avec le minimum de risques. On admet cependant que cela comporte des dangers, car on ne peut pas obliger tel gadu à venir dans quelqu'un et on peut à sa place obtenir un gadu indésirable.

Les procédés sont variables selon les catégories de gadu que l'on recherche. Mais ils comportent trois éléments que sous des formes diverses on retrouve toujours :

— On commence par apprendre à l'élève la langue de la divinité, ou tout au moins des rudiments (comme nous l'indiquerons plus loin, ces langues paraissent en décadence) ; ces leçons sont individuelles ;

— le maître prépare à l'intention d'un groupe d'élèves, des infusions de certaines feuilles qui s'accordent avec la divinité en question. Il est supposé que le dieu aime ces plantes et qu'elles ont le pouvoir de l'attirer.

Dans certains cultes il est demandé à l'élève de prononcer en même temps des formules invitant le dieu à venir en lui. Mais ce n'est pas général ; dans le culte des Papa gadu notamment, les maîtres lavent les élèves dans le plus grand silence.

Il est demandé souvent à l'élève, à la fin de la séance, de boire un peu de l'infusion. On pourrait croire qu'il s'agit là d'un procédé ayant une action physique, certaines plantes pouvant contenir des substances hypnotiques ; mais sauf pour un aspect du culte des Kumèni dont nous parlerons plus loin, il ne semble pas ; en ce qui concerne notamment les plantes supposées attirer les Papa gadu, il semble qu'elles aient reçu ce rôle en raison de leur couleur ou de leur odeur. Notre sentiment est que, tout au moins pour le culte des Papa gadu qui s'adresse plus spécialement aux femmes, la suggestion joue un rôle essentiel ;

— On apprend aux élèves, individuellement ou collectivement, à danser à la façon du dieu. En effet, chaque divinité possède une forme particulière de danse, qu'elle exécute parfois en se servant du corps de ses porteurs, quand elle vient en eux. L'élève doit imiter de son mieux les mouvements particuliers et le rythme de cette danse, tandis que le maître, utilisant le tambour convenable, frappe des formules d'appel.

Si le dieu est satisfait de l'élève, il pourra venir en lui.

Ces exercices paraissent avoir pour but de créer chez les élèves des formes de réflexes conditionnés ; ils n'ont rien de commun avec les épreuves très dures que s'impose l'homme-médecine des Indiens de Guyane, et ne comportent aucune forme d'ascétisme. Il ne semble pas que la chasteté, même temporaire, soit demandée à l'élève, pas plus que de jeûner ou de faire quoi que ce soit de contraire à ses penchants.

L'idée d'une mort spirituelle et d'une résurrection du possédé, avec tout le rituel qu'elle entraîne : longue réclusion des néophytes, changement de nom du possédé, auquel on est censé réapprendre toutes les activités de la vie courante, ne paraît pas avoir été retenue par les Noirs Réfugiés. D'une façon générale l'ambiance de gravité solennelle, de secret et de crainte qui caractérise les cultes de possession dahoméens, ne se retrouve pas chez eux.

Ces leçons sont toujours payantes et même très coûteuses. Le paiement se fait en pièces d'étoffe, en dames-jeannes de tafia.

Avoir un Kumẽnti revenait en 1958 à au moins 25.000 francs. Ce paiement n'est pas seulement la rétribution du maître ; c'est la marque de la légitimité. Ce qui n'a pas été payé n'est pas, pour les Noirs Réfugiés, légitimement acquis. Nous reviendrons plus loin sur ce point important.

La possession commence progressivement ; au début la divinité ne trouve pas dans son porteur une passivité suffisante, elle ne parvient pas bien à s'exprimer par sa bouche, les assistants n'observent que des gestes incohérents et n'entendent que des balbutiements inintelligibles. Il faut que l'élève continue longtemps son entraînement pour devenir un porteur convenable.

Le dieu, quand il vient d'entrer dans un homme, commence toujours par rendre hommage dans sa langue à Musu Gadu, proclamant qu'il n'agit qu'en son nom et par sa volonté.

Puis il salue les assistants, employant des formules qui sont dans sa langue la transposition exacte des formules de politesse usuelles des Boni ; cela même s'il se prépare à leur parler de la façon la plus dure.

Le dieu parle alors dans sa langue, disant des choses peu intelligibles aux assistants, qui paraissent avoir rapport à ce qui se passe dans son pays, à sa famille (car on suppose que ces dieux inférieurs ont une famille). Enfin, il se met à parler dans la langue ordinaire, pour être compris des assistants, et répond aux questions.

Les diverses catégories de dieux susceptibles de provoquer la possession. Les Noirs Réfugiés admettent qu'il existe quatre catégories de divinités inférieures :

La première catégorie comporte une série de dieux qui se présentent aux hommes sous des aspects fort différents, mais qui sont pourtant ressentis comme de même nature. Tous parlent la langue Kumenti, tous sont bien disposés envers les hommes et n'exercent pas contre eux le kunu, c'est-à-dire la malédiction ;

— Les Kumẽnti, qui ont l'apparence de jaguars et qui résident en brousse ;

— Les Djadja, qui ont l'apparence d'ocelots ;

— Les Opele, qui ont l'apparence de l'urubu et qui résident dans les airs ;

— Les Bãnsuŋki, qui ont l'apparence de femmes indiennes, et qui résident dans les eaux des rivières ;

La seconde catégorie est celle des Ampuku, dieux de brousse très redoutés, susceptibles d'exercer contre les hommes le kunu. Les Ampuku parlent une langue qui est très bien connue des Saramaka, mais que personne ne parle en pays Boni. Quand ils veulent être compris, ils parlent le dialecte Saramaka ordinaire. Ils peuvent, dit-on, être aperçus la nuit en brousse sous forme d'hommes inconnus vêtus à la façon des Noirs Réfugiés :

La troisième catégorie est celle des Vɔodû ou Papa gadu, dieux plus redoutés encore, qui s'incarnent dans le serpent boa dagowe. Ils parlent la langue Papa ;

Enfin, très redoutés aussi sont les Kànlamasu, dieux des termitières, qui parlent une langue que personne ne comprend et se servent de la langue Kumenti pour se faire entendre.

Il importe d'observer qu'il n'y a pas un dieu Kumènti, un dieu Ampuku, etc., comme il y avait dans le panthéon des Anciens, un dieu Mars, un dieu Vulcain. Ce sont là pour les Noirs Réfugiés des noms génériques comme Français, Anglais. Interrogés sur un phénomène de possession, ils répondront : « C'est Ampuku qui fait », mais de la même façon qu'ils diraient devant un canot : « C'est Saramaka qui fait. »

Les rapports entre ces dieux et leur forme animale sont obscurs. Pour les Vɔodû il est clair qu'on suppose qu'ils habitent réellement les serpents dagowe puisque la mort accidentelle de l'un de ces serpents dans le brûlage de l'abattis est considérée comme une calamité risquant d'amener un kunu. Mais cela ne prouve pas qu'on attribue un caractère divin au serpent lui-même. En ce qui concerne les Kumènti, il ne paraît pas y avoir de lien précis entre le génie et son apparence de jaguar. Si l'on rencontre un jaguar, on peut tout de même tirer dessus sans inconvénient. S'il est le support d'un Kumènti les plombs ne pourront pas le toucher, le dieu ne s'en fâchera pas.

Ceci montre que dans l'esprit des Noirs Réfugiés, l'animal est un simple support du dieu. Le dieu emprunte ce corps pour se manifester mais il ne lui est pas lié par nature. Ces conceptions sont totalement contraires à celles des Indiens, qui ont tendance à personnaliser dans leurs esprits les êtres et les phénomènes de la nature.

Comme nous l'avons dit, les Boni ne voient pas ces dieux puisque le possédé perd conscience. Mais au temps des ancêtres, il y avait des gens qui voyaient les dieux et c'est par eux que leurs descendants actuels ont une idée de leur apparence ; d'autre part certains dieux comme les Ampuku et les Bànsuyki peuvent être vus en rêve.

On connaît parfois la résidence exacte de tel ou tel dieu, car il l'a révélée par la bouche de son porteur ; on donne alors le nom du dieu à cet emplacement. Par exemple, à l'embouchure de l'Abounami, il y a un saut nommé Ma Akoti Gadu Sula. C'est là que réside le dieu qui s'était révélé autrefois dans une vieille femme nommée Akoti.

Rapports avec la parenté. L'idée d'un dieu protecteur du lignage, dont le culte, apporté par le fondateur du groupe, est regardé comme indispensable à la vie de la collectivité, ne se retrouve pas clairement chez les Noirs Réfugiés. Il y a bien, en fait, des divinités qui sont entrées dans le lignage et auxquelles on rend collectivement un culte. Mais ces divinités sont des intrusées ; elles ont pénétré de force dans le groupe, pour exercer contre lui une vengeance inexorable. On ne s'adresse pas à elles pour demander protection, et on ne leur rend un culte que faute de pouvoir les chasser.

Il n'est supposé aucun lien de parenté entre les dieux et les hommes, ni aucun lien de caractère systématique ou exclusif.

Toutefois on admet que les dieux entrés dans un matrilignage tendent à être transmis à l'intérieur de ce groupe. Si par exemple, une femme est possédée d'un Papa gadu, à sa mort elle doit le léguer, au même titre que ses biens, et elle ne peut le léguer qu'à quelqu'un de son lignage.

Nous avons vu en étudiant la transmission du dieu de Kotolda († 1956), que seules les femmes du lignage Afi auquel elle appartenait, pouvaient hériter.

Même si le dieu n'est pas légué, ce qui arrive quelquefois, s'il exerce le kunu, il se manifestera tôt ou tard dans un membre du lignage. Il pourra du reste se passer de longues années avant qu'il se manifeste. Cette conception est absolument nette chez les Noirs Réfugiés, et du reste, si elle n'existait pas, la notion du kunu serait sans support. C'est donc à tort qu'on a supposé une transmission des dieux du père au fils.

Organisation matérielle des cultes. Il existe dans le cadre du lignage localisé (lo) une organisation matérielle des cultes de possession. Cette organisation est tout à fait indépendante de l'apprentissage de ces cultes. Elle permet aux membres du lignage d'exercer commodément des cultes qu'ils ont reçus n'importe où sous leur propre responsabilité.

Dans chaque lo, il existe en général une seule chapelle (obia ɔsü) pour toutes les divinités de même catégorie.

Par exemple dans le quartier du lo Awara Bakka à Asisi (140 personnes), pour une quinzaine de femmes ayant un Papa gadu, il n'en existe qu'une seule. Il existe une obia ɔsu pour les Ampuku (3 ou 4 possédés) et une autre pour les Kumẽnli (une dizaine de possédés).

La chapelle des Papa gadu est placée sous la responsabilité du chef du lo. Il est à remarquer à ce sujet que les lignages individualisés Aw.B.3 et Afi, qui ont pourtant des dieux distincts, sont englobés dans cette organisation.

Les objets placés dans ces chapelles sont tout simplement les vêtements, la boisson et les outils des dieux, quand ils viennent visiter les hommes ; ils correspondent à peu près à ce que les Noirs Réfugiés laissent dans une habitation de culture où ils vont travailler régulièrement. Par exemple dans le Papa gadu ɔsu du quartier Awara Bakka d'Asisi, qui sert pour une quinzaine de dieux, chacun a une place définie sur les étagères pour ranger notamment l'écharpe qui lui sert de vêtement et une bouteille de bière (une bouteille est toujours tenue prête par le porteur du dieu)[1].

On range encore dans cette chapelle le tambour Papa dɔ̃. Ce tambour, comme la chapelle elle-même, est supposé appartenir au dieu Papa gadu qui est venu le premier dans un membre du lignage pour exercer le kunu. Dans l'exemple indiqué du lo Awara

(1) Les Papa gadu n'aiment pas le tafia. Si le porteur habituel d'un de ces dieux a bu du tafia, il ne peut venir en lui.

Bakka d'Asini, c'était en 1957 l'aïeule centenaire Kuluba qui portait ce dieu depuis sa jeunesse, l'ayant reçu elle-même par plusieurs transmissions successives, d'une lointaine aïeule.

Dans les villages comme Boniville et Papaïston où coexistent des fragments de lignage d'origine entièrement différente, chacun a sa propre organisation.

Par exemple à Boniville, il y a une Papa gadu ɔsu pour le fragment du lignage Lapé (elle appartient à Térésa dont le dieu exerce le kunu sur ce lignage). Le fragment du lignage Kotika en possède une autre.

A Papaïston, le lignage Tolna (Bakabuchi), réduit à une demi-douzaine de personnes, possède une Papa gadu ɔsu qui lui est propre.

Les Kumènti. Ces dieux sont communs aux Saramaka (Kromenti)[1], aux Djuka et aux Boni. Les Kumènti sont considérés comme des dieux bienveillants et amis des hommes ; aussi leur possession est très désirée. Ils ne viennent pas spontanément dans les hommes, on ne les obtient qu'en s'adressant à un maître. En principe seuls les hommes peuvent obtenir les Kumènti, alors que par contre seules les femmes peuvent avoir les Bùnzunki.

Les Kumènti sont spécialisés dans la protection contre le feu et contre les blessures par le sabre et le fusil. Ces dangers tiennent la plus grande place dans les préoccupations des Noirs Réfugiés, qui passent presque toute leur vie en brousse et chez qui presque toutes les plaies s'infectent et ont des conséquences graves. Aussi le culte des Kumènti tient-il une grande place dans leur magie ; même quelqu'un qui n'est pas possédé cherchera à obtenir de ces dieux un ɔbia qui le protégera contre ces divers dangers.

L'instruction des disciples de ces dieux s'inspire des procédés ci-dessus décrits, mais les danses collectives paraissent y jouer un rôle essentiel. Le maître appelle les dieux en battant un rythme spécial sur les tambours ordinaires (apinli) et en prononçant des invocations ponctuées par le cliquetis de la salu (maraka indienne, c'est-à-dire calebasse creuse emmanchée et contenant des graines). Parfois, quand un dieu est entré dans un élève, le maître met à l'épreuve la passivité de ce dernier en injuriant le dieu à l'aide du tambour. Le Kumènti se fâche, casse des bouteilles et avale du verre pilé, marche dans le feu, se frappe à coups de sabre, le tout sans qu'il en résulte, dit-on, de blessure pour le corps de son porteur.

Ces danses frénétiques, dont les participants entièrement passés au panba (argile blanche) sont comme hallucinés, ont un aspect bizarre qui est perceptible à certains Boni eux-mêmes. Elles n'ont aucun caractère secret et constituent au contraire pour les gens du village un spectacle de choix. Les assistants se tordent de rire devant les contorsions et les actions étranges que les dieux inspirent aux possédés. On en parle longuement ensuite dans les veillées, les humoristes imitant ce qu'ils ont vu faire là, sans aucune crainte d'irriter les dieux.

Chaque « maître pour Kumbili » possède une petite gulu ou dans laquelle sont rangés les instruments du culte. On trouve en général dans ces chapelles un poteau grossièrement taillé en forme de buste humain, un quartier de roche, des crânes de jaguars, des kokoli (tiges d'arbuste présentant une double coudure spontanée, supposées être le support d'esprits de la brousse), et une saku (maraka), le tout aspergé d'argile blanche (pemba). On trouve aussi à côté de la porte un siège et une auge qui servent aux ablutions des élèves.

En lavant son corps avec l'infusion de feuilles préparée par le maître, le néophyte répète, dans la langue ordinaire, une série d'invocations : « Viens à moi, entre en moi. Mais avant d'entrer en moi, il faut m'apprendre les choses de ton pays ; ô Dieu, quand tu seras en moi, que je puisse danser sur du verre cassé sans qu'il me coupe ; que je puisse danser dans le feu sans qu'il me brûle. Si demain quelqu'un prend un sabre pour me blesser, il ne devra pas pouvoir avancer. Si quelqu'un prend un fusil pour tirer sur moi (son arme) devra se briser, ne devra pas pouvoir partir. Si quelqu'un est malade, fais un obia pour lui, il devra guérir. »

Le maître fait tourner l'élève en rond autour du mortier où on a préparé l'infusion de feuilles, jusqu'à ce que la tête lui tourne. Alternativement il le fait tourner et « lave » son corps avec l'infusion. La possession se produit d'elle-même au bout d'un certain nombre de séances.

Dans les pratiques destinées à faire « monter » la gilu de Kumbili, il entre l'absorption de substances toxiques, notamment du jus de tabac, méthode employée par les hommes-médecine indiens. Mais une fois les réflexes créés, il n'y a plus besoin de ces substances ; la gilu apparaît dès qu'on emploie les procédés d'appel qui sont de deux sortes :

— Procédés personnels : l'homme appelle volontairement sa gilu en revêtant le costume du dieu et en se mettant dans une certaine posture ;

— Procédés extérieurs : la gilu peut être déclenchée de l'extérieur soit en appelant le dieu par son nom, soit en battant le rythme correspondant sur le tambour.

Quand l'élève commence à ressentir la gilu de Kumbili, cela se manifeste d'abord par des transes. Nous avons assisté bien souvent à ces accès qui surviennent le plus souvent la nuit dans la forêt, mais communément aussi le jour. Le possédé lâche subitement les objets qu'il tenait (par exemple s'il était en train de manger, il laisse tomber assiette et cuiller), et se précipite en courant à travers la forêt, en poussant un hurlement rythmé, comme s'il était devenu une bête. Ses yeux sont révulsés, il n'a plus conscience de ce qui l'entoure ; il n'est d'ailleurs aucunement menaçant, ces accès sont totalement inoffensifs en dépit de leur aspect impressionnant. On voit dans cet état, des possédés faire des choses difficilement explicables, telles que courir dans une obscurité complète dans la brousse la plus impénétrable sans tomber et sans se blesser, ou monter en quelques secondes sur un rocher escarpé, qui aurait été difficile à escalader en plein jour.

A mesure que l'élève se perfectionne, le dieu s'exprime plus facilement à l'aide de son corps, commence à faire des actes coordonnés et à parler. On dit que la gila a été « arrangée » (seeka). Les Kumènli parlent avec une grosse voix hachée, caractéristique, que les humoristes aiment à imiter dans les récits des veillées.

Pour appeler volontairement sa gila, l'élève s'accroupit, les pieds réunis, en jetant du pambe de droite à gauche à la hauteur de ses pieds et en prononçant la formule : « O Kumènli, djumpo ku a mi. » Il reste ensuite immobile dans cette position et attend ; la possession se produit en général au bout de quelques minutes.

Les Kumènli qui entrent ainsi dans les hommes sont exclusivement des dieux mâles ; on sait qu'ils ont des femmes parce qu'ils en parlent, mais elles ne se manifestent jamais.

Les Kumènli sont généralement bienveillants ; toutefois, pas plus qu'aucune divinité des Noirs Réfugiés, ils ne représentent un principe de bonté et de justice en soi. Ils veillent de façon partiale sur les intérêts de leurs porteurs. C'est ainsi que A..., du lo Dipelu II, a un Kumènli qui réagit de façon violente quand il a l'impression qu'un danger menace son porteur. Il entre en lui tout à coup, prend un sabre et se précipite en trombe à travers le village, tandis que les gens se barricadent prudemment chez eux.

Dans certaines circonstances, quand leurs transes sont particulièrement intenses, les possédés de Kumènli sont capables, dit-on, de marcher dans le feu, de danser sur du verre cassé, de monter aux palmiers épineux awara, et même de se faire frapper à coups de sabre sans qu'il en résulte de blessure. Le Pr. de Goeje donne à ce sujet des témoignages personnels impressionnants, tel le cas d'un possédé qui se renversa un seau d'eau bouillante sur le corps[1]. M. Mathieu, Directeur de la Société Forestière de Saint-Laurent, nous a dit avoir vu en 1937 chez les Paramaka un possédé prendre à pleines mains un fer de hache chauffé au rouge et le garder entre ses deux mains pendant un temps appréciable.

Personnellement nous avons vu à plusieurs reprises des possédés se fustiger avec des branches épineuses d'awara et se casser des bouteilles sur la tête avec une telle violence que les morceaux jaillissaient à plusieurs mètres ; une partie d'entre eux étaient blessés, mais d'autres présentaient un épiderme intact.

Il n'y a pas d'instruction spéciale pour les exercices d'invulnérabilité, le possédé fait ce dont il se sent capable, progressivement se frappe de plus en plus fort, casse des bouteilles, etc.

On affirme que certains possédés sont capables de monter aux palmiers épineux awara. Si la gila vient alors à les abandonner, ils ne peuvent plus descendre. Ceux qui connaissent bien la langue Kumenli évoquent alors le dieu par des formules pour qu'il revienne.

En principe, si quelqu'un fait tort à un homme qui a un Kumènli, sa gila « monte » immédiatement. Le coupable n'a plus qu'à s'enfuir. On dit qu'autrefois on a vu des possédés tuer des gens qui leur avaient fait du tort. Il ne peut en résulter de kunu si la victime est dans son tort. Depuis très longtemps on n'a rien vu de semblable.

[1] Cf. note dans l'ouvrage de M. W. F. van Lier, § 37.

Le principe est que si on n'a rien à se reprocher vis-à-vis du possédé, on n'a rien à craindre de lui. C'est pourquoi on n'hésite pas à s'interposer entre le possédé et l'objet de sa fureur.

Si deux hommes ayant un Kumènli se prennent de querelle, leurs gila « montent » simultanément et ils se frappent à coups de sabre, sans qu'il en résulte dit-on de dommage pour l'un ni pour l'autre, jusqu'à ce qu'on les sépare.

Si quelqu'un a un Kumènli, il ne faut pas lever à proximité de lui certains objets dont il est fait usage dans le culte : pilon, mortier, sabre. Sa gila « monterait » immédiatement. De même pendant qu'il mange, il ne faut pas parler de tigre ni de fusil. Pour empêcher leur gila de monter, les intéressés peuvent prendre la précaution, pendant qu'ils mangent, de se mettre un petit morceau de bois derrière l'oreille.

Ces dernières années le culte des Kumènli était en nette décadence chez les Boni, de même que l'ensemble de leur vie religieuse ; chacun ne songeait plus en effet qu'à gagner de l'argent, et était pour ce faire toujours en voyage, ce qui rendait difficiles les réunions et les danses indispensables. D'autre part, efficacement soignés quand ils sont malades à l'hôpital de Maripasoula, les Boni ressentent moins la nécessité du culte des Kumènli, dont la principale fonction sociale est de guérir. Aussi, alors qu'en 1948, nous assistions très fréquemment à des manifestations de la gila de Kumènli, en 1952, elles se faisaient beaucoup plus rares et discrètes. Elles avaient tendance à tomber au niveau de ces manifestations larvées dont nous parlerons plus loin. En 1956, nous n'avons observé au cours des travaux en forêt aucun accès spontané de cette gila. Les chapelles dédiées aux Kumènli sont à peine entretenues et tombent en ruines ; tel est le sort des dieux jugés bienveillants envers les hommes. Cependant on continue à attacher une grande valeur aux ɔbia de Kumènli, notamment au man nɛ̃yge ɔbia qui protège contre le sabre et le fusil, et au Kumènli bui, anneau de Kumènli, instrument de divination.

Les Bũnsuɣki. Les Bũnsuɣki sont des dieux qui habitent dans les eaux, de préférence en tête des sauts, à côté des roches portant des boqueteaux d'arbres isolés ; ils peuvent aussi résider habituellement dans ces arbres eux-mêmes. Ils apparaissent parfois en rêve aux hommes comme aux femmes, sous l'aspect d'Indiens, plus communément de femmes indiennes à la longue chevelure. C'est pourquoi on les appelle parfois wala Iyɣi, les Indiens de l'eau. En certains endroits, on sait depuis le temps des ancêtres que là réside tel Bũnsuɣki dont on connaît le nom ; quand on passe là, on lui adresse une prière en faisant un sacrifice de tafia.

Les Bànsuɣki peuvent entrer dans les êtres humains, exclusivement semble-t-il dans les femmes. Ils donnent une gila différente de celles des Kumènli. La possédée danse au bord de l'eau, puis nage et plonge longuement. On affirme que si sa possession est suffisamment intense, le génie entraîne la possédée au fond de l'eau, où elle reste pendant un temps très long sans aucun dommage ! Cela se serait passé notamment au village d'Asisi pour une femme nommée Dabisa.

La possession par les Bànsuɣki n'est pas fréquente. En 1952 on ne la connaissait en pays Boni que chez trois femmes.

Quant aux hommes, ils peuvent apercevoir ces divinités en rêve et en recevoir des bienfaits. Pour cela ils vont à l'endroit où elle réside et s'y baignent en prononçant une invocation : « ô dieu, veillez sur moi, protégez-moi, venez auprès de moi la nuit quand je dormirai, parlez-moi, faites que je ne sois pas malade, que je m'enrichisse. » La nuit suivante, la divinité viendra en rêve, demandera un sacrifice (bière en général), dira si elle exauce la prière.

Les Vɔɔdù[1]. Ce sont des dieux très redoutés pour leur caractère méchant, susceptible et vindicatif. En parlant d'eux on dit Papa gadu (papa ne veut pas dire « père », c'est un terme de respect que l'on emploie à l'égard de personnages importants[2]. Ils sont supposés avoir pour porteurs habituels les serpents bôa (dagowe)[3] qu'il ne faut pas confondre avec les grands serpents d'eau (anaconda) que les Noirs Réfugiés appellent mboma sineki. Ils peuvent aussi résider dans les fromagers (kankan tree) et dans les arbres appelés kalu udu (Bombax surinamiensis).

Les Vɔɔdù qui s'incarnent dans les humains peuvent être de l'un ou l'autre sexe ; s'il s'agit d'un dieu mâle on l'appelle « lala vɔɔdù ».

Les Bumba gadu, autres dieux de même nature et également redoutés, ont pour porteurs d'autres catégories de serpents, principalement les grands serpents d'eau anaconda.

Les Vɔɔdù, avons-nous dit, sont redoutés ; ils peuvent exercer sur un lignage la malédiction collective appelée kunu. Mais, pas plus que les Kumènli ne représentent un principe de bien, ils ne représentent un principe de mal. Tous ne sont pas aussi mal disposés à l'égard des hommes, et même si l'un d'eux est ennemi d'un lignage, il n'est pas pour cela mal disposé envers le reste des hommes. Quoi qu'il en soit, le culte de possession des Papa gadu n'est nullement en décadence chez les Boni. D'après les recoupements que nous avons pu faire, sur les 670 personnes vivant sur la rive française, il y en a au moins 40 à 50 qui ont un Papa gadu, en très grande majorité de vieilles femmes.

(1) Ce mot est manifestement une déformation du mot dahoméen vodù.

(3) Ce mot paraît être la déformation du mot dahoméen dàgbè.

Les Vodû sont très redoutés, par cela même très respectés. Ce sont des oracles qu'on consulte très souvent, sans considération du mal que leur kunu a fait et fera encore. Un dieu qui exerce le kunu, mais qui s'est provisoirement déclaré apaisé, peut être consulté sans danger ; il est toujours admis qu'en tout état de cause son porteur, s'il respecte ses commandements, n'a rien à craindre de lui.

Il est possible que, très inconsciemment, les femmes se servent de la crainte qu'inspirent les dieux Papa gadu pour maintenir leur indépendance et leur position privilégiée dans la société des Noirs Réfugiés.

L'enseignement de la possession paraît s'inspirer des mêmes principes que celui qui correspond aux Kumènti. Il comporte l'enseignement de la langue Papa ; cette langue nous a paru en décadence ; elle n'est employée en fait que pour les formules de salutation ; ensuite les possédés vaticinent dans la langue ordinaire. L'enseignement de la possession comporte aussi des ablutions quotidiennes avec des décoctions de feuilles ; certains de ces mélanges sont particulièrement complexes (ils comportent dit-on plus de cent espèces différentes de feuilles). L'enseignement est essentiellement individuel ; cependant il comporte aussi des danses ; on se sert à cette occasion d'un tambour spécial long d'environ deux mètres et très étroit, dépourvu de tout ornement, qu'on appelle lãygu dɔ3 ou papa dɔ3.

Pour appeler sa gila, la possédée (il s'agit presque toujours de femmes) se met debout, met sur elle une étoffe qu'elle conserve toujours à proximité et qu'elle emporte toujours avec elle en voyage : c'est le vêtement du dieu ; il consiste en une sorte d'écharpe croisée par devant ; puis elle jette l'argile blanche, pemba, sur ses pieds de droite à gauche et de gauche à droite en invoquant le dieu. La possession est presque immédiate. On voit les yeux de la femme se révulser et son expression devenir hagarde. Le dieu ne se pâsse pas entièrement au pemba comme les Kumènti, il se fait avec l'argile blanche une sorte de bandeau sur le front. Il commence par une invocation à Masa Gadu prononcée dans la langue ordinaire.

« Masa gadu, gi mi pimisi, beka mi na pikin nɛ̃ygɛ ; ala sani di mi ɔ laki, na gu mu gi mi kaakili, beka na yu abi mi kaakili, da mi pyãfahu gi yu ».

« Masa Gadu, je vous implore, car je suis une humble créature ; (dans) tout ce que je vais dire, c'est vous qui me donnerez la force, car ma force est en vous ; je vous exalterai ».

Viennent ensuite des formules de bienvenue à l'égard des assistants, qui sont la traduction exacte des formules de salutation de la vie courante, puis des chants, le tout dans la langue Papa. Après un quart d'heure environ, il entre dans une case et s'assoit, répondant dans la langue ordinaire aux questions des assistants, toujours sur un ton chantant.

La possession par les Papa gadu n'a pas le caractère bestial de la possession par les Kumènti ; elle ne comporte, en dehors des danses, ni gestes brutaux ni actes bizarres ; la possédée chantonne doucement, d'une voix grêle, se déplaçant avec des gestes gracieux.

Parfois elle trace sur les cases des signes particuliers ; les Boni affirment que c'est là une sorte d'écriture, que d'autres possédés peuvent lire ces messages ; mais nous n'avons relevé aucun témoignage précis à ce sujet[1].

Les Papa gadu sont consultés surtout pour leur demander de révéler la cause des malheurs qui surviennent. On ne demande à l'un d'eux de guérir une maladie que si l'interrogatoire révèle que c'est lui qui l'a provoquée.

Le culte des dieux serpents Papa gadu fait une vive impression sur les créoles antillais qui entretiennent des relations suivies avec les Noirs Réfugiés. La plupart le considèrent comme de nature diabolique et le réprouvent, mais si la présence d'une « couleuvre » (serpent anaconda) est signalée dans une crique voisine, et si en même temps des malheurs surviennent, il arrive qu'un créole aille demander aux Noirs Réfugiés de pratiquer des rites pour désarmer la vengeance du dieu. Il nous est arrivé d'apercevoir, dissimulé dans un bosquereau derrière l'habitation d'un orpailleur, un petit autel orné de banderolles bleues et rouges, lieu du culte habituel des Papa gadu.

Observation à Bonville, novembre 1962.

Une femme de Asèsi, Tini, vient à Boniville consulter sa fille adoptive Pamasa, âgée de 30 ans environ, qui est possédée par un Papa gadu nommé Adawa. Féni, âgé de 15 ans, fils de Tini, est malade depuis plusieurs jours (fièvre, éruption sur tout le corps). Quand on vient nous chercher, le dieu est déjà entré en Pamasa, s'est assis dans une case et répond dans la langue ordinaire aux questions posées. La mère du malade demande au dieu si c'est bien lui qui a rendu son fils malade. Il répond que c'est bien lui, et donne deux raisons : d'abord, une semaine auparavant, Féni a endommagé d'un coup de sabre la racine d'un fromager dans lequel précisément lui-même résidait ; d'autre part sa sœur Pamasa a été malade pendant 15 jours, il n'a pas été la visiter.

La mère supplie le dieu : « Ulegi gu, gu abi lefi, gi dy pondi, a 'ã be sabi bã-bã. (Nous vous supplions, vous êtes juste (mais) pardonnez-lui, il ne s'était pas bien rendu compte) ».

Le dieu indique ensuite un traitement : une infusion d'un certain nombre de feuilles, avec lesquelles le malade lavera son corps. Il affirme que le malade guérira vite.

Pamasa revient alors à son état habituel. La scène a duré au total trois quarts d'heure environ.

Observation à Asèsi, octobre 1966.

Le 21 octobre à 8 heures on me dit que Bugi, femme d'environ 45 ans, est gravement malade : elle souffre de douleurs violentes dans la poitrine et d'un tremblement général. La malade est étendue par terre, soutenue par son frère et entourée de vieilles femmes qui la réconfortent. Elle paraît souffrir atrocement, son corps est couvert de sueur, ses membres inférieurs sont agités d'un tremblement incessant ; elle présente les symptômes d'une crise cardiaque[2]. Devant la maison, les zhèmun préparent un « remède »

(1) Ces signes sont très peu systématisés et n'ont aucun rapport avec les dessins symboliques qui font partie de certaines séries de pensées, en Dahomey et en Haïti notamment. Il est permis d'y voir un simple témoignage.

(2) Bugi avait déjà été hospitalisée à Saint-Laurent pour crise cardiaque.

car ils soupçonnent qu'il s'agit là d'une manifestation du Papa gadu dont Bugi est le porteur.

Une tige de sãygoafu coudée deux fois est disposée par terre. Une croix est tracée sur le sol.

Centrée sur la croix est placée une grande cuvette dans laquelle on verse des infusions de feuilles tirées de plusieurs calebasses.

La malade, toujours prostrée et gémissante, est assise sur un tabouret face à la cuvette. On lui verse lentement le contenu de la cuvette sur le corps en la massant. Il ne s'agit pas d'un remède au sens propre du terme, on « lave » la malade pour aider le dieu à se manifester en elle.

Je remarque qu'en rentrant dans la case elle ne tremble presque plus ; la crise paraît s'apaiser.

Sur ces entrefaites on vient m'appeler ailleurs et je ne peux revenir qu'une demi-heure plus tard. Je trouve la malade debout, enduite de pemba, au milieu d'un auditoire recueilli. Le dieu est descendu en elle et s'exprime en langue Papa tandis qu'elle danse avec des gestes lents.

On me dit qu'il vient de donner l'explication de la maladie : il a frappé Bugi parce qu'elle n'a pas observé le kina donné à tous les porteurs de Papa gadu, de s'écarter des cérémonies funèbres. Or, l'avant-veille, elle avait sciemment participé à la danse lukêe autour du cercueil de Kotoïda.

Les obiaman présents supplient le dieu de pardonner, ce qu'il fait après avoir réclamé une bouteille de bière qu'il boit par la bouche de son porteur.

Observation à Kormotibo, le 18 décembre 1957.

Le 18 décembre au soir, je trouve le village de Kormotibo en proie à la terreur. Plusieurs personnes sont malades par l'effet du kunu. Apaita, une jeune femme, a un panaris énorme, consécutif à un accident ; deux femmes sont atteintes de pneumonie.

Ces malheurs sont attribués au kunu exercé par un dieu Papa gadu, depuis que voici une centaine d'années une aïeule nommée Akonté a involontairement tué un serpent dagaue en nivrant une crique. De nos jours ce dieu se manifeste en Alama (Dip. II, E1), et un autre Papa gadu, qui se dit le descendant du premier, se manifeste dans Apaita (F9). C'est ce dernier qui, parlant par la bouche d'Apaita, a révélé qu'il frappait le village parce qu'on n'avait pas dansé pour lui depuis 5 ans.

On a appelé B..., obiaman spécialisé dans le culte des asadu. Il a entouré la chapelle des Papa gadu de tiges de sãygoafu placées verticalement. Il a préparé une infusion de feuilles dont les femmes de Kormotibo qui ont un Papa gadu viennent s'enduire (elles sont au nombre de quatre, dont deux étrangères au lignage Dipélu II). Il s'agit d'aider leurs dieux à se manifester.

On va danser huit nuits de suite, une partie de la nuit. Le tambour agida tiré de la chapelle est mis en batterie.

Les rites effectués pour neutraliser le kunu sont :

— Nettoyage de la chapelle ;

— Ornement au moyen de tiges de sangaafu placées debout tout autour ;

— Lavage des malades avec des feuilles supposées avoir le pouvoir de faire partir l'influence des Papa gadu ; — Avec d'autres feuilles, concentrer au contraire l'influence maléfique des Papa gadu dans une calebasse qui est ensuite soigneusement renfermée dans la chapelle.

La possession par les Ampuku. Elle est beaucoup plus rare et personnellement nous ne l'avons observée qu'à deux reprises ; les possédés se font autour des yeux des cercles au pemba et se tracent sur les jambes avec cette argile blanche des sortes d'ovales ; ils vaticinent sur un ton chantant, sans que la voix habituelle de leur porteur cesse d'être reconnaissable, en s'exprimant dans la langue Saramaka.

Les Ampuku ont l'apparence d'hommes semblables à des Noirs, mais inconnus. Ils résident au fond des bois ; les uns sont bons, d'autres mauvais. On peut se les concilier en leur rendant un culte, qui s'est surtout développé en pays Saramaka.

Baliki, du village Kormotibo, raconte avoir assisté un jour, étant en voyage au village Saramaka de Balen, à une danse des Ampuku.

« Pendant la journée, on alla sur les sentiers au loin dans la brousse déposer des calebasses contenant certaines herbes. A la nuit on vit sortir de la forêt un grand nombre d'hommes inconnus, habillés à la façon des Saramaka. Ils dansèrent toute la nuit, et à l'aube repartirent comme ils étaient venus. »

Les dieux Ampuku, considérés comme les dieux malfaisants de la brousse, exercent leur influence sur tous. Quand on a dormi en brousse, on se « lave » d'Ampuku avec une infusion de feuilles de 5 plantes faisant partie de la flore secondaire qui entoure les villages, et dont la principale est le sangaafu (Costus cylindricus).

Fréquence de la possession. En 1956, les maîtres ou bas étaient très peu nombreux en pays Boni. Pour les dieux Kumènli il ne restait plus que S... (Kotika) ; pour les Papa gadu, depuis la mort d'Antinon (Dju), il ne restait plus que M... (Papaston) et H... (Asisi). On allait communément recevoir l'instruction de maîtres Djuka des villages du Tapanaoni.

Ce serait une grande erreur de croire que presque tous les hommes ont des dieux. C'est au contraire une exception. D'après les évaluations que nous avons pu faire, il n'y a pas plus d'un homme adulte sur six ou sept qui soit possédé. Par contre la possession est beaucoup plus fréquente chez les femmes : on peut estimer qu'en moyenne une femme adulte sur trois ou quatre a un gadu.

Par exemple à Bonville, sur 115 personnes dont environ 70 adultes, on compte une trentaine de dieux dont 8 à 10 Papa gadu, 8 à 10 Kumènli, 1 Bunsunki et 2 Ampuku.

L'apprentissage de la possession peut commencer dès l'âge adulte, mais il semble qu'en général c'est entre 35 et 50 ans que les femmes se préoccupent d'obtenir un godu. N'y aurait-il pas là, très inconsciemment, le désir de maintenir sur soi l'attention et de conserver indirectement un pouvoir sur les hommes, une fois passé l'âge de l'attrait sensuel ?

La possession se maintient toute la vie et il n'est nullement question qu'un dieu soit transmis avant la mort de son porteur. Par exemple, en 1957, l'aïeule centenaire du village d'Asisi, Kuluba, conservait son dieu Papa godu. Depuis de longues années, elle ne participait plus aux danses de possession, mais sa gila était toujours consultée.

Mais il peut arriver, si un possédé cesse de participer aux danses et de pratiquer les rites qui lui ont été indiqués, que toute manifestation cesse au bout de quelques années.

Nous avons observé cela chez B... du lo Dipélu II, en 1948 et 49. Il présentait de forts accès de la gila de Kumènli. Il cessa son instruction, trouvant qu'elle lui coûtait trop cher et prenait du temps. En 1952 il ne présentait que des manifestations larvées de sa gila à de rares intervalles. En 1956 rien n'était plus observable.

Il peut arriver au contraire que les crises de possession deviennent si fréquentes et si fortes que l'intéressé risque de perdre la raison ; s'il s'agit d'un dieu qui n'est pas venu de sa propre initiative, on peut s'efforcer de l'expulser. Pour « laver » quelqu'un d'une gila, on le fait passer entre deux rangées d'obiaman qui tiennent à la main des palmes sèches, pina Bygo, en prononçant des adjurations. Nous avons vu effectuer ce rite en 1949, mais sans pouvoir en observer le détail exact.

La fréquence des phénomènes de possession et l'importance qui leur est accordée, impriment à la vie religieuse des Noirs Réfugiés un caractère remarquable : toutes ses manifestations ont pour chacun le caractère d'une évidence matérielle. Comment douter alors que l'on vit avec les dieux, qu'on les voit et qu'on leur parle ? La société des Noirs Réfugiés est de ce fait profondément imperméable aux influences européennes.

Quelques plantes utilisées dans les rites de possession. Les préparations à l'aide desquelles les possédés « lavent » leur corps consistent en des macérations de feuilles. Les végétaux utilisés, qui font partie pour la plupart de la flore secondaire qui se développe dans les anciens abattis, sont très nombreux. Toutefois quelques-uns sont regardés comme ayant un pouvoir tout particulier. Les cinq premières notamment sont utilisées par tous les Boni pour se « laver d'Ampuku » quand ils ont dormi une nuit en brousse.

CROYANCES CONCERNANT LA PERSONNE HUMAINE ET SON DEVENIR
CULTE DES ANCÊTRES.

Les Noirs Réfugiés des diverses tribus ont sur ce sujet des conceptions précises et identiques, que l'on retrouve aussi, plus ou moins mélangées avec des conceptions chrétiennes, chez les populations antillaises d'origine africaine. Pour eux, l'homme est formé de trois éléments : le corps, le gorku qui peut être traduit par personnalité, et un principe supérieur appelé akka.

Il va sans dire que chez les Boni, qui n'ont pas élaboré ces conceptions et les ont reçues des Djuka, personne n'est capable d'en disserter. Mais de nombreuses conceptions relatives à la magie et aux rapports avec les ancêtres permettent des recoupements assez sûrs.

L'akka. Il n'est pas possible de traduire akka[1] par âme, au sens où nous l'entendons. L'akka est un élément divin immortel attaché à une personne humaine pendant la durée de sa vie et qui, à la mort, retourne au domaine du divin, ne gardant plus aucun contact avec les hommes.

L'akka est la source de vie à laquelle s'alimente la personnalité humaine, mais elle n'est pas cette personnalité.

Les Noirs Réfugiés considèrent l'akka comme un dieu protecteur personnel ; ils disent volontiers mi gudu, mon dieu, pour mi akka.

Le concept de l'akka s'est spontanément transposé chez les Antillais en celui de l'ange gardien. On parle en Haïti du « gros bon ange ».

Pour les Noirs Réfugiés, la vie, la santé et le destin d'un homme dépendent avant tout de l'akka ; on pense que si l'akka s'en allait, le corps et l'esprit de l'homme ne pourraient rester reliés ; il mourrait ou perdrait conscience. C'est un peu ce qui se passe chaque nuit, car on croit que l'akka quitte le corps pour errer, ce qui provoque la perte de conscience. Aussi le winimd, le sorcier, cherche-t-il à en profiter pour capturer l'akku, de façon que l'homme devienne fou.

(1) Ce mot paraît être une déformation du tête (Agni-Baoulé), mot auquel s'attache une signification très comparable.

L'akku est supposé avoir des goûts, des désirs et des buts étrangers à ceux de la personnalité, et dont l'homme dans sa conscience ordinaire n'a pas connaissance. L'akku peut rendre l'homme malade s'il se comporte d'une façon qui ne lui plaît pas. Aussi quand on est malade a-t-on recours à la divination pour savoir si ce n'est pas le fait de l'akku et, dans l'affirmative, pour quel motif. On pourrait croire que l'akku se comporte comme une conscience au sens moral du terme ; qu'elle se fâche si son porteur fait quelque chose de mal. Mais en réalité l'akku se montre aussi arbitraire, méchante et vénale que les dieux inférieurs des Noirs Réfugiés. Si elle se fâche (on dit : mi akku mindi), c'est parce que son porteur porte des vêtements d'une couleur qui ne lui plaît pas, ou parce qu'elle désire une offrande. Nous n'avons par contre jamais entendu parler d'un cas où l'akku se serait fâchée contre son porteur en tant que voleur, menteur ou adultère.

La plupart des Boni ne se préoccupent pas de leur akku. Seuls s'en préoccupent ceux qui ont des raisons de la croire irritée. Le culte rendu est très variable d'un individu à l'autre par la nature et la fréquence des rites exécutés.

Par exemple, K..., du village Papaïton, en proie à une malchance persistante, alla consulter un lukumá créole de Surinam, qui lui révéla que c'était le fait de désirs insatisfaits de son akku. Son akku désirait un chien noir et un bracelet en cuivre. Il se procura l'un et l'autre et depuis, dit-il, il n'a plus la même malchance.

B..., chef du village de T..., a dans un coin de sa case un poteau grossièrement sculpté en forme de buste coiffé d'une demi-calebasse d'où émergent des tiges de sayoofu. A côté est un petit fogu liki. Il me dit que c'est le dieu du culte de son akku; ces rites lui sont strictement personnels.

La plupart des akku apprécient les perles blanches et l'étoffe rouge. Si on voit un Boni porter un manteau rouge, on peut être à peu près sûr que c'est par ordre de son akku.

Si quelqu'un a des absences, des rêves bizarres, il peut y voir la sensation que son akku désire le quitter et qu'il est en danger de ce fait. Il va alors demander à un obiaman de confectionner pour lui un akku lefey : c'est un anneau de fibres qu'on porte au gros orteil et qui est censé empêcher l'akku de s'en aller.

Ces rites sont très variables d'un individu à l'autre, mais ils ont un principe commun. Si quelqu'un commence à s'occuper de son akku, il ne peut plus, sa vie durant, en abandonner le culte, sinon l'akku se vengera.

Le culte de l'akku est strictement personnel et n'est pas légué à la mort.

Si quelqu'un épouse une jeune fille, il faut non seulement qu'il verse à sa mère le prix de la virginité, mais encore qu'il paye l'akku de la fille. Pour cela il offre des perles blanches et de l'étoffe que la nouvelle mariée portera sur elle, ainsi que des sucreries qui seront consommées par elle. Si le prix de la virginité n'était pas payé, l'akku de la femme, humiliée, risquerait de la rendre malade ou de la tuer.

Il y a 7 catégories d'akka, masculines et féminines, une pour chaque jour de la semaine.

Crevaux en 1877 a pu établir la liste complète[1] :

	hommes	femmes
dimanche	Kwasi	Kwasiba
lundi	Kɔdyo	Adyuba
mardi	Kwemi	Abeniba
mercredi	Kwaku	Akuba
jeudi	Yao	Yaba
vendredi	Kɔβi	Aβiba
samedi	Kwamina	Amba

Tous ces noms sont connus des Boni, mais aucun de nos informateurs n'était capable de réciter la liste complète. Il est bien entendu qu'un nom comme Kɔβi, Kɔdio, etc., est le nom de son akka et nullement celui de l'homme[2]. En fait, chacun sait le nom de son akka, qui lui a été révélé par ses parents alors qu'il était enfant ; à ce nom est attaché un akka kina ou interdit alimentaire relatif à l'akka. L'un et l'autre sont soigneusement tenus secrets même vis-à-vis des proches et amis, car leur connaissance pourrait aider le wisimã à s'emparer de l'akka. On emploie souvent à ce sujet le terme godu kina, comme on dit mi godu au lieu de mi akka. Ce terme prête à confusion avec l'interdit imposé au possédé par le dieu qui s'incarne en lui ; il s'agit de deux notions bien différentes.

L'akka kina est particulier à chaque homme. Il est recherché par les parents quand l'enfant est complètement sevré. On s'efforce de faire des rapprochements entre les nourritures qu'il a absorbées et les troubles de santé qu'il peut présenter, et on confirme ces présomptions par des procédés divinatoires.

L'homme ne prie pas son akka en temps ordinaire. Il ne lui adresse de prière que s'il est malade, pour lui demander protection, ou avant de partir pour un long voyage, pour lui demander de veiller sur lui. S'il revient sain et sauf, il la remercie en lui faisant une offrande, sous forme d'une bouteille de sirop (swili sapi), qu'il renverse sur sa tête.

D'après M. W. F. van Lier, les Djuka ont l'idée que l'ombre (kanka) est l'image visible de l'akka ; les Boni ne paraissent pas avoir cette conception ; on n'observe pas qu'ils attachent une importance quelconque à ce que l'ombre d'un homme passe sur eux ; par contre il ne faut pas enjamber un homme couché à terre, cela pourrait léser son akka.

Le gɔka. (Les Boni prononcent goka, les Djuka et les créoles de Surinam gɔka). On n'emploie l'expression gɔka que pour désigner l'esprit des morts. Mais bien entendu les éléments du gɔka sont présents dans l'homme vivant.

(1) Cette conception est largement répandue dans l'aire culturelle Agni-Ashanti, chez les Ewe-Fon Mina, et jusque dans l'Ouest du Dahomey. Les noms relevés chez les Mina correspondent très exactement, sous réserve de quelques différences dans la prononciation, à ceux conservés par les Boni.

(2) Bien qu'il arrive que des gens reçoivent comme nom un nom d'akka, parfois accompagné d'un qualificatif, comme Lekiwiku.

Le gorku c'est la conscience ordinaire de l'homme, ses souvenirs, ses goûts, ses aversions, tout ce qui constitue sa personnalité. Tout cela, pour les Noirs Réfugiés ne provient pas du plan divin, mais en moins en partie d'existences humaines antérieures, et après la mort ne parviendra pas sur le plan divin. Les Noirs Réfugiés paraissent croire qu'après la mort, le gorku restera inchangé, gardera les mêmes désirs, les mêmes aversions, les mêmes pensées ; simplement il n'est plus dans la vie ordinaire, il a passé sur un autre plan, intermédiaire entre le divin et l'humain, d'où il continue à rester d'une certaine façon en rapport avec les hommes. Les divers informateurs que nous avons interrogés à ce sujet, déclarent n'avoir aucun idée du sort du gorku après la mort, de sa place par rapport aux divinités, des récompenses ou des châtiments dont il peut être l'objet selon la manière dont l'homme a vécu. Ce sont des questions qu'ils ne se posent jamais ouvertement et qui ne les intéressent guère, tout leur intérêt étant centré sur la vie terrestre. L'idée d'un paradis leur est absolument étrangère ; ils admettent toutefois dans le cas des wisimi qu'ils seront privés de la force que tout être vivant reçoit du divin, et qu'ainsi détruits en tant qu'êtres, ils ne seront plus que des ombres vaines.

Les gaé gorku, les esprits des ancêtres, sont supposés veiller sur leurs descendants et sont l'objet d'un culte.

Le culte des ancêtres. Chez les Noirs Réfugiés, le culte des ancêtres est intimement lié à tous les actes de la vie familiale et sociale. On admet que les gorku des ancêtres sont toujours présents auprès de leurs descendants et qu'ils les protègent. C'est par leur intermédiaire que la force émanée du divin est reçue par les vivants.

Nous avons décrit les principales cérémonies de ce culte en parlant de la vie familiale.

On ne s'adresse qu'à ses proches ancêtres en ligne maternelle, et on s'adresse à eux tous collectivement. De même que la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés réprouve tout ce qui pourrait individualiser une ligne à l'intérieur du lignage, elle réprouve tout lien individuel entre tel mort et tel vivant. De même que les « oncles » exercent collectivement le totale sur les « neveux », les morts protègent collectivement les vivants. Ce serait une faute grave contre la loi coutumière des Noirs Réfugiés que de se rendre individuellement au frapa liki pour invoquer le gorku de tel ou tel de ses parents. Il n'y a exception, nous le verrons plus loin, que pour les ancêtres qui se sont singularisés en exerçant sur un autre lignage le kuau.

Le culte des ancêtres est organisé dans le cadre du lo, et son prêtre est le chef du lo, hedemi ou capitaine. Les fractions individualisées (bes) qui peuvent exister à l'intérieur du lo, comme Papaiston 2, n'ont pas de culte séparé des ancêtres.

Le lieu de prière est constitué par un petit carré de terre d'environ 1 mètre × 1 mètre, isolé du sol du village par des morceaux de planches ; au milieu de ce carré est planté un poteau en forme de T dont la branche horizontale sert de support à un carré d'étoffe blanche : c'est le frapa liki.

L'étoffe pourrit rapidement sous l'influence des intempéries, mais on ne l'enlève pas ; on en attache une nouvelle par-dessus l'autre quand elle est trop abîmée ; de même

Fig. 21. — Femme gouriche d'un des Papot petit.

Fig. 22. — Danse de gouriches (petits des Papot petit).

[facing p. 220]

le poteau, qui finit par pourrir, n'est pas remplacé tant qu'il n'est pas tombé à terre. Ce comportement pourrait laisser croire à de la négligence, mais il n'en est rien : pour les Noirs Réfugiés ce qui a été offert aux ancêtres se trouve soustrait à l'action des hommes ; nul ne peut plus y toucher, même pour le réparer.

A côté du fraga liki principal on aperçoit parfois des bâtons portant des fragments d'étoffe blanche ; ils ont été plantés à l'intention de ceux des ancêtres qui l'ont exigé.

Les cérémonies au fraga liki ont un caractère très simple, les prières sont dites dans la langue ordinaire et ont souvent le caractère d'une conversation familière. En l'absence du chef de lignage, c'est un vieillard qui les prononce ; pendant qu'il parle, un assistant fait l'offrande de l'eau et du tafia. Verser de l'eau sur le sol est un rite ayant pour but d'entrer en contact avec les ancêtres : on le voit effectuer dans les cérémonies mortuaires, avant de commencer l'interrogatoire du gorku. Le tafia est une offrande au sens propre du terme : lors des principales prières s'adressant aux ancêtres, l'offrande de tafia est précédée d'une offrande de jus de canne, kyêy wala. Le jus de canne était la boisson des jours de fête au temps où les ancêtres, en guerre contre les européens, étaient privés de tafia.

Les formules de prières les plus couramment employées demandent aux ancêtres d'intercéder auprès de Masa gadu en faveur de leurs descendants : « Ancêtres, veillez sur nous, protégez-nous, priez pour nous Masa gadu afin que... ».

Possession par un gorku. Il est admis que le gorku d'un ancêtre peut entrer dans un membre de son matrilignage et se révéler au cours de crises de possession. C'est un phénomène exceptionnel. En 1968, dans l'ensemble du pays Boni, on ne connaissait qu'une dizaine de personnes qui portaient ainsi le gorku d'un ancêtre. Ces crises surviennent spontanément, aucun culte n'ayant pour but de les provoquer. Nous avons assisté en décembre 1966 à une de ces crises chez une jeune femme de Papaïston, Mili, âgée d'une vingtaine d'années. Depuis la veille, le gorku d'un aïeul du lignage mort depuis deux générations, se manifestait en elle par intermittences ; ces crises duraient quelques secondes : sa voix changeait, imitant celle d'un homme ; les yeux fixes, elle paraissait n'avoir plus aucune conscience de ce qui l'entourait. Puis soudain la crise cessait et elle vaquait à ses occupations ménagères de la façon la plus naturelle. Le gorku qui était supposé s'incarner ainsi dans le corps de Mili parlait de choses très banales, répétant indéfiniment des phrases concernant de menus événements de la journée, ou demandant une petite offrande de tafia à son intention au fraga liki. Un psychiatre voit sans doute pour sa part un accès de dissociation mentale.

Les gorku ne sont pas craints par leur porteur involontaire, puisque nul ne peut exercer un kwau contre son propre lignage ; ils ne se manifestent qu'exceptionnellement, indiquant parfois des remèdes ou avertissant de dangers. C'est ainsi que A... du lo Dipélu II, qui a pour alliés un Kumèdi, a aussi un gorku qui s'est révélé en lui sans avoir jamais été appelé. D'après ses camarades, ce gorku intervient parfois d'une voix caverneuse, notamment en septembre 1962, au cours d'une partie de chasse, où il a crié : « n'allons pas par là, nous allons rencontrer un jaguar ». A... n'avait perdu conscience que pendant quelques secondes et ne s'était aperçu de rien.

Le nemseki[1]. Chaque Noir Réfugié a un nemseki, c'est-à-dire que certains éléments de sa personnalité sont supposés provenir par réincarnation d'un certain ancêtre. C'est une conception très obscure chez les Boni, et sans corrélation apparente avec leur notion de l'akka et du gorku; ils ne disent jamais : « je suis la réincarnation de un tel », mais simplement : « mon nemseki est un tel ». M. W. F. van Lier, parlant des Djuka qui ont sur les questions religieuses des conceptions beaucoup plus nettes, donne une précision importante : en 1915 le grand man Oséisi s'est incarné dans un nouveau-né de la tribu, pourtant il continue à être invoqué en tant qu'ancêtre devant le fraga liki. Il semble donc bien qu'il s'agisse de certains éléments de la personnalité qui sont supposés se réincarner, et non du gorku tout entier.

Il importe de distinguer le nemseki de la possession par un gorku. La possession par un gorku est un fait exceptionnel, qui se manifeste sous forme de transes, le gorku parlant par la bouche de son porteur; en dehors de ces possessions, ce gorku est supposé résider au séjour des ancêtres.

Un gorku ne peut se révéler ainsi que chez une personne de son matrilignage.

Le nemseki au contraire existe chez tous les hommes. L'ancêtre qui se réincarne partiellement ainsi est généralement de l'ascendance paternelle, mais ce n'est pas une règle absolue.

L'homme n'a pas conscience de son nemseki et ne le connaît que parce que ses parents le lui ont révélé. Ce nemseki ne se manifeste en rien dans la vie courante ; il n'impose aucun kina et ne demande pas d'offrandes. Toutefois, quand un jeune enfant tombe malade, la divination peut révéler que c'est le fait du nemseki qui s'indigne d'être méconnu. On se hâte alors, toujours avec le secours de la divination, de chercher le nom du nemseki, en procédant par élimination. En règle générale, on se laisse guider par des ressemblances de physionomie, des marques de naissance rappelant par exemple certaines cicatrices de l'ancêtre disparu.

On suppose que plus un homme est mort âgé, plus il mettra de temps avant de se réincarner.

Les rapports entre les dieux et les hommes

Le kunu

Le kunu. Les Noirs Réfugiés appellent kunu la malédiction collective qui pèse sur un matrilignage, depuis une faute ancienne. Le kunu est sans limite dans le temps, sans pardon, sans pitié, aveugle dans le choix de ses victimes ; en principe, il ne peut finir qu'avec l'extermination complète du lignage. Chaque fois que l'adversité s'abat sur un de ses membres, sous forme de mort, de maladie, de calamités diverses, le kunu est l'explication la plus couramment obtenue. L'instrument de cette vengeance inexpiable est soit un dieu, soit le gorku (esprit) d'un mort.

Cette notion, qui occupe une place centrale dans les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés, ne paraît pas avoir été empruntée directement. La plupart des populations du Dahomey et de la Côte d'Ivoire admettent l'idée de châtiments arbitraires exercés sur les membres du lignage par les dieux ou les ancêtres du groupe. Mais aucune population de ces régions à notre connaissance n'a élaboré une doctrine aussi fortement systématisée.

(1) Ce mot semble être une déformation de l'anglais nemesis (homonyme).

Les conceptions développées par les Noirs Réfugiés, divinités animées exclusivement par la vengeance, et surtout ancêtres châtiant inexorablement des lignages étrangers au leur, ont créé entre les individus et entre les lignages des rapports nouveaux.

Nous n'avons pu élucider l'origine du mot kunu. Peut-être est-ce une déformation du mot Mina ekunu qui signifie funérailles.

Trois catégories de divinités peuvent poursuivre les hommes de leur kunu et de ce fait les Noirs Réfugiés éprouvent à leur égard une frayeur extrême mêlée de vénération.

— Les Papa gudu (Vodû). Le kunu que l'un d'eux exerce sur un lignage provient régulièrement du fait qu'autrefois, un des ancêtres avait par mégarde tué un serpent dagwe (boa), porteur habituel du Papa gudu. Par exemple ce serpent avait péri dans le brûlage d'un abattis. Quelque temps après, le dieu avait possédé un membre du lignage et révélé qu'il exercerait désormais un kunu ;

— Les Ampuku. Le kunu d'un Ampuku commence d'une façon analogue ; jadis un ancêtre avait par exemple coupé un arbre kulu sans exécuter convenablement les rites, ou fait un abattis dans un endroit où résidait un Ampuku;

— Les Kôntomasu (qui se nomment eux-mêmes Akôlo) dieux des termitières, très redoutés, peuvent exercer un kunu si, avant de couper l'abattis, on a malgré toutes les recherches, laissé échapper une termitière qui ainsi n'a pas été l'objet du rite indispensable :

— Enfin, le kunu peut être mené par le gorlu d'un mort. Par exemple, un homme du lignage A avait jadis injustement accusé un homme du lignage B. Ce dernier par vengeance s'était suicidé. Le sens de cet acte n'est pas le même qu'en Europe. Il ne s'agit pas de faire vivre ses ennemis dans la honte et le remords, mais en sacrifiant sa vie, de partir exercer contre ses ennemis une vengeance éternelle. Quelque temps après le suicide, le gorlu se révèle dans un homme de son lignage et annonce qu'il poursuivra éternellement de son kunu les membres du lignage A.

Ainsi les fautes que punit le kunu ne sont pas des fautes morales au sens où nous l'entendons, mais des actes involontaires, sans signification intérieure. De même purifications et sacrifices demandés sont des actes purement extérieurs.

Les divers ouvrages traitant des Noirs Réfugiés mettent bien en évidence l'importance du kunu, mais il nous semble que le fonctionnement de cette institution (car en fait il s'agit bien d'une institution sociale), n'a pas été clairement compris.

Un kunu s'attache à un matrilignage au sens propre (bex). Il s'étend obligatoirement à tous les membres du matrilignage et ne peut frapper qu'eux.

Par exemple mon kunu peut frapper le fils de ma sœur, mais non ma femme ni mes enfants (ils sont soumis au kunu de leur propre lignage).

Le kunu, frappant le lignage dans son ensemble, ne peut être apaisé que par des prières réunissant (en principe du moins) la totalité du lignage. C'est en cela que le kunu peut être défini comme une institution sociale car il est, nous le verrons, le principal ciment de l'unité des groupes.

Le déclenchement d'un kunu ne suit pas nécessairement et immédiatement la destruction d'une termitière ou la mort d'un serpent dapuw. Le dieu ainsi offensé se venge en rendant malades un certain nombre de membres du lignage et en faisant arriver des malheurs limités. Quand les choses en sont là le kunu peut encore être conjuré par des prières et des offrandes. En 1957, un début de kunu se manifestait ainsi dans le lignage Awara Bakka d'Asisi ; fort effrayés, les membres du lignage faisaient offrandes et prières pour le conjurer.

Mais si les gens du lignage négligent les avertissements du dieu, si par paresse ou égoïsme un trop grand nombre d'entre eux sont absents des prières collectives et ne participent pas aux offrandes, prières et offrandes seront refusées et le dieu tuera l'un d'eux. Dès lors le kunu est déclenché et ne peut plus quitter le lignage. Son porteur involontaire devra le léguer à sa mort à un membre du lignage, qui ne peut refuser ce legs et doit commencer aussitôt son instruction pour devenir un porteur convenable. (Si on ne procédait pas ainsi, le dieu ne cesserait pas pour autant son kunu et on perdrait la possibilité d'entrer en rapport avec lui et de l'apaiser. Du reste tôt ou tard il reviendrait dans un membre du lignage).

Le kunu frappe sans considération des liens de parenté, même si la parenté est très lointaine entre le porteur du dieu et la victime supposée. Ex. : Le Papa gadu de Donasi (le Papaiston) frappa de maladie en janvier 1957 une jeune femme, Gou. Donasi et Gou sont parentes au 9e degré seulement. Les membres du lignage Papaiston se sont rassemblés au complet pour supplier le dieu : il est même venu des gens du village Wétiti dans le bas Maroni.

Le kunu exercé par le gorku d'un mort a une importance particulière aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés, car il a de profondes répercussions sur les rapports des lignages entre eux.

En principe, le gorku exerçant un kunu a pour porteur un membre vivant de son propre lignage qui à sa mort le léguera. Mais on admet aussi la possibilité que le gorku prenne pour porteur un membre du lignage sur lequel il exerce le kunu.

Dans les deux cas, le rite pour apaiser le gorku est le même ; le gorku ne peut être invoqué utilement que par des membres de son propre lignage, puisqu'on ne peut (au moins en principe) prier que ses propres ancêtres en ligne maternelle.

Quand un matrilignage A est frappé par le kunu exercé par un gorku d'un matrilignage B, ses membres vont donc consulter les anciens du matrilignage A et leur demandent de chercher à calmer la colère de leur ancêtre. Les membres du lignage A se rassemblent autour du frapa liki du lignage B, derrière les anciens de ce lignage, en présence du porteur du gorku, qui appelle sa gila, entre en transes et vaticine. Le gorku demande généralement une offrande de jus de canne et de tafia, qui est faite au pied du fraga liki par les anciens du lignage B (pour que le rite soit efficace, il faut que l'offrande ait été fournie par le lignage A).

Un gorko exerçant un kunu peut aussi demander qu'on érige à son intention, à côté du fraga liki principal de son lo, un autre fraga liki plus petit. On aperçoit souvent dans les villages des Noirs Réfugiés ces petites croix munies de voiles blancs [illegible] le fraga liki principal, plantées à côté de lui, un peu en oblique.

La notion du kunu exercé par un gorko explique la rareté du meurtre parmi les Noirs Réfugiés. Comment oser tuer quelqu'un alors qu'aussitôt libéré de son corps, son gorko aura toute latitude de vous rendre malade, de faire tomber des branches d'arbre sur votre passage, de faire souffrir et de tuer tous ceux qui vous sont chers? Si quelqu'un est aveugle par la haine, c'est l'idée de suicide qui le dominera. En octobre 1952, nous avons pu observer cette réaction chez un homme qui venait de subir une grave humiliation. « Je vais tuer mon corps pour aller tuer cet homme et toute sa famille », nous dit il, en proie à un accès de rage ; heureusement, l'accès passé, il revint à une plus juste vision des choses.

Il est à noter qu'un gorko ne peut exercer un kunu contre son propre lignage. Cette notion explique pourquoi, au temps où ils exerçaient une autorité absolue, les chefs de tribus faisaient exécuter les condamnés à mort par des hommes du même lignage. Il semble bien que des usages semblables régnaient autrefois dans plusieurs royaumes africains, ce qui laisse à penser que des notions analogues à celles du kunu peuvent y être assez largement répandues.

Situation des divers lignages par rapport au kunu. Nous touchons là à un des aspects les plus secrets de la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés. Il faut des années de séjour parmi eux pour obtenir des informations précises sur la nature et le mode d'action des kunu s'exerçant sur les divers lignages.

En quasi-totalité, les entités qui exercent actuellement leur kunu sur les Boni sont dans leurs lignages depuis une époque très ancienne, au point que le nom de leur premier porteur est oublié. Ils sont transmis inexorablement de génération en génération. Au cours des âges, les kunu se sont accumulés et maintenant certains lignages vivent avec 4, 5 ou même 6 kunu.

Kunu du lignage Dju. Le lignage Dju était en 1968 affecté de quatre kunu :

Un Ampuku qui exerce sa vengeance depuis un temps immémorial, au point qu'on ne se souvient plus de l'origine de ce kunu, dont les porteurs étaient Dabisa (G25) et Adyidya (E19), deux femmes d'environ 50 ans. Cet Ampuku avait auparavant pour porteur un aïeul nommé Agoabuchi, mort vers 1940. Deux à trois ans après sa mort, il se manifesta en Dabisa ;

— Un Papa godu nommé Adawa qui lui aussi poursuit le lignage d'une vengeance implacable depuis le temps des grands ancêtres. Il se révélait à la génération précédente dans une aïeule nommée Sapiké (D5) et longtemps après la mort de celle-ci, il est passé dans Pamasa (E26), femme de 35 ans. Ce kunu s'est aggravé depuis que ces dernières années, deux autres Papa gadu se sont révélés chez deux femmes nommées Kulina (F9) et Diana (E9). Ils ont déclaré être les descendants du premier et venir en renfort auprès de lui ;

— Un gorku dont personne n'a voulu nous dire le nom tellement on en avait peur. C'est celui d'un homme du lignage Awara Bakka, qui voici deux ou trois générations, accusé injustement d'un crime par un homme du lignage Dju, s'est suicidé. Depuis, ce gorku extermine petit à petit le lignage Dju. Son porteur en 1958 était une vieille femme du lignage Awara Bakka, nommée Namu ;

— Un Kandanasu, depuis que, voici très longtemps, une aïeule dont le nom est oublié a détruit involontairement une termitière en brûlant un abattis. Il avait pour porteur une très vieille femme nommée Wima (E3) († 1957), et il se manifestait aussi dans Ala (F2).

Ainsi, dans ce groupe, les dieux malfaisants avaient exclusivement pour porteurs des femmes ; sur 20 femmes adultes environ, 7 participaient au fonctionnement du kunu.

On voit sur cet exemple comment l'influence des femmes, s'exerçant de façon arbitraire, dans un domaine placé en dehors de la coutume et de la vie sociale régulière, pèse sur la vie du groupe.

Kunu du lignage Dipélu. La situation du lignage Dipélu à l'égard du kunu est particulièrement intéressante. Bien que fractionné depuis peut-être 100 ans en deux groupes distincts, Dipélu I (villages L'Enfant Perdu et Apatu) et Dipélu II (villages Kormotibo et Asisi-Dip. II), ce groupe constitue toujours une unité indivise à l'égard du kunu. Ni le temps, ni l'éloignement (il faut plus d'une semaine de voyage aller et retour pour se rendre de L'Enfant Perdu à Apatu) n'ont pu la briser. Les gens d'Apatu viennent très souvent (au moins quelques-uns d'entre eux) assister aux prières collectives qui ont lieu à L'Enfant Perdu pour apaiser un kunu afin de guérir un malade.

Le kunu le plus ancien (« depuis l'Afrique ») est celui d'un dieu Papa gadu dont le porteur était ○ Dika (Dip. I, D10, † 1951) et qui est passé après sa mort dans ○ Pééchina (Dip. I, E42, village L'Enfant Perdu). Ce kunu frappe indifféremment les gens de L'Enfant Perdu, d'Apatu, de Kormotibo, de Asisi-Dip. II et de la fraction des Dipélu résidant à Boniville. Ces dernières années on lui attribuait la mort de ○ Way (Dip. I, E6, habitant Boniville), la maladie de △ Akwali (Dip. II, F7, village Kormotibo) et de ○ Bongo (même village).

Un autre kunu très ancien est celui exercé par le gorku d'un créole de Surinam qui voici très longtemps s'était établi avec les gens de Dipélu. On l'a soupçonné de sorcellerie et tué. Depuis, son gorku revient régulièrement pour exterminer les Dipélu.

N'ayant pas de lignage connu (sa famille s'il en avait était à Surinam), il avait pris pour porteur des gens du lignage Dipélu. Le dernier était △ Denis † en 1938. Depuis la mort de Denis, il n'a plus de porteur. C'est l'interrogatoire des défunts qui révèle qu'ils sont morts par son kunu. Les membres des deux fractions du lignage se réunissent (il vient au moins 2 à 3 membres de chaque village) pour le supplier.

Un troisième kunu, fort intéressant dans son origine et son action supposée, était en 1957 porté par Kwau (Dip. I, E1, village Kotika). Il résulte du meurtre par Apatu † (Dip. I, C1), compagnon de l'explorateur Crevaux, d'un serpent anaconda, alors qu'il voyageait au Brésil. Au contact des européens Apatu était devenu un esprit fort et n'observait plus les lois de son peuple. Parmi les dernières victimes de ce kuau, on notait Kwama (Dip. II, F4, village Kormotibo) qui, gravement malade, avait dû se rendre à l'Enfant Perdu où on avait invoqué le dieu pour lui et fait des offrandes. On lui attribuait notamment la mort de Manga (Dip. I, E5, Boniville, † vers 1930).

Aucun autre kuau ne s'est révélé au village Apatu depuis sa fondation en 1882.

Un quatrième kuau concernant l'ensemble des Dipélu a pour porteur des femmes du groupe Dipélu II. Il résulte du meurtre involontaire d'un Papa gadu dont le porteur était un serpent dagaue, tué au cours de la noyée d'un étang par Akonté † (Dip. II, B1) transmise à Kondo † puis à Alama (Dip. II, E1).

Depuis, des Papa gadu se sont révélés dans ○ Apalla (Dip. II, F9, village Kormotibo) et dans ○ Kuala (Dip.II, G28, village Asisi-Dip.II). Ils ont déclaré être les descendants du premier et venir en renfort auprès de lui.

Enfin, un cinquième kuau menace de se déclarer. C'est une affaire remarquable qui éclaire à la fois les conceptions juridiques et religieuses des Noirs Réfugiés.

Vers 1918, un accident stupide survenu à Dagoudé (fusil qui partit tout seul au moment où on le déposait dans un canot) causa la mort d'une jeune fille, Santonia, fille de Kuluba (Aw.B.1). L'auteur involontaire de l'accident était Kwau (Dip.I, village Apatu). Il se trouva des gens dans le lignage Awaru Bakka pour l'accuser de l'avoir fait exprès, mais le grand man jugea qu'il était innocent et l'affaire fut classée.

Or, en avril 1957, Kiboya (Dip.II), jeune femme de 25 ans, fut prise d'un accès de possession. C'était le gadu de Santonia qui était censé se révéler en elle. Il déclarait qu'il allait exercer un kuau sur Dipélu. Il ne prétendait pas que Kwau l'avait tuée exprès et demanda même aux Awaru Bakka de ne pas exercer de représailles.

Néanmoins, pris de fureur, une partie des Awaru Bakka allèrent le lendemain attaquer le village de L'Enfant Perdu, démolissant un certain nombre de cases et pourchassant les habitants dont les uns se réfugièrent dans l'eau et les autres dans la brousse. Il n'y eut pas cependant de voies de fait graves.

Le jour suivant, ils allèrent de même attaquer Kormotibo. Il est à noter qu'ils ne songèrent qu'ensuite à s'en prendre à Kwau qui résidait alors à Wacapou. Mais le grand man était intervenu dans l'intervalle pour rétablir la paix.

Dans les deux cas on brisa à la hache la façade de quelques carbets et on frappa symboliquement deux hommes, Bonana et Amatodja, qui avaient couru moins vite que les autres.

Les membres du lignage Dipélu ne crurent pas un mot de cette affaire, persuadés que Kiboya, femme orgueilleuse et intrigante, avait simulé la gila pour se rendre intéressante. Néanmoins, pour ramener la paix, ils décidèrent de se rendre à Asisi et de demander pardon devant le fraga liki, versant du tafia, demandant aux ancêtres de ne pas exercer de vengeance, les vivants s'étant réconciliés.

(Il est à remarquer que dans cette affaire, le gorlu se manifeste dans un membre du lignage sur lequel il exerce le kunu).

Kunu du lignage Awaru Bakka. Le lignage Awaru Bakka ne constitue pas une unité au regard du kunu, et la situation de ses fractions est particulièrement intéressante. Ce lignage comprend :

— Une fraction principale (Aw.B.1) ; — Une fraction dont les liens de parenté avec la première sont oubliés (Aw.B.2), dont nous n'avons pu définir la position à l'égard du kunu.

— Enfin, un groupe issu de Anèta, femme Djuka, épouse de Pèèyun † (Aw.B.1) fixée à Asini avec sa descendance en ligne utérine. Nous avons appelé ce groupe Aw.B.3. Il possède un kunu distinct provenant du village Djuka de Tabiki dont Anèta est issue.

Les Awaru Bakka 1, tous habitant le village d'Asini, avaient en 1957 à notre connaissance, trois kunu :

— L'un exercé par un dieu Papa gado porté jusqu'en 1957 par ○ Kuduba (Aw.B.1 D1). A sa mort en avril 1957, elle le légua, contrairement à la coutume, à une personne, d'une autre fraction, Summa (Aw.B.3). Mais le dieu ne ratifia pas ce legs et, en janvier 1958, il se manifesta dans ○ Léna (Aw.B.1, F52), restant ainsi dans le même lignage ;

— Un second kunu très ancien est exercé par un gorlu du lo Dipèlu II, Gy..., mort depuis si longtemps qu'on ne peut le situer sur le tableau généalogique ; lui aussi avait pour porteur un membre du lignage sur lequel il exerçait le kunu, ○ Akumuyé (Aw.B.1, D17) † 1957.

Ainsi les lignages Awaru Bakka et Dipèlu exercent le kunu réciproquement l'un contre l'autre ; — Un troisième kunu d'origine récente est exercé par un dieu Papa gado qui avait pour porteur en 1957 ○ Irma (Aw.B.1, E37). Il résulte du meurtre involontaire d'un serpent Dagaue par △ Takwa, frère de Irma. Ce kunu n'avait encore, fin 1957, provoqué que des maladies, de telle sorte qu'on pouvait encore espérer le conjurer.

Le groupe Aw.B.3 a un kunu particulier et se considère comme hors d'atteinte des kunu des Aw.B.1.

Anèta, issue du village Djuka de Tabiki, est soumise aux kunu de ce lignage, ainsi que tous ses descendants en ligne utérine. Ceux-ci ont dû parfois, à l'occasion de maladies graves, se rendre au village Tabiki pour supplier le kunu.

Ce kunu est celui d'un dieu porté par Akanté, fille de Anèta. En septembre 1956, Summa, fille de Akanté, a été malade. Le dieu a révélé que c'était par sa faute. On l'a supplié (les autres fractions se sont jointes au groupe) et elle a guéri ensuite.

Kunu du lignage Afi. Les descendants de Afi † (femme originaire de la tribu des Bakabuchi de Surinam) vivent pour la plupart à Asini, en symbiose étroite avec le lignage Awaru Bakka. Ils sont dans une situation analogue à celui des descendants de Anéta (Aw.B.3) mais, peut-être du simple fait de leur nombre, ils forment une unité mieux individualisée.

Ils sont l'objet de trois kunu :

— L'un exercé par un dieu Papa gadu dont le porteur jusqu'en 1956 était Kotoida (oct. 1956), qui l'a légué à ○ Mani (lignage Afi, d12).

— L'autre exercé par un gorku du lignage Lapé. Ce kunu date d'une soixantaine d'années ; Alémin (lignage Afi, b3, village Kormotibo) âgé de 80 ans en 1957, avait, étant jeune, coupé un abattis dans un emplacement qui se trouvait être un ancien cimetière Boni abandonné (en face de Maripasoula). Quelque temps après, un gorku se révéla dans une femme du lignage Lapé, disant qu'il exerçait un kunu contre la famille du sacrilège.

C'est à ce gorku, dont le porteur est M... (L2, Boniville) qu'on attribue notamment la mort de Kotoida en octobre 1956.

— Un troisième kunu est exercé par A..., du lignage Papalston 2. A..., avait commis pikodu. Surpris par Alémin (lignage Afi), il avait payé celui-ci pour obtenir son silence. Mais Alémin avait parlé. Déshonoré, A... se suicida d'un coup de fusil ; quelque temps après un gorku se révéla dans Alémin ; il exerce un kunu sur ce lignage.

Situation des autres lignages à l'égard du kunu. Le lignage Papalston est divisé en deux groupes : Papalston 1 (le principal) et Papalston 2 dont il ne reste plus que 3 membres vivants : 2 femmes et 1 jeune homme. Ce débris de lignage continue à porter un groupe kunu unique et distinct de celui du groupe principal.

Le groupe principal constitue une unité au regard du kunu.

Le lignage Lapé, coupé au point de vue de la généalogie en deux tronçons, forme une unité au regard du kunu. Nous n'avons pu recueillir que des informations fragmentaires sur les divers kunu de ce village.

Un kunu est exercé par un gorku de Dipélu, porté en 1958 par une femme de Loka. On l'invoque devant le fraga liki du village L'Enfant Perdu (Dipélu I). Quelquefois on célèbre un kodo de pour lui dans les mêmes formes que la cérémonie du 8e jour après la mort.

Nous n'avons pu de même recueillir des informations complètes sur les kunu du lignage Kotika. Ce lignage divisé en trois fractions forme une unité au regard du kunu.

Un kunu est exercé par le gorku d'un créole de Surinam jadis assassiné par un membre du lignage. Son porteur en 1958 était Todo (K1, E68), homme du lo Kotika résidant à Boniville. En 1958, une jeune femme du lignage, Awini, (K1, E37) est morte subitement ; le gorku a révélé qu'il avait frappé Awini parce qu'elle avait une liaison avec Sintamann (K3, E145), commettant ainsi pikodu. L'idée de la responsabilité collective du lignage est si profondément acceptée par les Boni les proches parents de la défunte n'ont adressé à Sintamann aucun reproche.

Un gorka du lignage Kotika exerçait un kunu sur les Djuka. Il s'agit d'une affaire remontant à 1950 ; une jeune femme est morte quelque temps après avoir eu une grave discussion avec une femme Djuka, qui l'avait frappée. Des décès survenus chez les Djuka ces dernières années avaient été attribués à sa vengeance.

Il semble qu'il n'y ait pas d'autre kunu exercé par un Djuka sur un lignage Boni et réciproquement. C'est surprenant étant donné les combats qui ont jadis opposé les deux nations.

Les Djuka et Saramaka vivant isolés au milieu des Boni connaissent leurs kunu qui leur ont été révélés dans leur enfance. En cas de maladie, ils emploient des procédés divinatoires pour savoir de quel kunu il s'agit, puis ils font des offrandes. Mais en cas de maladie grave, ils sont contraints de retourner au village d'origine de leur lignage.

Le kunu et la vie familiale des Boni. Il résulte de l'examen détaillé que nous venons de faire de la situation des divers lignages que la transmission du kunu dans la parenté utérine est une loi rigoureuse qui ne souffre aucune exception. Le processus d'assimilation qui permet dans une certaine mesure, sur le plan social, d'intégrer à un groupe des fragments de parenté paternelle (comme Awara Bakka 3) ne joue pas ici. L'unité au regard du kunu peut donc être regardée comme un critère rigoureux d'une commune origine matrilinéaire. Les Boni le ressentent comme une évidence et c'est en pareil cas la démonstration qui leur vient à l'esprit : « Nous sommes de même origine puisque nous avons même kunu ».

Ainsi le kunu apparaît comme le principal ciment de l'unité des groupes. Il s'oppose à la dissociation des lignages ; cette malédiction qui pèse collectivement sur un groupe et qui ne peut être conjurée que collectivement, est un lien de fer que rien ne peut rompre. Il oblige les Noirs Réfugiés à surmonter leurs tendances individualistes, leur égoïsme qui, s'ils jouaient librement, auraient tôt fait de les éparpiller en une poussière d'isolés. Devant l'adversité chacun accepte de meilleur cœur l'obéissance aux anciens qui seuls savent parler aux dieux et les apaiser. Jamais personne ne s'indigne, ni même ne s'étonne d'être frappé pour la faute d'un autre ; il n'y a pas un mouvement de révolte ni d'hostilité contre celui qui, par son inattention ou sa légèreté, a attiré le malheur. Sur ce plan, les membres d'un lignage se sentent comme les cellules d'un même corps.

La responsabilité juridique collective des membres d'un groupe dans le domaine coutumier ordinaire découle du kunu. Nous avons observé cela à plusieurs reprises, notamment lors des obsèques de Kotoïda (lignage Afi) en octobre 1956. Le président du lánti kuulu a condamné les membres du lignage Afi à être fustigés symboliquement pour ne s'être pas préoccupés suffisamment des avertissements du gorka qui avait déjà rendu Kotoïda malade à plusieurs reprises : par leur négligence ils portaient une part de responsabilité dans la mort de Kotoïda. Bien que les Afi et les Awara Bakka vivent ensemble et se regardent comme membres d'une même communauté, il n'a nullement été question de fustiger les Awara Bakka, et cela parce que n'étant pas soumis au même kunu, ils ne portaient pas de responsabilité dans cette mort.

De même on admet que les descendants de Anéta (Aw.B.3) ne partagent pas la responsabilité juridique des Awara Bakka proprement dits (fractions 1 et 2). Le fait que Anéta était l'épouse de Péyon, capitaine des Aw.B., et que ses descendants soient totalement intégrés à la vie du village ne modifie en rien cette situation juridique. Lors de la bagarre qui opposa en 1948 les Dipélu et les Awara Bakka, les Aw.B.3 n'ont pas été pris à partie, pas plus que les membres du lignage Afi.

Les rapports des Boni avec les entités qui sont supposées les poursuivre sont des plus intéressants. On ne cherche qu'à apaiser la divinité, à la calmer provisoirement, et à vivre avec elle dans un état de paix armée, si l'on peut dire.

Quand la divination a montré que telle calamité était due au kunu (parfois la divinité en question le révèle aussitôt, par la bouche de son porteur, avant d'avoir été interrogée), on lui demande pourquoi elle a frappé : elle indique toujours une raison précise : le plus souvent elle paraît inspirée par l'arbitraire et un despotisme impitoyable. Les Noirs Réfugiés ne s'en étonnent pas, car c'est bien ainsi qu'ils se représentent les dieux inférieurs.

En 1948, A..., du lignage Dju, tomba malade ; il ressentait de violentes douleurs aux jambes. La divination montra que c'était le fait du Kdnlomosu qui exerçait son kunu sur le lignage ; interrogé, ce dieu déclara qu'il avait à se plaindre du mauvais état de la maison que lui avait élevée sur son ordre les membres du lignage ; la toiture de bouillo n'avait pas été changée et il pleuvait à travers.

Il arrive aussi, mais exceptionnellement, que le dieu ait sanctionné une faute contre la morale ou plus précisément contre la loi sociale telle que rupture d'un interdit, pikudu (inceste au sens large, faute contre l'exogamie). Il faut bien comprendre que dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, l'inceste déclenche les kunu existants mais ne crée pas un nouveau kunu.

En octobre 1952, Dolo, jeune homme de 25 ans du lo Awara Bakka, mourut presque subitement. La divination révéla qu'il avait été tué par le kunu (c'est un Papa gadu qui était intervenu) pour sanctionner une faute commise quelque temps avant par un autre membre du lo nommé P... Ce dernier, individu notoirement taré, avait commis l'inceste avec sa propre sœur.

Quand la divinité a fait connaître par la bouche de son porteur les motifs de son acte, les membres du lignage assemblés l'implorent, lui demandent de ne pas poursuivre sa vengeance ; la divinité exige alors une offrande : par exemple si c'est un Papa gadu, il exigera des bouteilles de bière, de l'étoffe rouge et blanche qu'on immergera dans un endroit donné de la rivière. Il pourra aussi exiger des danses en son honneur, célébrées par les autres possédés du village. Si c'est un Ampuku, il demandera du rhum, de l'étoffe bleu sombre qu'on exposera dans un endroit écarté de la forêt. Une offrande de ce genre représente une somme relativement faible, même pour les Boni (quelques milliers de francs en 1952). Le dieu se déclare alors apaisé. Mais il ne pardonne pas et il reprendra sa vengeance au premier motif. Ainsi les Boni n'ont-ils d'espoir que dans une observance rigoureuse de la loi coutumière et des rites. Il y a des divinités qui paraissent ainsi apaisées depuis longtemps et auxquelles on n'hésite pas à venir demander des remèdes ou des avis, en dépit du mal qu'elles ont fait au lignage et feront peut-être demain. Il est même permis de se demander si on ne va pas consulter de préférence les divinités les plus méchantes, car on les suppose plus fortes.

Le kunu focaline, détourne vers des buts élevés les forces aveugles de la superstition, de la peur et de la rancune. Plusieurs des auteurs qui ont écrit sur les Noirs Réfugiés ont affirmé que les calamités étaient presque immanquablement attribuées à la sorcellerie (wisi). C'est une profonde erreur, due à ce qu'ils croient pouvoir transposer chez eux ce qu'on observe chez les populations créoles de Surinam. S'il en était ainsi aucun lien social positif ne pourrait exister. Nous croyons pouvoir affirmer que chez les Noirs Réfugiés, la divination n'incrimine la sorcellerie que dans un dixième des malheurs à peine. Voici, parmi d'autres exemples, quelques cas typiques intéressant des Boni qui ont travaillé avec nous ou que nous avons particulièrement bien connus :

— En 1948, Fintiman (Dju) tombe malade (douleurs violentes aux jambes) ; kunu d'un Kèdèmasu.

— En 1948, Galmo (Papalston) est blessé accidentellement (trappe-fusil) : kunu.

— En 1949, Diolè, capitaine du lo Dju, est frappé d'hémiplégie et reste paralysé. Il meurt en 1951 : kunu d'un Papa gadu.

— En 1950, un Saramaka est tué dans un accident de chasse (un fusil en mauvais état est parti tout seul : Jygoku (accident).

— En 1951, Kanayen (Kotika) se noie en naviguant de nuit sur le fleuve : wisi.

— En 1951, Loka (Dju) meurt à l'âge de 70 ans : kunu d'un Ampuku.

— En 1951, F... (Dju) est sérieusement blessé par la chute d'une branche en coupant son abattis : kunu d'un gorka.

— En 1952, Dolo (Awara Bakka) meurt presque subitement avec les symptômes d'une péritonite : kunu, châtiment pour un inceste commis par un autre membre du lignage.

— En 1952, Malèndo, âgé de 10 ans, fils de Osaya (Awara Bakka) se noie accidentellement : accident naturel (Jygoku).

— En 1954, Bèniti (Dju) meurt âgée de près de 75 ans : kunu d'un Papa gadu.

— En 1954, Agyèmèsi (Aw.B.) meurt presque subitement : tué par Odun (c'était un wisimi).

— En 1955, Tabiki (Awara Bakka) meurt à plus de 80 ans : maladie naturelle.

— En 1956, Kotoida (lignage Afi) meurt subitement, âgée d'environ 50 ans : kunu d'un gorka.

— En 1957, F... (Lapé) est gravement malade avec symptômes d'une typhoïde : kunu d'un Papa gadu.

— En 1957, Sokodo (Dip.II) meurt âgé de 40 ans : kunu d'un Kèdèmasu.

On observe que dans les 15 cas cités ici, le kunu intervient 10 fois, tandis que dans trois cas on admettait des causes naturelles : maladie, accident.

En réalité, les Noirs Réfugiés n'ont pas la conception d'un monde naturel, soumis à des lois connues ou connaissables, s'opposant à un monde surnaturel. L'intervention d'un Papa gadu n'est ni plus ni moins naturelle qu'une maladie ou un accident. Il y a seulement, sur le plan de la vie humaine, intervention plus ou moins fréquente de forces «surhumaines». L'intervention de ces forces se fait selon des lois qui englobent la totalité des êtres et des choses, lois que les hommes ne peuvent pas comprendre mais dont ils seraient avoir une connaissance partielle et empirique.

Il importe de ne pas confondre le kunu avec les souffrances que peuvent faire subir arbitrairement aux hommes d'autres divinités. Le kunu a un caractère systématique. Mais une divinité en principe bienfaisante, et qui est venue dans un homme après avoir été appelée, peut elle aussi, de temps à autre, amener des malheurs si telle est sa fantaisie du moment.

En 1949, G... (Dju), était occupé à faire cuire un crabe dans la maison de sa mère D... Un sabre qui était attaché au mur se détacha soudain et le blessa à la main droite. Or, sa mère avait un Ampuku qui lui avait imposé comme kinu le crabe. Cet Ampuku aussitôt appelé révéla que c'était bien lui qui avait frappé G..., car il lui déplaisait de voir le fils de D... manger du crabe (il est à noter que G... n'était nullement tenu à observer ce kinu, car aucun kinu ne se transmet de la mère au fils).

Il ne faut pas non plus confondre le kunu exercé par un gadu avec la vengeance que peut exercer un défunt contre les membres de son propre lignage pour les punir d'avoir négligé leurs devoirs.

La punition infligée par un ancêtre du lignage semble être pour les Boni une notion distincte de celle du kunu. La vengeance exercée par un gadu sur son propre lignage est regardée comme exceptionnelle et dépourvue du caractère inexorable et définitif du kunu, mais on admet qu'elle est possible. On nous a cité le cas de Yali (Loka) qui accusé de sorcellerie par les gens de son lignage s'était suicidé. Depuis son gadu a provoqué des maladies et des morts dans son propre village.

Inversement, un dieu qui exerce le kunu sur un lignage peut dans certains cas intervenir en faveur de ce lignage si telle est sa fantaisie du moment. Ainsi on attribue la mort de Diamanti (Aw.B.2, village Asiri, 9 en 1965) au dieu qui exerce le kunu sur le village de L'Enfant Perdu et dont le porteur était Pééchina. Diamanti avait fait du tort à quelqu'un de ce village et le dieu était intervenu contre elle.

D'une façon générale, on considère que le porteur d'un dieu exerçant le kunu n'a rien à en craindre personnellement, s'il observe rigoureusement les kinu qui lui ont été imposés. Au contraire, ce dieu punira toute offense faite à son porteur. Ainsi ces porteurs (il s'agit presque toujours de vieilles femmes) vivent entourés de considération et de crainte.

Observations en janvier 1958 (malheurs attribués à des vengeances d'ancêtres sur leur propre lignage).

Do (Lapé) est pris le 7 janvier 58 d'une violente attaque de dysenterie. Le même jour son fils âgé de 5 ans est blessé grièvement au dégrad en tombant sur une bouteille cassée. Émus de cette coïncidence, les membres du lo Lapé se réunissent et procèdent à l'interrogatoire d'un possédé. Celui-ci révèle que c'est le fait d'une vieille femme du lignage, Atala, morte depuis deux ans. Plusieurs membres du lignage ont déjà été malades de ce fait ; la défunte a voulu sanctionner des fautes commises par des gens du lignage.

Le même jour, à Boniville, Klémenti, (Dju), auquel je relate cette affaire, me dit qu'avant la levée du deuil de sa mère Bénili, lui-même et ses sœurs ont été malades. La divination a montré que c'était le fait de Bénili qui voulait accélérer la célébration de la cérémonie.

Le kunu et le poix sociale chez les Boni. Rôle du grand mon. Le kunu exercé par un gorku crée entre les lignages Boni des rapports fort étranges. Aussi aveugle et arbitraire que soit la vengeance attribuée au gorku, les Boni ont trop le sens de l'unité juridique du lignage pour qu'il n'en subsiste pas un ressentiment : « Ils tuent notre famille... » ; et pourtant les deux lignages se trouvent désormais irrémédiablement liés. Les victimes du kunu ne peuvent plus se passer des gens du lignage du gorku qui les poursuit de sa vengeance, puisque seuls ils peuvent, par leurs prières, apaiser temporairement la colère de leur ancêtre. On conçoit les dissensions interminables, qu'entraîne cette situation : si les manifestations du kunu ne cessent pas, les victimes laissent entendre que les prières ont été mal faites...

Fig. 58. — Schéma des kunu exercés les uns sur les autres par les divers lignages.

Toute mort suspecte dont les circonstances laissent supposer une responsabilité d'un habitant d'un autre village, peut entraîner une expédition punitive contre ce village et les autres villages de même parenté. En prenant cette attitude vengeresse, avant même que le grand man ait été prévenu et les gens incriminés entendus, les gens du lignage du mort songent avant tout à se prémunir contre l'action du défunt, qui pourrait retourner sa vengeance contre eux. En fait, ces combats sont surtout symboliques ; la sagesse des Noirs Réfugiés a édicté des préceptes dont bien des nations pourraient s'inspirer, pour empêcher que ces expéditions punitives n'aient des conséquences graves :

— On ne peut frapper qu'avec les poings, et le sang ne doit pas couler ;

— Les hommes ne peuvent frapper que les hommes, tandis que les femmes s'en prennent aux femmes ;

— On ne peut se battre que sur la place du village et devant témoins, jamais dans la brousse ou sur la rivière. En règle générale, les gens visés par l'expédition ne résistent pas mais s'enfuient dans la brousse ou sur les canots, ou se groupent autour du frapa liki, lieu saint que les agresseurs doivent respecter.

Nous avons relaté l'expédition faite en avril 1957 par les gens de Asini-Awara Bakka contre les villages de L'Enfant Perdu (Dipélu I) et Kormotibo (Dipélu II). Une autre bagarre avait huit ans plus tôt, en 1949, lancé les Dipélu contre les Awara Bakka à la suite de la mort de Pétikona (Dip.II) que son mari, Boofo, avait emmenée à Surinam et qui y était morte. Les gens de Kormotibo prétendirent que Boofo était responsable de sa mort. Ils allèrent attaquer les gens de Asini qui, bien que trois fois plus nombreux, ne cherchèrent pas à résister et s'enfuirent à Boniville ou se réfugièrent les uns dans l'eau, les autres dans la brousse. On cassa (sans grands dommages) une dizaine de carbets, principalement des cuisines et des hangars vides. Un seul homme put être attrapé et reçut quelques coups de poing.

L'expédition d'avril 57 contre les villages de L'Enfant Perdu et de Kormotibo ne fit pas beaucoup plus de mal. Une seule belle maison fut brisée, celle d'Akwali (Dip. II, Kormotibo) parce que son propriétaire, passant en canot sur la rivière, insulta les agresseurs...

Le combat à coups de poings est pratiqué aussi entre individus, comme épreuve de justification. Si quelqu'un est injustement accusé de vol, c'est la première idée qui lui viendra, avant même le serment devant Odun. Les Noirs Réfugiés ont à ce sujet une conception analogue à celle des anciens européens, selon laquelle Dieu viendra au secours de l'innocent en décuplant ses forces. Ce combat lui aussi est astreint à des règles précises ; on ne peut s'y livrer que publiquement, dans un village, jamais dans la brousse ni sur la rivière.

Malgré l'importance attachée au serment devant Odun, la coutume Boni ne prévoit pas d'épreuve de justification ayant une valeur juridique reconnue. C'est ce qui rend indispensable cette bataille symbolique. Une intervention est ensuite demandée au chef d'un lignage neutre pour rétablir la paix. S'il ne survient pas de mort ou de calamité laissant croire à la vengeance non apaisée d'un défunt, l'affaire est oubliée très vite. Par exemple, en examinant le tableau des mariages entre les divers lignages, on constate qu'il y a entre les Dipéïa et les Awara Bakka un nombre d'unions normal.

Le grand man a dans ces sortes d'affaires deux fonctions bien précises :

— Déceler la simulation ;

— Intervenir comme arbitre suprême en cas de nécessité.

Chaque fois que quelqu'un est pris d'une crise de possession et prétend parler au nom d'un gorku venant exercer un kunu, le chef du lignage le conduit au grand man qui s'assure qu'il ne s'agit pas de simulation.

Le grand man, dans la pensée des Boni, a le pouvoir de contraindre n'importe quel gorku à se manifester.

Il conduit l'intéressé au fenga liki et invoque le gorku. S'il s'agit de simulation, l'individu ne pourra pas articuler une syllabe. S'il s'agit de possession véritable le gorku parlera par sa bouche.

Il y a quelques années, une femme de Kormotibo a été ainsi confondue. Elle avait voulu simuler la possession par un gorku pour exercer un chantage sur une autre famille.

Le grand man Difu a interdit récemment qu'on lègue les dieux et les gorku exerçant le kunu[1]. On attendra qu'ils se manifestent d'eux-mêmes. Cela réduira les risques de simulation.

Le lignage du grand man n'exerce aucun kunu sur un autre lignage et aucun kunu n'est exercé sur lui. C'est pour les Boni une idée fondamentale, car le grand man est précisément le recours suprême en cas de calamités persistantes attribuées au gorku d'un mort. Le grand man a le pouvoir d'exorciser tous les Boni défunts. Si son lignage exerçait un kunu ou en était victime, il serait à la fois juge et partie.

Quand, avec la mort du grand man Difu le lignage Dikan sera éteint, et quand la fonction passera à un autre lignage, la considération des kunu exercés par les lignages les uns sur les autres sera déterminante dans le choix de son successeur.

Divination ; prémonition ; rêves

La divination. Elle joue chez les Noirs Réfugiés, comme dans toutes les sociétés animistes, un rôle essentiel. Les individus y ont recours pour inspirer toutes les discussions importantes ; dans une large mesure on peut dire qu'elle leur tient lieu de volonté et de conscience.

Mais la divination est plus que cela ; l'interprétation qu'elle donne des événements de la vie courante est le moteur même de la société animiste ; présentant les calamités comme le châtiment de fautes contre la loi coutumière, elle vivifie constamment cette loi, lui conservant sa valeur pratique et son efficacité. Ce qu'elle exprime, ce n'est pas l'influence occulte de chefs ou de prêtres — il n'y a en fait ni chefs ni prêtres chez les Boni — mais le consensus même du groupe, le sentiment profond qu'il a de son unité.

(1) Peuplades qu'on interroge les morts à ce sujet comme pour la répartition du reste de leur héritage.

Il y a deux grandes catégories de divination :

La première consiste à appeler une divinité par l'intermédiaire de son porteur. On s'adresse pour cela à une personne (de son lignage si possible) qui a un gula. C'est un service qui se refuse rarement. Cette personne emploie le procédé qui lui est propre pour appeler sa gila et entre en transes. Le dieu parle, on lui pose la question ; s'il est bien disposé il peut donner l'explication ou le conseil demandé. On demande par exemple conseil avant de chercher un autre secteur pour faire son abattis.

Aussi suggestibles que soient les Boni, ils ne sont pas sans s'apercevoir que tous les dieux interrogés ne donnent pas les mêmes indications. Aussi pensent-ils que certains sont plus forts que d'autres ; il est des gens dont la gila est considérée comme particulièrement bonne, d'autres qu'on a cessé tout à fait de consulter. Le défunt chef du village de Kotika, Bayo, avait une gila si remarquable qu'on venait de très loin la consulter.

L'opinion générale est du reste qu'actuellement, tout dégénère et qu'on ne voit plus de bonnes gila comme autrefois.

Ces consultations ne comportent qu'une rétribution très modique, une bouteille de tafia au maximum[1]. S'il ne s'agit pas d'une question très grave, le demandeur se contente d'aller interroger une divinité dans laquelle il a confiance. Si à l'épreuve le conseil se révèle mauvais, il va en consulter d'autres et s'il obtient le même conseil de deux côtés différents, il s'en tient là, sinon il s'adresse aux anciens de son village pour mettre en œuvre les procédés de divination qu'ils sont seuls à connaître ;

La seconde catégorie de procédés divinatoires consiste en l'emploi de « remèdes » dont l'origine est inconnue, et qui sont transmis comme un bien personnel.

Le procédé réputé le plus sûr, dans lequel tout le monde a confiance, est appelé pasa. L'instrument se compose simplement d'une corde faite de fibres de palmier Mauritia[2] qui a été trempée dans une infusion d'herbes ; on la tend horizontalement entre deux piquets. L'ancien en approche une lame de sabre chauffée au rouge, tout en posant la question. Si la réponse est positive la corde est coupée à peine le fer arrivé au contact. Si la réponse est non, on affirme que le fer rouge reste au contact pendant un temps appréciable sans que la corde ne se coupe.

On dira par exemple : efu na Ampuku siki X, a hoo a 'd mu do: fasi a loti : Si c'est un Ampuku qui rend X malade, le sabre doit couper (la corde) avant (même) de l'avoir atteinte

1. Il n'est de la rétribution du pouvoir ; le dieu quant à lui demande toujours un poisson, d'importance variable selon la fantaisie.

2. Palmier qui pousse dans les savanes de la côte et dont les fibres sont achetées aux Indiens Galibi. Le mot pasa, de même que gila, bando, mada, est d'origine caraïbe. En Kikongo, mpasu = palmier raphia.

On pose ainsi une série de questions comportant des réponses par oui ou par non et qui serrent le problème de plus en plus près.

Pour ce procédé de divination, on paie à l'homme qui l'a mis en œuvre 3 litres de tafia, 2 pièces d'étoffe et 1 sabre.

Ce procédé est mis en œuvre pour confondre les voleurs et les adultères. Le plaignant somme publiquement l'accusé de venir se soumettre à l'épreuve : Mi ɔ lye gu po a sunli! S'il refuse, c'est l'équivalent d'un aveu.

En 1947, Liki (Aw.B.), accusé d'avoir volé 20 grammes d'or par un homme de Loka, fut ainsi soumis à l'épreuve. La corde ne fut pas coupée. Il fut déclaré innocent et ce fut le plaignant qui dut payer le prix de l'épreuve.

En 1950, l'oncle de Tabayé (Dip. I) l'accusa d'avoir commis l'adultère avec sa femme. Il niait mais il fut soumis à l'épreuve qui donna un résultat positif; il avoua aussitôt et demanda pardon à son oncle. Ils se réconcilièrent ensuite. Bien entendu c'est lui qui paya le prix de l'épreuve.

Un autre procédé important de divination est le Kumɔ̃ti bui (anneau de Kumɔ̃ti). C'est une forme surprenante de divination par le pendule. Cet anneau, qui est fait de fibres, est tenu caché d'ordinaire par son propriétaire. Très peu de gens en ont. L'anneau, suspendu au bout d'une ficelle est mis en oscillation. Son possesseur lui pose une question. Si la réponse est affirmative, il oscille de droite à gauche. Si elle est négative, il décrit un cercle.

Un autre procédé est parfois utilisé après un sacrifice pour savoir si le dieu l'a favorablement accueilli : il consiste à tuer un coq pour examiner la couleur de ses testicules : s'ils sont trouvés noirs, le sacrifice n'a pas été agréé.

N'importe qui ne peut se livrer à la divination pour le compte d'autrui : seuls les plus anciens ont le droit de le faire et il est arrivé que le grand man punisse sévèrement les infracteurs.

Fatalité. Les Noirs Réfugiés n'attribuent pas tous les malheurs à des causes surhumaines. Ils ont la notion d'accident naturel, Jɔgɔɔlu. On dit Jɔgɔɔlu mili mi, ou encore ogi mili mi, le mal m'a rencontré. Ils acceptent aussi l'idée de la mort naturelle. On regarde couramment comme mort naturelle celle des grands vieillards, des infirmes de naissance et des enfants souffreteux.

La divination incrimine la fatalité dans 10 à 20 % des accidents. C'est l'explication habituelle des accidents de chasse.

Les forces magiques

Ainsi que nous l'avons montré, les Noirs Réfugiés considèrent les êtres et les choses comme un monde de forces susceptibles d'agir les unes sur les autres, en dehors du temps et de l'espace, selon des lois que les hommes ne peuvent pas comprendre mais dont ils croient avoir une connaissance partielle et empirique, transmise par la tradition depuis le temps des ancêtres. Ils distinguent les forces magiques négatives, wisi, qui ont pour effet, de diminuer la force vitale des hommes, ce qui les rend malades ou les tue, et les forces magiques positives, obia, qui viennent des dieux : l'obia vient accroître la force vitale des hommes, leur donnant protection, immunité ou connaissance. Mais aucune puissance n'est par essence un principe de bien ou un principe de mal ; rien n'est impossible à celui qui connaît les formules ; c'est pourquoi la magie des Noirs Réfugiés se réduit à une lutte perpétuelle et indécise entre obia et wisi.

Wisi. Wisi est la sorcellerie, au sens africain du terme, c'est-à-dire l'emploi de procédés magiques pour nuire à autrui ; wisi est pour les Noirs Réfugiés l'acte criminel par excellence, à la fois contre la morale et contre la société. La lutte contre wisi est un des fondements de leur vie sociale, la protection contre les entreprises des wisimã un des plus constants soucis de chacun. Nul ne connaît avec certitude ces wisimã; on est réduit à des soupçons vagues contre tel ou tel, que l'on n'ose formuler faute de preuve. Nul ne sait exactement comment ils opèrent. Cependant chacun se sent environné de leurs entreprises et ceux qui pour leurs richesses ou leurs succès féminins ont le plus de raison de se croire en butte à la jalousie, vivent dans l'angoisse.

Une jalousie ou une haine intense sont déjà une forme de wisi, et c'est pourquoi chacun doit s'efforcer de les chasser de son cœur ; il risquerait d'ailleurs de tomber malade ou de subir toutes sortes de calamités pour avoir rompu son serment. Mais le wisimã emploie des procédés précis :

— Enterrer une bouteille (beli bele) contenant un maléfice, sous la porte de son ennemi. Quand celui-ci rentrera chez lui, le maléfice pénétrera en lui. Aussi certains Noirs Réfugiés portent-ils un obia spécial contre ce genre d'agression : grâce à cet obia, ils ressentiront une vive douleur à l'extrémité du pied en approchant de la bouteille, qu'ils dévieront ainsi aisément ;

Kosi akkuu, voler l'akku de l'ennemi. Ce dernier devient alors insensé. Les Boni croient que le wisimã opère la nuit, en profitant de ce que l'akku de son ennemi a quitté son corps pour errer. Il la capture en l'attirant avec ce qu'elle aime. Il faut pour cela connaître le nom de l'akku de son ennemi, connaître ses goûts et ses préférences ; toutes choses que chaque Noir Réfugié cachera soigneusement, même à ses camarades. Ce que le wisimã fait de l'akku n'était clair pour aucun de nos informateurs. Il cherche soit à la capturer pour en priver son ennemi, soit à la rendre hostile à son porteur, soit à lui inspirer des idées ou des goûts anormaux. Si quelqu'un manifeste un changement anormal de goûts ou de comportement, on inclinera à penser qu'un wisimã a pu agir sur son akka. Il est admis que sur ce point la magie indienne est beaucoup plus puissante que la magie africaine, et que n'importe quel Indien est capable d'attirer l'akka de son ennemi ;

— Se transformer en vampire (azemã), et voler la nuit à la recherche des hommes endormis pour sucer leur sang et les manger en esprit ; cette conception, voisine de celle que les Antillais ont du « soucougnan », vient du Dahomey (en Fon, azɛ = sorcellerie). On dit comme au Dahomey, que l'azemã vole en émettant du feu par l'anus.

— Seni ɔgi sani : c'est ce que les créoles appellent « envoyer mauvais bagage ». C'est agir sur un être vivant ou sur un objet inanimé pour qu'il se comporte de façon anormale aux dépens de l'ennemi. Par exemple, si quelqu'un est mordu par un serpent, ou si un enfant est enlevé par un tigre, on incriminera en premier lieu l'action d'un wisimã, car normalement serpent et tigre n'attaquent pas. Il n'y a du reste pas de limite matérielle à l'action du wisimã, qui peut faire tomber une branche sur la tête de son ennemi ou faire éclater prématurément une cartouche de dynamite.

L'idée que le sorcier se transforme lui-même en jaguar, en chien ou en un autre animal n'est pas admise par les Noirs Réfugiés. Ils n'ont pas non plus l'idée de confréries de sorciers.

Comment la société se défend-elle contre les wisimã? Il y a d'abord le serment d'épreuve. A des intervalles réguliers, tous les deux ou trois ans par exemple, le grand man réunit tous les Boni jusqu'au dernier devant la chapelle de Odun, et fait boire à chacun un peu d'un liquide magique, en l'invitant à prononcer la formule : efu mi e meki wisi fu dede a sama, mi mu dede : si je fais un maléfice pour faire mourir quelqu'un, je dois mourir. C'est ce qu'on appelle diɔgi sweri, boire l'épreuve. Il s'agit en fait d'un liquide inoffensif, mais chacun est persuadé qu'un wisimã ne saurait le boire sans en mourir. Si quelqu'un refuse obstinément de se présenter à la cérémonie, on ne l'oblige pas, mais il s'est dénoncé lui-même : les soupçons se porteront sur lui désormais.

Il n'existe pas chez les Boni de procès de sorcellerie, mais il existe une procédure qui permet de préciser les soupçons.

A chaque décès on pose au mort la question : est-ce wisi qui t'a tué ? La question étant posée en dernier (On demande d'abord kugu, ensuite fyo-fyo).

Si c'est wisi on demande : est-ce telle famille ? (en général c'est dans le lignage même), puis on prononce successivement les noms des membres du lignage jusqu'à ce qu'il y ait une réponse positive.

Celui qui est ainsi accusé de wisi peut être sommé de se justifier devant le grand man, mais cela ne peut avoir que le caractère d'une information et non d'un procès. L'individu soupçonné ne peut être inquiété. On admet qu'il ne s'agit que d'une présomption et que le mort accusateur peut mentir, poursuivant une vengeance outre-tombe.

Les Noirs Réfugiés professent qu'à l'égard de wisi, il n'y a pas de certitude.

Un principe remarquable de droit coutumier est que si un membre d'un matrilignage est supposé avoir tué un de ses « frères », le pouvoir judiciaire des Boni ne peut intervenir. C'est une affaire purement intérieure au lignage.

Ainsi personne ne peut être inquiété ni expulsé pour fait de sorcellerie. Si on soupçonne fortement quelqu'un, on l'évitera, on lui battra froid tout en restant poli, mais on ne manifestera rien. A ce principe est attachée une idée très haute, celle de l'interdiction de la vengeance. Celui qui est victime d'un maléfice ne doit en aucun cas faire de contre-maléfice. Il ne peut que demander la protection des obia. En aucun cas on ne devra demander à une divinité ou à ses ancêtres de nuire à son agresseur.

Chez les Noirs Réfugiés, il n'y a qu'une sanction contre les wisimã : ils seront nécessairement décelés à leur mort. Le yaka du mort, interrogé par les anciens, sera obligé d'avouer : « c'est moi qui ai tué Untel et Untel ». On va aussitôt prévenir le grand man qui ordonne la procédure habituelle contre les wisimã : les cérémonies sont suspendues, le corps est transporté en canot jusqu'à un emplacement réservé aux maudits, en aval du pays Boni, et on l'abandonne en brousse sans l'enterrer. Le grand man Difu s'efforce de modifier cette coutume et d'imposer que les wisimã soient enterrés dans un cimetière spécial, mais sans grand succès jusqu'ici semble-t-il.

Il n'y a pas de broko di. Le conjoint peut se remarier immédiatement. Les biens du défunt étant présumés mal acquis, l'héritage est supprimé. La maison est détruite et jetée à l'eau, le canot abandonné au fil de l'eau. Les objets personnels du mort sont remis au grand man qui les distribue à qui il veut.

Les proches des personnes ainsi désignées sont accablés de honte mais ne peuvent rien dire. Aucune part de responsabilité ne leur est imputée.

Comment la société se protège-t-elle contre les maléfices d'outre-tombe du wisimã? Selon le grand man Difu, c'est un problème qui ne se pose pas. Le wisimã a été tué par Oduu, en châtiment de ses crimes. Comme tout être tire sa force du divin, il n'a plus de force, il est détruit en tant qu'être, ce n'est plus qu'une ombre vaine incapable de nuire.

En fait, chez les Noirs Réfugiés, ces procès faits à des morts sont fort rares. Alors qu'il meurt en moyenne en pays Boni une quinzaine de personnes par an dont une dizaine d'adultes, dans les vingt dernières années[1] on n'a décelé comme wisimã qu'une vingtaine de personnes, dont nous avons pu dresser la liste à partir de renseignements de provenance diverse qui concordaient très bien.

Dans presque tous les cas il s'agissait de gens ayant déjà été accusés de leur vivant comme wisimã, et sur lesquels les soupçons s'étaient portés soit en raison de leur vie solitaire et de leur caractère irascible, soit par suite d'une série de coïncidences.

D'une façon générale, on a tendance à accuser de wisi tout individu qui s'isole systématiquement, fait preuve de mauvaise volonté dans l'observation de la loi coutumière, ou se montre particulièrement égoïste, colèreux ou jaloux.

1. Ce ne tenant pas compte de la période 1957-1959 où l'on observait une nette recrudescence de la crainte des wisimã.

On a tendance aussi à soupçonner ceux qui dans leur jeunesse avaient abandonné la tribu pendant des années pour s'établir au milieu des créoles, et ceux qui fréquentent les créoles de la région connus comme quimboiseurs, ou vont trop souvent à Saint-Laurent ou Paramaribo consulter les lukumâ (voyants)[1].

Est également réputé suspect de wisi quiconque s'enrichit trop vite ou montre un amour immodéré de l'argent. On n'accuse jamais de wisi un homme travailleur qui gagne sa vie au grand jour. Mais celui qui fait du commerce est suspect. On pense par exemple que G..., qui a monté un magasin et gagne beaucoup d'argent, est un « engagé ». On le dit aussi de F..., entrepreneur de pêche particulièrement âpre au gain. Mais ni l'un ni l'autre n'ont été accusés ouvertement.

La jalousie. Parler de la jalousie comme force magique négative n'est pas trahir la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés. Ils la regardent comme une force atténuée de wisi, capable d'amener des malheurs même si aucun maléfice n'a été formulé. La jalousie est très marquée dans leur caractère, associée à un individualisme qui confine aux tendances asociales. Quand quelqu'un est accusé de wisi, la jalousie est l'explication la plus courante des crimes qu'on lui prête ; il est supposé par exemple qu'un homme peut être jaloux de l'enrichissement de son frère au point de le faire mourir, qu'une femme peut être jalouse de la beauté ou de la santé des enfants de sa sœur. Ne pas donner prise à la jalousie est la préoccupation constante des Noirs Réfugiés ; on l'observe dans les comportements habituels de la vie, par exemple dans les salutations qu'ils échangent sur la rivière. Jamais on ne dit : « Je vais bien », mais : « Je vais un peu ». Si on revient de la chasse on dit : « J'ai trouvé un peu ».

Il ne manque pas d'exemples de gens qui évitent de construire une belle maison ou d'acheter un moteur hors-bord pour ne pas donner prise à la jalousie. Cette préoccupation a de profondes répercussions sur la vie matérielle et l'économie des Noirs Réfugiés ; elle explique notamment l'absence chez eux de professions spécialisées et de commerce.

Bien des aspects de la loi coutumière des Noirs Réfugiés n'ont pas d'autre fonction que d'exorciser, si l'on peut dire, les tendances à la jalousie et à l'égoïsme, qui si elles jouaient librement empoisonneraient la vie de la collectivité.

Les rites de la mort et du deuil, dont nous avons montré qu'ils constituent le pivot de la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés, sont entièrement fondés sur l'idée de préserver le conjoint survivant de l'effet de la jalousie du défunt.

Quelques affaires de wisi. Nous transcrivons ces affaires telles qu'elles nous ont été relatées, en nous plaçant dans l'optique du narrateur, sans porter aucun jugement sur la nature des faits et leur vraisemblance.

Affaire N... — N..., de Kotika, travaillait l'or avec un autre Boni. Ayant mangé ensemble, ce dernier fut pris de vomissements incoercibles, puis il mourut. Ses proches s'en prirent à N.... l'accusant de wisi. Dans la nuit N... se réfugia à Benzdorp et prit passage sur un canot Djuka qui descendait le fleuve. Il s'établit à Paramaribo. Depuis sa sœur T... est allée le rejoindre. Ils ont quitté définitivement les Boni.

(1) La consultation d'un voyant n'est pas contraire aux lois de Ojun. L'atteinte à ces lois commence quand on prétend agir sur autrui.

Affaire P... — Toko (Dipélu II), se trouvant en canotage dans le bas fleuve, paria un matin avec son ami Kwami (qui nous raconta l'histoire) de rester en plongée le temps nécessaire pour remplir une dame-jeanne de 5 l. ; pari tenu ; Toko ne remonta pas, il s'était noyé. On retrouva son corps le lendemain. La famille s'en prit à un nommé P..., du village de Kotika, dont la femme N... l'avait quitté pour épouser Toko et qui à l'époque avait proféré des menaces. On l'insulta, on lui présenta le corps décomposé de Toko : « Mange-le, puisque tu l'as tué comme gibier ». P... nia obstinément. Le grand man ordonna qu'on le laissât tranquille, s'en remettant à Odun de le punir s'il était coupable. De fait, quelque temps après, P... mourut et fut déclaré wisimã.

Affaire S... — Vers 1956, S..., de Kotika, âgé d'environ 60 ans, travaillait avec Kwau à sarcler les abattis d'un créole de Benzdorp qui élevait des bœufs. Un matin cet éleveur vit un de ses bœufs couvert de sang sortant de blessures qui portaient la marque de dents et ne pouvaient avoir été faites par des chauves-souris. Il suivit les traces de sang qui le menèrent au hamac de S... Il l'accusa d'être un azemã (vampire) et de boire le sang des bœufs. S... ne répondit rien, ce qui parut à tous la preuve évidente de sa culpabilité. Il décrocha son canot et s'en alla. Depuis tout le monde à Kotika l'évite ; on s'abstient de l'accuser personnellement pour ne pas devenir victime de ses maléfices.

Affaire Agyémési — Agyémési, vieillard du village Asisi (Awara Bakka), mort en 1953, était un homme solitaire et morose, aux manières bizarres. Depuis longtemps il était accusé par B... (de Loka) et par N..., Djuka vivant au milieu des Boni, d'être un wisimã et de les avoir rendus malades. Il avait même été accusé devant le grand man, avait nié et le grand man selon l'usage lui avait dit : « Nous laissons à Dieu le soin de te punir si tu es coupable ». Agyémési, pour fuir ses persécuteurs, s'était installé au village indien d'Aloïké.

Ses accusateurs insistèrent auprès des gens de son lignage pour qu'on allât le chercher et qu'on l'interrogeât publiquement. On envoya A... et P..., qui allèrent le chercher en lui faisant croire que le conseil du lo Awara Bakka, mettant fin à une longue querelle, avait décidé de le nommer capitaine en tant que doyen du lo. Sans méfiance, il les suivit à Asisi. Il fut accueilli par ses accusateurs qui l'insultèrent tumultueusement, sans qu'il y eût toutefois de voies de fait. Le pauvre homme en resta sans voix, ce qui parut à tous la preuve évidente de sa culpabilité. Il s'alita et 5 jours après il était mort[1].

Bien entendu il fut reconnu comme wisimã par la première adjuration faite à son corps porté dans le papay sur la tête de deux hommes : « si tu es un homme de wisi, n'avance pas vers nous ». Le mort recula.

(1) Les Noirs Réfugiés sont si suggestibles que le seul fait de se voir maudit et abandonné de tous doit amener un choc psychologique susceptible d'amener la mort. Des cas semblables ont été observés en Afrique.

La suite de l'interrogatoire montra qu'il n'avait encore tué personne, mais qu'il avait été tué par Odun alors qu'il se préparait à tuer quelqu'un de son lignage.

Les persécuteurs de Agyéméi, contrairement à leur espoir, ne guérirent pas après sa mort des maladies qu'ils attribuaient à ses maléfices ; cela n'ébranla en rien leur conviction ; ils partirent à Paramaribo se faire traiter par un magicien créole (car les créoles de Surinam, qui pratiquent indifféremment magie blanche et magie noire, sont de ce fait réputés plus experts que les Noirs Réfugiés pour combattre les effets de wisi).

En nous racontant cette histoire, le grand man nous dit qu'il faut toujours être prudent avec les accusations de wisi, parce qu'on ne peut jamais être sûr. Un homme injustement accusé peut se suicider et poursuivre de son kunu ses accusateurs (la plupart des Boni affirment qu'ils agiraient ainsi en pareil cas). Jadis, on appliquait aux wisimã décelés les châtiments barbares en usage en Afrique : on les brûlait vifs. Mais on raconte que l'un d'eux, quelques mois après, entreprit contre le lignage de ses accusateurs un kunu qui dure encore aujourd'hui. Il avait été condamné à tort ! C'est par peur du kunu, plus que par souci d'humanité, que ces châtiments ont été supprimés.

Il semble bien que la constante crainte des wisimã, dans laquelle vivent les Boni, n'est qu'une hallucination collective, et que très rares sont ceux qui osent se livrer à des pratiques qui attireraient sur eux de si terribles sanctions sociales et religieuses. Quant à ces pratiques elles-mêmes, elles apparaissent sans aucun contenu réel, et les malheurs qui leur sont attribués ne sont que des maladies banales ou des accidents quelconques. Nous n'avons jamais entendu parler d'empoisonnement au sens habituel du terme.

Les procès de wisimã sont à nos yeux l'aspect le plus déplaisant de la civilisation des Noirs Réfugiés. Mais il faut admettre qu'ils correspondent à de profondes nécessités. Ces sociétés archaïques ont besoin d'une matérialisation évidente des principes qu'elles se sont donnés. Puisque le mal existe, s'opposant au bien, il existe des pratiques de wisi et des wisimã, et le châtiment des malfaisants est indispensable pour que la société demeure soumise à la loi du bien.

Par sa notion du kunu qui détourne vers les dieux la responsabilité de la plupart des malheurs, par l'extrême rareté des procès de wisimã, par la prudence de son action judiciaire qui en fait ne poursuit que des morts, la société des Noirs Réfugiés se montre humaine et réaliste.

Si l'on entreprenait auprès des Noirs Réfugiés une action déterminée pour faire disparaître ces pratiques, on risquerait d'obscurcir leur notion du bien et du mal, et d'enlever toute efficacité à leur loi coutumière.

L'ordre social des Noirs Réfugiés ne peut se maintenir si ne demeurent pas nettement posées l'interdiction de nuire à quiconque et l'interdiction de la vengeance. Que ces maléfices soient sans contenu réel, peu importe : c'est l'intention de nuire qui compte, avec toutes ses conséquences sociales et psychologiques.

Quand on observe les populations créoles des Guyanes et des Antilles, pourtant soumises depuis plusieurs siècles à l'influence du christianisme, on est frappé du développement de la sorcellerie et de ses répercussions sur l'ensemble de la vie sociale. L'enseignement reçu à l'école et au catéchisme, qui englobe dans une même réprobation magie blanche et magie noire, a grandement contribué à faire perdre à ces populations les principes de morale sociale de leurs ancêtres, sans pour autant modifier leur représentation du monde. Puisque les pratiques de magie sont rejetées par la religion, puisqu'elle en nie même la réalité, on ne songe pas, quand on se trouve contraint d'y recourir, à y transposer la notion du bien et du mal qu'elle enseigne. La magie noire s'introduit presque inévitablement par la nécessité où l'on croit se trouver de se défendre ; puis son usage devient habituel et les deux formes de magie finissent par se mêler et n'être plus regardées comme fondamentalement différentes l'une de l'autre.

Les affaires de wisi et la loi coutumière des Boni. Dans les villages africains, les affaires de sorcellerie se traduisent par d'interminables et vaines discussions, accusations forcenées, protestations d'innocence, parfois aveux plus ou moins sincères, serments et épreuves judiciaires aux résultats toujours contestés. Ces affaires ne sont jamais finies ; elles sont en évolution permanente, parfois pendant des mois et des années. L'opinion se porte successivement sur des hypothèses différentes, selon les événements qui surviennent, cherchant sa voie à tâtons comme un homme perdu dans les ténèbres.

Il est clair que les premiers législateurs des Noirs Réfugiés, en reportant le jugement à la mort des intéressés, et en refusant aux wisimã toute espèce de pardon ou d'accommodement, se sont efforcés d'empêcher le développement de ces crises douloureuses. A quoi bon discuter interminablement, puisqu'il n'y a pas de preuve certaine, et puisque personne ne peut avouer ? Mais la loi coutumière se heurte sur ce point à des tendances trop profondes pour être entièrement réfrénées. Les lois de Odun ne sont pas toujours obéies à la lettre, et il arrive parfois que les Boni perdent pied dans l'observance de leur loi coutumière. Il survient alors chez eux des crises aussi violentes et aussi confuses que dans les villages d'Afrique Noire, allant jusqu'à paralyser la vie sociale pendant plusieurs semaines ; puis la paix revient pour plusieurs mois, parfois pour plusieurs années.

En 1928, une femme de Boniville, N..., fut convaincue d'avoir payé un « quimboiseur » créole pour faire mourir le grand man. Elle avoua, chose rare dans ces sortes d'affaires, et la matérialité des faits ne paraissait pas douteuse. Les Boni furent fortement impressionnés par cet événement sans précédent, et pendant plusieurs semaines les membres du lignage intéressé furent dans une telle agitation qu'on put croire qu'ils avaient perdu la raison. A Boniville on « fit tribunal » en permanence pendant près de deux mois, et l'on discuta tant que les travaux agricoles furent délaissés, et une partie de la récolte de riz perdue.

Qu'allait-on faire de cette femme ? Les lois de Odun interdisaient de la tuer, et on ne pouvait davantage la chasser. Les Boni firent des ouvertures discrètes à l'administration pour savoir s'il n'était pas possible de la faire emprisonner. Ils furent surpris d'apprendre que la loi française ne reconnaît pas le délit de sorcellerie. Quelqu'un proposa alors de la faire admettre comme femme de service à la léproserie de l'Acarouani, sur la côte. Cette suggestion obtint un résultat surprenant ; les Boni furent unanimes à penser que faire vivre dans une léproserie quelqu'un qui n'était pas lépreux était un châtiment pire que la mort, et on se résolut à lui pardonner.

Comment s'y prit-on, puisque les lois de Odun ne permettent pas de pardonner à un wisimã? Personne ne put nous donner à ce sujet une justification satisfaisante, mais en 1959 A..., l'année précédente honnie et maltraitée, avait repris une vie normale dans son village.

En fait, une affaire de wisi n'est terminée qu'à la mort de l'intéressé. Si un homme qui a été accusé de wisi au cours de sa vie meurt accidentellement, ou frappé d'une maladie foudroyante, le fait qu'il ait été châtié par Odun apparaît comme une évidence incontestable. L'affaire se fixe dans la mémoire du groupe sous une forme définitive, et sera donnée en exemple pour inciter au respect de la loi coutumière.

Enterrement d'un wisimã. Nous transcrivons ici un récit fait par un témoin de cette scène, K..., du village Papalston, en enlevant les précisions de date et de lieu.

« Devant un conseil composé d'une demi-douzaine d'hommes et de deux chefs de villages, l'interrogatoire commença ; on porta la morte dans un vieux fond de canot ; par moment j'ai servi moi-même de porteur. Pressée de questions, elle avoua qu'elle avait wisi[1] et qu'elle avait été tuée par Odun. La cause était entendue. On nous ordonna de transporter le corps dans le lieu réservé aux maudits, en aval du pays Boni. Arrivé là, on porta de nouveau le corps sur la tête de deux hommes, lui demandant de choisir l'endroit où il voulait être abandonné. La morte nous entraîna au loin dans la forêt, erra un moment puis s'arrêta. Nous l'avons abandonnée par terre, après avoir écarté les étoffes qui la recouvraient, et sommes partis sans avoir effectué aucun rite.

« Ensuite nous sommes allés à Boniville, le grand man invoqua pour nous Odun, exposant qu'on n'avait fait que suivre ses lois et qu'il devait protéger les exécutants contre toute suite fâcheuse. »

Développement de la sorcellerie. Depuis 1957, le pays Boni traverse une crise ; la

(1) On dit communément « avoir wisi, comme dont dit « avoir un obia », « avoir un remède ».

crainte de la sorcellerie empoisonne la vie des villages, alors qu'en 1948-50 c'était une préoccupation de second plan.

Cela tient à ce que l'enrichissement rapide d'une partie des Boni aggrave les jalousies et les suspicions. D'autre part, ces affaires ont tendance à apparaître par série. Depuis l'affaire relatée ci-dessus (1958), où une femme, N..., a été convaincue d'avoir payé un quimboiseur créole pour faire mourir le grand man, affaire qui a fortement impressionné les Boni, on a tendance à voir wisi dans tous les malheurs qui surviennent.

En novembre 1958, la mort d'une fillette de 12 ans, du village Kotika, a été attribuée à son oncle Mbomaolo, récemment émigré à Surinam et établi dans un village créole. On suppose qu'il s'est « engagé », c'est-à-dire qu'il a vendu son âme au diable[1], ce qui nécessite de sacrifier un de ses proches, les enfants de la sœur étant regardés comme les victimes les plus agréables au démon.

Alors qu'autrefois un à deux pour dix des morts étaient attribués à wisi, en 1957 et 1958, pour quatorze morts d'adultes dont nous avons pu obtenir l'interprétation, on comptait :

— Quatre wisimã tués par Odun, dont deux femmes de plus de 85 ans, qui de leur vivant n'avaient jamais fait l'objet de remarques défavorables ;

— Une mort par l'action d'un wisimã.

soit au total plus d'un tiers des décès ; sur les neuf autres, deux ont été regardés comme des morts naturelles (morts de vieillesse), sept ont été attribués au kunu.

Les Noirs Réfugiés et la magie créole. Certains d'entre eux ont tendance à aller chercher auprès des lukumã ce que leur morale sociale leur interdit : la vengeance ou le succès acquis aux dépens d'autrui. Ils ont prononcé un serment qui leur interdit la pratique de wisi : pour la plupart d'entre eux, il est clair que s'ils payaient un « playeur » pour nuire à quelqu'un, ce serait la même chose que s'ils faisaient le maléfice eux-mêmes. Mais d'autres font sur ce point une restriction mentale.

En 1951, G..., du lo Kotika, âgé alors d'une vingtaine d'années, se trouva malade alors qu'il séjournait à Saint-Laurent. Il s'en fut trouver un maître (voyant) créole qui lui présenta un miroir, lui annonçant qu'il allait y voir le visage de celui qui l'avait « playé ». G... ne vit rien dans le miroir. Le maître ne se démonta pas pour autant et lui révéla que le « playeur » devait être quelqu'un de la famille de sa femme. G... se remémora alors une dispute qu'il avait eue quelque temps auparavant avec un des frères de sa femme et se laissa convaincre : depuis ce jour il est brouillé avec son beau-frère.

Le maître lui demanda 2.000 francs pour prix de sa consultation.

Malédiction. Quelqu'un qui se juge victime d'une iniquité dispose d'une ressource

[1] Cette notion, qui joue un si grand rôle dans les croyances antillaises, est sans aucune correspondance chez les Noirs Réfugiés. Il n'y a pas de mot dans la langue Boni pour traduire le terme « engagé ». On traduit ainsi : a e sukii diabla, il cherche le diable. Les Boni n'ont pas une représentation nette du diable, et cette notion demeure en fait étrangère à leurs croyances.

suprême : maudire son adversaire, c'est-à-dire s'adresser directement au Dieu suprême, Masa Gadu, pour lui demander de punir son adversaire. C'est ce qu'on appelle seni gadu — envoyer Dieu — contre quelqu'un. Pour cela, tout en demandant à Dieu de le tuer ou de le rendre malade, on s'agenouille et on frappe le sol de ses deux mains, en présence de l'adversaire ou devant sa maison. Cet acte est regardé comme totalement différent de wisi car on s'en remet à la justice de Dieu, qui juge selon l'équité et ne punit que le coupable.

Quoi qu'il en soit, maudire est pour les Noirs Réfugiés un acte très grave. Il peut arriver que, se sentant coupable, l'auteur de l'injustice demande pardon et promette de réparer ses torts. L'auteur de la malédiction implore de nouveau Masa Gadu pour retirer les paroles qu'il avait prononcées : « Il m'a rendu raison, ne faites rien contre lui ». Mais il arrive plus souvent encore qu'il s'agisse d'une affaire compliquée, que les deux parties en cause soient persuadées de leur bon droit et se maudissent réciproquement. La cause doit alors être portée devant le grand man et arrangée sur l'heure, sinon des malheurs risqueraient de fondre sur les deux lignages. Le grand man juge sans appel et inflige une punition à celui qui avait tort sur le fond du débat. Puis il exige que les adversaires se réconcilient devant le fraga tiki où l'on fait l'offrande de l'eau et du tafia.

Ces conceptions ont pour effet de rendre à peu près impossibles les haines et les rancunes cachées, que les Noirs Réfugiés craignent beaucoup car elles sont la source de wisi.

D'une façon générale le fait de se mettre en colère en public et d'injurier gravement quelqu'un, est considéré comme une offense contre la loi morale et religieuse, capable d'attirer les malheurs ; c'est une forme atténuée de wisi; dans les cas graves le grand man peut infliger une sévère punition aux coupables.

obia. Les Noirs Réfugiés emploient le mot obia[1] pour désigner aussi bien l'objet auquel est attachée une force magique, que cette force elle-même. Mais aucune confusion ne se fait dans leur esprit; l'objet n'est qu'un simple support, il n'est rien par lui-même. Le voyageur qui les voit préparer pour un malade une infusion de feuilles peut être tenté de croire qu'ils attachent à telle feuille le pouvoir d'agir contre telle maladie ; ce serait une erreur, ils attachent à ces feuilles et à l'argile blanche, pamba, le pouvoir de retenir,

(1) Le terme obia est employé par les Noirs Réfugiés quand ils s'adressent à des étrangers, pour désigner la magie positive, mais en réalité ce terme a dans leur langue un sens bien différent. Il désigne toute espèce d'action magique, aussi bien négative que positive ; de même le terme obiamd a aussi bien le sens de sorcier que celui de détenteur d'un remède.

Les Boni emploient entre eux le mot dessi, remède, à la place de obia. Ils n'emploient pas le mot dessimd à la place de obiamd. On dit par exemple d'un homme qui connaît les rites d'un culte de possession « A sabi Papa gadu seni » (il connaît les choses de Papa gadu).

Le terme gadumd désigne celui qui est possédé d'un dieu, et non celui qui sait provoquer la possession.

Dans la suite de cet ouvrage nous continuerons cependant à employer les termes obia et obiamd pour désigner la magie positive, afin de faciliter la confrontation avec les auteurs de langue anglaise et néerlandaise qui l'ont employé dans ce sens.

de condenser la force vitale émanée de tel dieu. C'est le dieu qui « fait ɔbia », et non pas les hommes ; les hommes ne font que recueillir cette énergie et la mettent en application.

Les Boni distinguent deux catégories de remèdes magiques :

— Ceux qui viennent d'un dieu par l'intermédiaire d'un possédé. Le dieu doit être consulté chaque fois, et le remède qu'il donne n'est valable que pour le consultant seul, et pour un temps limité ; il ne peut agir que quand le dieu a été payé, sous forme de boisson ou d'étoffes le plus souvent ; il n'est rien dû en principe au possédé (on admet qu'il bénéficie du paiement fait au dieu), mais l'usage est de lui offrir une bouteille de tafia.

La consultation d'un possédé est aux yeux des Noirs Réfugiés le mécanisme normal par lequel l'ɔbia descend du dieu aux hommes.

Certains dieux Ampuku donneraient des remèdes valables pour une maladie déterminée et pour n'importe quel consultant, remèdes qui pourraient être transmis d'un homme à l'autre. Nous n'avons malheureusement pu obtenir de renseignements précis à ce sujet.

— Ceux dont l'origine n'est pas connue, et qui sont transmis d'un homme à l'autre depuis très longtemps. On croit qu'il peut s'agir de remèdes trouvés jadis empiriquement par un homme ; c'est le cas de beaucoup de remèdes spécifiques pour telle ou telle maladie.

En pareil cas le paiement est fait au possesseur du remède et à lui seul.

L'argile blanche, pemba (le mot et le rite sont d'origine congolaise), ne subit pas de préparation spéciale. Elle a dans la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés le pouvoir de fixer sur le corps de l'homme, l'influence magique de l'infusion de feuilles.

Chez les Boni, mis à part le culte de Odun, il n'y a pas de prêtres à proprement parler, investis d'une fonction à la fois sociale et religieuse. Un grand nombre de personnes sont regardées comme « connaissant des remèdes ». Cette notion implique à la fois des connaissances et un pouvoir. En général l'ɔbiamã n'est supposé détenir qu'un pouvoir spécialisé : par exemple il sait préparer un ɔbia de chasse, ou un ɔbia de protection contre les wisimã. Ce pouvoir, il l'a reçu de son père (exceptionnellement semble-t-il de son oncle) qui l'a instruit avant de mourir dans les rites spécialisés qu'il comporte et lui a transmis son pouvoir en lui donnant mula.

Pour donner mula à quelqu'un, on souffle dans ses mains, on les lui impose sur la tête en prononçant une formule par laquelle on lui transmet tel pouvoir ou telle connaissance magique.

Quel est le principe de légitimité ? Qui a le droit de se dire ɔbiamã? Il semble bien qu'au fond tout se réduise à ceci : l'ɔbiamã a la conviction, la sensation qu'il détient ce pouvoir ; quant à ses consultants, ils croient remarquer l'efficacité de son ɔbia; s'ils cessent d'avoir confiance dans son remède, ils s'abstiendront de venir le lui demander, voilà tout ; aucune défense sociale ne vient limiter l'action des ɔbiamã. Le grand man n'interviendrait que contre quelqu'un qui prétendrait détenir des remèdes pour nuire à autrui ou pour capter sa volonté, ce qui serait wisi.

Les Boni admettent la possibilité de tromperie en matière d'ɔbia, surtout de la part de gens trop jeunes, mais ils ont la conviction que les anciens (les gens de plus de 55-60 ans) détiennent la sagesse et qu'on peut s'adresser à eux en toute confiance.

Principaux ɔbia. Le Kumènli bui, bracelet de Kumènli, qu'il ne faut pas confondre avec le man nèyge ɔbia, est matérialisé par un bracelet de fibres qu'on ne porte pas au bras mais qu'on enferme dans sa mallette. C'est un ɔbia polyvalent qui assure à la fois la protection de son propriétaire contre le sabre et le fusil, sa prospérité matérielle et sa sécurité morale, car il lui fournit un procédé de divination très apprécié.

Cet ɔbia doit être préparé chaque fois sur les ordres d'un Kumènli et en sa présence dans le corps d'un possédé. C'est le Kumènli qui désigne les feuilles à aller chercher et les traitements à leur faire subir ; d'après les renseignements que nous avons pu obtenir, ils consistent à plonger dans l'infusion de feuilles un sabre, puis une hache, portés au rouge, tandis que le postulant récite des formules destinées à fixer dans l'ɔbia le pouvoir qu'il désire (que le sabre ne me coupe pas, que je devienne riche, etc.).

Le man nèyge ɔbia, exclusivement destiné à la protection contre le sabre et le fusil, est matérialisé par un anneau de fer grossièrement confectionné enserrant le bras un peu au-dessous de l'épaule[1]. Cet ɔbia ne doit pas être confondu avec les ɔbia Kumènli. Obtenir la possession par un Kumènli et le man nèyge ɔbia sont deux choses différentes, correspondant à des rites différents.

La possession par un Kumènli donne dit-on, l'invulnérabilité pendant le temps de la transe, mais dans son état ordinaire l'individu reste vulnérable (on dit seulement qu'en cas de danger la gila « monte » immédiatement).

Quelqu'un qui a un man nèyga ɔbia n'a pas de transes de possession, mais on affirme qu'il est invulnérable en permanence (sauf rupture du kina). Pour obtenir cet ɔbia il faut se faire « laver » pendant très longtemps par un ancien qui connaît les feuilles en question. Il les lui re déjà pilées pour que nul ne puisse connaître ce secret en dehors du fils ou du neveu à qui il le lègue.

Il faut continuer à se laver quatre fois par an pendant 15 jours chaque fois, pour entretenir la force de l'ɔbia.

Pendant ces 15 jours on se lave trois fois par jour, en secret (en principe personne ne sait que vous avez cet ɔbia). Pendant ces périodes on ne doit avoir aucun rapport avec une femme ni même lui parler.

On affirme que quelqu'un qui a un man nèyge ɔbia peut impunément être frappé à coups de sabre et même recevoir une décharge de fusil.

On croit que cet ɔbia, appelé autrefois man feli ɔbia, aurait été obtenu par les ancêtres au temps des guerres contre les blancs ; encore aujourd'hui il inspire une confiance inébranlable. En octobre 1962, nous avons vu M..., homme de 45 ans, d'un grand bon sens, se faire une profonde entaille à la jambe en coupant une liane, en dépit de son ɔbia. Le doute ne l'effleura pas une seconde : il nous dit que certainement, à son insu, il avait mangé quelque chose de contraire au kina de l'ɔbia. Comme nous travaillions à proximité des villages, il s'en fut aussitôt trouver le maître du remède pour en faire rétablir le pouvoir. Pour rien au monde il ne serait reparti pour une longue tournée en brousse avec la sensation qu'il était à la merci d'un accident.

(1) Le fait de porter un anneau de fer au bras ne correspond pas nécessairement à la possession de cet ɔbia. Il s'agit en général d'ɔbia plus communs destinés à protéger de la lèpre.

Viennent ensuite dans les préoccupations des Noirs Réfugiés, les ɔbia appelés lapu, c'est-à-dire protection. Il en existe de nombreuses sortes adaptées aux divers dangers d'ordre surnaturel (protection contre d'autres divinités, contre les entités maléfiques de la brousse, contre les wisimã).

Les lapu contre les wisimã sont demandés généralement aux Ampuku. Nous en avons vu un remarquable devant la maison de F... (Dju). Son propriétaire n'en était pas peu fier et il nous en parla sans réticence.

L'ɔbia, placé à même la terre devant la porte, était composé de la représentation grossière en argile d'une tête, dans laquelle apparaissaient deux yeux largement ouverts : devant, étaient plantées en terre 3 touffes végétales dont un plant d'arachide, un plant de maïs ; le tout était surmonté d'une petite corbeille contenant un œuf. Il fallait à intervalles réguliers, arroser l'ɔbia d'une certaine infusion de feuilles pour lui redonner de la force. Cet ɔbia assurait une protection infaillible contre les wisimã ; en effet, aucun d'eux n'aurait pu franchir le seuil sans se heurter le pied au cadre de la porte, en dépit de toutes ses précautions ; F... affirmait que son ɔbia constituait de ce fait un moyen efficace de détection des wisimã, car il lui suffisait d'inviter les suspects à pénétrer dans sa case pour être fixé : le wisimã refusait, de peur d'être ainsi dénoncé aux yeux de tous ; on pouvait ainsi à tout le moins préciser les soupçons.

D'autres ɔbia sont dits suma mɔfu lelɛy (ɔbia contre la « bouche des gens », c'est-à-dire la jalousie des gens). On les voit presque toujours sur les beaux fusils ; ils ont pour support une corde faite de fibres de palmier morili, à laquelle sont fixés deux cauris.

Les ɔbia destinés à soigner les maladies ont généralement pour support une calebasse contenant l'infusion de feuilles et une boule de pɛmba (kaolin). L'intéressé s'asperge plusieurs fois par jour de ce liquide.

Il existe des ɔbia particuliers pour la construction des canots. L'ouverture au feu de la coque, opération délicate, échoue parfois. Pour assurer son succès chacun possède une recette personnelle, héritée de son père ou de son oncle. Elle ne fait pas appel nommément et directement à l'action d'un dieu ; les Boni n'ont pas une idée nette de l'origine ni de la nature de ces rites. Il s'agit d'une macération de deux ou trois sortes de feuilles, faisant en général partie de la flore secondaire qui entoure les villages, et varient d'un homme à l'autre. On verse cette macération sur le canot retourné avant de commencer le brûlage, en disant : « le canot ne doit pas se fendre, il doit s'ouvrir bien ».

Les lois de Odun interdisent l'usage de charmes visant à forcer l'amour d'une femme que l'on désire ; ce serait une atteinte à la liberté d'une personne, donc wisi. Il est bien possible cependant que certains aillent chercher auprès des magiciens créoles des charmes de ce genre. Mais on admet par contre les ɔbia supposés permettre aux gens qui ont peu de succès auprès des femmes, d'en avoir davantage à l'avenir.

Il ne semble pas qu'il y ait une hiérarchie d'ɔbia et que l'on suppose que telle catégorie d'ɔbia soit par nature plus forte que telle autre ; on observe en effet que les Noirs Réfugiés vont couramment demander à une divinité un ɔbia pour se protéger contre une autre. En voici un exemple :

En 1951, l'Administration fit commencer un nettoyage systématique de la rivière Petit Inini, pour débarrasser son cours des innombrables bois tombés qui rendaient difficile l'emploi des moteurs sur les canots. Une équipe de Boni fut employée à ce travail sous la direction d'un contre-maître créole. Pendant que le travail s'effectuait, un Papa gadu « vint dans la tête » d'une vieille femme nommée M... du lo Awara Bakka. Il révéla qu'il s'opposerait à ce travail, car il résidait précisément dans ce lieu et le bruit des moteurs le dérangerait. A leur retour en pays Boni, les hommes chargés de ce travail apprirent la décision du dieu et sous un prétexte quelconque refusèrent de reprendre le travail. En août 1952, pendant que nous étions en mission, un ɔbiamã fit connaître qu'un Ampuku acceptait de donner un lapu, c'est-à-dire un ɔbia de protection, contre ce Papa gadu. Nous avons assisté à une discussion au cours de laquelle plusieurs Boni projetèrent de reprendre ce travail, mais en demandant un salaire élevé pour couvrir les frais de l'ɔbia[1]. Ces frais s'élevaient à environ 5.000 francs par personne, soit :

— 3.000 pour le paiement du dieu, comprenant de l'étoffe rouge, de l'étoffe bleu foncé, des perles blanches, de la bière, du rhum, des cauris ; l'ɔbiamã les prendrait pour les exposer dans la forêt.

— 1.500 pour le paiement du travail de l'ɔbiamã, comportant une pièce de toile, de la bière, un bidon de poudre, une poule.

Le remède comporterait une infusion de feuilles avec laquelle on devrait « laver son corps » matin et soir pendant la durée des travaux.

Quant au chef d'équipe créole, il s'était prudemment fait affecter à un autre travail.

On a l'habitude de demander protection contre un Papa gadu à un Ampuku et réciproquement (nous en avons cité un exemple ci-dessus), mais on ne demande pas protection à un Kumẽnti ; les Kumẽnti ne s'occupent que des maladies.

Renouvellement du pouvoir des ɔbia. Les Noirs Réfugiés ont l'idée qu'aucun pouvoir magique ne peut durer s'il n'est renouvelé par des formules et des offrandes s'adressant au dieu dont il est issu. Chaque année, à des dates variables pour chaque ɔbia, on doit renouveler le pouvoir de l'ɔbia en trempant l'objet support dans une macération de certaines feuilles. Ce renouvellement ne peut avoir lieu le 1er janvier. Ce jour, toutes les feuilles perdent leur pouvoir.

(1) Des faits de ce genre sont courants en forêt guyanaise, même chez les créoles. Pour des travaux difficiles ou inhabituels, les salaires élevés que l'on demande servent en partie à rétribuer les magiciens.

M. W. F. van Lier écrit que chez les Djuka, les objets (bracelets, etc...) servant de support à un remède magique sont jetés à la mort de leur possesseur car ils ont perdu tout pouvoir. Les Boni n'ont pas cette conception ; chez eux, ces objets conservent leur valeur pour le fils du défunt, pourvu qu'avant de mourir il les lui ait volontairement transmis en lui donnant mula.

Transmissions des ɔbia. Souvent on lègue un ɔbia simultanément à un fils et à un neveu. On se préoccupe de ne pas perdre l'ɔbia pour le lignage. C'est ainsi que certains lignages ont la spécialité de certains ɔbia.

Kãndu. Les Noirs Réfugiés appellent kãndu un objet magique destiné à protéger les biens (maisons, récoltes) contre le vol. Ce procédé est également très employé par les créoles.

Il y a trois sortes courantes de kãndu :

– Pili tiki kãndu. Il est fait d'un bâton fendu enfoncé dans le sol et dans la fente duquel sont placées horizontalement des feuilles de bananiers sèches ou des baguettes. Ce procédé est originaire du Dahomey.

Sikopu kãndu. Il comporte une pelle enfoncée dans le sol devant la maison (l'idée de pelle est associée à l'idée de mort, car cet instrument sert plus spécialement à creuser les fosses) ;

Bɔɔ kãndu, constitué par un arc et une flèche plantés dans le sol, Celui qui installe un kandu prononce la formule : mi poli yu ya, efu a sama kɔm fu pufu mi sani yu mu siki ẽn (je te mets ici, si quelqu'un vient voler mes biens, tu dois le rendre malade).

Si quelqu'un passe outre et commet un vol, il sera frappé à plus ou moins longue échéance de maladies variées.

Selon les conceptions des Noirs Réfugiés, le kãndu est aveugle et frappe aussi bien l'ami qui est venu prendre des objets parce qu'il en a reçu l'autorisation auparavant. Aussi beaucoup renoncent à placer des kãndu, comme chez nous on hésite à placer des pièges à loup, de peur de provoquer des accidents.

Toutefois, le kãndu est sans action sur les gens qui ont le même interdit fondamental (bunsi kina) que celui qui l'a placé. Cette conception montre que ces interdits transmis du père aux enfants sont bien la marque de véritables patrilignages.

En fait, nous l'avons constaté à plusieurs reprises, il y a des cambriolages en pays Boni malgré les kãndu et on n'arrive pas à déceler leurs auteurs ; il est infiniment probable qu'il ne faut pas voir là la marque d'esprits forts, ne croyant pas aux maléfices ; ce sont des gens qui ont obtenu d'un wisimã un talisman de magie noire plus fort que le kãndu ! C'est tout au moins l'explication que donnent leurs victimes.

On peut lever un kãndu à l'intention d'un homme quelconque, que l'on veut par exemple envoyer prendre un objet que l'on a oublié ; pour cela il suffit de lui donner mula : on souffle dans ses mains et on les impose sur la tête de l'homme en disant : mi puu a kãndu gi yu, a 'ã mu du a sani ãgga yu : je retire le kãndu pour toi, il ne doit rien te faire

On peut donner mulu rétroactivement : si quelqu'un s'aperçoit qu'il a involontairement encouru le châtiment d'un kãndu, il a plusieurs jours pour pouvoir demander mulu au propriétaire, car l'action du kãndu est lente.

Croyances diverses

Fyo-fyo. Si un Boni est en mauvais termes avec quelqu'un de son lignage ou d'un autre lignage, il a le droit absolu de lui battre froid et de cesser de le fréquenter. Mais si, dissimulant sa rancune, il cherche par calcul à maintenir l'apparence de relations amicales, il risque de tomber malade, d'être frappé de calamités diverses, ou même de mourir par l'effet de ce que les Noirs Réfugiés appellent un fyo-fyo. La nature de cette force n'est pas claire, on sait seulement que son support est un petit insecte commun nommé fyo-fyo. On affirme que si une personne meurt des suites d'un fyo-fyo, on verra l'un de ces insectes sortir de son corps par le nez au moment de la mort.

Taku sani. Les Noirs Réfugiés désignent sous ce nom des entités maléfiques de la brousse, qu'ils se représentent comme de nature non humaine, par opposition aux taku yorku, esprits errants de défunts rejetés par la société. Ces entités sont des êtres inférieurs dépourvus de conscience mais dangereux pour les hommes en lesquels ils peuvent entrer, les rendant malades ou fous. Certaines de ces entités sont supposées résider dans les végétaux, comme les kɔlkɔli, d'autres sont supposées revêtir l'apparence de nains (baku), que certains croient parfois apercevoir à l'aube aux abords des villages.

Contre les taku sani on se prémunit par des ɔbia spéciaux, et ceux qui ne se sentent pas complètement garantis prennent par surcroît un certain nombre de précautions, comme celle de déchirer les feuilles dont ils se sont servis pour boire l'eau des criques.

Tyifunga[1]. On appelle ainsi les clôtures magiques faites de langues de palmier pinot, pina lɔngu, attachées à une ficelle dont à certaines occasions on entoure complètement un village. Ces clôtures sont supposées barrer le passage aux mauvais esprits de la brousse (taku sani); on les met en place notamment en cas d'épidémie, ainsi qu'avant les grandes fêtes qui attirent une foule de personnes, parmi lesquelles peuvent se glisser des wisimã. Après avoir mis en place la clôture, les gens se rangent en ligne à une extrémité du village et se déplacent lentement de façon à en balayer toute la surface, tirant des coups de fusil, faisant tout le bruit possible en frappant des objets métalliques et frappant le sol avec des roseaux pour expulser les mauvais esprits. C'est ce qu'on appelle naki tyifunga. Les anciens répètent la formule : « U naki tyifunga fu ɔgi na: mu ku a so (Nous frappons tyifunga pour que les mauvais (esprits) ne puissent venir à terre) ».

La barrière magique est ensuite laissée en place jusqu'à ce qu'elle soit pourrie.

Croyances relatives à la lèpre. Les lépreux sont enterrés aux limites du cimetière, mais ils ne sont pas considérés comme maudits et on porte leur deuil normalement.

(1) On emploie aussi le mot aɔlɛ, emprunté aux Fon du Dahomey.

On admet que si quelqu'un est atteint de la lèpre, c'est qu'il a « cassé » son bonsi kina. On suppose qu'un ennemi peut par malveillance, cacher une parcelle de l'aliment interdit dans la nourriture. C'est pourquoi les Boni ne se disent pas volontiers entre eux leurs interdits.

Si quelqu'un se rend compte qu'il a rompu son kina, il va voir, non un obiaman, mais le guérisseur spécialisé de la lèpre, et lui demande de le traiter à titre préventif.

Croyances relatives au fusil et à la chasse. Le fusil, entré depuis deux siècles dans la vie courante des Noirs Réfugiés, a pris une place importante dans leur magie. C'est le symbole de la virilité. Un Noir Réfugié qui n'a plus de fusil est un homme humilié et presque déshonoré. Comme nous l'expliquait l'un d'eux en nous suppliant de l'aider à remplacer sa vieille pétoire mangée de rouille : « Si vous ne pouvez pas vous présenter devant les femmes avec le sabre, le sac de chasse à l'épaule et le fusil à la main, vous n'êtes pas un homme. »

Cette idée a été transposée sur le plan de la magie et on admet que le wisimd peut, en faisant des maléfices sur un fusil, atteindre le propriétaire de l'arme dans sa virilité. On admet qu'il suffit que quelqu'un mette le doigt dans le canon du fusil en prononçant une formule de vengeance, ou même en étant animé de haine contre le propriétaire de l'arme, pour que ce fusil ne puisse plus tirer juste. Aussi, pour éviter ces malheurs, les Boni ne se séparent jamais de leur fusil et ne le prêtent jamais à personne. Si, malgré ces précautions ils ont l'impression que le fusil ne tire plus aussi bien, ils iront auprès d'un obiaman pour le faire laver de l'influence maléfique. Il existe pour cela plusieurs remèdes, qui tous consistent à tremper le fusil pendant un à trois jours dans des infusions de feuilles, ce qui a pour résultat infaillible de le faire rouiller. Nous avons vu abîmer ainsi un fusil hammerless dernier modèle par un chef canotier Boni intelligent, fin mécanicien et habituellement plein de bon sens.

Nous n'avons jamais été témoins chez les Boni de rites de chasse individuels ou collectifs, prétendant attirer le gibier ou favoriser sa rencontre (alors qu'au contraire les « pouvoirs » de chasse sont extrêmement répandus parmi les créoles).

Pouvoir magique de la femme. Les Noirs Réfugiés admettent que la femme, pendant ses périodes menstruelles, est impure et a le pouvoir de détruire le pouvoir des obia. Aussi pendant ces périodes doit-elle se retirer dans une case spéciale, munu zau, et préparer ses repas dans une vaisselle spéciale ; elle ne peut pas préparer la nourriture de son mari, car ce faisant, elle détruirait le pouvoir de ses obia, et doit s'abstenir de toucher les objets qu'il utilise habituellement, spécialement son fusil qui perdrait ses qualités de tir. Même dans les petites habitations de culture qui ne comportent que quelques carbets, on peut être sûr que l'un d'eux sert de munu zau.

Les munu zau sont des cabanes très simples construites par les femmes elles-mêmes, en utilisant des matériaux de récupération pris sur les cases en démolition ; certaines appartiennent à une seule femme ; pour d'autres, trois ou quatre femmes se sont associées. Elles n'ont recours aux hommes que pour assembler la charpente, les rétribuant par quelques touques de couac ou quelques paniers d'ignames.

Un homme qui possède un puissant obia, comme le man négge obia, doit s'abstenir d'adresser la parole à une femme qui a ses règles.

Les Boni admettent qu'il y a des femmes assez méchantes pour dissimuler volontairement leurs règles afin de détruire le pouvoir des obia d'un homme, mais celui qui a un bon man négge obia ne peut être dupe : le cercle de fer l'avertit du danger en serrant son bras.

D'après M. W. F. van Lier, le fait de dissimuler volontairement ses règles est pour les Djuka une des plus grandes fautes que puisse commettre une femme, et on lui inflige les plus sévères punitions. Chez les Boni il n'en va pas de même : en pareil cas, une femme risque seulement d'être insultée et mise à l'index.

Une autre croyance profondément enracinée chez les Noirs Réfugiés, et qui subsiste chez beaucoup de créoles, est la nécessité pour l'obiaman qui soigne une blessure par arme à feu, d'observer la chasteté pendant toute la durée du traitement. C'est pour cette raison que les Boni hésitent à faire soigner les plaies de tir dans les hôpitaux.

Kina. Les interdits des Noirs Réfugiés sont généralement d'ordre alimentaire. Il y en a, à notre connaissance, 5 catégories :

— Bunsi kina, kina fondamental, marque des patrilignages, dont la rupture donne la lèpre ;

— Akka kina, souvent appelé godu kina, qui est établi par divination et qui est supposé imposé par l'akka ;

— Godu kina, marque de possession par une divinité ;

— Obia kina, interdit attaché à chaque objet comportant un pouvoir magique, et qu'il est indispensable d'observer pour que ce pouvoir se conserve ;

— Enfin, des kina locaux, notamment les kina de, jours de repos, se rattachant à l'idée du jour de repos de la divinité locale. On observe par exemple que la rivière Mana a un kina de sur le dimanche. Les Saramaka l'observent rigoureusement. Les Boni que nous avons emmenés sur la Mana en 1949, allèrent se renseigner auprès des Saramaka, et nous demandèrent d'arrêter la navigation le dimanche car ce kina était très impérieux. Il est à noter cependant que les Boni s'inclinent en pareil cas devant la volonté des Européens, comme en ce qui concerne leur propre kina de du vendredi ; ils admettent en effet que s'ils sont commandés de service, c'est l'européen seul qui supporte la responsabilité de la rupture du kina.

Il est possible que les kina évoqués par M. W. F. Van Lier et qui chez les Djuka seraient imposés à tout un matrilignage, soient aussi des kina locaux ; en tout cas aucun kina n'est transmissible par la mère, tous les Noirs Réfugiés sont formels sur ce point.

A... du lo Dju, âgé en 1958 de 28 ans environ, doit observer six kina :

— Le caïman et le jaguar, à titre de bunsi kina

— La loutre (yundu) comme akka kina.

Ces trois kina lui ont été imposés dès ses premières années mais on ne lui en a expliqué le sens que plus tard.

— L'anguille (mânsi) lui a été imposée comme kina par son père lorsque ce dernier lui a donné un man nêgge obia, obia de protection contre le sabre ou le fusil, matérialisé par un bracelet de fer.

A cet obia est attaché un autre kina. A... ne doit pas adresser la parole à une femme en période menstruelle ;

— Enfin le crabe (koubu), kina attaché à un obia dont l'intéressé ne parlait qu'avec réticence, probablement un Kumênli bui (bracelet de Kumênli, instrument de divination).

A... n'a pas de godu kina au sens propre du terme.

Il n'existe pas de kina alimentaire commun à tous les Boni ; le caïman leur est généralement interdit à titre de bwasi kina, associé à un autre animal ; mais ce n'est pas absolu, nous connaissons au moins un Boni qui n'a pas reçu ce kina.

Si quelqu'un a rompu un kina par inadvertance, il peut se faire laver de cette faute par des obiaman. Mais s'il l'a rompu volontairement, il ne peut échapper au châtiment attaché à la faute.

Croyances concernant les jumeaux. On a l'idée que les jumeaux et les enfants qui suivent les jumeaux sont d'une nature différente des autres hommes, participant d'un principe divin.

Les jumeaux ne peuvent pas vivre (puisqu'ils n'appartiennent pas à l'humanité ordinaire) s'ils ne sont pas traités par un remède spécial que ne connaissent que certains lignages particulièrement riches en jumeaux.

Quand des jumeaux meurent en bas âge, on incrimine presque toujours une mésentente survenue dans le lignage. Les jumeaux n'ont pas voulu vivre dans une famille désunie. Le chef du lignage exhorte alors ses gens à se réconcilier coûte que coûte, afin d'éviter de nouveaux malheurs[1].

Celui qui nuit à un jumeau est assuré de tomber malade. Il est admis réciproquement que le jumeau ne doit pas abuser de son pouvoir, qu'il doit avoir une vie droite et éviter les querelles. Il est plus près de Dieu que les autres hommes.

On admet que par exemple Efa, du village Papaïston, elle-même jumelle et mère de jumeaux, a un pouvoir tout spécial. Personne ne se hasarderait à lui nuire.

Dans les lignages où il y a beaucoup de jumeaux, il existe un lieu de culte consacré à un principe vital qu'on appelle Turilêngo. La nature de ce principe n'est pas claire. Les Boni le définissent comme âme des jumeaux. S'agit-il des premiers jumeaux Adam et Ève ? Ou d'un culte collectif adressé à l'ensemble des jumeaux défunts ?

[1] D'une façon générale on a l'idée que des désordres survenus dans le lignage ont pour conséquences des maladies ou des malheurs frappant les membres du lignage. Cette notion joue un rôle capital dans la vie sociale des Noirs Réfugiés ; elle est après le kanu le principal ciment de l'unité des groupes.

Le culte est célébré chaque fois qu'il s'agit de protéger des enfants nouveaux-nés. On les lave avec une certaine décoction de feuilles.

Tous les 4 ou 5 ans en moyenne a lieu une grande danse, puis on lave les père et mère des jumeaux et les jumeaux eux-mêmes, pour entretenir leurs pouvoirs et les maintenir en bonne santé.

Si ces danses ne sont pas faites, les jumeaux défunts manifesteront leur colère en rendant malades les jumeaux et parents de jumeaux vivants.

Les lignages qui n'ont pas de jumeaux ne pratiquent pas ces rites. S'il leur naît des jumeaux, ils s'adresseront au lieu du culte d'un autre lignage.

Papalston et Lapé ont ce culte particulièrement développé.

Les tone pikin. On admet qu'une femme puisse être rendue enceinte par un dieu de la rivière, soit un dieu serpent Papa gadu, soit par les Wala Ingi qui ont l'apparence d'Indiens. On appelle tone pikin les enfants ainsi conçus.

A..., de Papalston, avait coupé un abattis en face d'une roche blanche remarquable dite Weti sɔ̃, où elle amarrait son canot. Elle n'avait pas eu d'enfants depuis plusieurs années et elle devint enceinte. Quand sa fille fut née, un possédé révéla qu'elle était née des œuvres d'un dieu serpent Papa gadu qui vivait là : depuis ses parents vont régulièrement à cette roche faire des offrandes.

Vers 1910, Alama (Kormotibo), avait suivi son mari dans un chantier du bas fleuve ; un jour, marchant dans la forêt elle rencontra un Indien ayant l'apparence d'un Indien Galibi, qui portait un enfant nouveau-né. Elle s'arrêta et admira l'enfant. L'Indien lui dit : voulez-vous l'élever? Elle acquiesça. Il dit : « nous nous reverrons » ; puis il s'en alla si vite qu'elle eut l'impression qu'il avait disparu sur place.

Quelques semaines après, elle se trouva enceinte et il parut évident à tous que c'était des œuvres d'un Wala Ingi.

On n'attribue aucun pouvoir magique au tone pikin, pas plus qu'on ne leur attribue de particularités mentales ou physiques. Mais on admet qu'ils soient l'objet d'une protection particulière, et qu'on ne peut leur nuire impunément.

Le caractère sacré du paiement. Les rapports entre les dieux et les hommes chez les Noirs Réfugiés ont toujours le caractère d'un marché : une divinité irritée n'est jamais apaisée par le repentir ou la bonne volonté ; elle exige d'être payée ; de même un obia n'a de valeur que pour celui qui l'a payé. Des Noirs Réfugiés n'utiliseront jamais des recettes magiques toutes faites : prononcer telles paroles, faire tels gestes ; en présence d'une telle recette ils demanderont aussitôt : « De quel dieu vient cet obia, et auprès de qui doit-on payer? Il semble que dans leur conception tout transfert d'un pouvoir spirituel ou d'une force magique dérange quelque chose à la bonne marche de l'univers ; le paiement rétablit cet équilibre, il est la marque de la légitimité. Certains créoles d'ascendance africaine transposent la même idée vis-à-vis du christianisme, et c'est pourquoi ils insistent tant pour payer les messes et acheter les « oraisons »[1]. On observe de même que la gratuité des soins médicaux diminue aux yeux des uns et des autres le prestige du médecin.

Sur le plan matériel, la même conception explique le caractère élevé attaché au juste paiement d'un travail, la fureur sacrée qui s'empare des Noirs Réfugiés qui se jugent lésés ; elle explique aussi qu'ils ne peuvent interpréter un don gratuit que comme une marque de faiblesse, sauf dans des cas exceptionnels (présent offert par un haut fonctionnaire à l'occasion d'une visite). Un cadeau qui n'a pas le caractère d'un échange n'a pas pour eux de valeur spirituelle ; il n'amène que du mépris et presque de l'hostilité, car ils sentent que l'objet n'a pas été acquis légitimement et qu'ils ne sont pas en règle avec leur loi morale.

Divinités locales

Les Noirs Réfugiés admettent l'existence de divinités locales, exerçant un pouvoir de fait sur telle ou telle portion du pays. Comme leur mode de vie très particulier les amène à circuler presque exclusivement le long des rivières, cette idée s'est transposée chez eux en une double notion : les divinités des rivières et les dieux du sol. Dans leur esprit ce sont là deux conceptions entièrement distinctes : le pouvoir du dieu du sol s'arrête au bord de l'eau et réciproquement.

Aux divinités du fleuve on rend un culte de fait, selon les rites fixés par les premiers usagers de la rivière. En pratique on ne rend de culte qu'aux divinités des rivières dangereuses, où les accidents sont fréquents. Pour les autres, on ne s'en préoccupe pas.

Ces dieux sont désignés indifféremment par les mots godu et sani (chose, être), indiquant qu'on n'en connaît pas la nature.

L'un des plus connus de ces dieux est celui du Maruini. Il est admis qu'il contrôle jusqu'à leur source tous les cours d'eau formateurs du Maruini. Son lieu de culte est un bosquet situé en aval du dangereux saut Kubi Sula, à l'embouchure de la rivière. Avant de commencer la remontée de la rivière en août 1956, les équipages de nos trois canots, dans une atmosphère de grand recueillement, se rangèrent derrière l'aîné d'entre eux qui fit l'offrande de l'eau et du tafia, prononçant ces paroles : « Dieu qui commande cette rivière, veille sur nous, fais que nous ne soyons pas malade, qu'il ne nous arrive pas d'accident ; s'il y a sur cette rivière un interdit que nous ne connaissons pas[2] et que nous n'observons pas par ignorance, pardonne-nous. Fais que nous revenions dans nos villages sains et saufs. » Les canotiers vinrent l'un après l'autre faire l'offrande du tafia. La scène dura plus d'un quart d'heure. Cette cérémonie n'était pas sans grandeur, laissant croire à cette ferveur sincère des animistes dont il est si souvent question dans la

1. Prière écrite à laquelle on attache un pouvoir de protection. Cette notion, qui a été empruntée à la magie européenne de la France du XVIIe siècle, semble avoir été introduite en Guyane par les premiers colons européens.
2. On voit bien ici qu'il s'agit d'un culte de fait rendu à une divinité dont on ne connaît rien.

littérature ethnographique. Mais notre retour en fin de mission se passa dans une tout autre atmosphère, montrant le côté strictement pratique et utilitaire de la religion des Noirs Réfugiés. Une fois passé le Kubi Sula, les trois patrons canotiers ne purent décider aucun de leurs hommes, qui étaient en train de prendre leur repas, à les accompagner jusqu'au lieu du culte pour remercier le dieu. Quelques-uns nous dirent sans ambages qu'ils se moquaient bien de ce dieu désormais, n'ayant pas l'intention de revenir sur le Maruini. Quant aux patrons canotiers eux-mêmes, ils mesurèrent chichement la quantité de tafia offerte au dieu, et leurs paroles de remerciements durèrent à peine une demi-minute[1]. A notre première mission sur le Maruini, en 1948, les mêmes scènes s'étaient déroulées, tant à l'aller qu'au retour.

Rites relatifs a l'agriculture

Ces rites occupent dans la vie religieuse des Noirs Réfugiés une place relativement faible, ce qu'on peut attribuer à la grande régularité du climat et à l'absence de calamités influant sur le rendement des récoltes.

Il ne semble pas, tout au moins chez les Boni, que soit supposé un lien religieux entre le lignage et la terre, et les rites destinés à assurer la fécondité du sol sont effectués par chacun pour son compte au voisinage de son propre champ ; le chef de lignage ne paraît jouer aucun rôle particulier à cet égard. Dans la pensée des Boni, la fécondité du sol dépend d'une divinité locale, à laquelle est adressé un culte de fait ; les usagers temporaires ou permanents des terres situées dans le domaine de ce dieu effectuent pour leur compte les rites de ce culte, sans aucune distinction d'origine, qu'ils soient Boni, Djuka ou Saramaka.

Le seul culte collectif existant en pays Boni est le culte de mama gɔ3, dont le grand man est le prêtre. Ses rites se bornent à une courte prière annuelle.

Culte de Mama gɔ3. Mama gɔ3, mère de la terre, est représentée par une grossière statue d'argile blanche munie d'énormes seins, symbole de fécondité, que l'on peut apercevoir dans une petite case située sur la place du village de Boniville. Chaque année, quand approche le temps de couper les abattis, le grand man, entouré d'une nombreuse assistance, prie le dieu d'accorder la fécondité aux plantations. Si la pluie ne tombe pas, on fait une offrande d'eau et de tafia et on arrose la statue.

Les Boni ne paraissent pas associer l'idée de la fécondité des femmes à celle de la fertilité du sol, et nous n'avons pas entendu dire que le grand man prie à ce sujet.

Ils ne paraissent pas non plus avoir une idée très nette des rapports de ce culte avec celui des gɔ3 gadu, dieux locaux du sol.

Tous les trois ans a lieu à Boniville, le 1er janvier, une grande danse de possession où les dieux Papa godu dansent devant le sanctuaire de Mama gɔ̃, Nous n'avons pu obtenir de précisions sur la signification de ce rite.

(1) Pourtant la coutume prévoit expressément ce rite de remerciement.

[facing p 260]

Culte des gɔ̃ godu. Il est supposé que toute portion de terre est sous la dépendance d'un dieu local, gɔ̃ godu. Son pouvoir ne se limite qu'à la fécondité du sol, et celui qui néglige son culte ne peut être atteint dans sa personne, ni dans ses biens, mais seulement puni par une mauvaise récolte.

Quelle est la nature de ces dieux, quelle est leur place dans la cosmogonie ? Ce sont là des questions qu'aucun de nos informateurs ne s'était posé. Dans leur esprit, gɔ̃ godu a une existence de fait, et on lui rend un culte de fait. Ce culte comprend essentiellement :

Des offrandes faites au moment des plantations ;

L'observance d'un jour de repos local, kina de, correspondant au jour de repos du dieu.

Pour observer convenablement ces rites, il importe donc de connaître si les terres qu'on cultive sont situées dans le domaine de tel ou tel dieu. Sur les rives du grand fleuve, la répartition des terres entre les dieux du sol est bien connue depuis le temps des ancêtres. En relevant les kina de des habitations de culture on se rend compte que le domaine de chaque dieu est étendu ; il occupe plusieurs kilomètres le long des rives. Il est souvent supposé (mais pas partout) que les deux rives sont contrôlées par des dieux différents. Par exemple :

En aval de Boniville, rive droite : mercredi ;
Vers Kormotibo, rive droite : jeudi ;
Vers le confluent de l'Inini, deux rives : mercredi ;
Vers le Saut Simayé, deux rives : samedi.

Ces jours-là on ne peut rien faire se rapportant à l'agriculture et spécialement on ne peut pas creuser la terre ni planter. On peut à la rigueur aller extraire des tubercules.

Ce qu'on doit surtout éviter, c'est de manier des outils qui font du bruit et pourraient déranger le dieu, sauf au voisinage immédiat de l'eau qui n'est pas sous son contrôle. Cependant on peut tirer des coups de fusil.

Ce kina de est d'une observance plus stricte que le vendredi, kina de général en pays Boni, qui paraît se rapporter au culte de Mama gɔ̃. Ces jours-là on répare les canots et surtout on va à la chasse et à la pêche.

Les offrandes sont faites de façon purement individuelle et locale ; dans chaque habitation de culture on voit aux abords du dégrad un lieu de culte formé d'un simple bouean, orné de banderolles de plusieurs couleurs, sur lequel sont exposées les offrandes ; même si cette habitation réunit des gens de parentés diverses, il n'y a qu'un lieu de culte.

Les gens qui n'ont pas d'habitation de culture et qui cultivent aux abords des villages de résidence, se réunissent par groupes de trois ou quatre pour établir un lieu de culte dans un boqueteau préservé de la forêt attenant à leurs abattis.

On offre du jus de canne, du sirop, du riz finement pilé mais non cuit.

Cette offrande est faite au moment des plantations en disant : « Gadu, s'il vous plaît venez manger un peu, veillez sur nous, grand merci. »

Les Boni qui observent le plus fidèlement les rites renouvellent cette offrande chaque mois à la nouvelle lune.

Si quelqu'un a deux abattis dans deux secteurs différents, il effectue ces rites deux fois, chaque gɔ̃ gadu étant entièrement indépendant des autres.

On remarque à ce sujet que les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés sont beaucoup plus systématisées que celles des populations créoles d'origine africaine des Antilles. Il n'est pas supposé une âme individuelle de chaque champ ; il ne paraît pas non plus qu'on admette la possibilité de capturer l'âme du champ pour rendre stérile par vengeance le champ du voisin. Ces croyances, qui jouent un si grand rôle dans la magie populaire des Antilles, paraissent sans correspondance précise dans les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés.

Interdits et rites divers. Couper un abattis comporte de grands dangers : il faut éviter que les divinités malfaisantes de la brousse, qui ont pour support des végétaux et des animaux bien définis, ne soient lésées par la destruction brutale de ce support, et n'exercent une vengeance inexorable — le kunu — sur le lignage de l'involontaire sacrilège. Il faut donc rechercher avec une attention extrême, en examinant centimètre par centimètre la surface de l'abattis, ces végétaux et ces animaux, accomplir pour chacun les rites indiqués par l'expérience des ancêtres sans en oublier un seul. Aucun Noir Réfugié ne songerait à négliger ces rites. Leur observance rigoureuse a pour effet d'empêcher que l'agriculture ne devienne pour eux une activité mercantile, et de lui garder un sens religieux et familial.

— Le kûkâti (fromager) est un arbre très redouté, car d'après les anciens, chacun d'eux abrite douze catégories de divinités, notamment un Papa gadu et un Ampuku. Aussi est-il absolument impossible de le couper. Il faut même faire très attention à ne pas léser ses racines qui s'étendent au loin. On préservera l'emplacement de tout abattage. De même on veille à ne pas léser les racines des grands fromagers que l'on trouve souvent dans les villages.

Pourtant, le fait qu'on ait choisi leur emplacement pour y installer un village, montre qu'on croit pouvoir faire alliance avec les divinités qui résident dans un fromager et s'attirer leur protection.

— L'arbre kalu (Bombax Surinamiensis), arbre de très grande taille, vivant en symbiose avec une liane parasite qui paraît l'enserrer d'un gigantesque filet, abrite lui aussi des divinités malfaisantes (des Ampuku, des Papa gadu, des Bumba gadu). On peut le couper après avoir exécuté des rites qui ont pour but de transférer ces divinités dans un autre arbre.

Il faut d'abord s'être procuré chez un homme qui possède ce remède, un pot d'ɔbia contenant une infusion de feuilles, au milieu desquelles se trouve un bracelet de fibres.

Il en coûte 2 litres de tafia, 4 litres de boisson (bière par exemple), 1 grande pièce d'étoffe et 1 sabre.

Arrivé au pied de l'arbre, on lave son corps et son sabre avec cette infusion, on se passe au bras le bracelet de fibres. On lave aussi plusieurs petits bâtons munis de carrés de toile blanche (pour les Papa godu), bleu noir et rouge (pour les Ampuku) et une feuille de palmier pinot (pina Bygo).

On plante les bâtons au pied de l'arbre, on frappe le tronc avec la feuille de palmier en invoquant les divinités de l'arbre : « Ala sani di de na a udu ya, da mu kumɔlo, beka mi ɔ fau ɛy. Kɔm na a pina Bygo : Toutes choses (entités suprahumaines) qui êtes dans cet arbre, quittez-le car je vais le jeter à terre ; venez dans cette feuille de palmier ». On emporte la feuille de palmier et les petits drapeaux loin de là dans l'intérieur des terres, dans un endroit où personne n'est susceptible de venir abattre des arbres, et on les dispose à côté d'un gros arbre quelconque. Les divinités viendront s'y établir. Cependant il faut encore attendre près d'un mois pour couper l'arbre kulu, probablement pour laisser aux influences maléfiques le temps de se dissiper.

Les Boni ont si peur de cet arbre que nombre d'entre eux, jugeant ces précautions insuffisantes, renoncent à le couper et vont établir leur abattis ailleurs. Les orpailleurs créoles du Haut Maroni, qui l'appellent bois coton, lui attribuent aussi une influence maléfique et certains d'entre eux ne le coupent pas.

Les Noirs Réfugiés redoutent aussi, mais à un moindre degré, ce qu'ils appellent kɔlkɔli, c'est-à-dire les petits arbres de n'importe quelle espèce qui, au lieu d'avoir poussé droit, ont leur tige coudée à deux reprises comme un Z. C'est une anomalie très rare. Dans cet arbuste se cache une entité malfaisante, laku sani, susceptible, si un homme coupait la tige par inadvertance, de se venger de lui en lui paralysant un membre, ou même tout le corps, en position fléchie. Pour voir si l'entité est présente ou non dans l'arbuste, il existe selon les Boni, un moyen très simple : on approche délicatement le doigt de la partie coudée. Si on sent son doigt retenu au point qu'on a du mal à le retirer, c'est que le génie est présent ! Le pouvoir d'autosuggestion caractéristique des Noirs Réfugiés se montre ici nettement.

Il existe des rites pour rendre inoffensifs les kɔlkɔli, les couper impunément et même en servir pour des préparations magiques, mais nous n'en connaissons pas le détail. Des kɔlkɔli figurent parmi les objets qu'on trouve habituellement dans les chapelles (ɔhin sou) de Kumènti il nous est même arrivé d'en voir un utilisé comme fermeture d'une porte ; c'était un kindu particulièrement redouté, qu'aucun voleur n'aurait osé enlever.

Les Kintamasu sont les divinités, particulièrement malfaisantes et hostiles aux hommes, qui habitent les termitières (il s'agit des termites au sens propre du terme, qui font leur nid en terre, et non des poux-bois, beaucoup plus communs). Il y en a un par termitière.

Après un examen méticuleux du sol de l'abattis, on marque toutes les termitières et l'on arrose chacune d'elles d'une préparation contenant des feuilles, de l'argile rose kukusa et du suc de manioc. On adjure le génie de s'en aller n'importe où.

Il arrive que malgré toutes les précautions prises, on oublie une termitière. Alors, quelques jours après, on aura la consternation de voir le Kãnlamasu se révéler dans quelqu'un du lignage ; il annonce qu'il va exercer son kunu (sa malédiction). On l'apaise provisoirement par des offrandes de tafia, de boissons diverses, de toile rouge.

Les Kãnlamasu se nomment eux-mêmes les Akɔlo. Ils parlent, par la bouche de leurs porteurs, une langue que personne ne comprend. Toutefois, quand ils veulent se faire comprendre de l'assistance, ils parlent Kumẽnli.

Observation à Boniville, janvier 1957 :

A..., canotier de la mission de délimitation, demande un congé de trois jours. Sa femme, Masauman, est malade depuis quelques jours ; la divination (en l'espèce la gita d'une parente de son lignage) a montré que c'était le fait d'un Kãnlamasu lésé dans l'incendie de l'abattis que lui-même, A..., a coupé pour sa femme en octobre. Le Kãnlamasu ne s'est pas encore manifesté directement, mais un kunu menace ; pour l'apaiser il faut qu'il mette en action le remède que seul connaît M..., un vieillard d'Asisi. Il se rendra sur place, suivant à bonne distance M..., porteur du remède, dont il aspergera la surface de l'abattis, et d'objets d'offrande. L'offrande faite, on attendra quelque temps pour voir si Masauman va mieux et si oui, on jugera que le dieu est apaisé.

La fête Yali

Les Noirs Réfugiés, qui ne comptent pas les jours écoulés, se contentant des lunaisons pour suivre le cours de l'année, se renseignent auprès des européens et des créoles, pour fixer la fête Yali qui marque le nouvel an. Chacun accumule des provisions, notamment de la viande de tortue, des boissons variées et force pétards.

Le soir du 31 décembre chacun danse dans son propre village.

La fête dure toute la nuit, le tafia coulant à flots, les pétards éclatant de toutes parts.

A la fin de la nuit, quelques dieux « montent » à la tête de leurs porteurs, tout au moins de ceux qui ne sont pas complètement ivres.

Dans la journée, des danses reprennent par intermittence dans l'ordre awasa, sãŋgɛ, susa. Il est d'usage que les gens d'un lignage aillent danser dans le village d'un autre, puis les invitent chez eux. On rend beaucoup de visites individuelles. Quelques-uns ont établi devant leur case une sorte de petit buffet sur lequel ils ont disposé une dizaine de verres, 5 à 6 litres de tafia, 4 ou 5 bouteilles de bière, limonade et sirop.

Observation à Boniville, le 1er janvier 1958 :

Le grand man, qui ne quitte plus guère son habitation en aval de Boniville, ne s'est pas dérangé. Il a délégué ses fonctions à Lébiman et Fintiman, hommes d'une cinquantaine d'années, appartenant aux fractions des lignages Kotika et Dju résidant à Boniville.

A 7 heures, une dizaine d'hommes se rassemblent au fraga liki. On verse d'abord l'eau, puis le tafia, en prononçant la prière dont le texte intégral suit, d'après un enregistrement au magnétophone :

Fintiman (en versant de l'eau) :

« Ancêtres, salut ! Nous sommes venus à vous ; c'est pour l'année nouvelle que nous sommes venus à vous ! comme vous-mêmes faisiez quand vous étiez (vivants). Que Dieu nous protège jusqu'à ce que l'année nouvelle revienne encore ; c'est ainsi que vous-mêmes veniez verser l'eau à l'intention des ancêtres. Nous sommes venus à notre lieu de prière pour parler avec vous, pour vous demander de porter nos paroles à Dieu. »

(Les mêmes formules sont répétées à plusieurs reprises.)

Lébiman

« C'est l'eau du jour de l'an. C'est le jour de Dieu. Il est arrivé. Grand man Awensay[1] [parce que] je n'ai pas connu les ancêtres plus éloignés, c'est vous seulement que j'appelle, appelez tous les autres. »

« Il est arrivé, le jour de Dieu. Quant au grand man lui-même il lui est arrivé un petit empêchement, il n'a pu venir, mais il ne se désintéresse pas pour autant du village. »

Veillez sur tous les gens qui sont là... nous sommes venus verser de l'eau à votre intention, pour que vous veilliez sur les poules et les chiens du village [et jusqu'aux hommes vivants[2]]. Protégez le grand man ; si un malheur était prêt à lui arriver, qu'il passe à côté. Ainsi nous sommes venus verser [l'eau] pour vous supplier de protéger le village. L'année a changé aujourd'hui, c'est une nouvelle année. Que nous ayons de l'argent et de la nourriture, nous vous supplions, ancêtres ; veillez sur nos plantations, qu'elles prospèrent, que les jeunes femmes qui pêchent au dégrad prennent du poisson. »

« Tous les capitaines versent [l'eau], le fiskal, les majors versent[3] pour tous les lignages ; protégez les villages. »

Fintiman

Les gens qui ont le cœur pur, protégez-les, grands et petits. Mais les gens dont le cœur n'est pas bon, qui font des maléfices pour tuer les autres et pour diminuer le village, nous ne prions pas pour eux ; chassez-les. »

Veillez sur le grand man ; s'il lui arrive quelque chose, il ne faudra pas qu'on vienne dire que nous, les gens qui sommes assis là, nous n'avons pas bien prié. Grands ancêtres, nous vous supplions, si nous étions sur le point de rencontrer le malheur, que nous rencontrons le bien. »

On commence à verser le tafia.

1. Prédécesseur du grand man Difu, mort en 1936. Dans chaque village on invoque par son nom le dernier chef défunt pour lui demander d'appeler les morts les plus anciens.

2. Formule habituelle de prière.

3. Titres hétéroclites imités des Djuka mais qui, chez les Boni, n'ont pas de contenu réel ; le chef du village de Boniville porte le titre de fiskal et celui du village de Kotika le titre de major.

« Grand man Awensay... » (Suit un remerciement pour un voyage qui s'est effectué sans encombre.)

Lébiman :

« Que le grand man vive longtemps avec nous, qu'il ne lui arrive pas malheur. »
« Grands ancêtres qui êtes au pays de Dieu, c'est vous qui avez la force du village. »
(Le tafia coule à flots.)

« Buvez, buvez, mais ne vous enivrez pas au point de vous tromper, regardez favorablement les justes, écartez les méchants. »

Ensuite, Fintiman s'écarte pour aller faire une offrande de tafia accompagnée de quelques paroles à la chapelle de Odun. Puis il va au bord du hangar mortuaire verser de l'eau, du tafia et du café à l'intention de Samalobi, frère du grand man, dont le deuil n'est pas levé.

Il va ensuite à la maison du défunt grand man Awensay faire une offrande de café (Awensay comme les autres grand man buvait du café).

La prière de l'année précédente (1er janvier 1957), présidée par l'aïeul Samalobi, avait eu une plus haute inspiration. Après avoir prié, à peu près dans les mêmes termes que ci-dessus, pour les Boni, on pria pour les Djuka, précisant qu'autrefois Boni et Djuka s'étaient combattus, mais que tout cela était oublié. On pria ensuite pour les Saramaka, puis pour les Indiens, enfin pour les européens. Je demandai pourquoi ; on me répondit : « c'est parce que ce sont les européens qui nous ont amenés dans ce pays qui est devenu le nôtre ».

CHAPITRE VIII

CONTES — PROVERBES

Les contes (Anâsi bli) et les proverbes (ɔdo) conservent chez les Noirs Réfugiés une fonction sociale importante. Ç'est toujours par des contes que commencent les grandes cérémonies coutumières de levée de deuil. Ils ont pour fonction de concentrer l'attention de l'assistance et de créer une ambiance de participation au rite.

Ce caractère rituel fait que les Anansi Toli ne peuvent être récités n'importe quand et n'importe comment. Le conteur ne peut parler que la nuit, en présence d'un répondant, et d'un auditoire d'au moins deux ou trois personnes. Une formule rituelle : « dirinti » — réponse de l'auditoire : « ndaeli », précède chaque nouvelle histoire. Ce n'est qu'avec une répugnance extrême que les informateurs consentent à entendre et à commenter de jour un conte enregistré au magnétophone, cela spécialement si leurs parents sont encore vivants, car on dit chez les Noirs Réfugiés comme en Afrique Noire que raconter des contes en plein jour peut faire mourir son père et sa mère.

Ces contes appartiennent à un fonds authentiquement africain, pratiquement inaltéré malgré l'emprunt aux Noirs créoles de Paramaribo de quelques thèmes concernant des automobiles, des bateaux à vapeur, etc., insérés de façon cocasse dans les thèmes traditionnels.

Le héros ordinaire de ces contes est Anansi le rusé. Anansi est le nom de l'araignée mygale[1]. Il est à noter cependant que cette araignée ne paraît jouer aucun rôle particulier dans les croyances des Noirs Réfugiés et qu'on ne lui attribue pas de pouvoir divinatoire. En fait, dans les contes dont il est le héros, Anansi est presque toujours représenté comme un homme.

Interviennent habituellement dans ces contes :

Wénon — femme d'Anansi

Akpwatitikwati, Asingébelé, Panikitapu, Bigimofu — ses fils

Saniasâmooyu, sa fille.

(1) Le cycle de l'araignée est caractéristique de l'aire culturelle Akan (Agni-Baoulé-Abron). Anansi est le nom de l'araignée mygale chez les Agni.

On englobe aussi sous le titre d'Anansi Toli des contes où seuls interviennent des animaux : leu, l'éléphant (dont les Noirs Réfugiés ont gardé par tradition orale la description), kɔykoni, l'agouti[1], qui sait tout ce qui se passe en brousse, kariaku, le daim, malin compère qui déjoue tous les tours[2].

Les contes transcrits ci-dessous sont au nombre de quatorze ; ils ont été choisis parmi une trentaine environ et représentent les thèmes les plus caractéristiques, en même temps que les récits les mieux charpentés.

La moitié environ des contes des Noirs Réfugiés roulent sur deux thèmes fondamentaux :

— Des ruses de chasse, par lesquelles Anansi parvient à tuer tous les animaux de la brousse sauf un qui, plus malin que lui, parvient à retourner la ruse et à le tuer à son tour ;

— La tromperie, plus spécialement associée à la gloutonnerie ; dans beaucoup de contes, des ruses compliquées ont pour but de manger la part du voisin.

La moitié des contes sont des improvisations sur des thèmes très variés et impossibles à classer. Une proportion importante sont des histoires fantastiques, décousues et incohérentes, rappelant le processus des rêves. Nous n'avons pas donné de place ici à ce type de contes, qui présente en fait peu d'intérêt sociologique.

Les Anansi Toli n'ont jamais de caractère licencieux.

D'une façon générale, les contes des Noirs Réfugiés ne reflètent aucun concept défini. Le même personnage est représenté d'un conte à l'autre sous des aspects contradictoires ; il n'a aucun caractère fixe. Par exemple le personnage d'Anansi, généralement représenté comme menteur, voleur, jaloux, glouton et cruel, n'est associé à aucun concept défini. Quelques contes le montrent amenant la Mort parmi les hommes, mais d'autres le montrent humiliant, pour la grande joie des hommes, les déesses malfaisantes de l'eau et de la brousse. La plupart des contes le représentent comme un escroc, mais dans quelques-uns il intervient comme justicier. Ces contradictions ne sont pas perçues par les Noirs Réfugiés.

Le conteur lui-même parvient difficilement à suivre le fil de son histoire, se perdant dans les détails, souvent racontés avec esprit. Quelquefois le thème dérive complètement au cours du récit, comme ces motifs ornementaux des Noirs Réfugiés où des membres humains se terminent en volutes, donnant un ensemble harmonieux mais sans grande signification. Il y a à cet égard une grande différence d'un conteur à l'autre. Certains construisent des récits plus fortement charpentés, la plupart se complaisent dans les contes incohérents et fantastiques.

1. Rongeur de la taille d'un lapin.

2. Il est étrange de voir cet animal jouer le rôle du renard de nos fables ; le daim échappe aisément au chasseur grâce à sa vue perçante, mais il n'a pas vraiment d'intelligence.

6:Hurault

SR8 Bush Negroes

Pour la même raison sans doute, on ne trouve rien dans la plupart de ces contes qui rappelle une morale inspirée par un concept du bien et du mal. Tantôt c'est le voleur et l'escroc qui triomphent, tantôt ils trouvent un plus malin qu'eux. On voit bien que pour le conteur tout cela est sur le même plan ; il a simplement guidé son histoire sur ce qui lui paraissait le plus amusant. Quant à l'auditoire, il rit toujours du vaincu. Un seul conte sur quatorze (le n° 1) exprime une morale pratique : « C'est pour cela qu'il ne faut pas tromper les gens, car il y a des gens qui sont plus malins que vous ».

La plupart des contes et proverbes ont déjà été entendus maintes fois par les Noirs Réfugiés, sans que cela diminue leur plaisir. Plus que l'histoire elle-même, ils apprécient la verve du conteur, son talent de mime, les variantes toujours nouvelles qu'il sait donner d'un thème rebattu.

Tous ces contes ont été enregistrés au magnétophone et ont été étudiés ensuite avec soin en ce qui concerne vocabulaire et syntaxe. On est resté très près du mot à mot et dans la mesure du possible on a conservé les tournures particulières de la phrase Aluku, notamment les interjections africaines qui renforcent les verbes. Les passages fastidieux qu'il a fallu résumer sont placés entre parenthèse. Les contes n°s 10 à 14 sont résumés.

CONTES

1) La roche a barbe

Un jour Anansi alla en brousse. Il marcha jusqu'à... ce qu'il vit une roche, une roche avec de la barbe. Il s'écria : « Roche à barbe ! ». Alors, il tomba, il s'évanouit[1]. Il resta là jusqu'à ce [qu'enfin] il se ranimât, et [pût] retourner chez lui. Alors il [se] dit : « J'ai trouvé un endroit pour tuer du gibier ».

Il vit l'agouti qui passait, il lui demanda : « Où allez-vous ainsi ? ». L'agouti répondit : « Je vais à la chasse ». Alors Anansi lui dit : « Je connais un bon endroit, venez demain que je vous y mène ». Il vint et tous deux marchèrent jusqu'à ce qu'ils fussent arrivés à cette roche. Alors Anansi lui dit tout bas : « Regardez cette roche, criez « Roche à barbe ». L'agouti cria : « Roche à barbe ! » Aussitôt il tomba évanoui ; Anansi le tua à coups de massue et l'emporta chez lui.

Ainsi tua-t-il du gibier jusqu'à ce que survint le daim. Anansi lui dit : « Je connais un endroit où on trouve du gibier. Nous marcherons jusqu'à un endroit où nous apercevrons une roche et vous crierez : « Roche à barbe ». Ils arrivèrent à la roche ; le daim dit à Anansi : « j'ai oublié comment s'appelle cette roche ». Anansi dit tout bas : « Roche à barbe ». Le daim lui dit : « Je n'entends pas ». Alors Anansi se fâcha, son cœur s'enflamma [de rage] et il cria tout haut : « Roche à barbe ». Alors lui-même tomba à terre. Le daim le tua, lui prit le foie et le rapporta à sa femme.

C'est pour cela qu'il ne faut pas tromper les gens, parce qu'il y a des gens qui sont plus malins que vous.

(1) Il faut entendre que le génie qui était dans la roche l'avait entendu.

2) Le génie de la mare

[Un jour] Anansi alla en brousse ; il alla en brousse à la découverte, camarades. Il alla jusqu'à... ce que la faim le prît. Il arriva à une mare, où il y avait des poissons ! des poissons ! Il pêcha les poissons, il pêcha jusqu'à... ce qu'il arrivât à une souche. Il glissa sa main dans un trou, et voilà sa main agrippée, kyin kyin ! Il dit : « Qui est-ce qui me tient comme cela ? » : « C'est moi le Lanceur » [dit le génie de la mare]. Il dit : « Lancez-moi pour voir ». Il le lança... jusqu'au haut des arbres. Il retomba à terre. Camarades, vous connaissez Anansi, il n'en mourut pas. Il dit : « Je tuerai tous les animaux [d'ici] jusqu'au dernier. Il alla affuter un trident. Il dit : « C'est ici qu'il faut enterrer le trident, puisque c'est ici que je suis retombé. Je vais leur faire voir aux animaux d'ici, je vais leur faire voir ». Il l'enterra jusqu'au fer. Il porta une charge de poisson, dit à sa femme Wénon : « Je vais tuer tous les animaux jusqu'au dernier ». Elle dit : « Comment vas-tu faire ? » Il lui expliqua.

Quelque temps après arriva l'agouti. Il lui dit : « Frère agouti, n'avez-vous pas faim ? L'agouti dit : « Frère, j'ai faim ; je cherche la sauce[1]. Il lui dit :« Venez, je vais vous mener à une mare où il y a beaucoup de poisson ». L'agouti accepta. Ils marchèrent jusqu'à ce qu'ils arrivèrent. Ils prirent du poisson, jusqu'à... ce qu'Anansi dit : « Tâtez au pied de cette souche ; vous trouverez un trou ; il y a des acoupas[2]. Camarade agouti, tâtez donc !

L'agouti glissa sa patte dans le trou ; kyin kyin ! Elle resta prisonnière. Il dit : « Frère Anansi, ma patte est prise » — « Dites : qu'est-ce qui me tient là ?» Il dit : « Qu'est-ce qui me tient là ? » — « C'est moi le Lanceur ». L'agouti dit : « Frère Anansi, que faut-il dire ? — Dites : « Lancez-moi pour voir ». Il dit : « Lancez-moi pour voir ». Camarades, il le lança en l'air, il passa au-dessus de la cime des arbres, il retomba sur le trident. Anansi prit sa massue, pa ! Il accourut, il l'assomma, gbo ! Il le tua. Il le mit de côté. Il ramassa tous les poissons que l'agouti avait pêchés. Il prit l'agouti lui-même, lui coupa le foie. Il le porta à la femme de l'agouti ; il lui dit : « L'agouti et moi avons tué un tapir là-bas, il est resté pour le boucaner. Il a envoyé la moitié du foie pour que vous le fassiez cuire. » Elle fit cuire le foie et bouillir du riz. Ils mangèrent ; ils mangèrent jusqu'à la dernière cuiller, jusqu'au dernier morceau de foie. Il dit : « Tous les foies sont bons mais le foie de l'agouti est le meilleur ». [Alors elle comprit]. Elle prit un pilon pour le frapper mais il s'enfuit.

Ainsi tua-t-il successivement tous les animaux de la région. Restait le daim. Le daim est quelqu'un de malin. Il avait surveillé Anansi et vu ce qu'il avait fait. Anansi vint à lui et lui dit : « Frère daim, n'avez-vous pas faim ? ». Il répondit : « j'ai très faim ». Anansi dit : « je connais une mare où il y a beaucoup de poisson ». Ils y allèrent. Ils pêchèrent jusqu'à ce que Anansi dit : « Tâtez dans le trou au pied de cette souche, il y a des acoupas et des coulants ». Le daim tâta et dit : « Je ne sens pas le trou » ; il savait

1 Entendant par là de la viande ou du poisson pour accompagner le couac ou le riz.
2 Poissons des eaux stagnantes.

très bien où il était. Anansi dit : « Vous avez de grands yeux, comment ne voyez-vous pas le trou ? ». Il lui prit la patte avec la main pour la plonger dans le trou ; la patte du daim est fine. Il la retira. C'est la main d'Anansi qui resta prisonnière.

Anansi dit : « Frère daim ; allez par là ; vous trouverez un trident dont je me sers pour la chasse ; retirez-le de terre». Le daim revint en disant : « C'est fait ». Il lui montra un autre trident qu'il avait lui-même apporté et caché. Alors Anansi dit [au génie] : « Lancez-moi pour voir ». Il le lança jusqu'au sommet des arbres. Il retomba sur le trident. Le daim l'assomma avec une massue, lui coupa le foie et l'apporta à Wénon. Il dit à Wénon : « Anansi et moi avons tué un tapir. Il est resté pour le boucaner. Il a envoyé le foie pour que vous le fassiez cuire ». Elle prépara le foie et fit bouillir du riz. Ils mangèrent jusqu'à la dernière bouchée. Alors le daim dit : « Tous les foies sont bons mais le foie d'Anansi est le meilleur ». Wénon prit un pilon pour le frapper, mais il était déjà loin.

3) Anansi et la poêle a frire magique

[Un jour] Anansi alla en brousse à la découverte, camarades. Il alla en brousse un jour, jusqu'à... ce qu'il eut faim. Voilà qu'il vit une poêle à frire accrochée en l'air. Il s'approcha, il dit : « Poêle à frire, comment es-tu belle ainsi ? » Elle dit : « Je suis belle, mais je ne suis pas belle pour rien ». Il dit : « Fais-moi voir ». Elle se mit à frire toutes sortes de choses, des beignets, de la viande. Il dit : « Dépose cela à terre devant moi ». Elle les posa devant lui. Alors Anansi mangea, il mangea jusqu'à... ce que son ventre fut plein. Il dit : « Poêle à frire, je t'en prie, arrête ». Elle arrêta, gban ! Il dit : « Quel kina en vérité as-tu[1] ? » Elle dit : « C'est le citron, le jus de citron, et le balai de paille de riz[2]. Si vous me frottez avec, je perds mon pouvoir ».

Il dit : « C'est bien ; s'il te plaît, accepte de venir dans ma maison d'ɔbia, afin que je puisse frustrer ma femme Wénon et mes enfants. Ils me fatiguent ». Elle dit : « C'est bien, j'irai avec vous ». Il marcha, il la posa sur sa tête. Son ventre était plein, camarades, ses intestins étaient pleins. Il marcha jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât en lisière du village. Il cria : « Tous les gens du village, enfermez-vous, je porte mon ɔbia à ma maison d'ɔbia ». Ils dirent : « Que dis-tu ? ». Il répéta : « Je porte mon pot d'ɔbia à ma maison d'ɔbia. Gban ! Gban ! Les gens claquèrent les portes de leurs maisons, gban !

Anansi marcha jusqu'à sa maison d'ɔbia, ouvrit la porte, il suspendit la poêle à frire dans un coin.

Ce jour-là il ne mangea pas dans la maison de Wénon. Wénon fit cuire des épinards pour lui. Il dit : « Mon ventre est plein ». Il attendit jusqu'à minuit, puis il sortit. Il dit à la poêle à frire : « Poêle, comment êtes-vous belle ainsi ? ». Elle dit : « Je suis belle, mais je ne suis pas belle pour rien ». Il dit : « Montre-moi pour voir ».

Elle se mit à frire pour lui autant de nourriture qu'il put en manger.

(1) Rappelons que dans l'esprit des Noirs Réfugiés, à l'exercice de tout pouvoir magique correspond un kina (interdit).

(2) Les Noirs Réfugiés ont l'habitude d'employer le jus de citron pour récurer la vaisselle.

Un de ses enfants appelé Akpwatitikwati dit [à son frère] Asingébélé : « Nous sommes plus malins qu'Anansi. Je vais surveiller mon père jusqu'à le surprendre ». Alors il se mit à le surveiller et le surprit. Il vit et s'écria : « C'est donc ainsi qu'il faisait ».

Anansi dit qu'il allait à la chasse ; alors il s'en fut à la chasse. [Aussitôt] les enfants vinrent ; ils dirent : « Poêle à frire... » ... (mêmes formules).

Elle se mit à frire pour eux. Elle frit jusqu'à... ce qu'ils aillent chercher leurs autres frères et leur mère Wénon. Ils arrivèrent, portant des calebasses et toutes sortes de récipients; camarades, ils y mirent viande, beignets, toutes sortes de nourriture. Ils se chargèrent de toutes ces choses jusqu'à n'en plus pouvoir.

Ils dirent : « Arrête-toi ». Elle s'arrêta, gban ! Camarades, ils montèrent au grenier[1] ; ils soulevèrent les bottes de riz, ils glissèrent tout cela dessous, zou ! Ils cachèrent ces choses pour qu'Anansi ne les vît pas, jusqu'à ce que ce fut fini. Voilà ! Ils allèrent, prirent du citron, prirent une brosse. Ils s'écrièrent : « Nous allons donner une leçon à Anansi aujourd'hui, nous sommes fatigués de l'entendre dire qu'il ne veut pas manger d'épinards, nous allons lui faire voir ! ». Ainsi firent-ils. Ils versèrent le jus de citron, tollo ! Ils frotterent la poêle à frire] avec de la paille de riz[2]. C'est fini ! Ils la suspendirent de nouveau.

Ils s'en allèrent jusqu'à l'heure du dîner. Anansi vint. Wénon avait fait cuire des épinards avec du riz : « Frère Anansi, puisque te voilà déjà, viens prendre de quoi manger ; nous n'avons pas trouvé grand'chose de bon ». Il dit : « Ma sœur, je ne mange pas encore. Mon ventre n'est pas ouvert. Pendant que je marchais en brousse un vent est entré dans mon ventre, il est froid ». Elle dit : « C'est bien ». Il alla manger la nourriture de la poêle à frire ; il marcha jusqu'à ce qu'il y arrivât. Il dit : « Poêle, comment es-tu si belle ? ». Rien ! : « Poêle, comment es-tu si belle ? » Rien, rien !

Il dit : « Qu'est-ce qui est arrivé à ma poêle à frire, qu'elle ne marche plus ? Je sais, c'est Akpwatitikwati qui l'a gâtée. Je vais lui donner une leçon, attendez ! ». Il s'en alla ; il dit : « celle-là est gâtée ; je vais aller en chercher une autre ».

Il vint à la maison. Il ne fit aucune remarque ; il resta tranquille. Il prit les épinards qu'il avait refusés ; avec les épinards il mangea du riz.

Le lendemain il alla en brousse, voloou ! à la découverte, camarades ; Anansi marcha en brousse, chercha... jusqu'à ce qu'il vit trois fouets suspendus. Il dit : « Fouets, comment êtes-vous si beaux ? ». Ils dirent : « Ho ! Nous sommes beaux, mais nous ne sommes pas beaux pour rien ».

Camarades, ils le fouettèrent dans la brousse, viop, viop ! ils fouettèrent Anansi. Il cria : « Vous avez raison, vous avez raison. C'est moi qui suis venu vous ennuyer, vous avez raison ! Pouvez-vous venir avec moi ? ». Les fouets s'arrêtèrent de frapper. Il dit : « S'il vous plaît, je vous demande, j'ai de mauvais enfants dans mon village ; je vous en prie, venez dans ma maison d'ɔbia ». Ils dirent : « Par fantaisie, nous irons ». Il les prit. Il arriva à l'orée du village, il cria : « je porte mon pot d'ɔbia à la maison ! mon pot d'ɔbia

(1) Entendant par là le toit des cases, isolé par un plafond de planches.

(2) Il faut comprendre que c'est par malveillance et non par inadvertance que la femme et les enfants d'Anansi détruisent le pouvoir de la poêle.

de nouveau ! Camarades, de nouveau gban ! gban ! [Ses fils] dirent : « Eh bien, notre père apporte de nouveau la même chose. Nous allons lui faire voir ! ». Anansi ouvrit doucement la porte de la maison d'ɔbia, posa les fouets soigneusement. Il dormit jusqu'au lendemain. Il dit : « Je vais à la chasse ». Mais il resta à l'orée de la forêt ; il surveillait les abords de la maison d'ɔbia. Quand il eut vu Anansi partir, Akpwatitikwati dit : « Je vais aller chercher mes frères et ma mère ». Camarades, ils étaient atteints de pian[1] ! Ils entrèrent tous ensemble dans la maison d'ɔbia. De nouveau : « Fouets, comment êtes-vous si beaux ? ».

Viop ! viop ! Anansi courut, il ferma la porte ; il dit : « Faites pour voir, fouets, frappez donc pour voir ! » viop ! viop !

(Quelqu'un dans l'assistance) « Wénon était dedans ? » — « Wénon était dedans ! » (rires). Les fouets les frappèrent jusqu'à ce que leur peau fût en sang, leurs boutons de pian coupés, que le sang coulât sur eux.

(rires cruels de l'auditoire)

Alors Anansi ouvrit la porte et ils s'enfuirent.

C'est fini.

4) Anansi et la chauve-souris

Anansi cherchait quelqu'un pour aller avec lui à une fête qui avait lieu dans un village voisin... parce que plus on vient nombreux et plus on vous donne à manger. Il demanda à la chauve-souris qui lui dit : « depuis longtemps je ne suis pas allée à une fête. Le jour que tu voudras j'irai ». Le jour qu'ils avaient dit arriva. Ils prirent le chemin ; ils marchèrent jusqu'à ce qu'ils fussent arrivés à proximité du village. Anansi dit : « camarade chauve-souris, vois ce lebi weko[2]. Si je me mets à crier : « Mon ventre, mon ventre », viens en couper de l'écorce, fais m'en boire une infusion pour calmer mes douleurs. Mon ventre aime à me jouer de ces tours ». Ils marchèrent encore un peu. La chauve-souris dit : « Je vais m'écarter un moment ». Elle alla à l'écart, puis courut sans bruit jusqu'à l'arbre, coupa un morceau d'écorce, la mit dans son sac et revint.

Ils arrivèrent au village. Les gens avaient mis la table ; une grande table ! Comme ils se préparaient à manger, Anansi gémit : « Mon ventre, mon ventre. S'il te plaît, cette écorce dont je t'ai parlé, va m'en chercher[3] ».

La chauve-souris la tira de son sac : « La voici ». Anansi se dit : « Il y a des gens qu'il ne faut pas mêler à ses affaires ». Ils mangèrent jusqu'à ce qu'ils eurent fini ; ils dansèrent jusqu'à l'aube. Comme ils prenaient congé, les gens leur firent cadeau d'un sac

(1) Maladie cutanée qui atteignait la plupart des enfants chez les Noirs Réfugiés.

(2) Lebi weko : bougouni (Inga alba) arbre dont l'écorce est employée dans la pharmacopée indigène.

(3) Cette ruse compliquée a pour but d'écarter son camarade pour manger sa part. C'est le thème central de tout un cycle de contes des Noirs Réfugiés.

d'arachides, camarades, un gros sac ; ce n'était pas un sac d'un quintal, mais un sac de deux quintaux.

Anansi dit à la chauve-souris : « Tu n'es pas capable de porter ce sac. C'est moi l'aîné, c'est à moi de le porter. Il le souleva ; il oscilla [sous le poids] mais tint bon quand même. Ils marchèrent. Anansi allait devant, la chauve-souris derrière. La chauve-souris vola, pou, pou, pou ! se laissa tomber sur le chemin et se changea en une fourchette d'or. Anansi arriva. Il dit : « Voici une fourchette d'or, je vais la prendre ». Il allongea la main comme pour la prendre. Il se dit : « Hou ? Il ne faut pas la prendre, c'est la chauve-souris ». Il coupa une baguette et la frappa, gbo ! Il marcha, marcha. La chauve-souris vola devant, pou, pou, pou ! Elle se laissa tomber à terre et se changea en une chaîne en or. Anansi arriva. Il se dit : « Les gens qui sont partis devant ont laissé tomber une chaîne en or. J'ai déjà laissé une fourchette en or, cette chaîne en or, je ne vais pas la laisser ». Il ouvrit le sac d'arachides, il lança la chaîne à l'intérieur. Camarades, la chauve-souris mangea les arachides. Elle mangeait, elle fientait. Anansi était près d'arriver à son village. La chauve-souris prit la dernière graine d'arachide, elle la mangea et fienta. Anansi marcha jusqu'au village sans plus s'occuper de la chauve-souris. Il dit : « Sœur Wénon, j'ai eu de la chance. Moi et la chauve-souris étions là-bas, comment a-t-elle marché, je n'en sais rien. J'ai trouvé un sac d'arachides pour moi et toi. Enfants, entrez à la maison ». Ils entrèrent, fermèrent la porte à clé soigneusement. Il défiçela le sac. La chauve-souris s'échappa, pou, pou, pou ! Il dit : « Ma femme, je suis mort ». Il ouvrit le sac : rien, que des fientes. La chauve-souris volait, pou, pou, pou ! Elle se posa sur la tête de Samasamooyu[1]. Anansi dit : « C'est ainsi que tu m'as ruiné. Je vais t'arranger ». Il prit un bâton, il le brandit aussi fort qu'il put ; il le jeta, gbo ! pour assommer la chauve-souris. La chauve-souris s'envola, pou, pou, pou ! Le bâton frappa l'enfant qui tomba. La chauve-souris se posa sur la tête de Bigimofu. Anansi dit : « Ma mère, je suis mort ; Chauve-souris, je vais te tuer ». Il lui lança le bâton, pou, pou, pou ! La chauve-souris s'envola, l'enfant tomba. La chauve-souris se posa sur la tête de Wénon. Anansi dit : « Ma mère, je suis mort, c'est par ta faute que j'ai tué mes enfants, et maintenant tu te poses sur la tête de ma femme ! » Gbob ! Pou, pou, pou ! Wénon tomba morte. La chauve-souris se posa sur la tête d'Anansi. Anansi dit : « Je vais t'arranger ». Il alla sous le baliki[2] et se frappa la tête]. Gbo ! balau ! [Il tomba], il resta là cabossé comme une vieille touque à pétrole. Il n'en mourut pas. Il se ranima et s'en fut. Ainsi va le conte.

5) Anansi, le roi et le lapin[3]

Il y avait un roi ; il régnait sur un pays. Tous les gens du village du roi avaient l'habitude d'aller se laver à un certain étang. Un jour, le roi alla à cet étang pour se baigner. Camarade, il vit un caca dans l'eau ! « Qui a fait ses besoins là ? » « Je ne sais pas ». Le roi convoqua l'assemblée du peuple. Celui-ci dit : « Ce n'est pas moi ». Celui-là : « Ce n'est pas moi ». Personne n'avait fait ce caca, mais il était là.

Anansi dit au roi : « Grand-man, je découvrirai le coupable ». Le roi dit : « C'est bien ; fais ce que tu sais faire ».

Anansi s'en alla. Il alla couper un arbre ; il fit une belle grande statue, il lui fit des yeux, un nez, une bouche, des seins. Il l'enduisit de glu, puis la plaça au milieu du chemin qui allait à l'étang. La lune ne s'était pas levée.

Camarades, le lapin fit ses besoins dans l'étang, puis il revint à la rive, car c'était lui qui avait fait ce caca dans l'eau. Il prit le chemin, un seau d'eau sur la tête. Il vit une femme arrêtée au milieu du chemin. Il cria : « Ho ! femme ! écarte-toi du chemin, je ne te veux pas [ici] ». Elle resta immobile. Il dit : « Femme ! Je vais te frapper ». Elle resta immobile sans répondre. Il pose le seau à terre, il la frappe gbo ! Kyin kyin ![1], sa main reste collée. Il dit : « Vas-tu me lâcher, je ne te veux pas [ici] ». Il la frappa de l'autre main, gbo ! Kyin kyin ! L'autre main resta collée. Il dit : « Je vais te donner un coup de genou ! ». Il lui donna un coup de genou, kyin kyin ! Le genou resta collé. Il la frappa de l'autre genou, il resta collé aussi. Ainsi le lapin resta immobilisé les pieds en l'air jusqu'au lendemain matin. Anansi vint, il dit : « Lapin, nous nous rencontrons ! depuis qu'on faisait caca dans l'étang, c'était toi. Nous nous rencontrons ! ».

Anansi se rendit auprès du roi ; il dit : « Grand man, j'ai trouvé celui qui souillait l'eau, c'est le lapin ! C'est lui qui faisait caca dans l'eau. Que vais-je faire de lui ? Le roi dit : « Anansi, fais comme tu voudras, car cette eau-là, c'est d'elle que tous les gens de ce pays se servent ».

Anansi dit : « C'est bien ». Il alluma du feu, il fit fondre la poix qui collait le lapin, il fit entrer le lapin dans un sac, zou ! Il ficela le sac, kwa ! Puis il alla chercher une longue tige de fer ; il dit au lapin : « Tu vois cette tige ? Eh bien, je vais la faire chauffer au rouge et te la plonger dans l'anus jusqu'à l'extrémité. Tu ne souilleras plus l'eau du roi ».

Il arriva à son dégrad[2]. Il descendit à terre [laissant le lapin au bord de l'eau]. Le chemin était long du dégrad à sa maison. Camarades, il fit un grand feu, fit chauffer la tige au rouge.

Le lapin parla seul à haute voix, disant : « Quel malheur ! Me voilà joli ! Je n'ai pas de chance ! ». Le jaguar vint à passer ; il dit : « Père lapin, qu'avez-vous ? » — « C'est le roi qui m'a fait prendre, car il veut me forcer à épouser sa fille ; il m'a fait arrêter et ficeler dans un sac pour que je ne puisse pas m'enfuir ».

Le jaguar dit : « Je vais te délivrer et entrer dans le sac à ta place, car moi, c'est cela même que je cherche, pour trouver une belle situation ».

Le lapin dit : « Viens me délivrer ». Il le relâcha, entra dans le sac. Le lapin referma le sac et s'enfuit.

(1) Interjection renforçant le sens d'un verbe exprimant que quelque chose s'est fixé ou immobilisé.
(2) Débarcadère. Il faut comprendre qu'il se déplaça en canot sur une rivière comme les Noirs réfugiés.

Anansi vint, il ne dit plus rien mais chercha à tâtons l'abdomen du lapin. Il lui plongea la tige de fer dans l'anus jusqu'à l'extrémité. Alors le tigre hurla : « hi, hi ! ». Alors Anansi dit : « Frère tigre, je n'ai rien contre toi ; c'est le lapin ! ».

Le tigre dit : « Anansi, je n'ai rien contre toi, mais moi et le lapin sommes ennemis à mort aujourd'hui ». Anansi libéra le jaguar qui courut après le lapin. Il vit le lapin ; il dit : « Lapin, tu m'as brûlé l'intestin, tu m'as trompé, nous nous rencontrons maintenant ! ». Ils coururent, ils coururent jusqu'à... ce que le lapin s'échappât. Pas moyen de rattraper le lapin ! Le lapin vit un agouti mort depuis toute une semaine, tout gonflé et puant. Il se glissa dans son ventre. Il se mit à gémir. Le jaguar arrivait ; il s'arrêta et dit : « Frère agouti, bonjour ! ». Il répondit : « Comment allez-vous ? » — « Cela va un peu »[1]. Le jaguar dit : « Grand frère, que vous est-il arrivé ? ». Il dit : « Le lapin et moi, nous nous sommes battus, il m'a donné un seul coup, et me voici étendu mort ... c'est cela qu'il m'a fait ».

Le jaguar reprit sa course. Il vit le lapin devant lui, il dit : « Aujourd'hui nous nous rencontrons ». Ils coururent jusqu'à... ce que le lapin s'échappât. Il vit le cadavre d'un daim, mort depuis une semaine, gonflé et puant. Il se glissa dedans. Le jaguar courut jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât là. Il dit : « Frère daim, que vous est-il arrivé ? ». Il répondit : « Le lapin et moi nous nous sommes querellés, nous nous sommes battus, alors il m'a donné un seul coup et me voici étendu mort ».

Le jaguar dit : « [J'abandonne]. Moi et le lapin, c'est fini jusqu'à la fin du monde ».

6) Anansi et la Mort

[Un jour] Anansi alla à la chasse. Il marcha jusqu'à ce qu'il débouchât dans une grande clairière. Il avança jusqu'à ce qu'il rencontrât un homme. Il salua, lui dit : « Bonjour, frère ! ». Pas de réponse ! — « Bonjour, frère ! » Rien ; pas de réponse ! Il lui dit : « Heu ! frère ! c'est de la viande que vous avez là ? » Pas de réponse ! Il lui dit : « Puisque vous ne me répondez pas, [c'est comme si] vous disiez de me servir ». Camarades, Anansi s'approcha de la marmite et il mangea, mangea jusqu'à ce que son ventre fût plein. Il dit : « Bien que vous ne me répondiez pas, nous sommes beau-père et gendre. Demain je vous conduirai une de mes filles ». Pas de réponse : « Puisqu'il ne dit rien, c'est qu'il est d'accord ». Il alla, alla jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât à la maison. Il avait fait un « atouri »[2] et pris autant de viande qu'il avait pu emporter. Le lendemain il dit à sa femme Wénon : « J'ai trouvé un endroit, un bon endroit pour la chasse. J'ai trouvé un mari pour notre fille ; c'est lui qui m'a donné tout cela ». Wénon dit : « C'est bien ».

Le jour suivant avant l'aube, il alla vers sa fille, lui dit : « Prends ton panier à ouvrage ». Elle prépara ses affaires ; ils marchèrent, ils marchèrent jusqu'à ce qu'ils

1. Formules de salutations habituelles des Noirs Réfugiés.
2. Hotte.

arrivèrent. Il dit : « Gendre, bonjour ! ». Rien. Il dit [à sa fille] : « Tu vois comme il ne répond pas, c'est ainsi qu'il est ; voici ton mari ».

Il alla à la marmite. Il mangea jusqu'à ce que son ventre fût plein. Il coupa des feuilles de palmier, tressa un catouri, chargea de la viande autant qu'il en put tenir. Il dit : « Gendre, je m'en vais, demeurez ici avec votre femme ». Il chargea le catouri et s'en alla. La jeune fille vit un tracé bien propre allant à une crique. Elle prit la vaisselle sale dans laquelle son père avait mangé, elle s'engagea sur le chemin. Kwakpwala ! La trappe se déclencha ; c'est là que la Mort [car cet homme inconnu, c'était la Mort] avait mis sa trappe.

La Mort se leva, se précipita armée de sa massue, la frappa, gbo ! Elle traîna son corps jusqu'à la maison, la dépeça, la mit dans la marmite et la fit cuire. La jeune fille avait deux bagues à son doigt comme vous voyez que j'ai moi-même (le conteur montre sa main).

Le lendemain avant l'aube, Anansi revint : « Gendre, bonjour ! ». Pas de réponse ! — « Comment va votre femme ? » Pas de réponse. — « Je sais, elle est allée à la crique, laver de la vaisselle sale ; c'est bien ». Il mit la marmite à terre, et se mit à manger. Il mangea jusqu'à ce que son ventre fût plein. Il faisait tourner la marmite, cherchant les meilleurs morceaux, quand soudain, fang ! il vit les bagues. Il dit : « Ma mère ! je suis mort ; on a tué ma fille ». Il saisit une forte massue qui se trouvait là, puis il frappa la Mort sur le tibia, bom ! La Mort se précipita ; il s'enfuit ; ils coururent jusqu'à ce qu'ils arrivèrent à proximité du village. Alors il cria : « Montez en l'air [en haut d'un arbre] ! Wénon, Asingébélé, Akpwatitikwati, Bigimofu, montez en l'air. — « Que dis-tu, faut-il que nous t'apportions la grosse marmite ? »[1] — « Imbécile ! Toutes ces viandes que nous avons mangées, ce n'est pas moi qui les ai tuées ; celui qui les avait tuées me court après ». Ils montèrent [en haut d'un arbre]. Anansi sauta, grimpa jusqu'en haut de l'arbre. La Mort arrivait ; elle s'assit en bas de l'arbre. Ils restèrent là quelque temps. Asingébélé dit : « Père, mon bras n'en peut plus ». Anansi lui dit : « Regarde le beau-frère en bas, va donc ! »[2]. Il se laissa tomber. La Mort l'assomma gbo ! et le jeta de côté. Ils demeurèrent encore un certain temps, puis Akpwatitikwati dit : « Mon père, je n'en peux plus ». Anansi lui dit : « Toutes ces viandes que nous avons mangées, c'est lui qui les avait tuées ; regarde le beau-frère en bas ; va donc ! Il se laissa tomber. La Mort l'assomma puis le jeta de côté.

(Même scène ; le dernier enfant d'Anansi, puis sa femme Wenon, se laissent tomber à leur tour. Anansi reste seul en haut de l'arbre).

...Anansi restait. Il résista, résista jusqu'à ... ce qu'il dit : « Gendre, vous savez ce que vous devez faire. J'ai beaucoup mangé de votre viande, je suis gras. Allez chercher des feuilles de bananier et beaucoup de cendre, pour que quand je tomberai, mon corps n'éclate pas et ma graisse ne soit pas perdue. Si je tombe sur la terre nue mon corps

(1) Jeu de mots. Wenon comprend pantu, marmite, à la place de o tapu, en l'air.
(2) Anansi ne cherche pas à sauver sa vie en sacrifiant ses enfants, il leur dit seulement de se résigner à l'inévitable.

éclatera. La Mort se leva, vou ! coupa des feuilles de bananier, ramassa de la cendre comme elle put.

« Regardez bien l'endroit où je vais tomber, j'arrive. » La Mort regarda le tas de cendres ! plaou ! Anansi tomba en plein au milieu [la cendre jaillit de toutes parts]. Le temps que la Mort s'essuyât les yeux, Anansi s'était enfui.

C'est ainsi qu'Anansi vint porter la Mort parmi nous. Auparavant la Mort restait en brousse ; elle tuait des animaux, mais non des hommes. C'est à cause d'Anansi qu'elle vint séparer et tuer les hommes.

7) Anansi, Buchi Mama et Wata Mama[1]

Anansi, un jour alla en brousse. Il alla voir la Maman-la brousse. Il lui dit : « Maman-la brousse, voulez-vous lutter à la corde raide avec moi ? » La Maman-la brousse lui dit : « Quoi ? M'avez-vous regardée ? Forte comme je suis, vous prétendez lutter à la corde raide contre moi ? » Il dit : « Maman-la brousse, vous mentez, vous n'êtes pas capable de me vaincre. Je suis sûr de vous tirer jusqu'au village pas à pas pour que les gens vous voient. » Elle répondit : « c'est moi qui vous traînerai jusqu'à la brousse. » Ils discutèrent jusqu'à l'injure, et parièrent. Ils convinrent de fixer l'épreuve au dimanche ; elle devrait tirer l'extrémité d'une corde sortant du village. Elle dit : « C'est bien » — « je m'enorgueillis de mes ancêtres, Maman-la brousse. Vous ne me traînerez pas en brousse, c'est moi qui vous traînerai jusqu'à l'intérieur du village. »

Puis il revint au village et alla jusqu'à la rivière. Il se jeta à l'eau, dyou ! il alla jusqu'à la Maman-di-l'eau. Il lui dit : « Voulez-vous lutter à la corde raide contre moi ? La Maman-di-l'eau répondit : « C'est moi qui vous tirerai jusqu'à la rivière. » Anansi dit : « Je suis sûr de vous tirer à terre, pour que les gens voient comment vous êtes faite. » Ils parièrent de nouveau et fixèrent le jour de l'épreuve au dimanche. Il dit : « C'est bien, le jour dit je viendrai dans l'eau vous tendre l'extrémité d'une corde. » La Maman-di-l'eau dit : « C'est bien. Je vais rester là pour prendre le bout de la corde. » « Nous allons voir qui est homme et qui ne l'est pas. »

Il rentra à son village. Le samedi après-midi il installa une clôture lyifuygu[2] autour du village, jusqu'à la rivière et jusqu'à la brousse derrière le village. Il nettoya le village complètement. Il coupa une longue et forte corde, il alla en glisser une extrémité dans la rivière, il alla placer l'autre dans la brousse.

Le dimanche, la Maman-la brousse et la Maman-di-l'eau vinrent et tirèrent chacune sur une extrémité de la corde. Anansi lui-même ne tirait pas mais chacune pensait : « C'est Anansi ». La gila de Anansi vint dans sa tête, il se mit à chanter et danser.

(Le conteur chante une suite d'onomatopées, reprises en chœur par l'assistance.)

(1) Divinités maléfiques de la brousse et de l'eau, auxquelles on ne rend pas de culte.

(2) Clôture complète faite de feuilles de palmier piaut enfilées sur une corde, à laquelle est attribuée le pouvoir d'arrêter les mauvaises influences. Après la pose de la clôture on purifie le village en le nettoyant complètement.

Les deux divinités luttèrent à la corde. La Maman-di-l'eau fut traînée au milieu du village pas à pas, pata, pata, pata ! Anansi sauta en l'air, fit toutes sortes de fantaisies. Puis la Maman-la-brousse fut traînée au milieu du village, avec des roches sur son corps. Ainsi tous les hommes purent voir leurs visages.

Alors la Maman-la-brousse partit à reculons vers la forêt, la Maman-di-l'eau se jeta à l'eau, djou ! C'est cela que fit Anansi. Depuis, ces divinités n'ont plus jamais laissé voir leur visage par les hommes. La Maman-la-brousse resta en brousse, la Maman-di-l'eau resta dans l'eau ; elles firent du mal aux hommes. J'ai fini, gbolon !

8) Anansi et le bateau a vapeur

Il y avait un roi ; il avait une fille. Il l'éleva jusqu'à ce qu'elle devînt une grande jeune fille. Camarades, elle était jolie. Les hommes jusqu'au dernier la voulaient pour femme. Mais à tous ses prétendants elle disait : « Je serai à celui qui apportera un bateau à vapeur à mon père. » En ce temps-là les hommes ne connaissaient pas les bateaux à vapeur ; il n'y en avait pas au pays des Blancs, puisque le pays des Blancs n'existait pas. Comment connaître le bateau à vapeur ? Tous les gens de ce pays, tous les animaux la demandaient. A tous elle répondait : « Puisque j'ai dit qu'il fallait un bateau à vapeur, si vous n'êtes pas capable de le trouver, laissez ! » Anansi dit : « Moi, j'aurai cette femme, moi Anansi. » Il alla vers elle, il dit : « Sœur, grand merci, venez ! » La jeune fille accourut à la porte. Il lui fit une cour assidue. Elle lui dit : « Anansi, vous aussi vous savez ce que j'ai demandé : un bateau à vapeur pour mon père. Apportez-le et je serai votre femme. » Il dit : « Quoi ? C'est pour un bateau à vapeur que vous êtes en peine ? C'est une petite affaire pour moi. Je vais vous trouvez cela bien vite. Demain, demandez à votre père de me donnez un grain de maïs. » Le lendemain, Anansi arriva et dit : « Donnez-moi donc [le grain de maïs]. » Elle prit un épi de maïs entier ; il dit : « Je ne veux pas l'épi entier, mais une seule graine ; avec cette graine, j'achèterai le bateau à vapeur. » Il sauta dans son canot, il dit : « Je m'en vais. » Il pagaya, descendant la rivière, jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât à un village. Les gens lui crièrent de la rive : « Oncle Anansi, venez à terre ! » Il dit : « Je ne peux pas venir, je porte une lettre du roi. » En ce temps-là Anansi avait du succès. Les gens lui dirent : « Venez donc, nous allons la mettre en lieu sûr. » Il dit : « Me voici déjà, pourquoi m'avez-vous appelé ? » Les gens dirent : « Venez avec nous, frère, nous avons faim de vous ». Il dit [aux femmes] : « Bien, mes sœurs. » Elles préparèrent la nourriture. Les gens dirent : « Où est la lettre du roi ? » Il dit : « C'est cette graine de maïs-là. » Ils la prirent et la mirent en lieu sûr. Il veilla jusqu'à ce qu'ils fussent endormis, il ouvrit doucement, il alla prendre le grain de maïs. Il alla jusqu'à un poulailler, il le jeta aux volailles qui le picorèrent : maïs et volailles ne vont pas ensemble.

Il dormit jusqu'au matin. Il dit : « Bachia[1] s'il vous plaît, donnez-moi la lettre. » Le bachia alla chercher le grain de maïs. Rien ! Il dit : « Ho, ho, Anansi, nous l'avons perdu ; nous allons vous en donnez un autre. » Il dit : « Ce n'est pas un autre que je veux, car je passais mon chemin sur la rivière, c'est vous qui m'avez appelé sans raison ; donnez-moi un coq. Si vous ne me donnez pas de coq, nous allons combattre à mort dans ce village. » Ils prirent un coq et lui donnèrent.

(1) Adjoint au chef du village.

Il embarqua dans son canot. Il pagaya jusqu'au soir, jusqu'à ce qu'il passât devant un village. Les gens lui crièrent de la rive : « Oncle Anansi, venez à terre, venez à terre. » Il dit : « Je ne peux pas venir, je porte une lettre du roi. » Ils dirent : « Venez donc, nous allons la mettre en lieu sûr. » Il accosta, il dit : « Pourquoi m'avez-vous appelé ? » Les gens dirent : « C'est parce qu'il y a longtemps que nous ne vous avons pas vu. » Il dit : « C'est bien » — « Où est la lettre ? » — « C'est ce coq ».

Ils prirent le coq, ils l'enfermèrent dans un panier. Ils mirent la table et lui servirent un bon repas. Il mangea jusqu'à ce que ce fût fini. Il déballa ses affaires ; il dormit jusqu'à minuit. Il ouvrit, il alla jusqu'au coq, le prit et le jeta dans un parc à cochons, vo ! Les cochons le mangèrent, gwili-gwolo ! Il dormit jusqu'au lendemain. Il dit : « Bachia, s'il vous plaît, donnez-moi ma lettre ». Le bachia alla chercher le coq. Rien ! Il ne le vit pas. Il dit : « Nous allons vous en donner un autre ». Anansi répondit : « Cela ne fait pas mon affaire, car je passais sur la rivière, c'est vous qui m'avez appelé et attiré à terre sans raison ; donnez-moi un cochon. Si vous ne me donnez pas un cochon aujourd'hui, je vais vous tuer dans ce village ». Ils prirent un cochon et le mirent dans son canot.

Il pagaya, pagaya jusqu'à... ce qu'il arrivât à un village.

(Par le même procédé, Anansi change son cochon contre un bœuf.)

Il était environ 10 heures du soir. Il passa devant un village où un enfant était mort, le petit d'une mère était mort, les gens faisaient le cercueil. Le camarade passa. Les gens crièrent : « Oncle Anansi, venez à terre, venez à terre. Quelqu'un est mort ici ; venez nous aider ». Il dit : « Je ne peux pas, je porte une lettre du roi ». Ils dirent : « Nous allons la mettre en lieu sûr ». Il arriva. Ils prirent le bœuf, ils l'attachèrent à une branche. Ils mirent la table pour lui. La mort était dans ce village ; ils mirent le corps dans le cercueil. Ils dansèrent jusqu'à... la nuit.

Pendant la nuit il se leva et alla détacher le bœuf qui s'échappa dans la brousse.

Le lendemain il dit au bachia : « Bachia, s'il vous plaît, allez chercher mon bœuf ». Le bachia le chercha en vain. Il dit : « Anansi, le bœuf s'est échappé dans la brousse ». Nous allons vous en donner un autre. — « Cela ne fait pas mon affaire, dit Anansi ; je passais sur la rivière et vous m'avez appelé sans raison. Donnez-moi l'enfant mort ».

Ils dirent : « Oncle Anansi, nous ne pouvons te le donner, il est déjà dans le cercueil ». « Laissons-en », dit Anansi, « vous me cherchez querelle. » Le bachia alla dire à la mère de l'enfant mort qu'un malheur était arrivé[1]. Elle accepta. Ils brisèrent le cercueil et donnèrent le corps à Anansi. Il le mit à l'avant du canot et pagaya jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât à une grande boucle de la rivière. Une fois hors de la vue des gens du village, il fit une petite pagaie. Il alla au banc avant du canot, il y fixa l'enfant mort avec de la glu. Il mit le corps en position assise, comme s'il était vivant, il lui fixa la pagaie à la main.

Il pagaya jusqu'à ce qu'il entendît quelque chose comme le bruit d'un bateau. Il se dit : « Ecoutons, mettons-nous debout, peut-être qu'un bateau vient ». Il plaça le canot au plus fort du courant, il pagaya fort, debout à l'arrière. Il entendit mieux, il dit : « C'est un navire ». Il cria : « Ah, ah ! aujourd'hui je te rencontre, toi que je cherchais depuis si longtemps ». Il vit clairement que c'était un navire. Camarades, il pagaya dans le courant ; le bateau l'évita. Anansi pagaya vers lui, pagaya jusque... gbo ! [collision] le canot coula. Anansi dans l'eau, cria : « Vous avez noyé l'enfant du roi, rendez-moi, rendez-moi vite l'enfant du roi, sinon, Blancs, qui êtes dans ce navire, vous et moi nous allons mourir ![1] » Ils stoppèrent le bateau. Ils hissèrent Anansi à bord. Ils repêchèrent le canot, mais ne trouvèrent pas l'enfant mort.

Les Blancs lui dirent : « Nous ne retrouvons pas l'enfant du roi. Que faut-il faire pour que cette affaire soit finie ? » Il dit : « Donnez-moi le bateau ». Ils acceptèrent.

Il remonta la rivière avec le bateau. Il arriva à l'appontement du village du roi. Anansi tira le canon. A terre, on tira le canon aussi. Anansi fut reçu triomphalement, la fille du roi lui passa une bague au doigt et ils s'unirent. C'est ainsi que le roi eût un bateau à vapeur.

9) Pikinbaya[2]

Il y avait une femme ; elle eût un enfant qu'elle appela Pikinbaya[3]. Un jour elle lui donna de la nourriture à porter au marché pour vendre, des bananes et ignames. Il la vendit entièrement et en obtint 2 sous ; il prit les deux sous et acheta une petite couleuvre[4]. Il revint à la maison, on lui demanda : « où est l'argent ? » Il dit : « C'est cela que j'ai acheté, une petite couleuvre ».

Ils le fouettèrent jusqu'à ce qu'il fût presque mort. Il alla en brousse, jusqu'à ce qu'il trouvât un endroit ; il creusa un beau trou rond. Il le remplit d'eau et y mit la couleuvre. Il lui donna de petits poissons.

Le lendemain il prit la nourriture de nouveau. Il marcha, marcha jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât au marché. Camarades, de nouveau il vendit entièrement la nourriture. Il vit une femme à l'entrée du marché avec des perroquets. Il lui dit : « Femme, combien vendez-vous un perroquet ? » Elle dit : « Je le vends un sou ». Il dit : « Donnez-moi celui-ci ». Il prit le perroquet. Il vit une autre femme qui avait des rats. Il dit : « Femme, combien vendez-vous un rat ? » Elle dit : « Je le vends un sou ». Il acheta le rat.

Il s'en retourna à la maison.

On lui demanda : « Où est l'argent ? » Il dit : « C'est cela que j'ai acheté, un perroquet

(1) Contradiction évidente avec le début du conte où il est dit qu'en ce temps-là le pays des Blancs n'existait pas. Mais aucun des auditeurs ne paraît s'en soucier.

(3) Le nom signifie « petit camarade ».

et un rat ». Camarades ! Ils prirent le garçon, ils le frappèrent jusqu'à ce qu'il fût presque mort.

Sa mère dit à son père : « Tout ce qui arrive là est de ta faute. Il ne faut plus lui donner de la nourriture à vendre. »

Le lendemain, ils ne lui en donnèrent plus. Pikinbaya resta tranquille et s'occupa de sa couleuvre jusqu'à ce que la couleuvre lui dit : « J'ai chaud, je veux aller dans un ruisseau. » Il la souleva, la mit sur son cou. Il la porta jusqu'au ruisseau où il la posa. Puis il revint au village.

Il chassa [pour nourrir la couleuvre], attrapa pour elles de petits poissons. Un jour la couleuvre [qui avait grossi] lui dit : « Pikinbaya, je ne veux plus rester dans ce ruisseau. Mène-moi jusqu'à une grande rivière. » La couleuvre descendit le ruisseau, Pikinbaya marchant le long de la rive. Ils descendirent jusqu'à... ce qu'ils fussent arrivés à une grande crique. La couleuvre resta là. Le garçon s'en alla mais revint [régulièrement] voir la couleuvre. Il chassait pour elle et lui portait de la viande. La couleuvre grossit ! Elle devint adulte. Un jour qu'il était venu la voir, elle lui dit : « Pikinbaya ! Je veux aller au fleuve, je veux me nourrir de poissons comme les autres couleuvres. » Elle descendit le courant. Pikinbaya marchait le long de la rive jusqu'à... ce qu'ils fussent arrivés dans le fleuve. La couleuvre dit : « eh bien, Pikinbaya, je m'en vais. »

Suit un passage confus et fastidieux. Elle emmène Pikinbaya au village des couleuvres et lui remet un talisman contenu dans un pot, qui lui assurera chance et prospérité.

Pikinbaya resta là jusqu'à ce que ... il comprit qu'elle ne reviendrait plus. Il prit le chemin, marcha, marcha jusqu'à ce qu'il arrivât à son village. Sa famille était dans la misère. Ils n'avaient même plus de sel pour manger. Le garçon arriva. Il suspendit le pot à un pommier cajou.

Aussitôt le village de Pikinbaya devint prospère.)

Camarades ! Paris même n'était pas si riche que lui. Les grands navires accostèrent au village de Pikinbaya.

Or, ce pays était gouverné par un roi qui était très riche ; il se dit : « Cela me stupéfie, Pikinbaya est plus riche que moi. Tous mes ouvriers me quittent pour aller chez lui. Il paie jusqu'à 10 florins par jour[1]. Je vais envoyer ma fille aînée découvrir ce qui enrichit Pikinbaya ainsi et me le dire. » Il prit sa fille aînée, la mit sur un bateau, sur un grand bateau. Le bateau quitta le débarcadère du village du roi, il marcha jusqu'à... ce qu'il arrivât au débarcadère du village de Pikinbaya, un très grand débarcadère. Le canon tonna en son honneur ! Pikinbaya vint dans une grande automobile et prit la jeune fille par le petit doigt : elle monta dans la voiture qui marcha jusqu'à l'intérieur du parc. Ils entrèrent dans la maison. Ils restèrent là jusqu'à ce que toute une semaine se fût

(1) Les Noirs Réfugiés ne parviennent pas à se représenter un roi autrement que comme un patron payant ses ouvriers.

écoulée. Alors elle dit : « Pikinbaya » — ils étaient étendus sur le lit[1] — « je vais m'en aller ». Il dit : « Bon, cela va ! » Elle dit : « Pikinbaya, qu'est-ce qui vous enrichit ainsi ? » Il dit : « Vous voulez le savoir ? » C'est un pot que j'ai à la tête de mon lit. » Elle prit le pot, l'enferma dans une cantine de fer, la chargea dans la voiture et le bateau quitta le débarcadère.

(Aussitôt la misère s'abattit sur le village.)

Camarades, le village de Pikinbaya devint plus sale que Boniville (rires de l'auditoire, car Boniville est un village mal tenu), plus envahi par la brousse que Puu Mofu[2]. Pikinbaya n'avait plus pour vêtement qu'un vieux sac de riz, car c'était ce pot qui enrichissait le village.

Le perroquet dit : « J'irais bien rechercher le pot, mais je n'ai pas de dents. » Le rat dit : « Si j'avais eu des ailes, j'aurais été chercher le pot. » Le perroquet lui dit : « Viens sur mon dos ». Il sauta sur le dos du perroquet. Il vola, vola... jusqu'à ... ce qu'il se posât sur le grand mât du bateau, kpwala ! Le rat atteignit la cantine. Il la rongea, kwokwo ! la creva, prit le pot, pa ! Au moment où les gens commençaient à remarquer la présence du perroquet, il s'envola, vola, jusqu'au... village de Pikinbaya.

Voilà Pikinbaya riche de nouveau.

La fille aînée du roi arriva au village de son père. Le roi vint avec son automobile chercher sa fille et la malle. Ils arrivèrent au palais, il ouvrit la malle : rien ! Il dit : « Cela me stupéfie. Mais il faut que je trouve ce pot qui enrichit Pikinbaya, il faut que je sache où il est. » Le roi avait trois filles. Il dit : « Je vais lui envoyer la seconde ; elle parviendra à trouver cet objet ».

(La même scène se renouvelle. La fille parvint à saisir le pot qu'elle met dans une cassette de fer, enfermée dans une cantine de fer. Le perroquet et le rat vont le reconquérir, mais le rat brise une de ses incisives.)

En arrivant, le perroquet dit : « Pikinbaya, si tu laisses encore une femme te prendre ce pot, je n'irai plus le rechercher. Mes yeux sont irrités par le vent de la mer. » Le rat dit : « Regarde mes incisives, j'en avais quatre, une est cassée, restent trois. Si tu laisses encore une femme te prendre ce pot, tu resteras dans la misère jusqu'à la fin de tes jours, je n'irai plus. »

La seconde fille du roi arriva au village de son père. Le roi dit : « Cela me stupéfie. Je vais lui envoyer ma dernière fille, il faut absolument que je trouve cet objet. »

Une semaine après il embarqua sa fille cadette sur un bateau, munie de trois malles en fer emboîtées l'une dans l'autre.

(1) Il est à peine besoin d'insister sur l'image que les Noirs Réfugiés se font de la femme, telle que ce conte la reflète : que la fille du roi accepte de se donner sur-le-champ à un homme qu'elle n'a jamais vu, cela ne pose aucun problème. Le conteur, si prolixe par ailleurs, n'accorde pas une phrase à la description de la femme et à ses amours avec Pikinbaya.

(2) Village abandonné et envahi par la brousse au sud de Boniville.

Pikinbaya vint avec son automobile la recevoir à l'embarcadère et la conduisit à sa maison. Ils y restèrent une semaine. Elle dit : « Maintenant je vais m'en aller. » Pikinbaya lui dit : « Vous voulez partir ? » Elle dit : « Qu'est-ce qui vous enrichit ainsi ? » Il répondit : « Vous voulez le savoir ce qui m'enrichit ? » Il prit un pistolet et la tua net. (4tires de l'auditoire). Il embauma le corps avec du camphre. Il le prit, le mit dans la première malle, la première dans la seconde. Il fixa un papier sur la malle, disant « Ce que la fille était venue chercher, elle l'a trouvé. »

La semaine suivante, la bateau revint au village du roi. Le roi ouvrit la première malle, kpwa ! La deuxième malle, kpwa ! Il ouvrit la dernière malle et vit le cadavre de sa fille avec le ventre ouvert.

Alors le roi dit : « Je suis mort ». Il prit un pistolet et se tua.

10) Anansi et la jolie femme (résumé)

Il y avait une femme très jolie et très désirée. Elle disait à tous ses prétendants : « Je serai à vous si vous vous engagez, quand je serai morte, à être enterré vivant avec moi, sous mon cercueil. » Personne ne voulait prendre cet engagement. Anansi, qui désirait cette femme, vint à elle et dit : « Je prends cet engagement, mais je pose une condition, moi aussi : Quand j'ai quitté un village, je ne peux plus y retourner. » La femme accepta et ils vécurent ensemble.

Un jour la femme mourut. On rappela à Anansi l'engagement qu'il avait pris. Les voilà partis au cimetière, le cercueil devant, Anansi derrière, puis les gens du village. Anansi se coucha au fond de la fosse et on descendit le cercueil.

Anansi cria : « Vous m'écrasez, vous me faites mal, enlevez ce cercueil. » Surpris, les gens soulevèrent le cercueil. Alors Anansi rappela la condition qu'il avait posée : « Quand j'ai quitté un village, je ne peux plus y revenir. » (Il faut entendre qu'il venait de quitter le village des morts.)

Il sauta sur le bord de la fosse et s'enfuit.

11) Anansi et l'homme inconnu (résumé)

Un jour Anansi travaillait à sabrer son abattis. Il entendit une voix dans un abattis voisin, qui criait : « Qui est là ? » Il dit : « C'est moi, Anansi. » La voix reprit : « Veux-tu que j'aille t'aider » Il dit « Oui ! » Il vit venir un homme qu'il ne connaissait pas. L'homme se mit à sabrer l'abattis avec lui.

Ils travaillèrent ainsi quelque temps. Puis l'homme dit : « Il est temps de nous arrêter pour manger » – « Que mangerons-nous ? » dit Anansi. L'homme répondit : « Je ne connais qu'une nourriture : la bataille. Je vais lutter avec toi. »

(Il faut entendre que c'était un mauvais génie qui avait pris l'apparence d'un homme.)

L'homme lutta avec Ananzi et comme il était beaucoup plus fort, il le jeta à terre et le maîtrisa. Puis, faisant rougir au feu une tige de fer qui se trouvait là, il la lui enfonça dans l'anus. Puis il s'en alla.

Ananzi hurla de douleur et pleura longtemps. Puis il se leva péniblement et se traîna jusqu'à sa maison.

Il dit à sa femme Wénon : « Je suis fatigué d'avoir sabré l'abattis toute la journée. Demain, c'est toi qui iras continuer le travail. »

Le lendemain, Wénon sabrait l'abattis quand elle entendit une voix qui disait : « Qui est là ? » Elle dit : « C'est moi Wénon. » La voix reprit : « Veux-tu que j'aille t'aider ? » Elle dit : « Oui ». Elle vit venir un homme qu'elle ne connaissait pas. L'homme se mit à sabrer l'abattis avec elle. Ils travaillèrent ainsi quelque temps. Puis l'homme dit : « Il est temps de nous arrêter pour manger. » — « Que mangerons-nous, dit Wénon. » L'homme répondit : « je ne connais qu'une nourriture, la bataille, je vais lutter avec toi. »

Wénon cria : « Mais je suis une femme, je ne peux pas lutter. »

L'homme répondit : « Femme ou homme, c'est la même chose pour moi ; je veux la bataille. » Il renversa Wénon et la maîtrisa. Puis faisant chauffer au feu la tige de fer il la lui enfonça dans l'anus.

Wénon hurla de douleur et pleura longtemps. Puis elle se leva péniblement et se traîna jusqu'à sa maison.

12) Le frère, la sœur et le roi (résumé)

Il y avait un frère et une sœur. Ils étaient dans la plus grande pauvreté. Ils parcoururent le pays, cherchant du travail, jusqu'à ce qu'ils arrivent chez le roi. Le roi leur dit : « Vous cherchez de quoi vivre ; je désire voir un petit éléphant, je n'ai jamais pu encore en voir un. Trouvez-en un et apportez-le moi, je vous récompenserai ».

Alors le frère dit à la sœur : « Je vais te couvrir d'étoffe, te cacher la tête, t'attacher une corde à la taille. »

Ainsi fit-il et ils allèrent sur le chemin jusqu'à la maison du roi.

Elle tourna le dos au roi et tandis que son frère la tenait au bout d'une corde, dansa, ainsi que je vais vous le montrer.

(Le conteur exécute une danse burlesque, courbé en deux, le dos tourné à l'assistance qui s'esclaffe.)

Alors le roi dit : « Je n'ai pas besoin de voir le devant de l'éléphant, il est trop laid. »

13) Anansi et la perdrix toclo (résumé)

La perdrix toclo avait fait un grand abattis. Comme elle s'y rendait en volant, elle n'avait pas fait de chemin pour s'y rendre. Un jour Anansi passa par là, il vit cet abattis au milieu de la forêt déserte, sans aucun chemin pour s'y rendre. Il dit « C'est Dieu qui a fait cet abattis pour moi » et il traça un large chemin de l'abattis jusqu'à sa maison. La perdrix survint et lui dit: « C'est moi qui ai fait cet abattis ». Anansi lui dit : « Je ne vous crois pas ; si c'était vous qui aviez fait cet abattis, il y aurait un chemin ».

Ils allèrent plaider devant le grand man. Anansi eut gain de cause.

La perdrix décida de se venger. A quelque temps de là, elle annonça que sa mère était morte, et invita les habitants de la forêt à danser pour le deuil. Ils s'y rendirent en foule.

La perdrix avait fait monter sa mère dans un arbre. Elle fit semblant d'invoquer son esprit en disant : « Ma mère qui es au pays de Dieu, fais quelque chose pour moi, car je suis dans la misère. Procure-moi du tafia et des vivres pour l'assistance. »

Elle étendit la main et sa mère mit dedans une bouteille de tafia qu'elle montra aux assistants. Puis des vivres, et tout ce qu'il fallut pour régaler les danseurs.

Anansi vit cela, et quand il rentra chez lui il dit à sa mère Bobilanga : « La mère de la perdrix, qui est au ciel, lui procure tout ce qu'il lui faut, et toi qui es là, tu ne me sers à rien, tu ne fais que manger mes vivres. » Il prit un bâton et frappa sa mère, qui tomba morte.

Il convoqua les gens du voisinage pour danser le broko de. Il invoqua l'esprit de sa mère comme il avait vu la perdrix faire. Rien ! Il ne vit rien venir. Les gens pensèrent qu'il se moquait d'eux. Ils se jetèrent sur lui et le frappèrent. Ainsi Anansi tua sa mère pour rien.

14) Anansi et la tortue (résumé)

Un jour Anansi convoqua les animaux de la forêt à un festin. Il avait mis les plats sur une table élevée. La tortue seule, ne put y monter. Anansi la laissa à terre ; elle partit furieuse.

A quelque temps de là, la tortue annonça qu'elle invitait les animaux de la forêt à un festin. Ils vinrent en foule. Elle avait placé la table au fond de l'eau. Seul Anansi ne pouvait y accéder, car les araignées flottent sur l'eau[1].

Anansi plaça dans son calimbé une grosse pierre pour s'alourdir, et il parvint jusqu'à la table. La tortue qui avait vu son manège dit aux animaux rassemblés : « Avant de manger, défaisons nos ceintures pour être plus à l'aise ».

Anansi oubliant la pierre, défit sa ceinture. La pierre tomba, et il se retrouva flottant à la surface de l'eau.

[1] C'est la seule allusion faite dans toute cette série de contes à Anansi en temps qu'araignée.

CHAPITRE IX

CARACTÈRES PARTICULIERS DE L'ÉCONOMIE DES NOIRS RÉFUGIÉS. RAPPORT AVEC LES AUTRES POPULATIONS

Influence des institutions sociales et des tendances psychologiques des Noirs Réfugiés sur leur vie matérielle et leur économie

Certaines tendances psychologiques des Noirs Réfugiés, en parties liées à leurs conceptions morales et religieuses, et aux conditions historiques dans lesquelles ces sociétés se sont formées, influencent directement leur vie matérielle, dans ses divers aspects : implantation sur le sol, agriculture, travaux salariés, commerce.

La principale de ces tendances est l'individualisme, le souci de complète indépendance matérielle.

Influence sur l'agriculture. Nous avons vu que les abattis des divers ménages ressortissant du même groupe de parenté étaient très rarement groupés. Au contraire, les Noirs Réfugiés aiment disperser leurs cultures ; même dans les zones d'occupation récente, où la terre ne manque pas, il arrive de trouver des abattis isolés au milieu de la forêt primaire à plus d'un kilomètre de la rive, à la merci des animaux prédateurs. Les conditions écologiques, en particulier le souci de la défense contre la fourmi-manioc, n'expliquent pas cette dispersion. Les Boni reconnaissent qu'il serait préférable pour lutter contre la fourmi-manioc, de grouper chaque année toutes les cultures d'un lignage dans un secteur reconnu indemne. Mais des objections leur viennent aussitôt à l'esprit : on ne se sentirait pas chez soi, les gens seraient jaloux les uns des autres ; surtout les enfants iraient chaparder fruits et légumes dans les abattis des autres ménages. Les Noirs Réfugiés sont unanimes à penser que les enfants d'un village réunis en un même lieu constitueraient un fléau bien pire que la fourmi-manioc, et que pour maintenir la paix des familles la dispersion est la solution la plus sage.

On observe de même que la liberté totale de la femme, et la coutume qui lui laisse la libre disposition des produits de l'abattis, contribuent à empêcher le développement de l'agriculture en vue de la vente. Pour entreprendre de grands abattis exploités en commun par un ménage, il faudrait des ménages très unis et stables, ce qui est rare.

Difficulté du groupement en vue d'un profit commun. Les Noirs Réfugiés sont peu capables de se grouper volontairement pour entreprendre l'exécution d'un travail en vue d'un profit commun. Les petits groupes qui se réunissent pour la pêche, le travail de l'or, etc., sont formés d'amis intimes ou de proches parents, et ne dépassent guère 4 à 5 personnes.

Les Noirs Réfugiés sont moins capables encore de se grouper en sociétés en vue de profits futurs. Mettre une partie de leurs ressources en commun avec celle d'un autre leur paraît non seulement illusoire mais immoral. Il n'existe de ce fait chez eux aucun moyen de grouper les disponibilités financières, parfois importantes.

On pratique assez couramment le prêt sans intérêt, portant sur de petites sommes, entre proches parents ou amis intimes. Si un homme se sent capable de gagner sa vie en achetant un moteur, il parviendra assez facilement à trouver l'argent nécessaire en empruntant à ses frères ou à ses amis, dix mille francs ici, cinq mille là. Mais ces prêts ne sont jamais importants et ne constituent pas un procédé efficace de groupement des disponibilités financières.

Les sociétés dites de cotisation, si courantes en Afrique Noire, sont totalement contraires à la pensée des Noirs Réfugiés, de même que les jeux de hasard. En 1958, le poste de Maripasoula, à l'occasion d'une fête, avait organisé une tombola. Quand on en expliqua le principe aux Boni, ils furent unanimes à penser que les européens avaient de singulières distractions. Peu d'entre eux acceptèrent de prendre des billets, et ceux qui n'avaient rien gagné partirent ulcérés, avec le sentiment d'avoir été mêlés à une opération immorale.

Caractère élevé attribué aux contrats. Cette inaptitude à se grouper et à mettre en commun les disponibilités contribue beaucoup à cristalliser la société des Noirs Réfugiés dans sa forme actuelle en s'opposant à toute initiative d'envergure. En revanche elle développe le sens de la responsabilité personnelle. Les Noirs Réfugiés ont notamment une grande rigueur à l'égard de l'argent[1].

La coutume pose comme un principe rigoureux que tout doit être payé. Personne ne doit vivre aux crochets d'autrui, personne ne doit emprunter sans rendre. Si un homme mourait avant d'avoir remboursé une dette, les membres de son lignage se cotiseraient pour l'acquitter.

Les Noirs Réfugiés ont à un haut degré le sens du contrat, et ils apportent à l'exécu-

(1) Ceci en ce qui concerne leurs relations mutuelles ; quant aux dettes à l'égard des européens, on ne met pas l'empressement à les rembourser ; mais la tromperie caractéristique, l'emprunt fait dans un but d'escroquerie, sont très rares chez les Noirs Réfugiés.

tion des travaux pour lesquels ils se sont engagés des qualités de sérieux, d'initiative et un sens du devoir qu'on ne trouve pas au même degré en Afrique Noire.

Refus de tout engagement durable. Si les Noirs Réfugiés respectent leurs contrats, ils n'aiment pas à s'engager pour une longue durée.

Cette attitude résulte de leur volonté d'indépendance, mais aussi de la loi morale et religieuse qui régit leur société.

Cette loi défend d'attenter à la liberté des personnes, d'humilier quiconque et de rien faire qui puisse le plonger dans la colère ou l'affliction. Elle a pour effet d'empêcher toute exploitation des faibles, toute création d'une caste de serviteurs ou de prolétaires. Elle conduit même à l'absence de toute subordination permanente d'un homme à un autre.

La volonté d'indépendance des Noirs Réfugiés fait qu'ils ne veulent pas se lier définitivement à un emploi, même avantageux. Quand un homme a jugé avoir fait des économies suffisantes, il quitte l'emploi qui lui avait procuré ces ressources.

Cette tendance rend beaucoup plus difficile et hasardeuse la recherche de travaux rétribués ; il arrive qu'un homme reste des années sans trouver de travaux profitables, vivant dans la gêne. Mais c'est là le prix de l'indépendance, et il est accepté sans hésitation.

Voulant profiter de toutes les possibilités qui s'offrent, les No[illegible]giés sont amenés à apprendre simultanément les techniques traditionnelles de [illegible]pe, canotage, construction des canots, abattage d'arbres, équarissage et charpente. Dans ces techniques ils peuvent être considérés comme des travailleurs spécialisés.

Fiers de leur force et de leurs connaissances, sûrs d'eux, les Noirs Réfugiés ne sont jamais inquiets de l'avenir et considèrent la vie comme une aventure passionnante, apportant sans cesse du nouveau. Si l'année passée a été mauvaise, l'année nouvelle sera meilleure, avec l'aide de Dieu. Personne ne doute de retrouver des travaux profitables.

Influence de la jalousie : absence de professions spécialisées et de commerce. Une autre grande tendance psychologique influant directement sur l'économie est la jalousie.

La jalousie, et la crainte de la jalousie, ont pour effet de limiter l'enrichissement, et de maintenir une égalité de fait : il arrive souvent que des gens doués renoncent à entreprendre des travaux profitables, pour ne pas donner prise à la jalousie qui rendrait leur position dans le village difficile, et pourrait attirer sur eux des malheurs ; car on a l'idée que la jalousie attire des maladies et des calamités sur celui qui en est l'objet et sur ses proches, par le jeu d'une force naturelle, sans même que des maléfices aient été formulés.

La crainte de la sorcellerie intervient dans le même sens ; celui qui s'enrichit anormalement est presque inévitablement accusé d'être sorcier et, peut être mis dans l'obligation de quitter le pays. Tout spécialement visés sont ceux, très rares, qui s'adonnent au commerce. On ne soupçonnera pas de sorcellerie un homme qu'on voit s'enrichir en travaillant sans cesse. Mais le commerçant, dont la fortune va se développant sans qu'il fournisse un travail évident, est vite regardé comme un « engagé », accusé de tenir sa chance d'un pacte avec le diable.

Il faut sans doute voir là l'explication la plus vraisemblable de l'absence, dans les tribus des Noirs Réfugiés, de tout commerce intérieur. Il n'y a même pas de marchés dans les villages. On ne s'adresse en pratique qu'aux commerçants créoles et asiatiques.

La répugnance que les Noirs Réfugiés ont de commercer les uns avec les autres contribue à empêcher le développement chez eux de professions spécialisées. Il existe des spécialisations de fait : tel est particulièrement habile dans la construction des canots, tel autre est un charpentier qualifié, tel autre encore se consacre principalement à la pêche, mais les Noirs Réfugiés exercent ces spécialisations vis-à-vis des autres populations, et non les uns vis-à-vis des autres. Personne ne renonce à construire son canot, sa maison, à couper lui-même ses abattis. S'il en était autrement il se créerait rapidement des classes et des castes, et c'est précisément ce que la loi morale des Noirs Réfugiés condamne. Cette conception a notamment pour effet de préserver de la dégradation la coutume familiale, en empêchant les riches de devenir de grands polygames entretenant des maîtresses oisives. Jamais nous n'avons entendu dire qu'un homme enrichi ait payé quelqu'un pour exécuter à sa place les travaux coutumiers qu'il doit à ses épouses, abattis, maison, canot. Quelle que soit sa richesse, il continue à exécuter ces travaux « la sueur de son front, et cela contribue à maintenir dans son sens et dans sa valeur le contrat tacite conclu entre mari et femme.

Ainsi les conditions géographiques, associées aux influences d'ordre social et psychologique, imposent aux Noirs Réfugiés une économie particulière, fondée sur une symbiose avec les populations de la côte, sous forme de travaux à la tâche ou de salariat temporaire.

Rapports avec les autres populations

Les tribus des Noirs Réfugiés ne constituent pas un monde fermé. Elles vivent depuis leur formation en symbiose étroite avec les populations voisines : Indiens autochtones, européens et créoles. Leurs traditions et leur conception de la vie en ont été fortement influencées, non qu'ils aient perdu quoi que ce soit de leur unité intérieure, mais parce qu'ils ont accepté, au moins collectivement, l'idée qu'ils ont des liens et des devoirs vis-à-vis des autres hommes.

De même que sur le plan matériel leur économie est fondée sur l'échange, ils considèrent la symbiose de leur groupe avec les groupes voisins comme l'ordre normal de l'univers. Les malheurs subis par leurs ancêtres leur ont donné une horreur extrême de la violence ; ils considèrent la paix comme un bien précieux commun à toutes les nations, et leurs principes de morale qui interdisent de nuire à quiconque s'étendent à tous les hommes. Il est clair que ces notions sont moins nettement comprises sur le plan individuel et qu'il y a comme ailleurs quelques vols et abus de confiance. Mais, sur le plan collectif, les rapports entre les Noirs Réfugiés et leurs voisins sont établis sur une base de confiance, de loyauté et d'honnêteté qu'on ne trouve pas au même degré en Afrique.

Rapports avec les autres tribus. Les Boni n'ont pas de liens politiques précis avec les autres tribus des Noirs Réfugiés, mais les grands man ont des relations officieuses par l'intermédiaire de messagers, et se consultent assez fréquemment.

Les Boni ont gardé une rancune tenace aux Djuka de s'être jadis alliés contre eux aux Hollandais, mais ce ressentiment, d'ordre surtout collectif, s'est apaisé avec le temps ; il n'empêche pas les relations individuelles d'être cordiales.

Les Saramaka sont partout très estimés car on admet unanimement que leur magie est plus forte, leurs techniques plus perfectionnées que celles des autres tribus.

Rapports avec les Indiens. Les relations entre les Boni et les Indiens Oayana sont des plus curieuses et intéressantes. Elles se sont établies vraisemblablement dès la fin du XVIIIe siècle. Plusieurs auteurs ont affirmé que Boni et Indiens se sont longtemps combattus ; l'examen que nous avons fait des pièces d'archives authentiques, malheureusement peu nombreuses, susceptibles d'éclairer l'histoire du Maroni, ne confirme pas cette hypothèse[1]. On peut penser au contraire que des relations de symbiose ont dû se créer rapidement et de façon très naturelle. Le grand man des Boni est en quelque sorte le suzerain des chefs indiens ; cette situation n'a pas été imposée par la force ; elle résulte de la situation privilégiée des Boni sur la rivière, qui jusqu'à une époque récente obligeait les Indiens à passer par leur intermédiaire pour commercer avec le monde extérieur.

Bien que les Boni aient autrefois abusé de cette situation pour imposer aux Indiens des taux d'échange arbitraires, il ne faut pas se représenter cette relation comme l'exploitation d'un vaincu par un vainqueur. Elle a pour base le respect absolu par chaque groupe des croyances et de la structure sociale de l'autre, et une activité pour chacun conforme à son inclination. Le proverbe dit : « Aux Boni la rivière, aux Indiens la forêt ». C'est ainsi que traditionnellement les Boni achètent aux Indiens des flèches, tandis que ceux-ci leur achètent des pagaies ; le sens de ce symbole est parfaitement compris des uns et des autres.

Les mariages entre les deux groupes, sans être défendus, sont regardés comme contraires à la coutume[2].

(1) Seuls sont signalés des combats vers 1840, entre les Boni et les Indiens Wayakulé « Oyaricoulets », tribu très primitive qui vivait sur l'Oulémari et était elle-même en guerre avec les Oayana.

Les Boni étaient certainement déjà alliés aux Oayana au moment des combats sur le Maroni en 1793, puisque après leur défaite les survivants, groupés autour d'Agusu fils de Boni, se réfugièrent sur la rivière Maruini qu'ils remontèrent jusqu'au voisinage de ses sources, où personne ne put les rejoindre. Or c'était précisément là que vivaient à la fin du XVIIIe siècle, les Indiens Oayana. Ils n'auraient pas tenté cette manœuvre s'ils n'avaient eu la certitude de trouver refuge auprès de leurs alliés. Les emplacements de leurs villages, portés sur la carte de Coudreau (1888) sont à proximité immédiate de ceux des anciens villages Oayana.

(2) Le mariage du Grand Man Awensay avec une femme indienne, vers 1915, fut inspiré par des motifs complexes. Sur la fin de sa vie, Awensay ne pouvait plus souffrir les Boni, son caractère impérieux s'accommodant

Dans la pratique le fond des échanges commerciaux est le suivant : les Indiens fournissent des hamacs, et surtout des chiens dressés pour la chasse, auxquels on attache une grande valeur. Les Boni fournissent des canots. Autrefois ils apportaient aussi des objets d'importation, sabres, haches et perles, mais cette forme de commerce a disparu depuis que les Indiens ont la possibilité de se ravitailler auprès des européens.

Plusieurs observateurs, à la suite notamment de Coudreau (1890) et de Grébert (1937) ont émis l'opinion que ces rapports étaient fondés sur la crainte et que les Boni, utilisant des moyens de pression mystérieux, opprimaient les Indiens.

Après cent missions passées au contact des uns et des autres, nous affirmons que ces assertions ne sont pas fondées. On ne peut qu'admirer au contraire la façon dont ces groupes primitifs ont su créer entre eux des relations loyales et confiantes. Les Indiens et les Boni qui ont travaillé avec nous se sont toujours montrés heureux d'être ensemble. Il suffisait, pour s'en rendre compte, d'entendre les conversations animées qu'ils avaient le soir autour des feux de camp sur leurs familles respectives, les événements survenus dans leur village, la pêche ou la chasse.

Il semble que dans ces relations, les uns et les autres mettent plus de patience et de tolérance qu'envers les gens de leur propre groupe. Il est excessivement rare de voir s'élever des contestations entre Indiens et Bôni, alors qu'il y en a parfois à l'intérieur de chaque groupe.

Les sentiments que les Boni ont à l'égard des Indiens sont complexes : ils se sentent supérieurs par leur force physique, leur efficacité et leur organisation ; ils se moquent de la puérile avidité des Indiens pour les perles et les bijoux, de l'attitude mendigote de certains d'entre eux. Mais ils les admirent pour leur habileté, leur connaissance intime de la forêt et les craignent pour les pouvoirs surnaturels qu'ils leur attribuent. Sûrs d'eux, ne craignant rien de la brousse, ne s'égarant jamais, chasseurs et pêcheurs hors ligne, les Indiens leur apparaissent comme doués de facultés particulières que les autres hommes ne possèdent pas. Il nous est arrivé d'entendre au campement des réflexions telles que celle-ci : « Il va pleuvoir, les Indiens font des carbets ».

Les Boni éprouvent à l'égard de la magie indienne une peur intense. Aucun d'eux n'oserait mécontenter gravement un Indien et même s'il s'estime lésé, dans la plupart des cas il n'osera pas se plaindre[1].

Un incident pittoresque nous a montré une fois de plus cette attitude au cours mat de leur individualisme et de leur goût de la discussion. Il avait établi en pays indien une habitation de culture où il vivait presque toute l'année ; en prenant pour femme une indienne, il chercha semble-t-il à humilier ses sujets.

Les enfants et petits-enfants d'Awensay étaient tous morts en 1967, à l'exception de deux femmes, toutes deux stériles. Il n'y a pas eu d'autre cas d'union entre Boni et Indiens.

[1] Dans la recherche des causes magiques de la mort, il arrive que la divination incrimine l'action d'un homme médecine indien. En pareil cas l'action judiciaire des Boni est éteinte, car le principe est que l'homme-médecine indien ne nuit pas sans raison. On considère que le défunt avait dû le léser gravement et qu'il méritait son sort d'une tournée sur le Litani en 1952. A notre passage au village Aloïké, nos quatre canotiers Boni, qui avaient tué des coumarous, s'étaient préparé un plat fort appétissant ; ils avaient à peine commencé à manger quand survinrent quelques Indiens qui se mêlèrent à la conversation, s'assirent à côté d'eux, puis commencèrent à tremper leur cuiller dans la marmite. D'autres Indiens survinrent et, toujours en discutant posément et sans se presser, vinrent prendre leur part du festin. Les Boni furent progressivement refoulés au second rang et finalement abandonnèrent. Trois d'entre eux riaient de cet incident qui leur était familier ; le quatrième était furieux mais il n'osa rien dire car, nous dit-il, s'il frappait les Indiens comme il en avait envie, il risquait d'être payé.

A vrai dire, quelle est la nature du commandement que le grand man des Boni est censé exercer sur les Indiens ? Comporte-t-il des obligations précises, un tribut, des vexations ? Nullement : il se réduit actuellement à deux choses :

— Le principe de l'obédience des chefs de village indiens à la personne du grand man ;

— L'interdiction de faire du canotage de transport à la façon des Boni.

On ne peut qu'approuver cette interdiction qui protège les Indiens plus qu'elle ne leur nuit. Quant à l'influence personnelle du grand man Difu, elle est des plus favorables ; il a une connaissance approfondie de la langue et des coutumes des Indiens, auxquels il a toujours témoigné un intérêt et une sympathie certainement sincères. Quand, au cours des cérémonies au fraga liki, il s'adresse aux ancêtres pour leur demander de veiller sur les Boni, il ne manque pas d'ajouter : gad yooku, de mu luku de Iñgi : ancêtres, veillez sur les Indiens.

On dit aussi des Boni qu'ils ne s'intéressent aux Indiens que pour trafiquer avec eux. Même si cela était — nous avons montré combien cette assertion était inexacte — nous soutiendrions tout de même qu'il est beaucoup moins dangereux pour les Indiens de commercer avec eux qu'avec les européens et les créoles ; les Boni sont une société hiérarchisée, où les choses ont tendance à se passer selon des normes précises. Il suffit de comparer les Indiens Oayana qui ont gardé l'essentiel de leur civilisation, avec les Indiens de l'Oyapok, pour se convaincre que les Boni ont protégé les premiers bien plus qu'ils ne les ont opprimés.

Rapports avec les créoles. Les Boni sont en rapports constants avec les orpailleurs et les commerçants créoles, au profit desquels ils effectuent de nombreux travaux (canotage, abattage, constructions). La plupart d'entre eux parlent très bien le dialecte créole et sont bien informés du genre de vie des créoles.

Les rapports entre les deux groupes sont bons dans l'ensemble. Il s'agit principalement sur le Haut Maroni de créoles de sang africain, originaires des Antilles anglaises, que les Boni ne considèrent pas comme profondément différents d'eux-mêmes. Beaucoup sont établis là depuis très longtemps et des relations d'amitiés individuelles se sont établies ; toutefois les deux groupes n'ont pas la moindre tendance à se fondre.

Les créoles n'ont que mépris pour la civilisation des Noirs Réfugiés qui leur rappelle un passé africain détesté. Ils ont un sentiment de supériorité et ne cessent d'exhorter les Boni à adopter leur vêtement et leur mode de vie.

Les sentiments que les Boni ont à l'égard des créoles sont complexes ; ils perçoivent clairement que l'activité des orpailleurs est artificielle, et que des isolés sont incapables de vivre par leurs propres moyens au sein de cette forêt impitoyable. Devenus vieux et malades, les orpailleurs connaissent la pire détresse et meurent littéralement de faim, jusqu'à ce qu'on les évacue sur l'hospice de Saint-Laurent. Chez les Noirs Réfugiés les vieillards sont assurés d'une vie décente au milieu des membres de leur lignage qui les entourent d'un affectueux respect.

C'est un point de vue qui a une grande importance aux yeux des Boni, pour qui finir ses jours à l'hospice ou être réduit à solliciter le secours d'étrangers, constitue la pire déchéance.

Ils craignent d'autre part, ainsi que nous l'avons montré, la magie créole qu'ils assimilent à une forme de misi.

En revanche ils sont impressionnés par les connaissances des créoles, le réel esprit d'initiative et la forte personnalité de certains d'entre eux ; d'autre part les Boni qui ont été à Cayenne ont remarqué la sollicitude de l'administration vis-à-vis de la population des communes. Pour toutes ces raisons il existe chez les Boni un certain mouvement d'opinion en faveur de la créolisation. Mais le genre de vie très particulier des Boni et leur désir de conserver leurs coutumes particulières les attachent à leur forme de vie ancestrale ; vers 1890, l'explorateur Coudreau observant les mêmes faits, prédisait une prochaine créolisation des Boni. En fait, elle ne s'est pas produite et il est peu probable qu'elle se produise.

Rapports traditionnels avec les européens. Les Noirs Réfugiés constituent un élément important de la vie économique des Guyanes ; ils exécutent pour le compte de l'administration et des entreprises européennes, de nombreux travaux (canotage, flottage de bois, abattage d'arbres). Ils ne sont guère aptes à d'autres travaux, mais dans ces activités qui correspondent à leur genre de vie traditionnel, ils sont égaux, sinon supérieurs, à n'importe quelle main-d'œuvre. Payés très cher, ils travaillent avec rapidité, efficacité et intelligence, faisant preuve d'une initiative et d'un sens du devoir qu'on ne trouve pas communément chez les Africains[1]. Aussi les rapports entre les européens et les Noirs Réfugiés n'ont-ils rien de commun avec ce que l'on observe en Afrique : on relève sans indulgence leurs défauts, mais on les admire pour leur forte personnalité, leur art et leurs techniques, et on leur témoigne une estime qui n'est pas feinte.

Les Noirs Réfugiés n'éprouvent à l'égard des européens ni haine ni jalousie. On peut s'en étonner au premier abord car ils ont eu à soutenir contre eux des guerres cruelles, qui leur ont laissé un souvenir précis ; mais l'explication en est simple : les Boni n'ont pas de haine parce que leur vie est heureuse, et ils n'ont pas de jalousie parce qu'ils ne cherchent pas à imiter les européens et se satisfont de leur propre civilisation.

(1) Il est à noter que s'ils cessent de mener leur genre de vie traditionnel, par exemple s'ils se fixent à demeure auprès des établissements européens, ils perdent rapidement ces qualités.

On remarquera à ce sujet que les Noirs Réfugiés évoquent le temps de l'esclavage sans honte et sans complexe d'infériorité ; c'est que, tout simplement, ils n'ont pas la sensation d'être des descendants d'esclaves ; ils se sentent les descendants de guerriers qui ont imposé leur indépendance par la force des armes ; les Djuka, s'exagérant la portée des succès remportés par leurs ancêtres, ont même un certain complexe de supériorité. Fiers de leurs ancêtres, les Noirs Réfugiés ne se sentent aucunement inférieurs au Blanc et traitent avec lui d'égal à égal.

Les Boni, comme les Djuka et les Saramaka à Surinam, vivent sous un régime de fait qui équivaut à l'autonomie interne. Ce régime s'est institué pour les Boni dès leur prise de contact avec l'administration française en 1861 ; il s'est toujours associé à un parfait loyalisme.

L'administration française, qui jusqu'à une époque récente ne disposait pas d'établissements permanents dans l'intérieur du pays, n'a jamais cherché à intervenir dans le fonctionnement intérieur des tribus qui s'est exercé et s'exerce toujours selon leur propre loi. Les Noirs Réfugiés ont été ainsi dispensés de cette juridiction hybride, appliquant un droit coutumier altéré par des idées européennes, qui en Afrique Noire a si puissamment contribué à la destruction des structures traditionnelles.

Le problème était à vrai dire plus simple car les conceptions des Noirs Réfugiés, ne comportant aucune forme d'oppression des individus, et admettant le droit de la femme à disposer d'elle-même, réduit à l'extrême les sources de contestations entre les individus et les groupes.

En 1946 a été créé le poste administratif de Maripasoula, à proximité du confluent du Lawa et de l'Inini. Depuis cette époque, la gendarmerie administre à la satisfaction de tous et sans aucun incident une population disparate de 2.000 personnes, orpailleurs, Noirs Réfugiés et Indiens, répartis sur un vaste territoire. Le poste médical créé à Maripasoula en 1949 est très fréquenté par les Boni, et exerce une action des plus utiles tant sur le plan psychologique que sur le plan social.

Les relations des divers groupes entre eux donnent lieu à de minimes frictions, mais les Noirs Réfugiés ne donnent jamais lieu à intervention dans les affaires intérieures de leurs groupes. Respectueux de l'administration, ils exécutent ponctuellement leurs engagements vis-à-vis de leurs employeurs, assurant la totalité des transports sur le fleuve, selon un modus vivendi établi depuis très longtemps[1].

(1) Il est à noter à ce sujet que des incidents désagréables surviennent chaque fois que les Boni ont affaire à des voyageurs inexpérimentés, ignorant les coutumes du fleuve ou ne voulant pas les appliquer. D'une façon générale les Noirs Réfugiés, spontanément respectueux de quiconque vient faire un travail utile, ont les touristes en horreur ; ils ne peuvent pas supporter d'être photographiés ou observés comme des bêtes curieuses.

Jamais ils ne s'adressent aux tribunaux pour régler leurs différends, encore moins leurs querelles de famille ; jamais ils ne sollicitent de secours.

La supériorité matérielle des européens ne les impressionne pas ; les Blancs sont plus forts en mécanique, mais eux sont plus forts en magie, voilà tout. L'efficacité de la médecine européenne n'ébranle pas leurs convictions : si quelqu'un a des raisons de se croire victime de la colère d'un gadu, il commence par faire les sacrifices destinés à l'apaiser, puis lui demande l'autorisation de se faire soigner par les Blancs. Personnellement nous n'avons jamais rien fait pour détourner les Boni de cette conception qui satisfait à la fois les nécessités de la médecine et celles de la discipline sociale, car il ne faut pas oublier que pour eux la maladie est le châtiment d'une faute. On voit donc qu'à moins de s'exercer délibérément contre la tradition et contre les chefs, l'influence des européens est sans action appréciable sur la civilisation des Noirs Réfugiés. Il n'en va plus de même quand les contacts deviennent trop fréquents, ont tendance à altérer gravement le mode de vie, et surtout quand ces influences deviennent ouvertement « civilisatrices ».

L'avenir des Noirs Réfugiés

Obligés de résoudre par leurs propres moyens l'ensemble des problèmes de la vie, les Noirs Réfugiés ont su s'adapter avec intelligence à l'évolution du monde moderne et leur coutume a conservé toute sa vigueur et son efficacité. Leur avenir n'apparaîtrait pas menacé si un mouvement d'opinion ne s'était fait jour ces dernières années, tant en Guyane Française, qu'à Surinam, pour détruire leur civilisation jugée primitive et barbare, et les fondre dans la population de la côte. Ce résultat serait obtenu notamment par l'école et l'évangélisation.

Désireux de rester ici sur le plan de la stricte objectivité scientifique, nous éviterons d'entrer dans la discussion du bien fondé de cette action, qui nécessiterait d'ailleurs un long développement. Nous nous bornerons à montrer qu'elle nous paraît vouée à l'échec :

— L'expérience de l'école a été faite depuis plus de 30 ans chez les Boni, au village de Kotika. Une demi-douzaine d'enfants, réussissant dans les études, sont partis à Surinam et ont rompu avec leur groupe d'origine. Chez les autres l'enseignement reçu n'a laissé que de faibles traces. En fait, il n'y a pas de place dans une intelligence normale pour recevoir à la fois la masse de connaissances techniques nécessaires pour tenir sa place dans la société des Noirs Réfugiés, et l'enseignement ordinaire de l'école. L'un chasse l'autre nécessairement ; or, les Boni aiment extrêmement leur vie libre sur le grand fleuve, qui leur assure des conditions matérielles de vie très satisfaisantes ;

— L'évangélisation a été menée avec persévérance depuis plus de 200 ans auprès des Noirs Réfugiés de Surinam. Elle n'a pas donné de résultats appréciables. Il en a été de même en Guyane Française de l'action menée auprès des Saramaka travaillant à proximité des communes de la côte[1], et plus récemment auprès des Boni du Haut-Maroni.

Les Boni, ainsi que nous l'avons montré, n'ont pas le sentiment d'être des païens. Ils pensent qu'ils adorent le même dieu que les chrétiens, d'une façon différente mais tout aussi valable ; ils ont le sentiment que leurs principes de morale ne sont pas inférieurs à ceux des chrétiens, qu'ils se traduisent dans la pratique par les mêmes prescriptions et sont en fait mieux obéis[2].

C'est seulement dans leur conception de leur parenté et de la famille, dans l'absence d'une vie familiale fondée sur le couple indissolublement uni, qu'ils reconnaissent vivre sous une autre loi. Mais ils ne manquent pas de remarquer que les populations des Guyanes qui professent le christianisme ne le mettent guère en pratique dans leur vie familiale : la stabilité des unions est sensiblement plus forte chez les Noirs Réfugiés.

Quant aux cultes de possession, les Boni ont le sentiment de rendre un culte de fait à des entités dont l'existence leur apparaît aussi tangible que pour nous la lumière ou la pesanteur. Ces idées sont liées à une qualité particulière de perceptions, touchant des zones profondes de l'esprit que le raisonnement n'atteint pas[3].

Ajoutons qu'une des grandes forces de la coutume des Noirs Réfugiés est la position privilégiée qu'elle donne à la femme. Les femmes, soustraites à l'influence directe des européens et des créoles, et d'ailleurs pratiquement inaccessibles à tout raisonnement, sont hostiles aux changements qui porteraient atteinte à leurs privilèges. Or, ce sont elles en fait, qui ont en main l'éducation des enfants.

Il n'apparaît donc pas possible d'« assimiler » ces populations en détruisant leur culture originale. Les tentatives inspirées par le fanatisme civilisateur n'auront d'autre résultat que de l'appauvrir, de pousser les Noirs Réfugiés à dissimuler leurs croyances, à abandonner leur art, leurs costumes, leurs chants et leurs danses, tout ce qui fait leur joie de vivre. Mais la structure sociale, solidement fondée sur la peur des ancêtres et des dieux, ne pourrait être détruite que par la violence. Il est permis d'espérer que personne ne songe à en venir là.

Pour nous qui avons vécu longtemps au milieu des Noirs Réfugiés, nous éprouvons à leur égard une profonde estime. Par leur passé historique, l'originalité des coutumes qu'ils ont élaborées, les bonnes relations qu'ils ont su créer avec les autres populations, ils ont fait la preuve de leurs facultés créatrices ; ils méritent qu'on les laisse évoluer selon leur propre voie.

(1) Non seulement les Saramaka n'ont aucune tendance à se convertir, mais ils exercent une influence non négligeable sur la population des communes. A l'Oyapok, le guérisseur des Saramaka a de nombreux consultants, et en dépit de l'interdiction du clergé, nombre de femmes assistent aux danses de possession des dieux serpents Papa godu.

(2) Nous rapportons ici fidèlement le point de vue des intéressés, sans porter de jugement sur sa valeur ; rappelons que leurs principes de vie ne supposent pas chez l'individu de conscience morale, et reposent entièrement sur la crainte de châtiments matériels dans la vie présente. Mais cette base même leur donne une grande efficacité pratique.

(3) On observe effectivement en Afrique Noire que là où existent les cultes de possession, les populations sont particulièrement imperméables à l'influence chrétienne. Détruits en apparence, ces cultes ne tardent pas à reparaître sous une autre forme, parfois sous une apparence chrétienne (possession par les saints).

ANNEXE

RÉPERTOIRE DE LA POPULATION DES VILLAGES BONI

au 1er janvier 1948, classée par ordre alphabétique

Classement. Le classement de la population a été fait par village de résidence.

Pour chaque femme, on a indiqué ses unions successives et les enfants qui en sont issus. Le signe † signifie décédé, le signe ≠ divorce. Le signe ≠ † signifie que le mari est décédé, mais après la rupture de l'union.

Les fiches des femmes précédées d'un astérisque * indiquent que la fiche peut être regardée comme complète au point de vue démographique (enfants vivants et décédés).

Un double astérisque  indique que la fiche peut en outre être regardée comme complète au point de vue des mariages et divorces successifs.

Le nom de chaque individu est porté en caractère gras une seule fois, là où il peut être considéré comme résidant habituellement. La somme des noms en caractère gras donne immédiatement le chiffre de la population du village.

Les enfants de moins de 15 ans sont considérés comme résidant avec les personnes chargées de leur éducation. Si des précisions n'ont pu être obtenues à cet égard ils sont considérés comme résidant avec leur mère.

Chaque fiche porte un numéro, par exemple Dju D7, permettant de retrouver la place de l'individu dans le tableau généalogique. Dans l'exemple indiqué il faut se référer au tableau du Jo Dju, ligne D, n° 7.

Rappelons qu'une partie des noms ont été remplacés, à la demande des intéressés, par des noms fictifs.

is relatively small, and is localized in the interior of French Guiana, not far from the Dutch boundary. In any consideration of the Guiana Negroes, yet a fourth group must be kept in mind—that of the Negroes of the coastal region, who remained enslaved until their emancipation in 1865.

The country of the Saramacca people is reached from Paramaribo, the capital and port of the colony of Suriname (Dutch Guiana), by the weekly train which goes some ninety-five miles to Kabel, where the railway meets the river. From Kabel transportation into the far interior is by dugout canoe, owned and manned by Saramacca men. The country above Kabel, which the Saramacca people call the "big bush," is jungle. Over the watershed lie the Amazon basin and the forests of northern Brazil. Once in this region, the traveler has no contact with European civilization, though he is still under the protection of the Dutch Government.

The picture which we draw of the Saramacca people is based upon two field trips to Dutch Guiana, undertaken in the summers of 1928 and 1929. During our second trip we traversed the entire stretch of the Saramacca country from below Kabel, where the Awka villages are located, to the last native habitation on the Pikien Rio, beyond which are some fields, then uninhabitated miles of wilderness to the Brazilian border.

The ethnological work conducted among the Saramacca tribe of Bush Negroes and the Negroes of the coastal region of Suriname represents a portion of an investigation into the physical and cultural characteristics of the Negroes of the New World. This research, which is still in progress, has included field work in the United States, in Dutch Guiana, and in Africa, and some comparative study in the islands of the Caribbean. It began in 1923 with an inquiry into Negro-white crossing in the United States.[1] As the work progressed it became evident that the problem demanded more knowledge of the sources of the slaves who compose the Negro ancestry of the American Negroes than was available. This knowledge, which historical documents do not give us, was, therefore, to be sought in a comparison of Negro cultures in the New World and in Africa. 121 114

[1] For the results of this portion of the investigation, see M. J. Herskovits, "The American Negro, a Study in Racial Crossing" (1928); and "The Anthropometry of the American Negro" (1931).

As the research was continued, moreover, it became apparent that the scientific problem of the Negro in the New World held implications of larger significance, and that the history of the Negro in the New World has constituted a vast "laboratory" experiment in the processes of racial mixture and of cultural contacts. The Negroes who were brought to the New World came of various West African stocks, and here they mingled their blood with the English, the French, the Dutch, with the Danish, Spanish, and Portuguese who became their masters, and they absorbed in varying degrees the culture of these masters. At the same time, they came in contact with aboriginal Indian peoples with whom they also mingled. But the Negro has not only absorbed; he has also given. The conclusion, still held by many students, that the Negro slave came to this country a savage child with or without his loin cloth, and as naked culturally as he was sartorially, is one which cannot today be accepted.

At the beginning of our field work in Suriname, one of us went up the Suriname River to study the Bush Negroes, and the other remained in Paramaribo to collect folk lore from the town Negroes and to ascertain what Africanisms could be discerned in their beliefs and behavior. When we met and compared notes, some striking things came to light, for bush and town Negroes were, as the evidence in hand suggested, much more closely allied culturally than had been realized, while both were seen to have many aspects of culture that clearly link them with West African and other New World Negroes. 121

Thus, in bush and town, the Negroes hold the same concept and offer the same explanations of the soul and 176 171

1:Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8

184 emphasized that whatever the differences, much of Africa remains in the coastal region. Thus, to cite an instance, at a winti dance in Paramaribo one night, the drummers were grumbling about the slowness with which possession was coming on. At last the priestess, possessed by Lebba, the Nigerian-Dahomean god of the crossroads, began to dance. Whereupon an elderly drummer flung up his hands and cried out, "Praise God, idolatry is not dead yet!" The word he used for idolatry was Dutch, and he pronounced it in Negro-English, afkodrai.

● 121 The importance of the Bush Negroes for the student of Negro cultures, then, is that they live and think today as did their ancestors who established themselves in this bush, which is to say that they live and think much as did the Negroes who were brought to other parts of the New World, and who became the ancestors of the New World Negroes of the present day.

In planning this book, therefore, it has seemed more important to stress the Bush Negro's attitudes toward his own civilization, and his own logic in explaining his customs, than to give a more conventional description of an integrated village or the tribal life of a primitive people. Such attitudes, moreover, whether analyzed among Negroes in Africa, Guiana, the Caribbean, or in the United States, can be studied most advantageously when they are juxtaposed against the factor of outsiders—in this case ourselves, a man and a woman, who came as friendly whites.

114 This book, however, is not an ethnographic treatise. The scientific discussion of these data will appear in monographic form, while the correspondences between bush and town Negroes, and between these and other Negro groups found in the New World, are included in a memoir on the folk lore of the town Negroes of Paramaribo which is now in press. The situations to which we have given emphasis are those which have a direct bearing upon the beliefs and practices of Negro peoples wherever they are found today, but they are presented as they would—and did—actually occur among the Saramacca people. Nothing has been included either in descriptive detail, in the spoken or unspoken thoughts attributed to a Bush Negro, or in characterization, which has not been given us by our Bush Negro informants or has not been witnessed by ourselves. If the thoughts of Moana Yankuso or of any of the elders who figure in the book seem sophisticated when contrasted with the simplicity of the material life of the Bush Negroes, then it is because the stereotype of the childlike, carefree Negro has been so widely accepted. The subtlety and astuteness of a man like Moana Yankuso, or of Sedefo, our chief paddler and the right-hand man of Yankuso's strongest rival, or of Apanto, the sorcerer, cannot be too emphatically stated. 114 [12]

In view of the political factions on the river, and our concern lest these make capital of the fact that a village had been generous in the confidences given the whites, several villages do not appear under their own names. For Headman Moana Yankuso was an old man when we visited him, and alliances for the succession to his high office were at that time already being formed, alliances which, since his death some three years ago, have undoubtedly been consolidated and made effective for the time when his successor is to be named. Villages, therefore, are in some instances given the names of rapids in the river, and not necessarily the names of the rapids found nearest to the villages of which we are writing. In this manner we have sought to preserve the anonymity of the villages without violating the authenticity of place names. Men and women, as well, with the exception of the priestess Amasina, Moana Yankuso, his daughter Wilhelmina, the bassia of his village, Bibifo, and the Captains of Baikutu, S'ei, and Dahomey do not appear under their own names, but under other typical Saramacca Negro names. 114 128

Work of the type we have attempted cannot be accomplished without the cooperation of many persons, and we are privileged to acknowledge here our gratitude to those 000

tion as the Djukas stand and gaze at the criminals of France. And, through this study of the Djuka, the reader may know Djuka life for himself. In the pages of Dr. Kahn's book he journeys up tropical rivers to jungle villages whose names, being translated are, "Try me," "God knows," "Don't Touch Me," and the "Village of the Foot that has no Resting-Place." He meets men whose names mean "Waving Flag," "He Speaks the Truth," "Nice Fellow," "Laughs When He Talks," and "Love Is Sweet."

Dr. Kahn takes his reader far into the interior, for his starting point is where superficial travellers end. The journey leads to the tribe which has two languages: one for ordinary use, and the other a secret language which they call "deepee talkee"; and to strange villages which a man must enter carrying a paddle before him as a symbol that he is voyaging. It is a journey among peoples proud and spirited and courageous, descended from ancestors so bold in their rebellion that they were able to conclude treaties whereby the white man paid them a tribute which their descendants still receive in the form of an annual gift from the Dutch authorities to the headmen of the various Djuka tribes. The reader thus finds himself among the only primitive people in the world to whom the white man pays tribute; among a people to whom magic is as real as science is to us; who believe that spirits, both good and evil, inhabit the very streams and trees of the forest; people who know how to manufacture courage through the hypnotic intoxication of the tomtom and how to get rid of fatigue in the ecstasy of the dance; people whose art sense is devoted entirely to the decoration of gifts for their //4 women, while no pains are taken in the decoration of reli- /21

gious objects. The Djuka reasons that "if a God is a good God, well disposed toward the black man, he does not care whether his fetishes are well executed or not"; while, "if he is a bad God, he will continue to be bad, regardless of whether much time has been spent in adorning his fetishes."

All this is picturesque; but, let me repeat that Dr. Kahn does more than give a vivid and authentic study of this twentieth century primitive; somehow in a starkly true unbiased picture, without ever pointing a moral, or presenting a personal conclusion, he contrives to make us see ouselves at the same time that we see the Djuka. And in that achievement, I think, lies the great value of his book.

PREFACE

THE year 1929 witnessed the opening of the air-mail route 114 to Dutch Guiana, and it can be expected that before many years have passed the encroachments of industrial civilization will wipe out the last remnants of primitive West African culture in the New World. The Bush Negroes will be a vanished people, their culture gone, their habits and life forgotten. The African slave trade will then be only an historical memory.

Happily unaware of their probable extinction in a fast mechanizing world, these wild Bush Negroes still maintain in South America the ancient customs and venerable economy of the jungle dwellers of West Africa. Surinam is now an ethnological laboratory where one may study certain types of negroid jungle life in one of its purest forms. There the culture origins of the American Negro are preserved, as in a museum, by an historical accident.

In 1922, 1923 and 1925 I visited the South American tropics 121 for the purpose of studying public health measures as applied to tropical disease. These studies took me to the border of the Bush Negro countries. Although my contacts at that time were very brief, and my knowledge of the Bush Negro altogether limited, I was determined to return and study further the lives and customs of a people who, although only

2:Kahn D-5 (1922-1930) 1931

[2] glimpsed by me, seemed a problem worthy of being illuminated. Therefore in 1927 an expedition, under the auspices of Dr. Clark Wissler of the American Museum of Natural History, was undertaken with the financial aid of Mr. Myron I. Granger.

The short time allotted me during this expedition did not suffice for the gathering of much material on the history and culture of the Djukas; consequently in 1928 and 1930 further [2a] expeditions under the same auspices and also financed by Mr. Granger were organized. Djuka is a composite picture of these several journeys.

[0] As to the origin of the name "Djuka" there has been no little doubt. Many claim that it is a derivation of Ouca which was the name of the plantation where a treaty of peace was signed between the Bush Negroes and the whites nearly two hundred years ago. Perhaps that is true, for "Djuka" formerly applied solely to Bush Negroes of the Aucaner Auca tribe and is still so used by many but through widespread usage has come to designate not only the Aucaners, but all the Bush Negroes, collectively speaking.

[1] This work makes no attempt at being an ethnological or anthropological account in the scientific sense of the words. It is a narrative of personal observation among these Bush Negro tribes set down with such accuracy as is possible for one trained in another field of science. Its purpose is to further the understanding of these primitive people and to acknowledge their superiority in their own scene. Finally, this book has been inspired by sincere admiration of the manner and success of these escaped African people in the 121 adaptation of their primitive culture to a new environment.

SR8 Bush Negroes SR8

I wish to express my deep appreciation to Dr. Clark Wis- 100 sler, Curator in Chief of Anthropology and Ethnology at the American Museum of Natural History, for his advice and co-operation. The kind assistance of His Excellency, Baron van Heemstra, ex-Governor of Dutch Guiana, and His Excellency Dr. L. Rutgers, present Governor of Dutch Guiana will always be remembered. The aid offered me by [illegible] F. van Haaren, Colonial Secretary, and James B. Lawton, American Consul to Dutch Guiana has been invaluable. Mr. Alexander Wolff of the Surinam Balata Company assisted me wherever possible in a most friendly manner, as did Mr. J. M. W. Strang of Paramaribo. Also Mr. R. M. Schmidt, missionary at the village of Gansee was very helpful.

To Mr. E. W. Rogalli I owe my profound gratitude as to a friend, guide, and adviser. With his thirty-five years of experience in the South American bush he helped me materially in gathering a considerable amount of the information which is incorporated in this book. His willing assistance greatly expedited and simplified my expeditions. I wish to express my thanks to my very good friend Dr. John C. Torrey, whose understanding and advice were of great value to me.

I am deeply indebted to the black men, particularly to 115 Abaisa, the headman of Lombe, to Moi-Man and Bat-Jou of the Aucaners; to Ahleesie of the Boni tribe; and to old Captain Koffay of the Paramacca nation, who, among other Bush Negroes acted as informants.

Introduction

114 After having left the plantation life in the colony of Surinam, 121 I went back there in the beginning of 1851 with the plan, as the [101] result of an agreement reached by me with a Belgian firm, to send shiploads of wood to the motherland and Belgium.

[123] I undertook my journeys to the Bush Negroes for this purpose and visited most of their dwelling places, something that entailed effort and great cost, since I distributed ample presents everywhere for the purpose of thereby acquiring their confidence, which they do not readily grant to Whites.

123 At my very first encounter I took the precaution of politely
[576] greeting each one of them without distinction and shaking their
[177] hands, a practice taken over by them from the Whites in the most recent times, which assures them of a feeling of good-will such as they experience among themselves but never from a White.

[352] I spoke to them frankly and in a friendly way, sat next to them in their huts on their low stools, and partook of their meals. In short -- I lived for a while without reserve or fear among them, paying amply for everything that I enjoyed in this way or that.

[273] I also permitted them, whenever they wanted to use any of my store of beverages, such as wine, beer, brandy, and gin, to ask me for it quietly, so that I would be able to order my servants to offer them what they had requested. In addition I supplied /2/ them amply with dram (1), herbs, and lead and, in order to show generosity to the women as well, frequently gave them and the children biscuits, cake, or some coins.

[121] In the beginning they were very reserved and mistrustful, but gradually, and after some difficult years, became more open with me, so that I, adapting myself entirely to their practices, was able to carry out my plan to have the necessary wood processed by them.

Agriculture among the Bush Negroes of the Marowijne /Maroni/

by D. C. Geijskes (1)

114 1. Government biologist with the Department of Internal Affairs, Paramaribo.

1. Introduction

121 182 When one goes to the small communities of the inhabitants of the bush who live in the interior districts of Surinam, one quickly sees, upon examination, the basis on which the maintenance of such communities rests. The struggle for existence among primitive peoples covers the food supply and the resistance that can be offered against illness and pests. These two factors ultimately determine the birth surplus, which as a result expresses the possibility for survival.

121 [161] Among the Bush Negroes we see in the course of the years an increase in the population, an advance, therefore, in spite of the obstructions of nature. But this advance creates new problems. [101] It was during the Medical-Scientific Expedition to the Southern Border of Surinam, held from February to July, 1952, that, in conjunction with the medical investigation in the gathering of data about the "housekeeping" of the Bush Negroes of the Marowijne /Maroni/ and the Tapanahoni, we were struck above all by the problem of the food supply and the food itself. There is little sense in paying attention only to medical care unless at the same time attempts are made to improve the food.

433 262 An important part of the food supply is produced by agriculture. This supplies the Bush Negroes with the most, but not the best food. Next to it a number of forest products serve to provide for the need for food fats, while hunting and fishing must provide the protein.

121 The agriculture of the Bush Negroes, however, has become [241] a matter which urgently demands the attention of the administration as a result of the wasteful use of land. Until now little attention has been paid to this, but if one wants to develop the interior of Surinam, this problem will also have to be looked into.

101 The data provided here throw light upon the agriculture of 121 the Paramaccaners and the Aucaners on the Marowijne and the [103] Tapanahoni. They were gathered during the above-mentioned medical expedition and during a trip to the Tapanahoni in October, 1952. The facts thus refer primarily to the Marowijne, but in general they are certainly also valid for the other rivers along
121 which the Bush Negroes live. It is a typically Surinam problem,
648 connected with the circumstance that the Bush Negroes have worked in the deep interior in the same fashion for hundreds of years, independent of the life in the civilized coastal region and almost completely outside the sphere of interest of the government.

2. The Grounds System

241 For the planting of agricultural crops the Bush Negro lays out little so-called food grounds. One is to understand by this cleared pieces of ground in the virgin forest on which the crops
[311] are cultivated. The grounds lie along the rivers on higher flat lands, mostly terraces that are not submerged during high water or, in the absence of such terrain, on the slopes of hills. They are more or less circular and have a surface area of a half to one and a half hectares.

241 During the long dry season (October, November) the men
221 clear the grounds. Two to three weeks thereafter the forest that 132 has been felled is burned; the smaller branches are cleared away,
462 but the trunks are left lying. The ground is not worked. As soon as the rains of the short rainy season begin, they start to plant and sow. This planting time falls in December and January. The wives of the Bush Negroes (for only the women do the further work) now plant all kinds of crops at the same time on one and the same ground.

Introduction

B R 101 [122] During the expeditions of the Institut géographique national in French Guiana in 1948 and 1949, we lived in close contact with the Boni Refugee Blacks and the Oayana /Oyana/ Indians of the Upper Maroni. These populations present the remarkable peculiarity of belonging to two entirely distinct ethnic groups while living side by side, leading in general the same way of life, and having the same diet. Historical circumstances have thus joined together in the Upper Maroni the conditions of a rigorous biological experiment which, so far as we know, do not exist so distinctly in the other regions. In fact, wherever two different ethnic groups coexist, they usually do not have either the same habitat or the same way of life; for example, on the coast of Surinam the Indonesians live mostly on the rice plantations and the Blacks in the towns, under quite different conditions of habitat, diet, and hygiene; under these conditions, the differences observed on the level of pathology and demography are difficult to interpret.

B R 121

B R 114 121 Doctor André Sausse, who accompanied us, studied the Boni and the Oayana Indians on the medical level; he submitted evidence that these two populations presented a distinct pathology having profound repercussions on their demographic situation (1). During

B R 101 114 121 [122] this period we lacked the time to substantiate these data by a census and by a systematic interrogation of the women. We were able to carry out this work at the close of the expedition for the delimitation of the southern frontier in January, 1957. The data collected have been verified and completed in the course of two other expeditions made for the Office de la recherche scientifique dans les territoires d'Outre-Mer /Bureau of Scientific Research in the Overseas Territories/ (October 1957 – February 1958 and 114 was the sociological study of these populations.

121

Social Structure and Way of Life

101 The Boni Refugee Blacks. The Boni are one of the above-mentioned
[175] tribes of the Refugee Blacks, reconstituted in the course of the eighteenth century by rebel African slaves who escaped from
B Surinam plantations (Dutch Guiana).

[131] These tribes (Saramaka, Djuka, Paramaka, Boni) live for the [161] most part along the rivers of the interior of Surinam. They group together a total of 25,000 persons.

B With very rare exceptions, the Refugee Blacks are pure Africans.
161 These populations, vigorous and well adapted to the country, have [144] experienced in the course of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries a remarkable demographic increase, attested to by all the authors. Descended from small rebel groups which could not have contained more than a few hundred women, they are now estimated at more than 25,000 persons.

B The Boni of the Upper Maroni, the subject of the present study,
162 number approximately 800, of whom 660 are on the French bank
103 (the villages of Boniville, l'Enfant Perdu, Loka, Asisi, Papaïston, [161] and Kormotibo) and 140 on the Surinam bank (the village of Kotika). These villages were established long ago.

B Each of them groups together a matrilineage, i.e., the 613 descendants in the uterine line of one single founding ancestress;
621 certain villages know their genealogy in its entirety back to this 769 ancestress, who must have lived at the end of the eighteenth century. The members of the lineage are united by the cult of the B ancestors, which binds them firmly to their natal village and to [622] their land. The social system is based essentially on this cult,
[793] the chief of the village being above all the priest of the ancestors.

B Strictly speaking, there is no marriage, but only an acknowl-
581 edged concubinage which entails neither a contract between the

B R The beliefs of both, attributing illnesses to
/516 cont./
743 supernatural causes, did not predispose them to turn to European 648 doctors. Moreover, the Saint-Laurent hospital was so far away
[753] (six days paddling downstream) that a seriously ill person had plenty of time to die en route. The Boni went there only as a last resource and in general at the point of death. As for the Oayana,
B R not a single one presented himself there before 1950.

744 In 1936-1939 several circuits had been made from the post
648 of La Forestière located at the mouth of the river, but no consistent [743] medical action had been feasible. Not until 1949 was it possible
B to create a medical center in the country itself, at Maripasoula.
R The populations were visited regularly, and the seriously ill could [164] be hospitalized on the spot. At the same time systematic spraying with DDT inside all the huts, destroying the anthropophile anopheles, changed the environmental conditions considerably; if malaria has not disappeared, it has ceased, both among the B Indians and among the Boni children, to be the principal cause of R morbidity.

743 The action of the medical center has been exercised more on 744 the Boni, who live a few hours by canoe from Maripasoula, than on 648 the Oayana. Among the latter, the principal villages are two days [484] journey by motorboat upstream amidst difficult waterfalls; the [753] Indians are often on the move, fishing on the upper courses of the rivers or visiting their relatives on Brazilian rivers; it has happened several times that the circuits of the doctors and medical attendants (one per trimester on the average) do not find anybody in the villages; incidentally, the Oayana tend to attribute
R all internal ailments to magical causes, consulting willingly only [844] for wounds. They willingly accept the remedies given on the spot, but rarely take the initiative of moving a sick person to Maripasoula; the women continue to have their babies delivered
R in the villages, without any hygiene.

757 Only during the last three or four years has a change in 165 attitude been noticeable among them vis-à-vis medicine; as we B shall show below, no notable modification in their mortality has R yet been observed as a result of this fact.

121 The principal interest of this study being to compare the 165 demographic data of two populations before they had been modified

II. — Demography of the Boni

Census. — Estimation of Age.

B
125 Method used. The demographic study of the Boni presents the difficulties inherent in all populations without civil records:

1. Difficulty of determining the ages of individuals;

2. Difficulty of determining for each woman the deceased children in relation to the surviving ones.

B
125 We attempted to establish a local chronology by linking the 173 ages of individuals to events of known date that had stuck in their minds.

More particularly we fixed the ages of the old men from the voyage of the explorer Crevaux (1877) and from the death of the grand man Anato (1891), the ages of middle-aged persons from events which occurred between 1915 and 1924, death of the grand man Ochi (1915), end of World War I (1918), hydroplane accident at the mouth of the Inini (1921), installation of a rosewood factory (1925).

B
125 The persons born after 1930 were placed without difficulty, for we knew a certain number of them as children or adolescents in 1948.

Starting with a certain number of men whose age could be fixed with considerable accuracy, all the others, men and women,
B
829] were placed by comparison. In fact, if the Boni do not know their age, they are able to say that they are, for example, two or three years younger than so-and-so (6).

B
[755] 6. Their attention is brought to bear on these age differences because, if a group isolated in the bush is led to address a prayer to the ancestors for the curing of a sick person, this prayer has to be pronounced by the oldest person.

R

Thus the behavior of a human group, its fate as a people, and its very existence appear to be determined to a large extent by hereditary biological characteristics. This notion was seen clearly enough at the beginning of this century, but it has never been the object of thorough studies, the conditions for an incontestable experiment not being found together. Repudiated in the name of theoretical principles by the train of thought which has animated sociology for the past several decades, it has ended up by being completely lost from sight. Present-day sociology no longer takes into consideration the biological facts peculiar to the groups which it studies; one currently speaks of cycles of civilization, of laws of social change, of acculturation, etc., as if social facts had their own life and their own evolution, independent of the supposedly identical and interchangeable people. It is as though one claimed to study the psychism of the human being without taking his body into account, denying the influence of sex, age, sickness. Some have even managed to maintain that man is in all respects the product of the society from which he comes.

R
161 In the case studied here the falsity of these theories is obvious.
14 If the Indians disappear wherever the Blacks establish flourishing
182 societies, it is because their biological characteristics are not suited to the conditions imposed by the geographic environment, whereas those of the Blacks are to the highest degree.

Seen from this angle, the fate of the Indians of the Amazonian
B forest becomes clear; their social behavior and in particular their R collapse upon contact with European civilization find an explanation.
[177] /534/ The relations of the Indians with the Europeans of past
B centuries have been equally influenced by their biological charac-
R
147 teristics. Their inaptitude for prolonged effort came in part from their physical weakness. When the Blacks and the Indians of the Amazonian forest have been employed side by side for years as soldiers and porters, there can be no doubt on this point. The Black is a force of nature. The Indian of the great forest, often full of good will, is betrayed by his physical powers.

INTRODUCTION

114 101 [122] In the course of three missions of the Institut Géographique National in 1948, 1949, and 1952, we lived in close relationship with the tribe of the Boni, who supplied us with the bearers and boat crews indispensable for travel in the country. From the first contacts, we felt a deep interest in this worthy people, made up in the 18th century of rebel slaves escaped from the plantations of Surinam.

114 [121] Taking advantage of the rare moments of respite allowed us by our work, we tried to study the various aspects of their material, social, and religious life. The men who accompanied us were for the most part young men who had only a limited understanding of the tradition of their group: in addition, the geographic work compelling constant moves in the uninhabited forest, investigator and informants were more often than not prey to worry and fatigue.

[101] [121] At the end of the mission to fix the French Guiana-Brazil boundary in January, 1957, we were able to undertake a systematic investigation based on a detailed inventory of the population of the villages.

114 101 [122] A fifth mission made under the aegis of the Institut Français d'Amérique Tropicale (IFAT) from October, 1957 to February, 1958 permitted us to fill part of the gaps in our work. Some complementary data were collected in October-November, 1958 on the occasion of another trip devoted mainly to the study of the Indians of the Upper Maroni.

128 The present work is exclusively devoted to the social life of the Boni. The information we assembled on their material life and their art, as well as their demographic situation, will be the subject of separate publications. /blank page/

613 614 784 [621] although the supposed common ancestress doubtless goes back to the beginning of the 18th century and for three generations they have been divided among four villages situated at a week's distance by boat from one another. We can, with very few chances of error, affirm that they certainly have a common matrilineal origin and that they in fact constitute one lineage.

182 619 [361] [484] On this subject let us note that geographical separation cannot play the same role among the Refugee Blacks as in the African tribes of cultivators. The Refugee Blacks, whose habitat is linear along the banks of the river and who, being boatmen, are continually moving, cannot be completely isolated from one another.

613 614 571 /29/ Under these conditions, how can we explain the existence within certain lineages of individualized fractions subject to a separate kunu, such as Papaïston 2?

One can assume that these fractions do not really have the same origin as the principal group and that they result from a process of assimilation of a paternally related fragment.

We have cited the example of Aneta's descendants (Aw.B.3). They are already integrated into the social life of the group; in two or three generations nobody will remember any longer their exact origin. But they will remain differentiated from the principal fraction of the Awara Bakka because they will still be subject to the kunu of their ancestress. [784]

● 121 Such are the elements we have been able to draw from a general study of kin groups among the Boni. We shall look for other data in the study of the implantation of these groups on the soil, and especially of the apportionment of lands among them; finally, we shall study family custom and especially inheritance.

A complete understanding of the kinship system and its functioning can be obtained only in the future by following the evolution of kin groups, the formation of new villages; and the designation of new headmen.

121 This is what necessitates as precise an inventory as possible of the population in its present state.

61 Matrilineal kin groups among the Djuka and Saramaka Refugee Blacks.
114 Authors who have described the social structure of the Djuka and 184 Saramaka, groupings appreciably more numerous than the Boni, have also called attention to the use of the words lo and bɛɛ, but give them a completely different meaning.

174 The organization they describe can be summarized thus:
571 Before making up tribes, the rebels lived in small groups
621 near the plantations from which they had escaped; these groups of composite origin were designated by the word lo which means: troop, band; the same word is used to designate a band of animals.

[162] These rebels used to belong to all the nations of the west
[103] coast of Africa. In spots there may have been an attempt at regroupings of elements belonging to the same nation, as proven by the village names Loango, Dahomey, among the Saramaka.
[622] But the majority of these small groups were very probably of heterogeneous origin; in each of these lo, the bravest and most capable was designated as head.

[648] After the recognition of the Djuka and Saramaka by the [167] government of Surinam and their regrouping on the great rivers of the interior, these groups kept their unity since they had a de facto organization and leaders. They were naturally designated by the name of the plantation they had come from. We say for example Dju nẽnge for the former slaves of the Jews, Kõpani nẽnge for the former slaves of the Compagnie des Indes Orientales /East India Company/. /30/

174 In the course of the 19th century the total number of Refugee 613 Blacks increased very rapidly under the influence of a high birth
614 rate. The lineages in the proper meaning of the term bɛɛ, mean-
621 ing the descendants of the same ancestress, took on sufficient im-
571 portance to constitute distinct social units. They grouped in [121] Ties between the individual and the ancestors. Before examining more deeply the social and family structure of the Refugee Blacks, it is indispensable to study what religious ties are implied between [184] the individual and the ancestors. Here one is in the presence of basic beliefs which seem identical in the various tribes of Refugee Blacks of Guiana and of which their structure is the consequence.

In the civilizations of Blacks Africa it is supposed that a [171] current of life and /31/ strength circulates from the divinity to men through the medium of the ancestors. Among the Refugee Blacks it is taken for granted that in this respect each man is bound [782] to his ancestors through the maternal line only. If he falls prey to illness, injustice, or adversity, he can call only on them in his prayer.

593 That does not mean that the tie with the father is ignored [827] or considered as having little importance; it is taken for granted, as we shall see, that in the creation of man certain psychic elements are transmitted from father to son. But the current of strength binding the individual to the ancestors does not pass through the father. One cannot pray usefully to the soul of one's dead father. [755] If I am sick and divination incriminates the action of my dead [782] father's soul, I cannot address either prayer or offering directly to him; for that I shall have recourse to one of his near relatives in the maternal line.

121 It seemed to us that in the present state of knowledge about the Refugee Blacks a study of limited scope but covering the totality of the population was preferable to the very intensive study of a small group; only the study of the population considered in its entirety brings out clearly its family custom, its tendencies in the matter of marriage, divorce, inheritance; it alone can lead to a precise knowledge of its demographic data so important even on the social plane.

Finally, this detailed inventory constitutes a firm base for following the evolution of the population in the future.

125 Taking a census of the Boni posed a problem much more difficult than for most populations without vital statistics. The 648 tribes of the Refugee Blacks enjoy in effect a statute of autonomous nations under protectorate and insist fiercely on this autonomy. The French administration has never been able to take a census of them any more than the administration of Surinam has for the Djuka and Saramaka, colliding with an ingenious ill will which defies all efforts.

It is not that they fear taxes (this is a notion practically unknown in Guiana, even on the coast (1), and the French

GLOSSARY AND LINGUISTIC NOTES

THE language of the Saramacca Bush Negroes is called by them the Saramacca tongo—the Saramacca tongue. Though there are many African words in ritual and everyday speech, the Saramacca tongo is essentially Negro-Portuguese, with a sprinkling of English and Dutch words. In the city of Paramaribo the Negroes speak taki-taki, Negro-English, though Dutch and Portuguese words are also found. The structure of the language of both bush and coastal Negroes is essentially African, that is to say, in all the borrowings it was the word which was borrowed, while the African idiom was retained, so that it may be said that the Negroes speak African dialects translated into English or Portuguese or Dutch. Simple examples of this are such phrases as "carry come" for "bring"; "carry go" for "take away"; or "hunger kills me" for "I am hungry"; or "one time" for "immediately." 197 197

For the correspondences between the languages of the Suriname Negroes and of West Africa, we have relied on various dictionaries and grammars of West African languages, and on our own findings made during our field work on the West African coast. In writing the words of Suriname and West African languages in both the glossary and the body of this book, the vowels have the "continental" values, not those given in English. It is to be noted that diacritical marks which would be necessary to indicate the strong nasalization that characterizes Bush Negro speech have been omitted from both text and glossary, in order to simplify the writing of native terms. Finally, we must 122 128 [194]

The short time allotted me during this expedition did not suffice for the gathering of much material on the history and culture of the Djukas; consequently in 1928 and 1930 further [2a] expeditions under the same auspices and also financed by Mr. Granger were organized. Djuka is a composite picture of these several journeys.

[0] As to the origin of the name "Djuka" there has been no little doubt. Many claim that it is a derivation of Ouca which was the name of the plantation where a treaty of peace was signed between the Bush Negroes and the whites nearly two hundred years ago. Perhaps that is true, for "Djuka" formerly applied solely to Bush Negroes of the Aucaner Auca tribe and is still so used by many but through widespread usage has come to designate not only the Aucaners, but all the Bush Negroes, collectively speaking.

[2] This work makes no attempt at being an ethnological or anthropological account in the scientific sense of the words. It is a narrative of personal observation among these Bush Negro tribes set down with such accuracy as is possible for one trained in another field of science. Its purpose is to further the understanding of these primitive people and to acknowledge their superiority in their own scene. Finally, this book has been inspired by sincere admiration of the

Introduction

B R 101 [122] During the expeditions of the Institut géographique national in French Guiana in 1948 and 1949, we lived in close contact with the Boni Refugee Blacks and the Oayana /Oyana/ Indians of the Upper Maroni. These populations present the remarkable peculiarity of belonging to two entirely distinct ethnic groups while living side B R 121 by side, leading in general the same way of life, and having the same diet. Historical circumstances have thus joined together in the Upper Maroni the conditions of a rigorous biological experiment which, so far as we know, do not exist so distinctly in the other regions. In fact, wherever two different ethnic groups coexist, they usually do not have either the same habitat or the same way of life; for example, on the coast of Surinam the Indonesians live mostly on the rice plantations and the Blacks in the towns, under quite different conditions of habitat, diet, and hygiene; B R under these conditions, the differences observed on the level of pathology and demography are difficult to interpret.

114 121 Doctor André Sausse, who accompanied us, studied the Boni and the Oayana Indians on the medical level; he submitted evidence that these two populations presented a distinct pathology having B R profound repercussions on their demographic situation (1). During [114] in 1949 but without being able to observe the exact details.

The frequency of the phenomena of possession and the 787 importance accorded to them imprint a remarkable character
791 on the religious life of the Refugee Blacks: all these manifestations have for each one the character of obvious material fact. How, then, doubt that one lives with the gods, sees them, and [177] speaks to them? Because of this fact the society of the Refugee Blacks is utterly impermeable to European influences.

787 Some plants utilized in the rites of possession. The preparations
824 with which the possessed people "wash" their bodies consist of macerations of leaves. The plants used, which for the most part belong to the secondary flora which develops in the old clearings, are very numerous. However, some are regarded as [789] having a very unique power. The first five especially are utilized by all the Boni to "wash off the Ampuku" when they have slept a night in the bush.

Toward us came Tenye, a young friend of last year, and two small boys. She had seemed but a child the year before when she had danced bandamba with the other little girls while the men were getting ready for the Kromanti dance. But now she looked quite grown, and instead of the small apron she had worn, was wearing a cloth of a woman. 882

"You've grown, Tenye."

"Ay, a kisi bobbi kaba," one of the youngsters said. "She has her breasts already," and he went on to say that soon she would marry. "Two moons more," he said, showing two fingers.

"You will soon have many bracelets, Tenye, and when you dance you will be splendid."

"Ai," the boy went on speaking eagerly, "Abane will teach us how to dance when he comes back. He went to the French shore. Abane made Tenye, and he made me, too. I am Yamati, and he made Sabape, here." But they had not the same mother, nor did they live in the same village. "When I grow up," the child went on, "I will dance with seed rattles at my ankles. I will dance like Abane." The rattles his uncles would have to buy for him, or when grown he might buy them for himself, but his father would give him his gods when he was of age, and good dancing, too, was a thing of the gods. 883

"Who will get Abane's seed rattles, Tenye? Will you get them because you are the oldest child of the first wife?"

"Ah, no!" both she and the indomitable Yamati exclaimed at the same moment, and then both lowered their heads and would say no more, while the small Sabape looked away.

Now we had the year before discovered why we were so often met by young and old with the phrases, "I do not know," or better still, "Massa Gadu sabi—God alone knows," when it was evident that the speakers knew the answer very well indeed. The reason lay with the will of the G'an Yorka, or the G'an Zombi, or the Nana, as the ancestors are variously called. The ancestors it seemed had long 609 123

609 ago, so long that no one knew just when it happened, instruct-
123 ed that no one might impart to another, a stranger, more than half of what he knew. Moreover, no young person dared to speak at all of the supernatural, and such matters as inheritance were regulated by the laws of the gods and ancestors, who punished infractions with the scourge of kunu—a term we were to hear so much in this Suriname bush.

302 Tenye's head as we looked down upon it was a mound of wool, with little braids, each no more than an inch or an inch and a half long, fastened by a bit of black thread, each braid pointing upwards. This was called "tatafi," we knew, and to change the subject we talked about the styles of [855] hairdressing. A child's hair usually was closely cropped, and the heads of both Yamati and Sabape looked as smooth as blackened gourds. Tenye's hair had been cut but a little while ago, a moon perhaps, when the braids had grown so long that it had been too much bother even to make the hair look well in the fashion of what was called the coiled head, or the earth furrow style. Both of these types of hairdressing consisted of braids which diverged from the center in many rows, appearing at the outer edge at intervals of one inch, or slightly more. These ends were caught up and rebraided around the head, to form either the one coil of "lollo 'ede," or the several coils of "gon wi." There were also the single long braids—the "pitto"—and the "pina bonsu" way of hair combing, where the head when properly dressed makes a design of narrow strips of scalp showing between flat ribbons of braids, which look like so many snake vertebrae, radiating from the middle of the head outwards.

"When you come back from up river, I will dress your hair," said Tenye to both of us. "You," she said, pointing, "will become an obia man in your white country, and you will look so well that your husband won't ever remember to go to his other wives."

302 But now Tenye's maternal aunt who had approached 754 unobserved came to call the children away. She was not in 609 given to the white woman when she returned from up river, 304 yet with it all the thighs would still need to be cicatrized.

"Then," she said, speaking of the cicatrized thighs, "then he simply won't think of any one else, because among you, you will be the only one. We who all have the kamemba must see that it looks well, but you will be the only one."

123 The boys remained with us, amusing themselves by 609 giving us their words for the various objects about us.

The strings about their waists, which formed their only [291] clothing, the fiber cord with the bell about Sabape's neck,
304 the word for garter, and machete, and shoes, boxes, and water jar, and all else they could see were named. A flashlight was a diamond fire, and a collapsible chair a hammock chair, and if we showed them something they had never seen it was a Bakra sani—a white man's thing.

Sabape spoke little, for he was a timid child and looked sluggish. He had but few cuts on his body, while Yamati, who was about the same age, had already several fully outlined designs.

"Why have you nothing about your neck, Yamati?"

"Oh, but I have. I have cuts. You can either have an obia cut, or an obia tetai—a string. It is to make us live. All children have it."

"And when do they start making kamemba?"

"A long time ago they start. If it doesn't hurt too much, they cut one more, and soon one more. But if it hurts too much, they wait until . . . ," he said, finishing on the [195] word te . . . in the characteristic way of the grown narrator who uses the monosyllable to intensify space and time and danger and bounty.

123 Yamati found so much delight in his rôle as teacher that 609 he became stern with us and had us say the words over again and again. There was the word for firefly which pleased him not at all. "Mi taki, mi taki-e, azoka-nyenye—I say, I am saying . . . " ("if you would but listen," his voice implied), and he repeated the word over and over, until this led us to talk about singing, and at last we had them consent to dance susa for us. It had to be done very quietly, in the slight clearing in back of the shelter. Susa is an African dance. It is danced by men only, in pairs, and is something of a game. The one who wins "kills" his opponent. The earth spirits are said especially to like it, and it is danced in the fields or in the villages for them. 123 609 535

There they stood, Yamati and Sabape, facing each other, their enlarged navels almost touching. One agreed to be "in," and one "out," and as they began, their jaws came forward in a patterned, pugnacious way, and their arms moved to reproduce in pantomime shield and spear, while the feet crossed and recrossed. 535 524

They sang the song over and over again, panting at the end of each verse to dramatize combat.

"I killed him," said Yamati. He had won, and they began again. If the one who had agreed to be "in" had his foot on the outside as they clashed, then he lost—he was killed.

As they were dancing, we noticed a young man we had never seen before. He was standing watching the youngsters at their play, smiling as though he enjoyed their contest. He was very dark, even for a Bush Negro, short and stocky, with unusual muscular development of arm and chest and thigh. His age, one would judge, was nineteen or twenty. He turned his smile on us when he realized we were noticing him. 439

WHILE THE RIVER WAS HIGH

Had we provided ourselves with the necessary obias with 439 which to travel to the country of the Granman? He had 789 never been so far up the river. He would like to go there. 484
Ai-yo! He would like to go and see Dahomey, the sacred city, and look at the Tapa Wata falls, and visit the Granman's village. Did we have all our paddlers? He was strong, and he liked to make a boat walk up the rapids. He could get his father to come with him as steersman. His father had strong obias and knew the river. We could not go until the river went down, but he would stay with us here and wait, and if we wished it he would go back upstream to his village and get his father and food, and be ready for us in time. He needed the money the Bakra would pay, too, for he wanted to be married soon, and he would have to buy many things for his woman and her mother.

When he left us, he went to one of the little enclosed houses that were there for travelers, choosing the one closest to us, and built a small fire. His younger brother [231] and the white dog that came in his boat sat with him. The dog wore a cord about his neck, covered with red ochre, to keep him safe in the bush. That night as we ate we could see Bayo, his brother, and the dog squatting close to the fire and eating, too. And all the next day, and for several days to come, as we waited, Bayo was with us, talking, laughing, explaining, and making and buying obias for us to carry us safely on our journey to the Granman.

In the afternoon one of the political chiefs of the neigh- 609
boring Christian village came to hear our phonograph. 123
But when we asked him to sing into it, he said, "Ask me later. Now I am alone. We Saramacca people never do anything when we are alone." We had the year before acquired a powerful obia against slander and bearing false witness against us, and found the occasion useful for corroborating the invocation we had been given. The man, however, spoke with the greatest reluctance and looked 609 vastly relieved when he saw several boats pull up at the 123 shore.

It appeared that these newcomers were also interested in our phonograph, but that no one would consent to be the first to sing, until at last a young boy came up.

609 "I'll sing for you," he said, and it was at once whispered
123 that the boy came from a family of powerful obia men, that 771 he was sure of his spirit. "I'll sing, yes, but you must let me tell the machine something first."

What he said was an invocation to his soul and his personal gods, and he spoke it by putting his face into the horn of the phonograph and talking in a rapid whisper, making audible the one phrase: "Bakra obia isn't my obia." Subsequently when we discussed this occurrence with older men, they made the matter clear to us. He had assured his spirits that he was not conceding anything to our magic, and that they were neither to feel slighted nor to relax their vigilance. The gods favored the strong and the proven, and a young man had to be careful, for the gods were not conceived as especially logical or rational or inexorably just, so that one had to guard against becoming the victim of their caprice.

609 Boat after boat pulled up at the shore, and up the road
123 came a long line of callers. Women with infants straddling their backs, a breast drawn to the side so that the child might feed as it rested there; children with cords about their waists; young girls and boys, each with a square of apron across the front, or a loin cloth; and the men with togas and paddles, dignified and solemn, drawing nearer silently.

On our provision boxes sat those who had come early, particularly women nursing children, or old women who looked on with tired wonder. On the floor everywhere about our feet and against the posts sat the children we knew, while those who had come for the first time and were still fearful kept their distance, hiding behind some relative.

It was a great occasion, a spectacle of white man's magic, and they were there to verify it for themselves. Now there was much of white man's magic that was not astonishing. 609 123

Old men and young men had heard of machines with people on them that flew like birds, but had they not their own stories about the sacred vulture, the opete, that carried one of their warrior ancestors away from slavery across the river and into this bush? He had simply mounted the bird and said to it, "On your back is my home. You [773] can fly over land, and you can fly over water. I have no boat. You must carry me." And the opete took him. Then [776] there are beings with wings that range the sky, and some of them are birds, and some of them are spirits. No, a machine that flew like a bird was not astonishing magic. Then there was the kino—shadows appearing and moving about like the living—that you could see in the cities. Men on the French shore, too, had seen the kino, but it was a gift any man might have to see things. But here was something which talked back at you. . . .

"Ke . . . !"

"Massa Nen'ge!—Master Nigger!"

"Ma Nen'ge . . . !"

And even our town servant exclaimed, "Mi Gado—My God!"

Now all this was very well, except that the Bakra, not satisfied with the ordinary seketi dance tunes, kept asking for Kromanti songs—the warrior-spirit songs—and the bush-god songs, and river-god songs. From one man and from another came the expected, "I do not know such songs." The women did not even dare approach the machine.

At last Apanto came. His hair was braided and he wore a 609 jaguar tooth on a cord about his neck. He was not so 123 muscular as other men of his age, and when he went about 115 there was a softness in his movements that was unaccountably disquieting. His hands were not the hands of a worker of lumber, nor of a boatman who was accustomed to pole heavily loaded boats. They were smaller, and his fingers were narrow at the ends. Apanto, we discovered later, was what the Bush Negroes called a "tiger fighter." In a quarrel, he did not cuff and strike out with his fists, but

609 scratched like a "tigri"—a tiger, for this is how the Bush
• 123 Negroes name the jaguar. Later, when we saw him dance
115 the Tigri Kromanti dance, we witnessed one of the most realistic feline interpretations imaginable. But that is another matter.

Now Apanto was an obia man to be reckoned with, and his fellow villagers and the villagers of neighboring settlements treated him with a deference that his age alone could never have commanded. And it was this Apanto who now came up and said that he would sing the sacred Kromanti songs for our phonograph.

"You will not understand the songs. They will be in the Kromanti language," he warned us. "They are strong, and the machine must be strong to carry them."

It happens that a field phonograph is anything but strong. The mechanism is simple, since the instrument must be light enough to be carried about, and yet it often is sub-
[126] jected to all manner of hard usage. To this is added the hazard of the climate. The turntable is actuated by a belt running from the mechanism inside the case, and the ends of this belt are glued together. This, to be sure, we discovered later. At the moment, we met Apanto's challenge with assurance. We did not doubt that the machine was spiritually strong.

126 What he said about the Kromanti language was true.
533 The Kromanti tongo, of which we had been told during our [197] first visit here, we were finding to be an actuality, and 539 although we took down the words as he sang them, aided in hearing them by the repetitions, their meaning was unknown to us. Some of them we learned later. Some of them we knew. "Obia" we knew concerned the spirit,
[176] the vague force known by that name, while "Amba" was a deity sacred to Saturday, and was given as a "day name"
[551] to women born on that day of the week. This, then, is what he sang:

"Ma djeni ye-ye
Obia kule ma djeni no-ho
Obia mo-ye

REBEL DESTINY

126 Apanto looked at us. "The Bakra is cunning," he 533 repeated. "But obia is stronger. In the bush obia rules.
●123 Kromanti is too strong for the spirit of the machine."

Swiftly the dark of the bush came down. The people who had been watching, listening to what had passed, were leaving to go to their villages and to spread the news of the power of obia, and how Apanto had defeated the spirit of the machine that talks back what has been said to it. And with the gathering dark, we could sense the pulse of the drums and hear a faint echo of the shrill cry of the women dancing at Gankwe for the spirit of the dead man who lay there in the house of mourning.

had not acted well toward the Granman. It would be best if we did not stop there. At the others the Granman could assure us hospitality. Then there was talk of hauling wood and making rafts, for our host, who knew these people well, moved safri, too, until he at last felt the moment had come to talk about buying a boat from Ajako.

When the arrangements of the sale were concluded, Ajako came back to talk with us. He had heard that we had a machine which the Kromanti spirit had broken, was it true? Did it really go again? They said the Bakra had much cunning. They said the Bakra knew African magic.

The Bakra said he knew something about Africa. The Ashanti people, for instance, were a fine people.

"Ma na Asante, na Sa'macca sem- . . . —But the Ashanti are Saramacca. . . . " But he would go no further, having spoken only one syllable of the word for people. He became guarded. Yes, there were some Anago people from Africa on this Saramacca River, and Dahomey, and Loango, and Fanti; the Ibo peoples were not on this river. . . . And again he would say no more. Later, when we had changed the subject, he said as if in both gratitude and explanation, "Na sa-i-'akisi, a tranga poi—You ask about strong things."

But he would sing into our machine, if we liked. He would sing Kromanti, if we wanted him to do so. "I won't fight your machine," he said, smiling.

"Anabobi, Anabobi,
Anabobi, Anabobyo,
Tata Ando.
Anabobi, Ando,
Anabobi,
Tata Adjaini,
Anabobyo
Tata Fa'aku."

"They will understand this in Africa," he said, gravely, and then he moved toward the doorway and stood there

"Na wa' taki: Efi gbuli wolo, i sa si san de na ini.—It is said: If a person stirs up a hole, he will find what is in it." 538

And so it was that very night, when we were camped on an island near the great falls, with the roar of the water sounding in our ears like the very signal drums we were told the river gods wanted sounded that the sun might come and warm and dry them after the long rains, that we learned more. Kasanya, the captain of the fourth boat, had conducted himself so unobtrusively that we barely knew he was there. He was almost as old as Bibifo, but strangely silent. He was tall and spare, with graying hair, and eyes that were rimmed with red. We had not sought him out particularly to make conversation with him because he had ugly, open sores on his body, the result of a virulent case of bush yaws, which showed when he sat paddling in his loin cloth. We had known him during our first year when he had been more willing to be friendly, more ready to talk. From him, in fact, we had learned to play one of the Bush Negro games that the ancestors had brought from Africa. 124 [177] [524]

Kasanya came over to ask us whether we had medicine for him. His head ached so until . . . he could barely see. There is that about white man's medicine in the bush, it is to be had free, and there is no harm in trying it. 123 609

"Will you make us a game board like the one we bought from your village last year, Kasanya?" we asked him.

"Yes, but you must have two of them, one flat and one curved like a boat. It is not good to have only one. When a man is alive he plays the game. When he dies and comes back to visit the living, he wants to play, too. Now if there is a board for him, he will play on that. But if there is but the one, he will play with the living and that is not good." 775 524

"You know a great deal, Kasanya."

"Awa, yes, but I'm an old man already. I've had much trouble. Last year after you left the third son I made died. Now I have no one. Kunu has taken the three of them, and my wife is asleep, too." [776]

776 186 gods do not come to them." There was in her voice contempt for women who had no gods. She was of a reddish-brown color, taller and more slender than most, and the great coils of brass about her arms and ankles told that her [301] beauty had had full recognition. These had come to her at [585] marriage, as had the small earrings of gold which the bassia had brought to her from French Guiana. With these, too, had come cloths and handkerchiefs, beads and carvings.

609 123 If white women had no gods, did they know any of the other things which women must know? Did the white [591] woman wear an apron underneath all her cloths, as women should? Were her thighs cicatrized? Did she cook for her husband, or other men, when she should be isolated in the special house provided for women's monthly visits? [841] Did she purify herself with sacred clay when she emerged from isolation in order not to spoil her husband's obias, for which contact with a woman who has her menses is the deadliest taboo? Why, having borne children, did her figure not show it?

[534] "Have you drums?" the bassia's wife asked. "Without drums, how do you pray? How do you dance?"

[535] Dancing without drums availed nothing.

"White women have no gods. The gods do not come to them. They are not troubled by the need to dance. White women do not pray," she concluded, seeing that what dancing the white woman did could only be a feeble affair.

"I will send my son to your country. The men who go to the French shore say it is good to know how to count the white man's way. My woman-child I will never send," she finished with finality.

Now it was the white woman's turn to ask a few questions, having done explaining how her boots laced, and why it was that she was dressed very much as her husband was dressed.

751 776 983 The white clay in the hair and on the face of a small child was medicine. The child's mother had washed for her god that morning. He was a god whose day for dancing was Wednesday, and now, feeling the god stir in her, she would 834 848 "Don't go off into the bush with a man. A child born to you will have a bad bush god, if you do," she added as an afterthought.

●123 177 In the other corner, Chief And'u, the bassia, and about half a dozen men were talking of the great book about their ancestors which the white man had.

"It is large so," said the chief to one of the older men, indicating an imaginary size which multiplied the size of the actual volume at least tenfold. "And people say it has in it pictures of the Apuku gods, small as we ourselves know them, and a picture of the evil Apuku who appear as fire in the distance. . . . Mati, white men have gone into the Kromanti houses in the country of our ancestors and have made pictures!"

"It is impossible!"

"I want to see!"

The old man said, "I will not look. Books are not for us, mati."

"But mati, the G'aman has heard, and he wants to see."

The old man shook his head. He would have nothing of pictures that figured what should never have been allowed to be photographed.

It seemed prudent to give the conversation a new turn. 137 Down river, the men had said that a man of this village had lately found a new neku liana. Was it so?

"The man who found it was my son," said the old man, "you should have come for the dance. You would have seen how we do things here in the bush. But pictures you could [802] not take. No, mati, if you photograph, you take the soul."

The festivities for the find had been especially joyful, he 824 explained, for the boy had only recently come by his gods, 796 and this had been yet another proof that he would serve his family capably. For though the find was his own, all [278] his relatives in the mother's line would enjoy its use. Here- [326] after, when the poison of its leaves and its slender branches

535 men's Kromanti society. The elders had decided these dances were too violent to show to the white man who was with them for the night. Whatever of the esoteric the white man was to see was for the Granman himself to decide. To introduce the drums for the secular dances, and the half-sacred awasa, would be dangerous, for once the drums were there, and the spirit seized one of the players, he would begin to call the gods. When the gods came the dancing would take place until the spirits were satisfied.

"There will be no drums," said the bassia aloud. "There is no one to play them."

No drums!

Again the whispering began. The eagerness, the energy which had seemed to float in the darkness from one to another of the waiting figures began to be dissipated. The men and women still waited, but they were listless.

533 539 The little girl sang,

"The kogbwa drum
Sounds Toné."

And the chorus sang,

"Give us Toné."

The bassia who was master of ceremonies noticed the loss of interest with displeasure. It had not been the intention of the elders, when they had made this decision, to have it interfere with the reception of the strangers. He had counted on having spirited secular dancing.

"Friend," he said to the young obia man, "get the dancing started."

He turned again and again to the young man who was being disciplined in the way of the gods, exhorting him to beat time faster, to sing louder. And to the women he shouted, "Shake, women, shake—chaka!"

The dancing grew lively.

The white man had learned the words of the refrain, and [123] was singing with them. Master Nigger! here was a white man who could sing their songs. The white woman had been shown by the bassia's wife how to clap her hands to the rhythm of the song, and now she could not stop for an instant, though her hands ached. 535 [123]

"Batu mau—Clap your hands!" the bassia's wife called to her, the instant her visitor's zeal slackened. She herself was dancing in place, her infant on her back, sound asleep.

"Chaka—Shake!" she too began to shout, and once she was so carried away by her hand clapping that she joined the dancers, and danced facing the obia man.

Tall and slender as she was, she crouched opposite the man, her child on her back, and executed the most amazing steps. It was as though every muscle in her body had been set in motion by some invisible dynamo.

An old woman interrupted them. She stepped into the circle, and put her arm about the bassia's wife. "Adoo!" she crooned, and brought her to her feet. Another woman had done the same for the obia man.

Now one of the men who wore both a love obia and a brass ring on his great toe began a song. The melody was only a variant of the one Bayo had sung and the seketi songs we had heard at Gankwe and elsewhere. But here the recitative of the leader was longer. What he sang was not unlike one of our own ballads. He recounted the experiences of a young Saramacca man on the Marowyne River. He had met a Djuka woman, who had taken up with him for his money, and in the end she had exposed him to her people. 533 [832]

Another man sang of a war that white men had with each other. Hard times came to the Saramacca people. There was no work. Then their Granman sent a message to the white elders. The Granman told them people should live in peace together.

The bassia had no need now to spur on the dancers. The small open space was a heaving mass. Nothing seemed immobile. The stars darted, the lights of the small oil lamps held by the bystanders flickered, the very posts which held the thatch of the houses in place and ended some feet 535 533

Chapter X

AT THE COURT OF THE GRANMAN

I

"AT BREAK of day I start for the country of the Granman. I will see you there tomorrow, about the time day meets night," And'u, chief of S'ei, had said as he left the shrine to the Great Gods. Yet it was a full day later that we next saw And'u, for the speed at which two men could send a small corial upstream was not that at which our heavily loaded boats traveled. As the first day wore on and the succeeding one brought us closer and closer to our destination, it was evident that the news of the approach of the strangers had spread.

Report said that the white man had not come to bring his gods to them. He was not buying timber, he sought for no rubber trees, he was not here to tell them to grow new crops or to work gold. There were, in the white man's country, people who wanted to learn how other people lived. In the white man's country there were people who believed that men brought from the country of the great Negro ancestors had become Indians, or whites.

Master Nigger! They, the Saramacca people, become Ingi or Bak'a!

But why did people go about learning how others lived—Indians, and coolies who were brought to work the white man's plantations when their ancestors had won their freedom, and Negroes? Did white men grow rich doing this? Would this white man put their carvings in the big house he told of, beside carvings of their Negro ancestors, and then ask money from people who came to see? 123

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934

Ambe! Was that what white people did to come into money?

From the provision grounds canoes filled with women would dart toward us, and Bayo would call to us, as the women cried their greetings, "Stand up, both of you. The women want to look at you." 123 609

The women's requests were, apparently, not to be ignored. Hurriedly we would climb out from inside the tent and balance ourselves on our knees over the tarpaulin-covered load in front of the boat.

"Look! Look! . . . . There are two men! It is not true that the white man brought his woman!"

Like a master showman, Bayo would stand there in the bow, his pole-stick poised for the next stroke, all his teeth showing.

"Take off your sun helmet, white woman," he would then say.

"Mother of all Negroes!"

"By Ando!"

"Her hair is yellow! She belongs to the river gods!"

"Is it that way they live in the white man's country? Do they not know the difference between men and women, that they both dress alike?"

Again Bayo had a ready answer.

"A white woman who travels in the bush dresses like a man. So they do in the white man's land."

"Master Nigger! Men and women wearing the same clothes!"

When Bayo decided that the women's curiosity had been satisfied, he would say his goodbyes to them with a flourish and, bearing down on the top of his pole-stick, would push away.

Soon we would hear Bayo's summons again.

"Come out. People want to see you."

This time there would be both men and women in the boats which had come circling about us, and the questions, exclamations, and Bayo's replies were heard afresh.

stopped to change their clothes, and make themselves fit for the reception by the Granman. 576

We had been warned that these preparations were not to be slighted. Those who had been to the village of the Granman told many stories of the impressiveness of the ceremonial life, and the dignity of those who were there. It was the seat of government, the home of a potentate. A visitor, whether a village chief or a man from the city, had to keep in mind that he was to appear at court. Etiquette demanded that the traveler, once arrived at the island which now hid us from the Granman and his assembled villagers, debark, remove the stains of hard traveling, and dress in a manner befitting the reception which awaited him. 576 609

But the gods had planned otherwise.

At this time of the year, though the heavy rains were over and the showers were becoming less and less frequent, it did sometimes happen that the clouds gathered at midafternoon and rain fell. To the northeast, behind us, we had seen the clouds massing, and now they hung low and glowering. 132

"It will rain," Sedefo called to us, just as we were making ready to see to a change of clothes, and an instant later the storm broke. With a kind of hurricane force which sent the branches toward the earth, and flares of lightning and crashes of thunder, the deluge was upon us. Not since our first days in the bush had we coped with a rain like this. The water poured down as though some giant hands were turning over endless vessels. Our tent seemed to have been taken as unaware as we were, for having sheltered us in many hard storms, it was now inadequate to keep out the downpour. We drew our raincoats tighter about us to keep off the water which came through the thatch.

Under the trees of the island the Bush Negroes were huddled. Their favorite top cloths were still in their baskets, safe out of the wet under the white man's tarpaulins. No chance now to put them on, or to use the oil which they had jealously saved for making their faces and 173 [302]

123 shoulders and arms glisten, or otherwise to make themselves
[302] presentable for the reception. There was nothing to do but to keep close to a tree-trunk, water dripping from naked body and the strip of twisted loin cloth, teeth chattering in the sudden chill brought on by the storm.

The head of Sungi was suddenly thrust inside our boat-tent.

"I saw the Granman. He says the storm is passing. You are to come to him as you are. It is best so. Waiting here is cold."

Turning, he ordered the paddlers to their places, and almost before the paddles were in motion, the guns began to fire.

"The Granman knows the time it takes to give a message. The Granman knows everything," said Bayo in great [203] admiration, as the guns saluted.

Three shots, and three more. Two shots, an interval, and another coming faintly. Then a short silence, and once more the guns, in clusters of three, but now sounding from several directions.

As we rounded the bend of the island the farther bank was alive with people. The rain had subsided to a drizzle. Across the strip of water which separated us from the shore we could see men and women and children standing about, the women with large food trays inverted over their heads to protect their finery. But the men, disdaining such aids, stood in the rain and looked on with undisguised curiosity. Boats joined ours from up and down the river. With the sound of the guns came hallooing, shrill cries which were the women's expression of enthusiasm, actual or ceremonial.

292 As we watched, several figures appeared on the high bank, 554 the others making way for them. Two of the men were not 622 dressed in the colored toga-like cloths that were worn by the others, but in coats of rich material which reached to their knees. They wore black top-hats with cockades at the side. One of these, we recognized as Chief And'u of S'ei. His coat was of deep crimson, bordered in blue, and his companion's a vivid yellow. Both of these men carried to him when the drums called that god, could not be held accountable for what he did while his god had him in his control. 632 614 609

No stranger, no man who came to live in his wife's village, even though he had spent a good part of his life there, took it upon himself to offer advice to his wife's family. Again and again we would hear from men and women on the river, "In our village we do it this way," or, "We only carry the corpse on the head twice. Our spirits don't like to be troubled more often," or, "Mawu as a name for the Great God is used in our village, but not everywhere on the river." 614 607 123 [778]

There was the experience with several sacred images of village gods we had bought from an upper-river village. Our paddlers refused to carry them for us from the village to the boats, and it was with marked uneasiness that they permitted us to put them into the boats.

"We do not know what these gods can do. We do not know what is hateful to them. They are the gods of another people. We won't carry them."

But with the gomi—the child of the village of his mother's family, it was quite otherwise. He was a member of the village, he had a voice in its governing, he knew its gods. If he belonged to the family of the chief of the clan, if, let us say, his older brother were the chief, or if he was one of several nephews of a chief who had no surviving brothers, then at the death of the chief there would be a krutu, and the men of the village would decide which one of the several men who were eligible for the office was the most capable. Though rank was hereditary there was always selection among several heirs, and again the final word rested with the people of the clan. The offices of lesser chiefs—village chiefs who were subject to the clan chief, or bassias who served the chiefs—were passed on in the same manner. 622 624 [424]

While law making was in the hands of the chiefs, or captains, and the krutu over which they presided, law enforcement was the task of the bassias. It was they who saw to it that the orders of the chiefs were carried out. When 625 [622]

643 "True, true, G'aman."
82 "Captain And'u, the gods sent the rain to cool every-716 thing when the Bak'a came. The gods of the river carried 623 the Bak'a without mishap. We have heard of what the Bak'a has done. He has been at your country, at S'ei. He says he comes to learn. He says he does not come to buy wood or to work gold. What he says is good. Yet a full creek does not clear the bank of weeds. Tell us what the Bak'a did in your country, Captain And'u."

609 "The Bak'a came to S'ei. All that was there he looked 123 at. He walked about the village. His woman talked to our 623 women. The Bak'a spoke with our men. He asked about the obias in the krutu house. His woman asked our women about their gods. What was the name of the wife of the Gran Gadu, he wanted to know."

With every sentence, came the affirmation of the chief.

"So I know."

"So it is."

"By Ando!"

"So I heard."

And'u continued. "The Bak'a knows the land of the Negroes—a sabi Afrika. With him he has a great book. In it he has pictures."

"True, true."

"There are pictures of obias."

"Ya-hai!"

"There are pictures of the Kromanti houses."

"So it is!"

"There are pictures of people who have the gods."

"Kweti-kweti—No, no!"

"Yet pictures in S'ei the Bak'a did not make. The Bak'a said, 'If your ancestors tell you not to talk, do not talk. But when you talk, do not lie!' That which we did not wish to be done he would not do, his woman would not do."

"Gbolo!" exclaimed the Granman, "this is as I have heard. Now the Bak'a has come up the river. His woman has light hair, she is as our Toné people. The river has [716] treated the Bak'a well. The gods of the river have let the Bak'a pass.

Bak'a pass. Friends, the river is more than I am. . . . Let us hear what the Bak'a has done on the river. Friend Kasanya, you have traveled with the Bak'a. Speak of what he has done." 609 123 623

"It is as Captain And'u has said," Kasanya began, "what was forbidden, the Bak'a did not do."

The Granman interposed an objection.

"I sent a message to the Bak'a by the husband of my daughter. To him I said, speak to the Bak'a, say that at all villages on the Saramacca you will be received. But two villages have not walked well with the G'aman. At those you will not stop. Yet at one of them the Bak'a stopped."

"So it is, cunning master. This was how it happened. Darkness was falling. Everywhere was the big bush. A storm was on its way."

"So I know."

"There were no other villages near. The next one could only be reached after dark. There were bad rapids ahead."

"So I understand."

"The Bak'a woman was in the boat. To make camp before the storm came was not possible. We had a krutu. We spoke with the Bak'a. The Bak'a said we must go where we could find a roof."

The Granman grunted, was silent for a moment, then took up the story.

"Friends, night overtook the white man in the bush. He had a woman with him. The men said they could not make camp at night. The white man took his woman to where there was shelter. Into the village he did not go. At the first house he slept. Early in the morning he left. He does not know the river. The men brought him at dark to the forbidden village. The gods sent a great wind when the Bak'a crossed the river to show their displeasure, but the Bak'a and his woman they did not harm. The gods took it into their hands. The gods are more than I am." 623 821 776

"So it is, G'aman."

"Friends, the children of the bush know what is done in the bush. Yet a man's lips must speak for himself. Let 609 623 123 the Bak'a himself tell why he has come the long way to the Saramacca river and what it is he seeks."

There was a general chorus of agreement, and silence awaited our accounting.

As the town man began to repeat our words to the Granman, the quiet of the house was heightened by an occasional stirring outside the paling. From where we sat, we could see brown motionless feet, which told us that there were many more than those inside, who were listening to the white man's reason for being in the bush.

Again the Granman made the traditional responses.

"So it is, white man."

"True, what you have said, bassia."

Finally our telling was at an end. Again there was a silence as we sat, tensely waiting.

The Granman again broke the silence.

"Friends, chiefs, you have heard. The white man is here. He comes to learn of our life. The gods of the river have brought him and his woman safely. The Great God sent the rain to cool the air when he reached Asindopo Lantiwe. The gods are more than I am. The river is more than I am. But the Saramacca people are also more than I am. It is you, headmen of the Saramacca people, who must speak."

"Ai, G'aman," said the man who had the stripes of white on him and who wore the many obias. "But have the ancestors spoken?"

"Truly you ask, friend," was the response. "It is well that you think of these things. In the bush, we think before we speak. Do you go aside and consider well."

Slowly the members of the krutu arose from their benches. Softly, with bent form, each passed out of the doorway. We were alone with the Granman, who waited with us for the reply of the chiefs.

As the elders slowly filed out of the council house, it was as though a jury were leaving the courtroom to decide a case which had been laid before it. And as we learned more, treated with obia. An obia man now addressed the woman who denied the charge that had been lodged against her, restating the accusation and her denial. Then he asked her once more if she were guilty, and when the answer was still "No," the test was applied.

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934

Through the woman's tongue the quill of the feather, which had been treated with magic, was thrust. When the entire length of the feather had passed through the tongue, then it was that the proof was had. If the woman's tongue neither swelled nor showed blood, she was innocent.

But whether it be trial by ordeal or through the taking of testimony, punishment by the krutu went along with punishment by the spirits. Only incest, we learned, was not punishable by the court. That was for kunu alone to avenge.

Once more the krutu was in session. Where the men had "gone aside," we did not know, but while we sat in the krutu house, alone with Moana Yankuso, we heard nothing.

The Granman had spoken little. Were our hammocks tied well the night before? Were we satisfied with the arrangements he had made for the storing of our supplies?

What were the elders deciding? We could not but wonder with anxiety. Would this krutu, after the fashion of the bush, where time meant so little, come to no decision? Was the answer to be one that had been previously arranged?

Chief Sungi was the first to speak.

"G'aman, we have gone aside. Your captains and bassias have spoken together. We say, the white man has come. The white man must eat. Let all be told to bring gifts, that you may feed those who have come to you."

"So it is," was the Granman's response. "Friends, great thanks to you. What you have said is good. Let all return to their villages. Let all tell their people that the white man has come. Let all come with gifts, that we may eat."

There was a chorus of affirmations. The Granman arose.

"White man," he said, "I have told the young men to hunt, I have told them to fish. My captains, who are here, are going to their villages. You have heard. Their women will come with rice. The young men will bring their kill. So it is in the bush. So G'aman Yankuso holds those who come to him."

As the elders, each with his word of leave taking, left the house to us, we thought of the Granman's last words and of the verdict of the krutu. We had sat long enough in this assembly to realize the circumlocution which went with all statement, and we tried to decipher the cryptic words of the chiefs. Was it a verdict at all? Or was it merely a way of refusing to come to any decision when the white man sat in the krutu which was deciding the fate of his visit? That the decision would be reflected in the attitude of the people of the village seemed reasonable to suppose. And so, drawing aside the curtain which hung over the door, we went out into the open square before our house to see what the krutu had decided.

REBEL DESTINY

787 When a male snake god came, then it was easy to know, 776 the women said. If the possessed one rolled face downward it was a male god, and he was courting the spirits of the earth, but if face upward then it was a female snake. "Na muye opo-i-mbe gi 'a tapu—The woman opens her womb for the sky," they said, using the precise image for one who was being wooed by the spirits who lived above.

● 123 When the white woman was about to enter the council house, Granman Yankuso called to her. He was standing in front of his house, surrounded by women, who were talking to him in low, excited voices.

"Bak'a muye—White woman," he said, looking at her searchingly, and saying nothing. "White woman," he repeated, after a short silence, "white mother, good morning. Are you awake?"

His voice sounded a little troubled, but not unfriendly. It helped the white woman to regain her self-possession.

"They sing well down below, Granman," she said, and went into the council house.

787 Whatever Granman Yankuso thought of the white [123] woman's having witnessed the possession of the women of his village, he did not refuse permission to her and her husband to return to the hut.

Amasina and Affi were still in the clearing, dancing to their own songs. Women came up with their children, bringing more and more calabashes of rice. Amasina took up each child in her arms, and caressed it gently, streaking it with the white clay as she did so, and singing the while,

[539]

"I come from the river.
You shall be cooled,
You shall be well."

Affi's moaning had become more and more faint, and her pacing, by this time, was listless. Her god would not take

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934

Saramacca

her into his power strongly enough to give her the release she craved. 787

Amasina sang,

> "I come from the river.
> I tell all you people,
> This man, this woman
> Are friends. [539]
> They come not for evil.
> Go to the G'aman,
> Say to him.
> These people are friends,
> They bring us no evil."

Then her god, speaking through her, sang an explanation to the white people. From the river he came, bringing healing to all those who were fevered, caring for all those who were sick. Those who could, came to him, but those who could not come, he would visit and bring them healing. Now he must make the round of the village, go to the houses, and see those who were ill.

Singing, Amasina beckoned us to follow her, and as she led the way she danced in undulating steps from one end of the village to another, visiting the sick, singing the cure her god was bringing them in the words he was speaking through her.

The white people could stay with her no longer. Word came that the boat which was to take them across the river to the village of the Granman's father was ready, and they must go. The women suggested, however, that if the whites cared to make a gift to the god who had spoken so well of [123] them, it would be acceptable, and they hurried to their stores to get a gift.

As they passed the council house and turned toward the small hut behind it where their supplies were kept, they heard a new sound. It was a choking sound, torn from an unwilling throat. Seated quite alone on a low stool in front 787 [412] of the mortar in which she had been pounding maripa nuts was the Granman's younger wife. The pestle had fallen from her shaking fingers. She gave the intruders no attention, for she, too, was possessed by her god,—by Toné, god of the river.

"Ke-ke-ke-ke-ke-ke! Ke-ke-ke-ke-ke-ke!" The syllables fell from her and, as the white people stood by, her shaking stopped, the sounds did not go on. Then they began again, her body racked, her voice choked. The Toné people do not speak when they are possessed, it is through sounds such as these that the god of the river makes known his wishes.

Women came running toward us. "Your boat is ready, Bak'a," they said.

787 431 •173 The whites returned with the bracelets to find that the two women to whom they brought their offerings had come as far as the Granman's quarter of the village. Affi's greeting of "Ondyi!" had died down to a whisper. Disconsolately she followed Amasina, who, in the white cloth which reached almost to her ankles, looked tall and sinuous, and moved as though there were something in the still air to send her body curving to one side and to the other.

As the possessed women and those with them entered the quarter, the elder wife of Yankuso came toward Amasina with a large calabash of rice.

"All those who have the same god come with gifts. Amasina has the strongest god of all. It is a white god," a woman explained.

[892] White was the color for the ancestors, and hers was the god of a great priestess of the family. It was the god Towenu, the great Papa god, the giver of children, the jealous one, who came to her. If he cared for his priestess too well, he allowed her no children. The mention of his name the day before had brought him, and, coming, he vouched for the friendliness of the strangers.

Amasina put her arms about the older woman as she had done to the others who came to her. She sang once more her message:

 787

"Wife of the G'aman, [539]
I come from the river.
Go to the G'aman
Say to him,
These strangers are friends,
They bring no evil."

It was the god speaking, and the Granman's wife received with lowered head the words spoken through the priestess.

"Ai, my master. Ai, Massa Gadu," she said.

The Granman's paternal village was directly across the 361 river from Asindopo Lantiwe. It was called Akisiamau, 643 literally "Took with an outstretched hand," but whether there was also some meaning in the phrase not intended for the uninitiated, we could not learn. In size it was not much larger than the Granman's village, and again and again we recognized houses which were his by the crest-like [473] carvings on the doorposts, that reproduced the design found not only at the side of the council-house door, but at the door of all other houses at Asindopo Lantiwe which were his.

Except for several old people who sat about in the shade 123● and waited for the strangers to come to them with their greetings, the entire village followed us as we made our way down one path and another.

"Bak'a, Ame'ika Bak'a, Ame'ika Fandya!—White man. American white man, American Fandya!" the children called after us, as they ran at our heels, touching our canteens, our sun helmets, and shoes.

The Granman had spoken with especial fondness of his 342 father's house, and it was there that we asked first to be 643 taken. It was not occupied, we were told, and none might enter it. Above the top crosspiece white cotton was draped. Except that its door was closed, it showed no signs of being "The openings in the wall there," she explained, when we asked her about the two squares cut into the wall behind the altar, "are for all things that fly. In this place they must come and go as they like. Bats come here, and insects of all kinds, and when they want to go back to the bush, they must be able to go as they like. That is the wish of the gods. So they told us long ago."

We were led from house to house. The gods had spoken. We were friends, and as friends who came not to harm, we were given the hospitality of friendship. There were other shrines, but we did not have to ask about them. They were pointed out to us with the other sights of the village.

The closed low hut near the Apuku shrine we had entered was to the river god Toné. It was a very small enclosure, and before it was a plant which covered the low entrance. It belonged, we were told, to an albino woman who was possessed by Toné. But she was not in the village now. Farther down the path was a larger house, another shrine. This had a piece of iron over the door and, when we asked about it, the girls who were following us ran, and the men merely said that it was the place of the Kromanti obia and passed on.

As we continued on our way, each woman was anxious not to have us slight the house her man had built her or fail to admire the carvings that were inserted into the weave of the palm walls. The huts were swept clean—the cleanliness of the entire village was even more striking than that of others we had visited—and but for a few stools, which were brought out for the strangers while they spoke with the old people who lived in the quarter, they were entirely bare. In every house, however, there was sure to be a shelf, large or small, or several shelves, on which stood prized food trays with carvings which covered both inner and outer surfaces. Combs and food stirrers were taken down and shown us, and the calabash dishes made by the women 173 With this obia, and unafraid, Apatu went. He reached the French shore, and found work. Years later he was asked to guide an expedition against the Indians. They came to a cave. At the other end of it Indians waited with their poisoned arrows.

The French officer said to him, "Apatu, are you afraid?"

"I will go, I am not afraid of death," Apatu said to the officer.

He led the way through the cave, calling out, "Mafi, Yanku na'a, hi!"

Three times the Indians tried to shoot him, and each time they failed.

"The French officer gave Apatu a gold piece for saving his life. That was when they sent him to Pali, and it was written down that he was a great man," ended the Granman.

822 "Do you know what they asked me in the city when I was there?" the Granman said one day, when his elders assembled. "'Chief Yankuso,' they asked me, 'which is better, light or darkness?' I said to them, I said, 'Darkness is better. When it is day we work and we struggle. At night we go into our hammocks with our women, and we find peace.'"

He turned to us as he told the story.

"Is it not so, white man? You yourself are young."

● 123 177 A few days after the gods had spoken, the Granman asked us if we would that evening show the pictures of the country of the Negroes which we had brought. We had shown him earlier the simple projector, actually a flashlight with a lens attached, through which a roll of film passed to flash images, one by one, on a screen. On the film were photographs of illustrations from books on Africa.

Mechanical objects of all kinds fascinated these men of the bush, and they would ask again and again to see our flashlights or the inside of our phonograph. Though un-

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8
Saramacca

willing to touch the phonograph, they never tired of hearing about its mechanism and how it was that a voice was recorded and instantly reproduced. But the mystery of the moment was this projector.

We had delayed showing these photographs as long as we could, for what leads we could get to African survivals, we sought, for many reasons, to get singly. Not the least of these reasons was that the Bush Negro, who knew the method of krutu, did not allow himself to be impulsive in new situations, especially if they involved strangers. If something unfamiliar was presented, he wanted time to think and to krutu about it with others of his kind. Memories of the early experiences of their people seemed always to be stirring to make the most genial man, or a very pleasant old woman, fall silent and resort to the phrase, "God alone knows." Men, in particular, and often women, too, seemed to be posing to themselves a mute, anxious question: Was it well for the white people to know so much about them? Even when whites came as friends, as the gods attested, was it well to speak that fraction of their knowledge which the ancestors permitted? For generations they had lived with the feeling that their deep, deep Saramacca language was their own, its knowledge the wisdom of their own people, and here were strangers, speaking to them in their own tongue more easily as day followed day. Was it well? Men taking a white man's boat up and down the river could say what they chose, and the white man who traveled with them did not understand. What if this were to end?

We were constantly made to feel the effect of these doubts in the minds of the people.

"They say here," said Fenekonde one day, "when you get back to your white country, you will have much knowledge to profit you. The two of you will be able to talk Saramacca, and no one at all will know what you say."

Other things were said.

"At the krutu they said, these white people might have been sent by others, as soldiers with toys."

REBEL DESTINY

183 "You must have strong obia from Africa—strong snake
177 obia—for the gods to have spoken so well of you!"

But when the Granman asked, there was no refusing. That day word was sent to all in the village that the Bakra was giving a cinema show in the bush.

Long before dark the entire village had gathered in front of our doorway. The children had been around since early afternoon. Against the council-house wall we hung a white sheet, and some feet away we stood our folding table and on it the little projector. The show was about to begin.

[354] The Granman who sat a little to one side gave orders to the latecomers to extinguish the flames of their small oil lamps and their lanterns, and the large torch which he had so proudly shown that first night, and which had since illuminated the clearing nightly, was also extinguished.

The illustrations we had photographed were from volumes on the people of the West Coast of Africa—Ashanti and the Gold Coast, Dahomey, Nigeria, Benin, the Cameroons, Loango, and the Congo. Our first year's experiences among these people had taught us that it would not be well to show them too many ceremonial pictures. Photographs of sacrifices of animals other than fowls, we had felt, too, would not be wise to introduce. Such a picture as that of the Ashanti Sasabonsum, the "evil Apuku," as the Bush Negroes whom we had allowed to see the illustration named it, we had also decided should best be shown to individuals here and there. For the general showing, we relied upon pictures of cicatrizations, of hairdressing and teeth filing, of rafts floating on African lakes, of pottery making and cloth weaving, of laying fires and the doing of other household tasks, of carvings, and finally of one or two priests and priestesses in states of possession.

We waited for a signal from the Granman to begin. About [342] the dark clearing the huts, with their roof poles meeting on top like great horns, gave a strange effect to the scene, for with the moving and shifting of bare feet it seemed as though everything in that clearing strained to fall in line with the white curtain hanging against the wall of the council house. To one side was the image of the Sky God, tall almost as the big bush which stood about the clearing, and beside it the pole for the Earth Mother. People went from one side of the improvised screen to the other, with no mental image to tell them where they should look or what they might expect to see. Something of fear went with their expectancy. 123 177

The Granman nodded, and the pictures began to appear.

"Mati, did you see how they lay the fire?"

"Mother of all Negroes, what great breasts the women have!"

"See them getting the cassava ready! Look, they use the bark for a container!"

"Master Nigger! They know something there in the land of our ancestors. Men know how to weave cloth!"

"See the braids. They are handsome in our ancestral land. The head looks like a carved calabash!"

"Massa Nengere! That's the way to take lumber down! Not one raft at a time, or two, mati. Four at a time. They are workmen there, I tell you! Our ancestors used to say there was wealth there!"

We had usually to tell them what the picture showed, for they had not the habit of looking at these images and would stand to one side, or bend low and look up at the screen. But once we named the picture—"This is the head of a woman," or "This is timber going down to the city," or "This is a path through the bush"—then it was they who began to describe aloud what they saw, exclaiming over the resemblance to their own paths, or to their own manner of burning pots, or to their own way of preparing food.

"Mati, friends," said the Granman, "here deep in the Saramacca bush, all this has come to us. If I were a young man, I would go and see what goes on in the world. I would go to Africa. White man, how much gold does a man need to go to Africa?" After a short silence, he continued this train of thought. "What shall be done? Shall we go see the world? 177 186 177 186 Here is our bush. Our gods are here, and our ancestors come at our call. There is the world—na g'on tapu. There is the land of our old ancestors."

He stopped and covered his face with his hands, remaining deep in thought. But when he spoke again, his voice was calm.

177 123 "Mati, let us see all that the white man has brought. Here deep in the bush, all this has come to us that even children might see. Let us see all."

On the screen appeared a priest. He wore a grass skirt used in a sacred dance, a skirt like the one we had had made for us here on the river, and his face was covered, mask-like, with white clay.

"Ai, mati," exclaimed the Granman, as everyone gasped at what they saw.

The next picture showed the same priest dancing. Two men held his arms.

"When Kromanti gets a man in the ancestral country, it comes so strong that he has to be held in check, friends. So it is here, too."

123 So great was the fascination of the Granman and of all his people with the phonograph that many times we had occasion to feel if it were not for Apanto's curse, and the habit of elastic to stretch, and of glue to be affected by tropical heat, the machine would have overcome for us what distrust there was of our interest in their beliefs—that it might even have changed the decision of the ancestors when they were consulted by priests in Dahomey—a decision which ruled that the white man and his woman were not to be given the secrets of their worship.

[180] Whatever the ancestors had told the men who carried on their heads the sacred plank which was used for consulting the ancestral will, the attitude of the people showed that the white man could not be received in the bush without distrust. The intentions of a white man might be friendly,

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8
Saramacca

yet his findings might in time serve the enemy. We were soldiers bringing toys, as the image of the krutu had suggested. 123

Since life in the bush, for strangers like ourselves, was lived in terms of days, and each day was taken for what it might bring, we were grateful to those gods who had spoken for us, and watched the effect of the ancestral edict.

Before dawn of the day which followed the ceremony of asking the will of the ancestors, men came to counsel with the Granman, and from then onward many men were about the village. The young boys found their toy guns again, and the little girls played on the river bank. The widow who was so susceptible to evil influences no longer appeared in the central clearing with her child on her back, stamping her rice, or drying her peanuts. Her door was shut. Fenekonde was no longer about, for she had gone to the menstrual house, and Tenemi who came to sweep the council house each morning now wore a new obia on a long, twisted, white cord, hung from shoulder to side. She was polite, formal, and she worked fast.

Late that afternoon the obia man who had appeared at the first council meeting with wide stripes of clay came again, and his wife accompanied him. They were the best diviners on the river. From the corner of the council house the large mat which had been standing rolled up was carried into a closed hut, so that he might sit on it, and perform his magic to see what the future held for the destiny of the Saramacca people, and what immediate threat the white man's coming boded. Before leaving for the hut where the mat was prepared the man and woman sat with us in the council house in the company of the Granman. They apparently needed to know our individual names for their task. While we sat there, the white woman absently began to play with the obia about her neck, and this seemed a signal for the other woman to take hers into her hands and begin to mutter an invocation, for the stranger's careless playing appeared to her as the white man's way of casting a spell. 123 791 787 [285]

REBEL DESTINY

123 609 So it went. The Granman was still a considerate host, but he no longer came to regale us with stories. He was disturbed. Again and again we were assured by indirection that our own motives were not doubted. But in what seemed to them our very foolhardiness in coming that distance, and because we had showed no fear, we had proved that we were being made use of by those who would later show enmity toward them.

When men came whose allegiance would go to any man in power, himself or the next man, the Granman would exclaim with all his splendid oratory that the black man's cause never could be that of the white man. To men of his own village, like the captain who took us down the river, he gave instructions that our every wish was to be met.

It was the way of the politician—and it was more than that. He showed in his manner when he was alone with us that he was deeply puzzled. As a man who had learned to trust his judgments of people, his pride would not permit him to grant that his wits had failed him. Then, too, what he had heard from us had fired his imagination. That he was skeptical of the ancestral revelation, we do not believe, but it was possible that, with the Bush Negro concept of the world of the dead, he might have felt that the great ancestors who were consulted remembered their days of slavery, and would, therefore, never consent to the revealing of secrets to the white man.

123 199 It was our last night in the village of the Granman. In the council house more than thirty people were crowded, standing about the table on which we had placed the phonograph. The Granman sat in his folding chair and looked on without addressing himself to any one.

He had asked us to let all his people hear the machine. When we were gone, many people on the river would talk of it. He wanted all of his village to see how it worked.

GRANMAN MOANA YANKUSO

"You will play everything, white man," he had told us earlier. He had been especially anxious that we play the songs we had recorded in Haiti on our way to Suriname. Often he had spoken of these songs to the chiefs at council meetings. 123 177

"White man, tell these friends the words of those songs in that foreign tongue."

He had wanted us to speak before these men the words Legba, a deity to them in the bush as he is in Haiti and in West Africa today, and Loko, and Aida Wedo, and to translate the words of the Haitian twin song we had recorded, and the one to the water god Simbi.

Now he sat in his folding chair and looked on in silence, his face thoughtful. The songs he heard moved him deeply, and his expressive face showed it.

When, in the Haitian songs, the women heard the word "Ago-e" which they recognized, they uttered a shriek. It was one of their many words for ancestors. They cried out again when they heard "Aida Wedo" pronounced, and "Loko." They, too, sang of Aida Wedo, and of Alado, and of Loko. Dan was one of their words for snake.

The white man asked permission of the Granman later to record some songs of the people of the village, and promptly Moana Yankuso addressed a man who stood by. The man was a good singer, and his seketi improvisations had made him a figure on the river. 533 186 177

"Sing for the whites, mati. Let them hear in their far country how our people sing. Let them know that we can sing, that we sing much."

The singer Mapasi sat down and began to sing. His voice was of fine quality, and he was as modest in the midst of all these women with this gift which the gods had given him, as had been the young dancer whom the Granman had summoned to dance for us. He sang in a low voice, and directly into the horn. Accompanying his singing was the hand clapping of the women, which in the small council house was deafening. His recitatives were the longest we had heard on the river, longer by far than those which had

533 surprised us that night at S'ei, and when he paused for a 106 moment the women took up the chorus. From one song to 179 another he went, and the hand clapping grew louder, and the chorus joined in more frequently, often breaking into his recitative, so that there was harmonizing of theme and chorus.

Once or twice the Granman called for a song we had already recorded, in order to give Mapasi a rest.

"Play us something from the lower river, white man. Let them hear their own songs, too, sung by others."

When the excitement of hearing the machine reproduce the song they had just sung had grown less intense, the singers repeated the song the phonograph was reproducing for them, for to listen to music without singing was difficult for them, just as when they sang, they could not but move their feet, though there was scarcely more than room for them to stand one close to the other. But a Bush Negro needs little room for his dancing, so that as the phonograph played their songs for them, they clapped their hands and danced in place. For a short interval, at least, the existence of the whites was forgotten in their pleasure of singing with the machine.

Until late into the night we played our records for them, and they sang for us. Whatever the consequences to the frail records of soft wax, we decided to play as long as they would listen, because of something in the manner of the Granman, something of wistfulness, let us say, and something, perhaps, which went deeper yet, as he sat there—a black Hamlet following a mute soliloquy while he looked on with his clever, perplexed eyes.

"Ai, so it is," he said at last, "and now let us go and get sleep." He rose and the others followed him out of the council house.

II

123 Early the next morning, while the tent on our boat was 182 being finished, the Granman came into the council house
189 with a calabash and a buzzard's feather in his hand. He 579 came up to each of us in turn, and struck with the medicine-touched the palms of our hands, and struck against the calves three times. 123 782

"This is obia," he said simply, and when he was finished, he went out. 789

Our cook knew this obia. It was Opete obia, medicine bearing the name of the sacred buzzard. It was given us that we might have a good journey down the river. 574 609

"Did you see how he was careful to touch the eyes?" our cook pointed out to us. "The Opete gets the eyes when it comes to a person, just like Kromanti goes into the head, and Vodu into the belly." [MOC]

When we went out for a moment, and walked toward our storeroom, we saw the Granman splash water out of a calabash onto the floor and front wall of the house which held our supplies. Was it that our belongings might be safe on our journey down? It was no time for questions, and we asked none.

Women and children again came crowding about the white woman. Though they had been warned not to talk, there was still something of the warm feeling of earlier times which a command did not entirely destroy. Then, too, the order was that the sendoff was to lack no formality. As we stood there, a dog came running down the path. He was on his way to the river. In his mouth was a large ball of something which had been thoroughly charred. It was an offering to the river spirits, perhaps. It might have been less pleasant magic. He had been sent by men who were busy in the ancestral shrine. 123 231 782

When the white woman called attention to the dog, and asked what he held, the women recoiled with amazement that she should have seen the dog at all. Part of the magic might have been, as it was in some formulas we recorded, that he was to pass by invisible to the strangers. But this is conjecture. . . .

The moment before we went down the path to the river, Amasina came up alone, and gave us her hand. She was gracious, and completely at her ease. Whatever was said, she had faith in her god Towenu, who had vouched for our friendship. 123 609

THE ARTIST OF MA'LOBBI

WE WERE recalled to the council house for a final informal krutu with Granman Yankuso and some of his elders before the more formal leave-taking on the river bank. Our boats were being loaded and soon we should be on our way down river. With the elders were the diviners, and our friend, the bassia.

The Granman opened the krutu, greeting and addressing the men who were present, until he turned to us.

"White man, you and your woman came to my village. I held you both well. Now when you are ready to go I give you my grandson for paddler, and the chief of my village for captain of your boat. That is how we do with those who come in friendship."

Through our town man, as was the way of the krutu, we spoke our acknowledgments to him, and our regrets that our visit was ending. Through our man, the last gifts to the tribal head were tendered, and through one of the elders, the ritual expression of thanks was returned us for what we had put before the Granman.

We had two favors to ask of him. For many days we had lived in this house, and had admired the fine carvings which the council house held. In our own country, when we thought of the days on the upper Saramacca River, a piece of carving from this house would give us much pleasure. But of the elaborate carvings we did not wish to deprive him. Might we buy, however, one of the simple benches from the shelf above the door, which the chiefs and we ourselves had used many times?

The one we took down had interested us for its possible ritual significance. On its top a single design was repeated four times. It was a representation of an axe-head, and the clan of Yankuso was the Matchau, the Axe Clan.

The Granman looked at the diviner. "Fa fo do?—What to do?" was his query.

The man he addressed murmured, "T'obi—Trouble."

But it was, after all, only a small and slightly ornamented bench.

"Take it!" the Granman said. "What else is it you ask?"

There was the apinti drum. In the house where objects of all peoples of the earth were brought for men and women to look at, there were none of the fine carvings the Bush Negroes make. When we returned, we would place beside the African and Indian objects which were there those of the Saramacca people. As yet, we had not been able to buy an apinti drum. This one was more beautiful than any we had seen. Could he not sell it to us, so that everyone might know that the finest of drums had come from the council house of Moana Yankuso, Granman of the Saramacca people?

This time he did not hesitate. He smiled, and shook his head.

"No, no, white man," he said, "this drum is not for me to sell. This one I cannot part with, not for all your goods. Down river, when you visit my villages, you can get an apinti which will be beautiful. When you come to the village of Akunkun, and you see Kasanya, ask him to find you an apinti. I will tell Captain Mataibo to leave a message at other villages that you want an apinti. This one no gold can buy."

This was not our first attempt to buy an apinti drum. Nor was it to be the last refusal.

Waiting, we sat in the council house while our supplies were being carried to the canoes and placed in them, until

REBEL DESTINY

123 Mataibo, the head of Yankuso's village, who was entrusted 623 with the safe passage of our boats, came to announce that 574 the men had done loading. Before the morning was yet
609 well advanced we left the house, and with the Granman
[554] under his umbrella, which was the highest of insignia, passed to the river bank.

Our friends were there—the bassia, and Dida, and Amasina, and the Granman's wives and his little grandson, who shouted to us, "Waka bon, ye'e!—Travel well, you hear!" in the best manner of his elders. Again three guns sounded, and once more we were on the river, looking up at the people of these villages of the Pikien Rio who were waving to us from the shore.

502 Going down the river was restful. The enjoyment of the easy motion of the boats was felt in the manner of the paddlers themselves. Now there was no hard poling against the heavy current. As canoes were urged on the two paddlers wielded their long blades in unison, and the dugouts swung downstream in the center of the river, where the current was heaviest. When the murmurs of the rapids ahead were heard, it was but a moment until they grew into a roar, and then, in another, we were through, the man at the front standing up for an instant so that, with a twist of his paddle, he might turn the head of the boat from any threatening rock, while the stern man did not stroke at all, but merely held the craft on the course which was marked where the water tossed itself into foam-capped waves. Sometimes, as we came to rapids where the force of the water was especially strong, or there was a sharp double curve to be negotiated, the two boats would pause for a moment while Mataibo called out to the younger men the course to follow. Then into the falls, and through them, and our bow paddler would carefully rearrange his loin cloth and sit down once more to take up his steady stroking.

123 Opposite one village Sungi came in his boat to meet us, 609 to give and receive a final gift, and say his goodbye. But [431] it was not to the landing place of Dahomey that he took us for this interchange, but to the village of his wife, he told us when we asked him. At one landing place where we 123 stopped for a moment, we could hear the drums sounding 609

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934

the rhythm to the river gods, but the drumming stopped abruptly as word went back along the path that white people had come. Men streaked with pemba came down to the river to look at the Bakra who had visited the village of their Granman.

In the boat, we missed Bayo. The grandson of the Gran- 644 man, who was our bow paddler, we had met but casually 123 before we had started. There had been none of the chances 609 for conversation that had made of Bayo a friend before he and his great-grandfather came to take us to the country of the Granman. Later we would come to know this youth for a pleasant young man, capable and quiet, who was proud to show his ability, and quick to resent the suggestions of our town man in such matters as making a shelter for the night.

"We are children of the bush!" the young man exclaimed sharply. "We know how to make this." And such a good shelter did the paddlers build that men of a near-by village, who passed, stopped and asked that it not be torn down the [485] next morning, as had to be done with shelters erected for the night on the land of a strange clan, but that we should let it stand so that others might use it.

When we asked him questions, however, or made observa- [157] tions on people who passed by in their canoes, he gave us noncommittal replies. Mataibo, the captain of our boat, was even more reserved, though he liked to twit our town man, and in an unofficial capacity would have been amusing. Conversation between the two paddlers, or between them and the two young men who were entrusted with our other boat, was in the clipped, rapid "deep-Saramacca" [197] speech which, in spite of our use of it in conversation at the Granman's village, we still found it difficult to follow when Bush Negroes spoke informally to one another.

As the day wore on, we began to get used to the rapidity 484 with which village after village was passed. Here was the landing place of the one where we had stopped so that

REBEL DESTINY

484 Sedefo might greet his sister. It was almost a half-day's travel, going up river, from Asindopo Lantiwe, yet it was not quite noon, and we were passing it. Here was Hei Kununu, its steep slopes already swinging into sight as we rounded a bend of the river and came through the small rapids above the settlement, and still it seemed as though we had but begun our course down toward our base camp and the railhead. And it was still early in the afternoon when we came to Ma'lobbi.

462 At the landing place, women were about. Much of the work of the Bush Negro woman is at the river's edge, and for strangers like ourselves, passing in a dugout, the presence of women working on the bank was the only sign [361] that here was a landing place, and that farther inland lay a [912] village. To the river they came with their carved clothes [296] beaters, like the one we could see in the hand of the woman who greeted us here at Ma'lobbi, fashioned, as we later learned when she sold it to us, in the shape of a male vodu head on one end, and a female snake on the other. It was at the edge of the water that a woman scraped cooking pots [264] and calabash dishes with sand, and it was here, if it seemed a good day for fishing, that a woman would go wading in the water to rest a cooking pot on the river [206] bottom, and stand silently until an inquisitive school of small fish swam into it when, with a quick jerk, she would bring it up to take out what fish there were. This, aside from the use of small hooks, was the only kind of fishing a woman could do, for the fishing traps were for the use of men. But the cooking pot brought in many small fish to add flavor to a dish of rice.

● 123 609 As we walked into the village, accompanied by one of our younger paddlers, the bassia greeted us. The head of the village was waiting for us, he told us. Paddlers of small boats on their way downstream had spread the word that our visit with the Granman was drawing to an end.

THE ARTIST OF MA'LOBBI

As we walked toward the chief's house we looked about us, seeing again the evidence that here at Ma'lobbi there were men who knew how to carve wood, seeing why it was that our paddlers had spoken of it as a place for fine work. 322 531

"Ai, at Ma'lobbi they are good carvers."

Here was a house with its doorposts elaborately carved; there a beautifully worked rice tray, lying where it had been left by the woman who owned it, until she should need it later in the day for winnowing her rice; farther along a great bench stood, with the designs cut through in a fluid progression over top and sides. [342]

The captain was in the lower portion of his two-story house when we entered. Several of the older men, who had been present at our earlier visit and who remembered our gifts of tobacco, came to join us, as the news of our arrival spread through the village. Soon the women were standing about, motioning to the white woman to come with them. 123 609

The house in which the captain received us was larger and more imposing than the others in the village. It was his gudu-wosu—his treasure house. Its lower portion, where we sat in conversation with him, was where he worked. Above, where none of his wives might enter, his wealth was stored. Here he kept the pieces he had carved, and from here drew from time to time the presents he gave his wives. Here lay the wealth which his nephews would inherit when he died. But below, in the partially open shelter, was his workshop where he fashioned rough logs into stools and paddles, combs and food stirrers, trays and canoe seats, and all manner of objects which he and his women used in their daily routine. 342 556 [408] [392]

All about the walls hung tools. There were machetes, whose sharp blades showed a reflection of fire from the sun which slanted on the wall. We had never seen so many of these bush knives on display, nor, for that matter, such an array of tools anywhere on this river. From projecting boards or nails driven into posts hung several compasses, their hinged arms sharp-pointed, so that the craftsman might describe the perfect circles on the wood he carved. 342 353 412 [413]

532 of design which only the carver himself could name, or 501 someone who knew the symbolism of the art tradition in 302 which this paddle was carved.

During our first visit to these people we had been com-532 pletely balked by the unwillingness of the Bush Negroes to 123 discuss their carvings. In answer to our questions we got delightful evasions, but with the coming of Bayo to our base camp, carrying his crudely carved stool, we learned enough to make it clear that there was a great deal of symbolism in the carving of the Bush Negroes and, as our knowledge of these symbols increased, it became increasingly easier to get descriptions of carvings in terms of the meanings and values these held for the Bush Negroes themselves.

532 Now, sitting in the workshop of one of the finest of Saramacca carvers, the captain of Ma'lobbi, we traced those parts of the design which we knew, mentioning their significance to the men who were about.

"There are two snakes," we said, pointing to the realistically entwined bodies which formed the upper portion of the hand grip, ending at the top with recognizable heads, and with mouths held open, which supported symmetrical figures of the top of the paddle.

"Aboma snakes," one man said, verifying to himself our statement.

"These," we continued, "are the teeth of the great lizard—bamba tande—and this part below the hand-grip reaching part way toward the blade is a carved chain, and you call it moni mo' muye—money is more than woman."

The men laughed. "Awa, so it is. The man knows about Saramacca carving."

And one of them took up the explanation, pointing out the two symmetrical figures which were posed opposite each other above the mouths of the snakes. "These are monkeys. They are women monkeys. No, don't call them just keskesi, their name is makaka," he went on, giving us the name of the species, when we spoke the word for monkey. "See the ears, the heads, the breasts. Ai, I know you see them. They told you much on the upper river." 532

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934

Saramacca

As he finished speaking, the captain returned with his wife. Excited comments greeted him. 532 123

"The white man here knows tembe—carving."

"He knows lizard's teeth design."

"He knew that this was the aboma snake, and the makaka."

The old man was skeptical. "A so? Was it true?" Let the Bakra show him.

We repeated the lesson we had just learned to the captain and his wife who owned the paddle. They listened thoughtfully. Then the woman spoke.

"White man, I have used this paddle for many years. I do not like to sell it. But you care for it. You are a man who knows carving. In your country you tell me other men know carving. They will look at it, and see it is beautiful, and they will know it is from the Saramacca. Take it, and pay me what you like." [439]

There were other carvings which we bought—a large rice-carrying tray, and some food stirrers, one of which was especially fine, made as it was of two small paddles with miniature blades, the handles joined by a wooden ring-chain, and all of this carved out of one piece of wood. 532 439

Few things on the river seemed to the outsiders more characteristic of the life of the Saramacca people than these carvings which were met with everywhere, however small the village, however poor the home. When the seasonal rains came, men incised their desires on wood, which later told the legend of procreation, or safety on the river, or a curse invoked against a woman if she proved unfaithful; or something of humor, such as a man bidding for a girl's favor, and she refusing him, while up above intertwined were a man and woman, symbolizing the ultimate consummation with the proper suitor. 532

532 The cult of fertility came to the Suriname bush from 831 Africa. Deepseated today in this civilization, it is not strange that it should be invoked again and again in the carvings, that men and women in sexual congress, and animals in the act of reproduction should dominate the art motifs, and in particular those carvings which men make for their women.

532 The symbolism is known to all on the river though, as we have indicated, a gifted artist might play with his medium, and even give his own name to what he had designed. Evidences of nontraditional playing with technique were, to be sure, not met with often, but one or two instances stand out. One that was especially striking was a hinged folding stool, fashioned after a bench seen in the [532 199] city, and decorated in traditional fashion, where the problem of decorating unfamiliar surfaces was met.

Bayo could take up many of our photographs of pieces, 532 acquired during our first visit and brought here into the 173 bush to show the natives how their pieces were exhibited,
177 and describe the symbols to us which made up the carvings. There was one which interested him especially. He used to sit with the photograph in his hand, running his fingers over the glossy surface, as though he felt if he continued doing it long he would actually feel the texture of the wood which was so clearly imaged.

532 "Everything shows. Here's a crack, see?" Then his hands touched one motif after another. "This and this are women, and these are men. A man and woman to one side. and a man and woman facing them. It's like having the tray here, white man." The small designs close to the rim of the tray, facing each other, were the children to be [845] born of these unions. "This is a boy, and this a girl. That is for both women to make twins."

We were looking over his shoulder as he explained the symbols, but still could not distinguish in the symbols to the side which represented the male child and which the female.

REBEL DESTINY

313 416 533 [539] "You have come to go, come to go far, come to go far to bring the wood to the water. But it is long, it is far, to the river. Thank you, friends."

Then the song was taken up by the workers and, with each rhythmic measure, the great piece of lumber went farther through the jungle on its way to the river. When he had chanted for us the greeting to the men, Bayo began to sing a song relating to men's casual exploits with women and, as he finished the song, he laughed. "White [831] man, if you came with us, you would hear what songs the men make up about women!"

126 The phonograph had delighted Bayo from the first. When Apanto had summoned the spirit of his obia to fight the machine, Bayo had watched. When the white man's glue had repaired the broken belt, and the hot sun had made the machine "walk" once more, Bayo had approved.

"The machine is not weak," he had said. "I will sing for it."

And sing for it he did.

But the curse of Apanto still troubled the machine, for up the river and down there had been difficulty with it. Often when there was a particularly good song to be recorded, the belt would give, the machine would fail the white man. The story of the prowess of Apanto had gone up the river with the Gankwe paddlers, and when the machine stopped, heads nodded, and we would catch the word "obia" among the murmurs of the bystanders.

126 123 782 796 Bayo thought, it seemed, that the machine's proud spirit was by this time properly chastened and, since twice the machine had refused to work while he was singing into it, twice had made him stop the song and its drum accompaniment, he decided to take matters into his own hands.

"White man," said Bayo, shortly after our return from up the river, "I will help the spirit of the machine. I will

1: Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8
Saramacca

call the great gods. Apanto's spirit is strong, but Bayo has strong gods, too."

The machine was made ready for him, and Bayo sat down on a convenient box, his head bent over the tumao drum which we had acquired and which his fingers could scarce ever be near but that they played on it.

"It is not the right drum," he said. "You should have an apinti for me to speak to the gods. But I will try it with this one. Tomorrow I will go up the river to Djamungo. I know a man who has an apinti. You will give me money, and I will buy it for you. But now I will speak on the tumao."

He began the irregular tapping which we had learned to identify as the drum language. With one hand he carried the message, while with the other he played irrelevant motifs which served to confound anyone not initiated and leave him, as it left us, who had worked out some of the general principles on which this drum language was based, utterly unable to interpret it or to tell which were the significant elements.

"The great gods will look after your machine now, if they will listen to the tumao."

The next day Bayo went upstream to get us the apinti we so desired. He was not successful, but the gods had listened to him, when he had invoked them on the tumao, for Bayo's ministrations ended all trouble with our recalcitrant phonograph. Bayo indeed had strong spirits!

As the days went on, and record after record was put on the turntable, and with its tracing of songs, or examples of Bush Negro speech, or fragments of the rhythms that called the various gods, was taken off and carefully put into its felt-lined box, Bayo visibly swelled with pride. This was his doing! With his strong spirits he had called the great gods! He was young, and he had not spoken on the proper drum, but they had listened to him! So his thoughts went, and so he would repeat them to us.

His interest in the phonograph was intensified the more he saw of it, and he sang and spoke and drummed, either 787 The next day was our last among the Saramacca people. Bayo came to us early to help with the packing. He was apparently none the worse for his seizure and, as he worked, we could tell from his manner how release had come to him and how the tension we had noticed the past few days had left him.

On his body were no marks. His mouth showed no cuts where the glass was bitten off and chewed. When we told him about the glass, he knew nothing of it. Had he not known about this eating of glass, he might well have doubted our word, for when we examined his lips and palate and tongue, not even a scratch showed.

"What did you drum last night, Bayo?"

"When, before the obia came to me?"

He remembered nothing after he had leaped from the improvised apinti to run into the bush.

"Not when you drummed apinti, but when you came back here and took the tumao to the river."

"I don't remember. Did I do that?"

609 789 Despite the early hour we had to leave in order to catch the weekly train for the coast, the boats of our friends began to be seen off the landing place as they came to say their farewells. The good woman Tita, whom they called Mother Snake behind her back, was the first to arrive. She walked slowly up from the river bank, pipe in mouth, a pot on her head, and one in each hand. The pots held obias which, she said, were made especially for us, to give us great powers in our own land—one to keep us safe from the ghosts of those we had wronged; one to guard us against the acts of the unfriendly living; one to make all those from whom we sought advantage "love" us.

[B76] [480]

123 Sedefo's younger wife came with her child on her back to collect whatever tin cans were about, and some gift for the child when it wakened, knowing that something was always given to children in the white man's camp. With her, too, came Sedefo's eldest son, the one who had already danced Kromanti. 173

[854]

"White man," he said in a soft confidential voice that was like his father's, "you gave the Granman gifts. Lower river chiefs are big men, too." This was a prelude to the suggestion that the Gankwe chief would not take it amiss if we sent him a pith helmet.

From the village where we had seen Bayo possessed the night before, Tenye and her two brothers, Yamati and Sabape, came to say goodbye, and with them was their "father" Semiye, Abane's brother. He was to have been "captain" of our dugout, but several days before he had told us he would be unable to go with us to the railhead. As haltingly he gave us his reasons, we wished that white men's lives were not keyed to railroad and boat and university schedules—wished, too, that it were possible to give a happier turn to the drama which bush destiny seemed ready to stage for Semiye.

Semiye was as slender and graceful as Abane, that superb dancer whom Yamati and Sabape, sons by different wives, wished so much to emulate. The passion which Abane had for dancing, Semiye knew to flare up within himself when he was at work. No man on the lower river could send a heavily loaded boat up the rapids faster than Semiye, and when he went fishing or lumbering, the catch he brought back was large, his timber rafts were valuable. He had not always felt this drive for work. When he and his village friend Abai were boys together, Abai had been the one to suggest games, to make decisions, to show courage in leading girls down side paths into the bush. When the time came for Semiye to go through the Kromanti initiation, he could not do the feats which Abai did so easily and with such bravado. Later, when the courage of a man was his, he was ashamed to ask for permission to go through the initiatory rites that were intended to test boys, and so Semiye was one of the few men on the river who was not a Kromanti man. 159

533 faces. The drummers stop to tune to the desired pitch, driv-
796 ing in the pegs with the back edge of a bush-knife. Then they resume, rattling out a sharply insistent tempo. Women begin to sway. Some of them start a plaintive jungle song. The drums never stop.

796 A woman disengages herself from the crowd and enters
535 the open space. She bends forward from the waist at a right angle. Her arms form a circle beyond her head, saffron palms outward. She sways from the hips, her torso contorted with sinuous suggestion. Then her feet on the bare earth rap out the tempo that the brown fingers of the men are drumming on the dried skin. The others begin patting juba.

It is a false start. The woman interrupts her dance to criticize the orchestra for not playing in her mood. The crowd is not yet possessed.

Dodo, the woman bosseia, or boss, goes about urging the women to begin. Meanwhile the bahkra slips through the 123 crowd pouring out drinks of high wine to add to the dark
782 hilarity of the occasion. Always before drinking they will 273 spit on the ground a libation to the gods. A mother gives the rum to her seven-year-old child, who does not flinch from the burning potion.

A new tempo. Three little girls, slim in their nudity, enter the central space. The oldest is about eleven. They stand with their backs to us and begin the bandamba dance. The evening is on.

Standing still in the firelight, hands behind their heads, they arch their loins and raise their buttocks up and down.

Paramaca

The small Paramacca tribe does much less in the way of 322 wood carving than do the others of the Djukas. This was evidenced by the few pieces we were able to collect and was also known to be a fact by the Aucaner Bush Negroes who accompanied us to the Paramacca district. The motifs dis-
[184] played upon the articles collected were practically identical with those found on Aucaner pieces.

123 In fairness to the Paramaccas, however, it must be mentioned from our experience among other tribes that collecting is much facilitated when one is cordially known. On a second or third expedition one is able to collect many times more specimens than upon a first introduction. The Bush Negroes are at first shy as a rule and not anxious to part with their belongings.

184 The tribes do not fraternize much with each other. Some 619 travellers report that the Aucaner and Boni tribes feel them-
609 selves superior to the others because they have less contact with the white man. If this is true, we cannot report any personal observation of it. A traveller has no more difficulty among them than among the Saramaccaner people. Some 628 ill-feeling between the Aucaners and Saramaccaners dates
609 back to the slave revolt, when the former observed their peace treaty so scrupulously as even to aid the slave-owners in re-

754 More than one person may be involved in the black magic [695] that brings about death, and the burial ceremony may indicate several persons as guilty. This magic is similar to that employed by other primitive peoples. A spirit or soul resides [774] in each living person; if this spirit is destroyed, the person will die. A man can cause the death of his enemy by summoning the spirit out of his enemy's body with herbs and charms and incantations; the spirit can then be shot with a gun. Or else he may procure some of his enemy's nail parings or hair, or any object of close personal association. He should also know his enemy's birthday and secret name. Rites are performed and, as a result, the enemy dies. His spirit has been slain. Magic, therefore, consists of the use of rituals for the purpose of compelling supernatural powers to do one's bidding.

● 123 For this reason many natives object to being photographed. 774 The black camera, they believe, if pointed at them and 822 clicked, will draw out their souls. The person owning the camera can then mutilate or destroy their souls at will. On our first expedition among the Bush Negroes all attempts at photography were difficult. When the attempt was made to take a native's picture the black would cry out, "No puru me!"—"Don't draw me out!" They firmly believed that the photographer was trying to draw out their spirits for magical purposes. On the second expedition, returning to the same villages with the developed photographs, we showed them to the natives and watched their reaction. The Negroes examined the snapshots curiously, turning them around, not them, they broke into broad grins and were mightily pleased. 822

After that most of them readily consented to being photographed.

A woman was suspected of causing by witchcraft the death 683 of the late Granman, Amekti, of the Aucaner tribe. She was 766 severely beaten and was not allowed to attend the ceremony 643 of Broko Day (breaking day), the time when mourning is broken.

Broko Day is held four or five months after the death of 766 the Granman. Game is hunted and cassava cake prepared 643 for many days prior to the great feast. It is a time of great festivity; there is dancing, singing, and general merrymaking. At this time the Songai, the Pekein play, and the Susa dances are held. The participants are generously smeared with pemba dotee and they wear costumes and decorations which are not seen at any other time. Then, as many of the tribe as is possible gather in the village of the erstwhile Granman, and the feast lasts for about a week. Dancing and feasting continue night and day. At this time the ageedah drum—six to eight feet tall—is played, as well as [534] the smaller instruments already referred to. Toward the end of the ceremony, the hair and nails of the corpse are buried, a new Granman is inaugurated, and the deceased ruler is relegated to the position of an ancestor. Prayers may then ascend heaven-ward to him.

Introduction

114 After having left the plantation life in the colony of Surinam, 121 I went back there in the beginning of 1851 with the plan, as the [101] result of an agreement reached by me with a Belgian firm, to send shiploads of wood to the motherland and Belgium.

[123] I undertook my journeys to the Bush Negroes for this purpose and visited most of their dwelling places, something that entailed effort and great cost, since I distributed ample presents everywhere for the purpose of thereby acquiring their confidence, which they do not readily grant to Whites.

123 At my very first encounter I took the precaution of politely
[576] greeting each one of them without distinction and shaking their
[177] hands, a practice taken over by them from the Whites in the most recent times, which assures them of a feeling of good-will such as they experience among themselves but never from a White.

[352] I spoke to them frankly and in a friendly way, sat next to them in their huts on their low stools, and partook of their meals. In short -- I lived for a while without reserve or fear among them, paying amply for everything that I enjoyed in this way or that.

[273] I also permitted them, whenever they wanted to use any of my store of beverages, such as wine, beer, brandy, and gin, to ask me for it quietly, so that I would be able to order my servants to offer them what they had requested. In addition I supplied /2/ them amply with dram (1), herbs, and lead and, in order to show generosity to the women as well, frequently gave them and the children biscuits, cake, or some coins.

1. A kind of inland rum (sugar spirits).

[121] In the beginning they were very reserved and mistrustful, but gradually, and after some difficult years, became more open with me, so that I, adapting myself entirely to their practices, was able to carry out my plan to have the necessary wood processed by them.

114 Much wood was ordered by me, and all that I received was 439 paid for according to the actual value and in accordance with a concluded agreement.

123 I lent several of them money, in spite of already having been misled and cheated by them frequently, and continued to treat them amicably, to give them articles of clothing, and, indeed, sometimes for bad wood, which they tried to force upon me among the good pieces, even though I noticed this, I nonetheless continued to pay them decently just as for good wood, whereby I made them realize that I wanted to do business in an accomodating way.

So I learned more and more of their way of life, customs, and habits, respected these in everything, and finally succeeded in leading them back from various bad habits and shortcomings and to observe a more honest way of dealing with me. I was even able to bring it about so that I enjoyed a blind trust and in return was able to give my complete trust to some.

114 Since the beginning of 1857 I have been the owner of a 439 sawmill with which the previous owner could do little or nothing because he always lacked the logs needed for the sawing of boards, whereas I, on the other hand, receive so much wood from the Bush Negroes that it is frequently too much for me.

123 Many of them who are not even my regular workmen refuse
439 to sell their wood on the plantations and bring it all the way to my sawmill located near the town, because, so they contend, they also want to share in the privileges which the other Bush Negroes enjoy in accordance with the agreement concluded with me.

123 Most of the Bush Negroes know me, if not in person, at least by name.

I have also had to promise them that I will bring up my son /3/ so that later he will be able to take my place and deal with their descendants in the same manner as I am now doing with them, while they, too, drill their children to conduct themselves toward my son as the parents do toward me. In this way they want to make any split between my family and theirs impossible, even in the future.

● 123 In connection with what I have already said concerning an agreement concluded by me with them, I regard it as not inappropriate to give here a sketch of the manner in which I was requested to enter into this agreement with them, and what happened before they came to an agreement with me in such an extraordinary manner.

After I had already dealt with them for some time in an increasingly open manner and my journeys to visit them had become more frequent, some of the chiefs confidentially notified me that, although they had already come to know me over a considerable period of time and regarded me as a good and honest man, since they had experienced better treatment from me than from many others with whom they had previously had dealings, they could nonetheless not simply assume that I would always remain the same and that possibly I had completely different intentions with regard to them which they might later regret. For this reason many of them had still been reluctant to commit themselves definitely to work for me. In order to do away completely with this mistrust among them, I continued to stay with them in the bush for a considerable time and always demonstrated that I had honest intentions with regard to them, until after a few weeks, as a result of the open-handed giving away of food and drink, I noticed that I was short of everything and was forced to send my vessel to Paramaribo in order to fetch what was needed, whereby I found myself completely alone among them.

123 675 [622] When thus, after the departure of my vessel, I spent a number of hours talking about my plans with the headman of the village, called Sparri Passi (1), in his hut, he strongly advised me to conclude at this time the agreement customary among them. I agreed and immediately requested him to accompany me via a bush path to the nearest village, Manjaondro (2), in order to the Bush Negroes, in order to notify all the Aukaners /Aucaners/ /4/ in that district that I, sojourning entirely by myself among them, wished to see them all together so as to have the opportunity, in the place to be determined by them and in accordance with their manner and customs, to take the oath of agreement to remain at all times faithful to one another.

Three days were spent in deliberations and consultations among various captains, council members, and elders, before I could succeed in obtaining their consent for this.

[527] Finally, however, it was decided to have the agreement ceremony take place on Friday (a day that is holy among them), when the sun reached its midday point.

On this day, around eleven o'clock in the forenoon, one of the oldest and most influential among them took a clean teacup, put in it some dram mixed with herbs, and took a few finely ground plants which he moistened with river water and squeezed over the cup.

I and seven of the most important people then had three small slashes cut into the right hand with a razor. The blood from this, having been taken up with a little flock of cotton, was also squeezed into the cup, and the cotton washed out with river water and wrung out so often that no more signs of blood showed in it. The one and the other having been thoroughly stirred in the cup, the latter was placed on a stool in the open air. At twelve o'clock exactly, a great number of men, women, and children gathered around the stool on which the cup stood, by the side of which they placed me.

Three gunshots were fired. Among all those present a profound silence reigned, whereupon the cup was offered, first to me and then to the other seven persons whose blood was mingled with mine, in order to drink a draught from the contents, whereupon it had to go around to all the men so that, however little, they would 675 drink something from it or merely smell it; indeed! when it was empty, the remaining men who had not yet drunk from it or smelled it had to lick it.

I was then embraced by the headmen and many of the women; they flung the right arm over my left shoulder and the left arm under my right arm and rested their heads for a moment against my right cheek.

[273] After the conclusion, while much dram was drunk, general exuberant gaiety prevailed, and only then was /5/ I told that they had purposely cut me first and given me a drink first in order to ascertain whether I trusted them completely or whether, so entirely by myself, I would have been afraid to submit to their wishes and to do what they demanded of me; they assured me that if I had refused to be the first, none of them would have wanted to conclude the agreement with me.

If, therefore, I had not conducted myself as they wished, I would have missed out completely on this alliance which was so highly important and profitable for me.

466 On the following day many of them came to tell me that 313 their work places on the river Cottica supplied little of the kinds of wood that had been pointed out by me for processing, but they declared themselves ready to go and process them immediately for me on the Upper Commewijne river, where they were sure of finding richer forests.

Since the last-named river was closed to them at that time by a governmental decree, I made a request for access in the year [361] 1854, in order to be able to work with them at this river. This was granted to me, and since then a few hundred Bush Negroes have been staying there and have laid out dwellings and croplands, while they continuously, with unexampled industry, process the wood needed by me and deliver it to the sawmill.

766 times, no noticeable movement has been observed, the answer is 787 negative, and one proceeds with the corpse all the way to the end of the crowd ranged on either side. Everyone endeavors to be present on such occasions in order not to cast any blame upon himself or to arouse suspicion.

If, however, the answer is in the affirmative, then one asks whether the right person or a close relative of his is here; if the answer to this is also affirmative, one proceeds to inquire about the degree of blood relationship until one has finally discovered who the actual person is. Since this happens in the presence of so many persons as witnesses, it is regarded as valid proof, and the corpse is buried. However incomprehensible and impossible this may appear, this procedure is nonetheless actually practiced con-[123] stantly among the Bush Negroes. I have been an eyewitness several times.

695 A few days later the person indicated, in case he was not [693] present at the above-mentioned inquiry, is tracked down, if necessary fetched forcibly, and brought before the governor or the chief, who questions him in the presence of the captains or the council members. In case of denial, he is offered something to drink, which, however, he will not accept if he is guilty, since it has become apparent that whoever drinks it with a pounding or uneasy heart frequently manifests immediate symptoms, such as [681] vomiting, swelling, chlorosis, and so forth. If the person has been prepared to brave this (in spite of the conviction of his misdeed), he is put to death by means of the most horrible and unheard-of tortures, whereas in the case of confession he is forced with the whip to reveal whom else he has poisoned during his life.

696 All the relatives of the poisoned person are then called in 682 order to be present at the punishment and to pull on his ears with all possible force by means of a pair of pincers, one after [262] another. Subsequently a bowl with pinda blaf is set before him, in which a turtle must be boiled, as well as a tomtom made of ripe bananas. All this, after all, is regarded as the tastiest food. He is then /19/ again severely beaten with a whip, whereupon he must eat what has been prepared for him, and immediately afterwards

765 Thereupon follows a second, who just like the first has a calabash in hand, but this time filled with spirituous liquor, and from time to time sprinkles a few drops of it on the ground, in token of the fact that on this occasion, too, by means of drink, they think of the deceased with joy.

Then they again return to the dwelling, where all are gathered, and celebrate an enjoyable night with song and dancing until daybreak.

Chapter XII

Character, Virtues and Vices

157 The Bush Negro, as I have already said above, has a great [577] deal of respect for old age and for distinguished persons; with respect to their closest relations they are honest, which they can- [461] not pride themselves on otherwise. In their ordinary affairs they [609] are not lazy, but work tirelessly whenever it is necessary. With respect to strangers they are generous and obliging, all the more [152] when they can assume that they may claim reward. Jealousy, [784] envy, and malice are their greatest vices. Concerning many matters they have an antipathy that they call trefoe (treef). Thus, [781] for instance, one will eat something, the other not. Also they are very superstitious in small matters, to which they cling all the way down to distant generations; they call that obia (literally translated, bewitchment, magic).

262 An Auca girl who through attachment to my wife and me [123] has already lived with us in the town for fully five years, because since the death of her husband, who was one of my most trusted [589] workers, she did not want to attach herself to another, and who performed all kinds of housework for us, carries her trefoe of not eating any unscaled fish so far that she will not even cook her food on a fire where there is a pot in which an unscaled fish was previously prepared. I know another one who uses no milk and also does not eat meat of any kind (with the exception of bacon), unless it be game, and then it must be prepared by her, on the grounds that everything is prepared with butter and that butter comes from 123 As a White one must enjoy great confidence among them if one wants to obtain permission to witness such solemnities. Never shall I forget the spectacle when I was present at such a festival; it took place from seven o'clock in the evening until two o'clock in the morning. During all this time I found myself in a very unpleasant state of tension. Although I found myself far from the part inhabited by us (namely the town of Paramaribo) in the deep forest alone in their midst, I was nevertheless not afraid because of my positive conviction of my influence over them. I was not at ease that night, however, and were it not for the fact that I did not want to hinder them or show them that I did not feel at ease at this solemnity, I would have departed, however eager I was to see the result of the movements. I remained, however, until all had come to an end, both for the distinction that fell to me for /23/ having been allowed to be present there and in order not to offend the trust put in me, while to myself I rejoiced at being able later to give to others the description of this solemnity.

Chapter XIV

Language, Odo, and Narratives (1)

538 1. Odo, proverb; narratives are called fori, and tales anansi-tori.

197 Their language is the Negro English customarily spoken here, but in a singsong tone with a peculiar accent.

195 As proof that during the conversation they understand you well, they constantly repeat "Yaa!"

551 When a child is born among them, aside from a general name they also give it a day name, in which for them special meanings are concealed, for instance:

648 in hiding a significant advantage for the colony, since the lack of workers in agriculture makes itself felt with increasing urgency.

202 Accordingly they promised to satisfy my wish by putting
● [123] up the signs customary among them, which would make known to those in hiding my wishes to acquaint them with the good news.

In order to let those in hiding know that they were requested to come out of the forest, they go to work in the following manner.

202 They tie white and blue, also perhaps white and black
822 patches of cotton half an ell long and three thumbs wide in Rhineland fashion to the upper branches of the trees, starting in the deepest part of the forest and progressing to the river /31/ bank. The little flags placed highest are of a dark color, while the patches tied progressively lower toward the river are white.

Those in hiding, who stay in the district and cross through the forest to hunt, discover these signs and see by them that there is something going on; either that others in hiding want to establish contact with them or that they have to fear danger.

The manner in which the signs are attached to the trees makes them understand that if they go more deeply into the forest there will be born for them a dark and dangerous future, whereas, if they can decide to go to the river bank they can walk a white, that is, a bright path and that, following the little white flags, they will find people who either want to make common cause with them or wish to give them important information.

202 Since these persons in hiding are constantly afraid of 152 surprise attack or deception, trust in these signs is not always im-
648 mediately established and thus at first only some of them go down with cunning and caution. When they come into the more inhabited districts, they watch and investigate everything that they wish to know; frequently this investigation extends all the way to Paramaribo. Now the Bush Negroes thought that if they followed their custom in this it would be clear to them why these signs had been placed in the bush and that as a result of these they would very quickly become acquainted with the declared amnesty.

202 I must add here also that in fact many fugitives or 648 persons in hiding later came out of the forests, among whom must

577 all, toward one another as fellow tribesmen they are very honest and trust one another's word. Frequently it happens that among them one family leaves the camp to go on a journey or else is absent for some other reason, and that it must leave behind unfenced the cultivated land planted with rice, tubers, bananas, bakoven, and sugar cane. But never will another of them steal any of that. And similarly their dwellings are open, since the entrance is not closed off by any door; upon their departure they leave one thing and another in it, but they will never miss any-
626 thing upon their return. Certainly contributing to this is the circumstance that in the vicinity of everybody's property there is a sign or idolatrous image, which they call obia, to which great power is ascribed, and for those who might want to commit dishonest acts, the legend can be observed, as for the European:
784 "Beware of mantraps." The fear that they have of these obias is not unjustified, for if it should happen at any time that misuse of trust took place, then the culprit, however long it takes, upon discovery will not escape the revenge of the deceived, revenge which frequently consists in the administering of secret remedies whereby terrible diseases and sufferings, if not death, come about.

152 They are very concerned about the faithfulness of their 837 wife or wives, /35/ for the Bush Negro is very jealous, whereas the wives cannot be exonerated of being susceptible to seduction. Accordingly it happens among them more than once that marital fidelity is violated.

184 Of the various tribes, the Aucaners are the most [177] civilized, but over against that also the craftiest, which can be [157] attributed to their more frequent intercourse with Europeans.
[161] Among their tribes they are the most powerful, and their numerical strength is estimated at 4,000 to 5,000 souls.

● 123 According to the declaration of the Bush Negroes, no White has previously enjoyed the trust and attachment that I experienced from them. However, secretively they always conduct themselves toward the Whites, with respect to me they make an exception. If there is something secret among them that I should like to know, they will, upon my request, immediately and without any diffidence communicate it to me.

•123 466 Also, I am led to believe that for me they cherish a more than general respect, since already for ten years now they have been faithful workers for me, a privilege to which no inhabitant in this colony other than myself can lay claim.

123 778 [761] A family among them, whose head recently died -- according to their statements, through poisoning, which misdeed is supposed to have taken place out of envy, since I gave him preference above others, which he deserved on account of his faithfulness and industry -- has built a hut in the vicinity of its idol signs, in which they placed a crude image cut out of cedar-

[237] wood and painted with white paint. Beside that image they placed a little table and on it laid a number of quill feathers from the pouwies (1), a little bottle with black liquid, symbolizing ink,

1. A pheasant, the Crax alector L.

as well as some slips of paper. Near this little table they dug a number of steps into the ground, and at the lowermost step they made a gutter that runs in the direction of the river. Now when they have a festival with dancing and they want to pay respect to me, they place near it a number of children who constantly pour water brought in jugs, which, flowing down the steps into the gutter, streams riverward. While this ceremony takes place, songs in my honor are sung by the festive crowd.

[822] [829] Now the image, according to their conception, is supposed to be a representation of me, /36/ the white color the sign that I am a white, while the quills, paper, and ink are the attributes of the whites' higher civilization, the streaming water that I stem from the colonists who have come here from across the sea.

123 589 The wife of the headman referred to above came to me in the town shortly after the death of her husband and remained to choose my household as her permanent residence, to which I gladly consented. Faithful and considerate, she performs not only a great many household services, but even anticipates in this respect the wishes of my wife, and out of love for us refuses any monetary compensation.

614 The Aw.B.2, on whom we could not get sure information because this very closed group did not cooperate willingly with [123] the inquiry, appear to be in a very similar situation, with the difference that their genealogy goes back much farther in time and they no longer remember the origin of this fraction nor the [984] circumstances which tied its fate to that of the Aw.B.1. This group apparently has a separate kunu.

613 614 582 The Awara Bakka lineage is in a special situation from the point of view of exogamy, for not only are there marriages between one fraction and another, but there are two within the same fraction and between relatively near relatives. Thus this group, [183] without openly rejecting the law of exogamy, does not attach the same importance to it as do the others.

613 The Afi lineage. This lineage was founded by Afi, wife of a man from Papaïston, who came to live with him. Like the [101] Toïna lineage, she had come from the small tribe called Bakabuchi which lived in Surinam. However, the Afi and Toïna lineages are not of the same matrilineal origin and the present members of each of the two small groups have no common worship. All of [571] them have lost every tie with their original tribe, and their social life is entirely dependent on that of the Boni group which has taken them in.

[621] Afi settled near Kormotibo. This site is abandoned by her descendants who live, most of them, in Asisi, the rest in Kormotibo.

The lineage has lost every tie with its group of origin. [619] Nevertheless, it is assumed that if one of them wanted to go back there, on proving his relationship, he would take up all his rights again and could demand a site for making his clearings.

613 621 571 /28/ The process of assimilation which took place for the AW.B.3 did not come into play for Afi's descendants with respect to the Papaïston lineage. They are regarded as a separate family group, insufficient in number to constitute a social unit and whose members are placed under the authority of the heads of the villages

125 In spite of the relations of trust developed between the Boni
[123] and ourselves in the course of the work carried out together during four long missions, we were able to take this census only progressively and indirectly, by using simultaneously the following procedures:

—Study of the genealogy of the groups, going up from woman to woman up to the founding ancestress, then going back down from her. These genealogical tables, some of which extend [166] over nine generations and include more than 160 persons, brought
[136] to light a certain number of temporarily absent people and individuals who lived away from the villages, isolated in the middle of the Creole gold miners, but continuing to make up part of their group; they also brought to light a certain number of young people and orphan children taken in by distant relatives who would not have spoken about them directly. But on this point, gaps remain;

[126] —Detailed plan of the villages and interrogation of the village heads as to the persons living in each house;

—Interrogation of the women about their dead and surviving children;

—General verification with the help of perfectly trustworthy informants who possessed a thorough knowledge of the genealogy of the groups.

The census, stopped on January 1, 1958, covered 811 per-[162] sons of whom 667 /41/ were from the villages of the French bank and 144 from the Surinam bank (Kotika). As for the latter, we [165] questioned them individually when they came to the French bank, especially when they came to attend the end of mourning festivities in Boniville in October, 1957. The Kotika census is less
[128] exact than that of the French villages, and in addition we were [126] not able to make a plan of the village. For this reason we have not reproduced it in the present work, where only the corresponding genealogical table appears.

114 of the true foundresses and the circumstances of the formation of 613 the lineages (invaluable information which must still have been present in the memory of the old men at the end of the last century) are lost forever.

128 In order to simplify the drawing up of the genealogical 601 tables, we have eliminated individuals deceased before adult age.

128 Names. To insure the necessary anonymity to our informants
551 without diminishing the accuracy of the statement, we have 601 changed a large part of the names. The fictitious names under 162 which individuals are designated in the genealogical tables as
[101] well as in the inventory of the population were mostly taken from the Djuka, who belong to the same cultural and linguistic group; in other cases, in order "to figure" the census we used a more complex process consisting in exchanging the names of two persons. Children younger than 15 are designated simply by an initial (1).

[648] 1. It is particularly disagreeable to the Refugee Blacks to have their children's names known by Europeans, with the exception of [123] the doctor. All systematic questioning on this subject runs into clear hostility.

114 Despite these precautions, we recommend that travelers
609 provided with this work make no allusion in front of the Boni to the facts related in it; the Refugee Blacks are very proud and cannot allow an outsider to penetrate forthwith into their family privacy. That would provoke lively hostility toward the indiscreet person and would hinder later work.

114 The table of correspondence between true and fictitious
128 names is held at the disposal of sociologists who may wish to conduct studies on the Boni.

685 The Djuka had killed the tapir which had sunk. Pressed for [224] time, he had had to leave, requesting the Asisi people to look for it.

The next day Pototo and Amusupé found the animal floating [251] between two waters. They hid it in the bush and had it smoke-
[262] dried on their own behalf. They ate it with their wives (about 100 kilos of meat).

That ended up by becoming known, and a jealous man denounced them to the grand man.

Called before the lanti kuutu, they had to apologize and were each sentenced to pay as a fine to the grand man a demijohn of 15 liters of tafia (worth about 6,000 francs) within four months.

[735] Both of them were at a loss to pay this fine, belonging to the category of ne'er-do-wells who have no regular activity and live from day to day, selling some fish or game from time to time.

[613] Amusupé appealed to Captain Konduku, head of his lineage, who agreed to pay for the tafia for him, Amusupé reimbursing him little by little.

[613] As for Pototo, the head of his lineage refused categorically [689] to help him because he had eaten the maipouri alone without allowing his family to share it (the village people would have found it normal to profit by the crime, but they deemed it immoral that [123] one of their relatives had deprived them of meat). After three and a half months, Pototo began to occupy himself seriously at a paid job which he had the luck to find because we needed a bossman for two weeks.

577 The Boni did nothing but laugh while telling us this story.
626 Affairs of this kind, which do not involve any suprahuman inter-
[522] vention, escape in large measure their social morality; they have a certain feeling for what should be done, but submit to it only in proportion as they fear a material and immediate sanction.

794 [181] The laws of Odun. The cult of Odun (Odū) is the keystone of the social and religious structure of the Refugee Blacks. It is a very secret cult; its rites are not practiced in the presence of outsiders and all curiosity about it meets with frank hostility. The Boni, who talk rather freely about the cults of possession, [123] are mute on the subject of Odun, and one may spend years among them without even hearing this name uttered.

794 184 The worship of Odun is common to the Boni and the Saramaka (perhaps this is what explains the trustful relations which exist between the two groupings). Among the Djuka it is replaced by the worship of Gwangwêla (Grantata), which has exactly the same functions and rites.

776 Odun is not to be confused with the creator God Nana (Masa Gadu). The myths explaining the relationship of these two entities were not known by our informants, but it is clear that Odun was sent to men by Masa Gadu as legislator and judge.

671 Odun's laws have a profound originality, as much by their content as by the sanctions which accompany them. It is not excessive to speak of a religious and moral doctrine of the Refugee Blacks.

[641] These laws appear in negative form. A certain number of acts and behavior are forbidden to those who have entered the society of the Refugee Blacks by taking an oath which binds 784 them for good and all. Offenders will be punished without the direct intervention of men, by the all-powerful action of Odun, who will kill them or /196/ strike them down with sicknesses. As a general rule, Odun's punishment is death; this is what explains the fear his name inspires.

673 [754] Odun forbids:

--Sorcery, wisi, in the most general sense, that is, any magic action having as its purpose the killing, making ill, and in a general way doing harm to another person.

648 Never do they appeal to the courts to settle their differences, still less their family quarrels; never do they beg for help.

829 The Europeans' material superiority does not impress them: the whites are more able in mechanics, but they are more able in magic, that is all. The efficacy of European medicine does [758] not shake their convictions: if someone has reasons to believe himself victim of the anger of a gadu, he begins by making the sacrifices intended to appease it, then asks it for authorization to have himself cared for by the whites. Personally we have [123] never done anything to disabuse the Boni of this idea which [753] satisfies at the same time the requirements of medicine and those of social discipline, for it must not be forgotten that for them 177 sickness is punishment for an offense. Thus one sees that unless it is deliberately brought to bear against tradition and against the leaders, the influence of Europeans is without appreciable effect on the civilization of the Refugee Blacks. It is no longer the same when contacts become too frequent, tend to alter drastically the way of life, and especially when these influences become openly "civilizing."

178 The Future of the Refugee Blacks

Obliged to solve all the problems of life by their own means, the Refugee Blacks have been able to adapt with intelligence to the evolution of the modern world, and their custom has kept all its vigor and effectiveness. Their future would not 648 seem to be threatened if a wave of opinion had not come to the surface these past years, in French Guiana as well as in Surinam, to destroy their civilization, deemed primitive and barbarous, and to fuse them into the population of the coast. This result would be obtained in particular by schooling and evangelization.

Saramacca

had not acted well toward the Granman. It would be best if we did not stop there. At the others the Granman could assure us hospitality. Then there was talk of hauling wood and making rafts, for our host, who knew these people well, moved safri, too, until he at last felt the moment had come to talk about buying a boat from Ajako.

When the arrangements of the sale were concluded, Ajako came back to talk with us. He had heard that we had a machine which the Kromanti spirit had broken, was it true? Did it really go again? They said the Bakra had much cunning. They said the Bakra knew African magic.

The Bakra said he knew something about Africa. The Ashanti people, for instance, were a fine people.

"Ma na Asante, na Sa'macca sem- . . . —But the Ashanti are Saramacca. . . . " But he would go no further, having spoken only one syllable of the word for people. He became guarded. Yes, there were some Anago people from Africa on this Saramacca River, and Dahomey, and Loango, and Fanti; the Ibo peoples were not on this river. . . . And again he would say no more. Later, when we had changed the subject, he said as if in both gratitude and explanation, "Na sa-i-'akisi, a tranga poi—You ask about strong things."

But he would sing into our machine, if we liked. He would sing Kromanti, if we wanted him to do so. "I won't fight your machine," he said, smiling.

"Anabobi, Anabobi,
Anabobi, Anabobyo,
Tata Ando.
Anabobi, Ando,
Anabobi,
Tata Adjaini,
Anabobyo
Tata Fa'aku."

"They will understand this in Africa," he said, gravely, and then he moved toward the doorway and stood there

502 rapids and large rapids. He carries loads and returns to 484 his own village. But then something happens. His boat is 996 good. He walks kosi—carefully—but he loses his food, or his entire load, or his boat, or even his life. Something is working against him. It might be wisi—bad magic; it [054] might be kunu. If you have kunu, then your enemies can make their bad magic work against you. So it is."

"But what is kunu, Bayo?"

He hesitated.

● 124 We assured him that there was no harm in our asking.
996 We had been hearing so much about it, first about Zimbi, and how he had died from a cut with his machete. Now this machete had worked for him since he was a boy, and then he cut himself, and then, having cut himself, he became sick and died. People said down below this was kunu. What did it mean?

But he still hesitated and looked about him until at last when he spoke, he gave the answer we were coming to know so well—"Massa Gadu sabi—God knows"—that answer that was the signal that not alone Massa Gadu, but the one who invoked his name in protection against Bakra questions, knew the answer quite well but meant to keep his own counsel. For to talk of these matters is not good, we had been told before by Sedefo.

It was Bibifo who brought up kunu again when Bayo stepped out of the boat for an instant.

"Better not talk to Bayo about kunu, Bakra. There is a very big kunu in Bayo's family. He does not mean to lie to the Bakra when he doesn't talk, but it is better for him not to tell you about it. We Saramacca people say: 'A snake bit me. I see a worm, I am afraid.' Do not ask him more."

538 But the Bush Negro has many sayings, and it was a different proverb from that which Bibifo had quoted to us that guided us in our tortuous course in search of an understanding of kunu.

KUNU

"Na wa' taki: Efi gbuli wolo, i sa si san de na ini.—It is said: If a person stirs up a hole, he will find what is in it." 538

And so it was that very night, when we were camped on an island near the great falls, with the roar of the water sounding in our ears like the very signal drums we were told the river gods wanted sounded that the sun might come and warm and dry them after the long rains, that we learned more. Kasanya, the captain of the fourth boat, had conducted himself so unobtrusively that we barely knew he was there. He was almost as old as Bibifo, but strangely silent. He was tall and spare, with graying hair, and eyes that were rimmed with red. We had not sought him out particularly to make conversation with him because he had ugly, open sores on his body, the result of a virulent case of bush yaws, which showed when he sat paddling in his loin cloth. We had known him during our first year when he had been more willing to be friendly, more ready to talk. From him, in fact, we had learned to play one of the Bush Negro games that the ancestors had brought from Africa. 124 [177] [524]

Kasanya came over to ask us whether we had medicine for him. His head ached so until . . . he could barely see. There is that about white man's medicine in the bush, it is to be had free, and there is no harm in trying it. 123 609

"Will you make us a game board like the one we bought from your village last year, Kasanya?" we asked him.

"Yes, but you must have two of them, one flat and one curved like a boat. It is not good to have only one. When a man is alive he plays the game. When he dies and comes back to visit the living, he wants to play, too. Now if there is a board for him, he will play on that. But if there is but the one, he will play with the living and that is not good." 775 524

"You know a great deal, Kasanya."

"Awa, yes, but I'm an old man already. I've had much trouble. Last year after you left the third son I made died. Now I have no one. Kunu has taken the three of them, and my wife is asleep, too." [776] and so close that our hands, moving about to find a rest, touched its top, and sounded an involuntary rhythm, was an apinti drum. We exclaimed at its beauty, for in form and carving it rivaled the one we had admired in the council house of Granman Yankuso, and we were determined to try to buy it. But we turned our conversation to other things. A stranger in this bush soon learns from the Bush Negroes to broach an important request gently, remembering the cautioning proverb spoken by the chameleon.

We talked of carving, of the white man's coming back some year when the rains were heavy to sit by and watch the men make paddles and benches, so that he might learn, as children learn.

The captain was politely skeptical. It took a Saramacca hand to do this work. But he smiled, "Ma kye, if you have the gods anything is possible."

"That's a fine paddle in the corner."

He brought it out, and we admired it. Would he sell it to us?

"You must ask its owner."

"Didn't you make it, captain?"

"Yes, but it is not mine to sell. I gave it to my wife." He would see, however, if she wanted to sell it. He would himself go and call her.

As he went, he gave us the paddle that we might examine it. We ran our hands over the smooth top, the design, the beveled blade. It was not so tall as the paddles used by the men, nor was its blade so broad as those used in steering the great boats through the rapids. In form, it was quite different from the round-bladed type used by the Indians of the region, for it was slender and came to a sharp point, and at the other end the carving formed a crutch-shaped hold into which the hand fitted.

We studied this carving. Parts of the design had meaning for us because of their realistic treatment. The motifs of others were recognizable to us from explanations we had been given of other carvings. But there were still details 621 175 [166] [103] Agodé was founded by Grand Man Ochi, probably about 1895, at the time when the Boni were required by the settlement of the Lawa Dispute to evacuate the villages they were occupying on the Surinam bank. The name Boniville was given by the gold miners; it was used never at all by the Boni.

621 613 [103] The Yakubi or Kotika lineage forms the important village of Kotika (1). It is one of those which have remained best grouped.

1. This word alludes to the river where the rebellion of 1772 began.

[423] [241] [103] Its members have exclusive rights over the region included between Abunasunga Falls and their village. They have farmed there for more than a century, and this is why the region is called Abattis Kotika.

613 621 175 [648] Kotika is the oldest Boni village. It is one of those founded by the survivors of the battles against the Dutch when, about 1815, they settled again on the Lawa. Until about 1895 nearly all the Boni were grouped in one large village, each lineage occupying a different quarter. At the time of the settlement, unfavorable to France, of the Lawa Dispute (1895), the various lineages emigrated, founding especially the villages of l'Enfant Perdu, Loka, Boniville, and Papaïston. Only the members of the Kotika lineage stayed, in full agreement with the grand man, so that the ancestral land might not be completely abandoned. [648] [628] Thus the inhabitants of this village are nowadays under the authority of Surinam, without ceasing, for that reason, to be faithful to the grand man and maintaining normal relations with the other groups.

613 614 [124] The genealogies reconstituted in 1957 by systematic interrogation of the old people of the group had led to three distinct fractions which we shall call Kotika 1, 2, and 3, tracing respectively back to ancestresses named Kéneya, Amawi, and Oka.

586 [163] Likewise Pééchina, about 70 years old in 1957, separated from Nachinengé (Kotika) after having spent the greatest part of her life with him and having six children by him.

In order to be able to break thus a long standing union without undergoing moral collapse, it is certainly necessary for the affectivity of each one to be entirely centered on his maternal family.

586 124 Frequency of divorce. This essential aspect of the social life of the Refugee Blacks is not easy to lay hold on by direct interrogation. The women do not willingly talk about their past unions and let go in silence the ones which remained childless. However, we were able to reconstitute with rather great certainty the past life of about a hundred women (mothers, near relatives, or wives of our most reliable informants). These men /"women" -- printing error. -- Tr./ are marked with a double asterisk  in the population list of the villages.

586 128

[178] It is useful to classify them by age groups relating to the year of birth, for we shall see that the frequency of divorce seems to have increased with time. The groups chosen are the same as for the demographic investigation which we carried on parallel to the sociological study:

[765] audience and to create an atmosphere of participation in the rite.

This ritual character makes it so that the Anansi Toli cannot be recited any time and in any old way. The story-teller may speak only at night, in the presence of a respondent and of an audience of at least two or three persons. A ritual formula: "dirinti" -- the response of the audience: "ndaeti," [124] [126] [76] precedes each new story. It is only with extreme repugnance that informants consent to listen to and comment in the day-time on a tale recorded on tape, particularly if their parents are still living, for it is said among the Refugee Blacks as in Black Africa that telling stories in full daylight makes one's father and mother die.

[174] [177] These tales belong to an authentically African accumulated store, practically unchanged in spite of the borrowing from the Creole Blacks of Paramaribo of several themes concerning automobiles, steamboats, etc., inserted in droll fashion into the traditional themes.

The usual hero of these tales is Anansi, the crafty one. [825] Anansi is the name of the Mygale spider (1). It is noteworthy, however, that this spider does not appear to play any special role in the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks and that no divinatory power is attributed to it. In fact, in the tales of which he is the hero, Anansi is nearly always represented as a man.

[191] 1. The spider cycle is characteristic of the Akan (Agni-Baoulé-Abron) culture area. Anansi is the name of the Mygale spider among the Agni.

/517/

II. — Demography of the Boni

Census. — Estimation of Age.

B
125 Method used. The demographic study of the Boni presents the difficulties inherent in all populations without civil records:

1. Difficulty of determining the ages of individuals;
2. Difficulty of determining for each woman the deceased children in relation to the surviving ones.

B
125 We attempted to establish a local chronology by linking the 173 ages of individuals to events of known date that had stuck in their minds.

More particularly we fixed the ages of the old men from the voyage of the explorer Crevaux (1877) and from the death of the grand man Anato (1891), the ages of middle-aged persons from events which occurred between 1915 and 1924, death of the grand man Ochi (1915), end of World War I (1918), hydroplane accident at the mouth of the Inini (1921), installation of a rosewood factory (1925).

B
125 The persons born after 1930 were placed without difficulty, for we knew a certain number of them as children or adolescents in 1948.

Starting with a certain number of men whose age could be fixed with considerable accuracy, all the others, men and women,
B
829] were placed by comparison. In fact, if the Boni do not know their age, they are able to say that they are, for example, two or three years younger than so-and-so (6).

B
[755] 6. Their attention is brought to bear on these age differences because, if a group isolated in the bush is led to address a prayer to the ancestors for the curing of a sick person, this prayer has to be pronounced by the oldest person.

We believe the ages are determined with a probable error of less than two years for persons less than 30 years old, two to three years for persons between 30 and 60 years old, and three years above 60. But this error has no systematic character, and one may assume that it is eliminated on the average, disturbing the calculations of fertility and of mortality very little.

[161] [162] Census, age pyramids. The census finished on 1 January 1958 included 811 persons, of whom 666 were from villages on the French bank and 145 on the Surinam bank (Kotika). With regard to the latter, we interrogated them individually when they came over to the French side, particularly when they came to attend the celebrations of the end of mourning at Boniville in November 1957. Temporary absentees (less than 5%) were placed by information provided by their nearest relatives. /-18/ /Diagram 1 appears here./

We estimate the omissions in the census at less than 2%. These omissions are almost exclusively a matter of adolescents and young orphans or youngsters raised by persons other than their own parents.

[167] Emigration and immigration are very slight, practically zero as far as the women are concerned. Thus the age pyramid really represents the demographic situation of the Boni and lends itself to complementary calculations of mortality.

Interrogation of the women. The women of the villages on the French bank were questioned about the children they had had and lost. An effort was made to place the dead children in relation to the survivors and in relation to the local chronology. The age of the dead ones was determined by comparison with children or adolescents living at the time of the inquiry.

For the dead adults an attempt was made to fix the year of their death in relation to the local chronology.

125 We gave up the idea of deducing the number of stillborn infants from the mortality tables, in order to facilitate comparison with the Indian populations where this distinction would not have been possible. We took account of all the children born at term.

For greater certainty we questioned the women twice at an interval of one year (end of 1956 and end of 1957). Those who gave contradictory answers were eliminated. /519/

[162] On 1 January 1958 the women from the villages on the French side born up until 1939 inclusive and married for at least one year were 216 in number, including in that number 17 women from the village of Kotika residing temporarily on the French side; 198 were questioned.

125 --158 (80%) answered with good grace;

--33 (17%) answered with reticence or gave contradictory [593] answers in 1956 and 1957. Checking showed that they neglected to mention a living child, generally one of their older ones whom they were not raising themselves. In spite of the precautions taken, there are some omissions in the census of the adolescents and young people because of this (7).

> 7. On the other hand, we never ascertained any dissimulation concerning dead children. On the contrary, the Boni women speak of their deceased children with a certain indifference.

For 28 of these women we were able to reconstruct their lives with sufficient precision by interrogating contradictorily the husbands and the older brothers of the same mother. The five others were eliminated;

7 (3%) obstinately refused to answer without giving any justification for their attitude.

[484] Eighteen women could not be added, this being due to the continual moving of the Boni between their villages, their crop plantings, and their fishing places.

We took into account 7 women who died before 1957, whom we had been able to question in the preceding years.

[163] All in all, we have preserved 193 records of women having had 747 children, of whom 472 had survived as of the first of January 1958.

614 An example of scission in a kin group: the separation of Dipelu II
571 between Kormotibo and Asisi. (See Dip. II genealogical table.)
578 This scission resulted from a ridiculous incident: a falling-out which occurred between ○ Alawenchi † (E19) and ○ Bongo (E6) because of a hoe which the first claimed to have been stolen from her by Bongo.

Since neither one would yield, they became really angry and fought. /38/

△ Agosa, head of the lineage, taking the part of Alawenchi, decided to secede and settle in Asisi.

○ Pilè † (F35) and ○ Sésey † (F38) who, their mother being dead, had been raised by Alawenchi, joined them and founded families in Asisi.

[621] This explains the present scission of this group and the [184] bizarre division of its members between Kormotibo and Asisi. This scission had no result on the religious plane, unity being maintained by the pitiless tie of the kunu. Nowadays, Captain Poopu's authority is exerted normally on the fraction in Asisi. Relations between the two groups are rather good. /Figs. 5 and 6 appear here./

/39/ CHAPTER III

• 125 INVENTORY OF THE PEOPLING OF THE BONI VILLAGES

We have tried to take a complete census of the Boni of the Upper Maroni as of January 1, 1958, including for the women the statement of their successive unions and of their children living [126] and dead. This census is associated with detailed plans of the villages and a study of the territorial implantation of kin groups.

121 It seemed to us that in the present state of knowledge about the Refugee Blacks a study of limited scope but covering the totality of the population was preferable to the very intensive study of a small group; only the study of the population considered in its entirety brings out clearly its family custom, its tendencies in the matter of marriage, divorce, inheritance; it alone can lead to a precise knowledge of its demographic data so important even on the social plane.

Finally, this detailed inventory constitutes a firm base for following the evolution of the population in the future.

• 125 Taking a census of the Boni posed a problem much more difficult than for most populations without vital statistics. The 648 tribes of the Refugee Blacks enjoy in effect a statute of autonomous nations under protectorate and insist fiercely on this autonomy. The French administration has never been able to take a census of them any more than the administration of Surinam has for the Djuka and Saramaka, colliding with an ingenious ill will which defies all efforts.

It is not that they fear taxes (this is a notion practically unknown in Guiana, even on the coast (1), and the French

1. Practically, in the interior of the country, with the exception of traders who are subject to a license, nobody pays taxes and there are not even any lists of taxable people. The Creoles of the interior (principally from the British West Indies) are known only because of the fact that, as foreign subjects, they must make declarations of change of residence; French citizens are scarcely known at the administrative administration has for a long time appeared /40/ in the eyes of the inhabitants of the interior as a benevolent office); but they obey the old African maxim of never telling the whites more than half of what they know.

/39 cont. /

648 posts except as they present themselves for recording of vital statistics or for registration on voting lists.

125 In the absence of any nominal census which could serve as a point of departure, this job presented considerable difficulties arising principally from the extreme mobility of the population:

[484] —Never is the whole population of a village assembled together simultaneously; the proportion of those absent frequently reaches 50 per cent, especially in the fine season (hunting, fishing, boating, clearings at the farming habitations, etc.);

[551] —A good many men and women have two, sometimes three, names used interchangeably. If one does not personally know a large part of the inhabitants of the villages and does not have at his disposal carefully made-up genealogical tables, it is impossible to understand anything;

115] —If the men respond in good faith, it is not the same with the women, who are inaccessible to any reasoning. Some try to cash in on the information they give, others obstinately refuse to answer;

125 —A number of adolescents and even of men between 20
591 and 35 years old have no regular hut. Each Boni, man or woman,
342 is in principle expected to build a hut in one of the "great villages." But this residence may be fictitious: It can, for example, be a tumbled-down hut which they intend to put up again some day... or the pent roof of the house of the mother or a brother, under which they install themselves on days when a ceremony causes the lineage to meet together, residing the rest of the year in a farming habitation.

125 [123] In spite of the relations of trust developed between the Boni and ourselves in the course of the work carried out together during four long missions, we were able to take this census only progressively and indirectly, by using simultaneously the following procedures:

—Study of the genealogy of the groups, going up from woman to woman up to the founding ancestress, then going back down from her. These genealogical tables, some of which extend [166] over nine generations and include more than 160 persons, brought [136] to light a certain number of temporarily absent people and individuals who lived away from the villages, isolated in the middle of the Creole gold miners, but continuing to make up part of their group; they also brought to light a certain number of young people and orphan children taken in by distant relatives who would not have spoken about them directly. But on this point, gaps remain;

[126] —Detailed plan of the villages and interrogation of the village heads as to the persons living in each house;

—Interrogation of the women about their dead and surviving children;

—General verification with the help of perfectly trustworthy informants who possessed a thorough knowledge of the genealogy of the groups.

The census, stopped on January 1, 1958, covered 811 per- [162] sons of whom 667 /41/ were from the villages of the French bank and 144 from the Surinam bank (Kotika). As for the latter, we [165] questioned them individually when they came to the French bank, especially when they came to attend the end of mourning festivities in Boniville in October, 1957. The Kotika census is less [128] exact than that of the French villages, and in addition we were [126] not able to make a plan of the village. For this reason we have not reproduced it in the present work, where only the corresponding genealogical table appears.

621 The principle behind the constitution of the Boni villages
613 is, as we have said, the localization of the matrilineage. Men
[591] and women live in the village of their maternal kin; the wife does not leave her village to join her husband, who comes to visit her from time to time without ceasing, himself, to live in the midst of his own lineage.

The composition of each village thus corresponds, at least in principle, to the group of living people on the genealogical table. But a certain number of exceptions are observed:

[167] -A certain number of men (about 20 out of 800 persons) have emigrated for good and can no longer be counted in the population of the villages;

[619] -On the other hand, a dozen Djuka and Saramaka married
[591] to Boni women have settled permanently in the villages and have been included in the census.

125 We have tried to estimate with as much precision as possible
128 the age of the people concerned, by means of events of known
[173] date which they remember, from the trip of the explorer Crevaux (1878) to the war 1939-45. We have established a local chronology, reproduced as an appendix at the end of the present chapter.

125 The demographic survey, which has been the subject of another publication (1), was conducted parallel with the sociological investigation.

? [See S. Hurault, This file-- Analyst.]

125 We estimate the gaps in the census at less than 3 per cent.
[128] These gaps involve essentially the adolescents and young people orphaned or raised by others than their parents.

The adults over 35 years old were practically all known [648] individually to us. Children under 10 years could be counted very exactly thanks to the distribution of milk carried out since 1956 by the Maripasoula medical center.

125 Classification. The classification of the population was made by 128 village of residence.
162 For each woman we have indicated her successive unions and the children who issued from them. The sign † means deceased, the sign ≠ divorce, the sign ††means that the husband is deceased but after the break-up of the union.

The listings for women preceded by an asterisk * indicate that they can be regarded as complete from the demographic point of view (children living and deceased).

A double asterisk  indicates that the listing can in addition be regarded as complete with regard to successive marriages and divorces (2).

2. We avoided asking directly these questions to which the women replied unwillingly. The information was obtained indirectly by questioning brothers and husbands. It could be obtained complete for only about 30 per cent of the women.

125 The name of each individual is printed in boldface type 128 once where he can be considered as habitually residing.
162 Children under 15 are considered as living with the persons responsible for their education. If it was not possible to obtain accurate information about this, they are considered as living with their mother.

Each listing bears a number, for example Dju D7, making it possible to find again the individual's place in the genealogical table. In the example noted, refer to the table of the Dju lineage, line D, no. 7.

601 Genealogical tables. These are of unequal value according to the 128 age and the memory of the old people consulted. In general
[115] they go back to three generations beyond the oldest of the old men now alive.

[165] Since the Boni show remarkable longevity, and the average difference in age between two generations can be estimated at 31 years, one can assume as probable that the most distant ancestress known of each lineage was born between the middle and the end of the 18th century. For example, if we assume that [613] Kuiuba, the ancestress of the Awara Bakka, was about 100 years old in 1956, we can take for granted that she was born about 1856 and that her great-grandmother was born about 1760.

613 The most ancient ancestress known of each lineage is certainly not the foundress. It is infinitely probable that the founding of these groups goes back to the beginning of the 18th century and that they were born on the same plantations where the ancestors of the Refugee Blacks were slaves; this would explain the names borne by the lineages, names which nearly always allude to a plantation or to a slave-owner.

601 In a general way, the memory of the Boni is very sure,
128 and the information given in the form: Ma X... begot So-and-so, /60/

351 There are no gardens around the cabins because the con-
[134] ditions of the soil and climate render permanent cultivation
[241] impracticable. The nearest thing is a few persons planting some banana trees around the hut at the foot of which they spread the 361 hearth ashes. As a general rule villages are closely hemmed in 137 by secondary brushwood, and people plant far from one another
311 and sometimes very far from the village.

423 If it does not admit the appropriation of land to individuals,
824 custom does admit, on the other hand, the ownership of trees.
In the villages the useful trees (coconut trees, maripa palms /attalea excelsa/, mango trees, cashew-apple trees, etc.) all [428] have owners. The tree is considered as personal property and is transmitted by inheritance in the same way as a gun or a canoe.
428 The procedure employed by the Boni for the dispersion of the 824 inheritance among the members of the lineage of the dead man
613 sometimes has the effect of transmitting the ownership of a tree to a person who is not of the village. For example, in Boniville [222] where a fraction of the Kotika lineage lives, two caumou palms were bequeathed a long time ago to members of the lineage living in Kotika, who come each year to gather the fruit.

[553] and supplanting the others, but in numerous cases the names are used concurrently; in general an individual is designated among his maternal relatives by his pikin nɛm, while the people of other villages designate him by his gaã nɛm or by a cognomen. It has happened to us many a time in the course of the same conversation to hear the same individual designated by two or three different names.

[125] It goes without saying that this custom makes any census
[128] of the Refugee Blacks impracticable, for as long as one does not know individually the members of a lineage and their genealogy, it is impossible to understand anything.

Nevertheless, one must not see in this a defense reaction with respect to the European administration. The Refugee Blacks find it completely normal to have several names at a time, for they do not have the notion of the identity of a name with a person.

Thus one of our boatmen was Fintiman to his maternal relatives, Gobiyo to his father and part of his friends, Loamba to his paternal grandfather, and Nakiyu to his first wife.

55 Choice of names. Names are highly varied and their choice
553 does not follow any fixed rule; it is in the exclusive domain of fancy.

A large number are constituted of simple onomatopoeia: Tyutyu, Dada, Dodo, Dudu, etc. (which may be applied indiscriminately to man or woman). Dodo's mother explained to us the reason for her choice: dodo was the refrain of an air which often sang in her head while she was pregnant. /124/

55 Again are pointed out:
177 --More or less deformed European names: Afayèl (Rafaèl), Modèl, Pasensi (Patience), Félisi (Félix), Sophie, Toïna (Antonia). Certain names are deformed European proper names; for example: Sota for Chotard (name of an official in Saint-Laurent);

The conditions under which children are brought up throw a strong light on the thought of the Refugee Blacks relative to kinship and are worth a special study.

[125] In the course of an investigation carried on from October to December, 1957, we were able to record with precision under what conditions had been raised 311 persons distributed thus:

Male sex	born before 1936 (education finished). . . .	73
	born from 1936 to 1949 inclusive (education in process) (1)	88
Female sex	born before 1936 (education finished) . . .	72
	born from 1936 to 1949 inclusive (education in process)	78
	Total	311

1. Study of the case of children born after 1949 was of no interest because the definite assignment of their guardianship was not yet made at the end of the year 1957.

609 scratched like a "tigri"—a tiger, for this is how the Bush
123 Negroes name the jaguar. Later, when we saw him dance
115 the Tigri Kromanti dance, we witnessed one of the most realistic feline interpretations imaginable. But that is another matter.

Now Apanto was an obia man to be reckoned with, and his fellow villagers and the villagers of neighboring settlements treated him with a deference that his age alone could never have commanded. And it was this Apanto who now came up and said that he would sing the sacred Kromanti songs for our phonograph.

"You will not understand the songs. They will be in the Kromanti language," he warned us. "They are strong, and the machine must be strong to carry them."

It happens that a field phonograph is anything but strong. The mechanism is simple, since the instrument must be light enough to be carried about, and yet it often is subjected to all manner of hard usage. To this is added the [126] hazard of the climate. The turntable is actuated by a belt running from the mechanism inside the case, and the ends of this belt are glued together. This, to be sure, we discovered later. At the moment, we met Apanto's challenge with assurance. We did not doubt that the machine was spiritually strong.

126 What he said about the Kromanti language was true.
533 The Kromanti tongo, of which we had been told during our [197] first visit here, we were finding to be an actuality, and 539 although we took down the words as he sang them, aided in hearing them by the repetitions, their meaning was unknown to us. Some of them we learned later. Some of them we knew. "Obia" we knew concerned the spirit,
[176] the vague force known by that name, while "Amba" was a deity sacred to Saturday, and was given as a "day name"
[551] to women born on that day of the week. This, then, is what he sang:

"Ma djeni ye-ye
Obia kule ma djeni no-ho
Obia mo-ye

WHILE THE RIVER WAS HIGH

Amba djeniyi, obia-mi yi-yi
Mo djeni-o
Mo djeni-e-ye
Obia mi-i
Man djeni no-ho
Obia mo-i
Amba djeni-e-i, obia-i-i
Man djeni no-ho, obia-i."

The music was slow and soft, and in Apanto's appealing voice the song took on a strangely moving quality. But as he sang, a stir went through the people who were listening.

"He calls his obia, ai."

"His obia will fight the spirit of the machine."

"The Bakra is cunning, but obia is strong. We shall see."

The song came to an end, the recorder was lifted. We looked at Apanto. "Will you sing another? See, the thing is not finished. There is room for more."

He looked. Yes, one could see there was room for more. Yes, he would sing more. This time the song was livelier, louder. As Apanto sang, he seemed to force the song into the horn, and this time there were no murmurs from those watching.

"Yen-bo, yenbo,
A yen-bo-bo no
Yen-bo, yenbo,
A yen-bo. . . . "

And with this the machine began to give way. There was a rattling sound, a scratching. The machine went more slowly, then stopped. About us the murmurs became excited. Hastily we fitted a new cylinder, hastily we tested it. It was no use. We soon found the cause. The glue had softened in the tropical dampness, and the ends had pulled loose. It was almost dark, and there was no sun to dry a newly applied coat of glue.

126 533 123 Apanto looked at us. "The Bakra is cunning," he repeated. "But obia is stronger. In the bush obia rules. Kromanti is too strong for the spirit of the machine."

Swiftly the dark of the bush came down. The people who had been watching, listening to what had passed, were leaving to go to their villages and to spread the news of the power of obia, and how Apanto had defeated the spirit of the machine that talks back what has been said to it. And with the gathering dark, we could sense the pulse of the drums and hear a faint echo of the shrill cry of the women dancing at Gankwe for the spirit of the dead man who lay there in the house of mourning.

had not acted well toward the Granman. It would be best if we did not stop there. At the others the Granman could assure us hospitality. Then there was talk of hauling wood and making rafts for our host, who knew these people well, moved safri, too, until he at last felt the moment had come to talk about buying a boat from Ajako.

When the arrangements of the sale were concluded, Ajako came back to talk with us. He had heard that we had a machine which the Kromanti spirit had broken, was it true? Did it really go again? They said the Bakra had much cunning. They said the Bakra knew African magic.

The Bakra said he knew something about Africa. The Ashanti people, for instance, were a fine people.

"Ma na Asante, na Sa'macca sem- . . . —But the Ashanti are Saramacca. . . . " But he would go no further, having spoken only one syllable of the word for people. He became guarded. Yes, there were some Anago people from Africa on this Saramacca River, and Dahomey, and Loango, and Fanti; the Ibo peoples were not on this river. . . . And again he would say no more. Later, when we had changed the subject, he said as if in both gratitude and explanation, "Na sa-i-'akisi, a tranga poi—You ask about strong things."

But he would sing into our machine, if we liked. He would sing Kromanti, if we wanted him to do so. "I won't fight your machine," he said, smiling.

"Anabobi, Anabobi,
Anabobi, Anabobyo,
Tata Ando.
Anabobi, Ando,
Anabobi,
Tata Adjaini,
Anabobyo
Tata Fa'aku."

"They will understand this in Africa," he said, gravely, and then he moved toward the doorway and stood there looking out on the river. Whether it was a gesture that he 126 would sing no more, or not, we could not say, but when he 115 turned again to us he looked thoughtful. "White man, how far away is Africa? Would they kill me if I went there? Could I get a woman, if I went there?"

We sent him some food to his boat as an expression of 609 hospitality, and word came back that when we had done 576 eating, he would himself come and thank us. When he did 431 come, it was to speak his thanks and to say goodbye, and he did not come alone. With him was the young man who was his traveling companion, and this young man carried gifts to us. Bayo, who had arrived a short time before, received the gifts of fig bananas and rice for us, as was the custom of these people, for to have given or received a gift in person would have been the way of a boor, just as it would have been bad form to stand about and watch us eat.

The leave-taking ritual, as that of greeting, is as formalized as a litany and almost as solemn.

"Adiosi, adiosio—waka bon, yere. Tan bon—Goodbye, travel well, hear? Keep well." Ajako carefully laid away his top cloth in his woven closed basket, straightened his loin cloth, and paddled away briskly from the landing.

Later, boats pulled up bringing the Gankwe men.

"Sedefo, we have a fine boat for you. It's large, and it 501 will take a great deal of load. It's a new boat, just come 609 down from top-side."

The men busied themselves with bringing our provisions from the shelter to the landing place so that the loading might begin. A tent had been made of palm leaves for the boat in which we ourselves were traveling, so that we might be shielded from the glare of the open river, from sunstroke and the sudden tropical downpours, and the men decided to load this boat first.

Now there was a murmur among the Gankwe men. Sedefo was passing his hands over the new boat, as though it were a human form, touching its "head," running his hands over the "ribs," the "belly." Then he balanced himself in it, and shook his head.

539 medicine he rubbed into the wound which Snake had made when he bit the Princess. In an hour the Princess was better, and soon she was well.

The King was very happy. He caught Human Being who had betrayed Hunter, and put him into the same prison where Hunter had been. But Hunter, who made the medicine, married the King's daughter, and became King of the land.

"It is ended," concluded Sedefo, "and I myself was there, and my daughter danced bandamba at the wedding!"

When Sedefo finished, it was almost midnight. Kasanya and Asikanu had sometime before gone to their hammocks. And now Sedefo, too, rose to go.

"D'u mundu," he said, as he went out. "Sleep well, all."

"Ai-yo, so s'yepi-o!—Yes, and do you sleep well, too!" Our boys sang back their response.

Since both they and we were still wide awake, they each offered to tell a short tale. But they told many stories, for there was a quality in the deep bush that night that allowed neither them nor us, unaccustomed to the jungle as we all were, to rest.

539 126 We no longer recall the exact tales they told. But later we had opportunities to record many more than just the ones they told there in the provision ground. Many were long, longer than we can give here. Many were the same as those we heard told by the Bush Negroes but which, told at night at festivals for the dead, with all the element of dramatization that went with the telling, we could not record in our notebooks. We group some of those which, for us, hold something of the quintessence of the mind of the Suriname Negroes.

Anansi Becomes a Preacher

539 Anansi asked the King to permit him to become a preacher. The King said, let him go to church one Sunday

REBEL DESTINY

173 Alabi, as the Granman called him, was the Araby of history, the great rebel of whom Stedman, who campaigned against the Bush Negroes long ago, wrote.

"White man, Alabi did not know how to work gold, or to earn great wealth, but he had stories in his head." He had called the first black krutu. And from Alabi had come Danieh who built Gansee, which was even now one of the most populous villages on the whole river.

"Long ago in the bush here, we had men, Bak'a!"

There was G'ama' Okosu, a Nomerimi Negro, the leader of those men who had escaped to the swamps on the coast, instead of going into the bush, and whom the people were afraid to touch.

"G'ama' Okosu could change into a kwatta monkey when he liked. He could cross the river without a boat."

The Dombi Negroes had their man, too. He was Sabaku. He was leaving his people to run away from slavery. He was going into the bush. "If we do not meet again in life, we shall meet in death," he said. He had no boat in which to cross the river, so he went to Yank'o, the buzzard, and he asked him to carry him. "I have no home, O Yank'o," he said to the buzzard, "but I will get on your back, and there my home will be. You who fly high, who fly over water, and over the high bush, carry me to safety."

The Granman himself was part Dombi and part Matchau, he said.

[825] "That is why we do not shoot a buzzard. If we shoot him by accident, then we must say 'Many thanks.' "

There was Tata Wadia who opened up this bush, who was still sung about by the Negroes of the city when they invoked the Kromanti spirit.

"I have the stick which he used."

"Will you let us see it, Granman?"

"Gbolo!"

[126] "We will photograph you holding the stick, Granman, and when we show it in our country we will tell the story."

He nodded. But the photograph was never taken.

GRANMAN MOANA YANKUSO

"You will play everything, white man," he had told us earlier. He had been especially anxious that we play the songs we had recorded in Haiti on our way to Suriname. Often he had spoken of these songs to the chiefs at council meetings. 123 177

"White man, tell these friends the words of those songs in that foreign tongue."

He had wanted us to speak before these men the words Legba, a deity to them in the bush as he is in Haiti and in West Africa today, and Loko, and Aida Wedo, and to translate the words of the Haitian twin song we had recorded, and the one to the water god Simbi.

Now he sat in his folding chair and looked on in silence, his face thoughtful. The songs he heard moved him deeply, and his expressive face showed it.

When, in the Haitian songs, the women heard the word "Ago-e" which they recognized, they uttered a shriek. It was one of their many words for ancestors. They cried out again when they heard "Aida Wedo" pronounced, and "Loko." They, too, sang of Aida Wedo, and of Alado, and of Loko. Dan was one of their words for snake.

The white man asked permission of the Granman later to record some songs of the people of the village, and promptly Moana Yankuso addressed a man who stood by. The man was a good singer, and his seketi improvisations had made him a figure on the river. 533 126 177

"Sing for the whites, mati. Let them hear in their far country how our people sing. Let them know that we can sing, that we sing much."

The singer Mapasi sat down and began to sing. His voice was of fine quality, and he was as modest in the midst of all these women with this gift which the gods had given him, as had been the young dancer whom the Granman had summoned to dance for us. He sang in a low voice, and directly into the horn. Accompanying his singing was the hand clapping of the women, which in the small council house was deafening. His recitatives were the longest we had heard on the river, longer by far than those which had

533 surprised us that night at S'ei, and when he paused for a 126 moment the women took up the chorus. From one song to 197 another he went, and the hand clapping grew louder, and the chorus joined in more frequently, often breaking into his recitative, so that there was harmonizing of theme and chorus.

Once or twice the Granman called for a song we had already recorded, in order to give Mapasi a rest.

"Play us something from the lower river, white man. Let them hear their own songs, too, sung by others."

When the excitement of hearing the machine reproduce the song they had just sung had grown less intense, the singers repeated the song the phonograph was reproducing for them, for to listen to music without singing was difficult for them; just as when they sang, they could not but move their feet, though there was scarcely more than room for them to stand one close to the other. But a Bush Negro needs little room for his dancing, so that as the phonograph played their songs for them, they clapped their hands and danced in place. For a short interval, at least, the existence of the whites was forgotten in their pleasure of singing with the machine.

Until late into the night we played our records for them, and they sang for us. Whatever the consequences to the frail records of soft wax, we decided to play as long as they would listen, because of something in the manner of the Granman, something of wistfulness, let us say, and something, perhaps, which went deeper yet, as he sat there—a black Hamlet following a mute soliloquy while he looked on with his clever, perplexed eyes.

"Ai, so it is," he said at last, "and now let us go and get sleep." He rose and the others followed him out of the council house.

II

123 Early the next morning, while the tent on our boat was 182 being finished, the Granman came into the council house
189 with a calabash and a buzzard's feather in his hand. He 519 came up to each of us in turn, and struck with the medicine-
600 dipped feather the tops of our heads, brushed the eyes,

[539]

"You have come to go, come to go far, come to go far to bring the wood to the water. But it is long, it is far, to the river. Thank you, friends."

Then the song was taken up by the workers and, with each rhythmic measure, the great piece of lumber went farther through the jungle on its way to the river. When he had chanted for us the greeting to the men, Bayo began to sing a song relating to men's casual exploits with women and, as he finished the song, he laughed. "White [831] man, if you came with us, you would hear what songs the men make up about women!"

●126 The phonograph had delighted Bayo from the first. When Apanto had summoned the spirit of his obia to fight the machine, Bayo had watched. When the white man's glue had repaired the broken belt, and the hot sun had made the machine "walk" once more, Bayo had approved.

"The machine is not weak," he had said. "I will sing for it."

And sing for it he did.

But the curse of Apanto still troubled the machine, for up the river and down there had been difficulty with it. Often when there was a particularly good song to be recorded, the belt would give, the machine would fail the white man. The story of the prowess of Apanto had gone up the river with the Gankwe paddlers, and when the machine stopped, heads nodded, and we would catch the word "obia" among the murmurs of the bystanders.

126 Bayo thought, it seemed, that the machine's proud
123 spirit was by this time properly chastened and, since twice 782 the machine had refused to work while he was singing into 776 it, twice had made him stop the song and its drum accompaniment, he decided to take matters into his own hands.

"White man," said Bayo, shortly after our return from up the river, "I will help the spirit of the machine. I will call the great gods. Apanto's spirit is strong, but Bayo has strong gods, too."

SR8 Bush Negroes SR8
Saramacca

The machine was made ready for him, and Bayo sat down on a convenient box, his head bent over the tumao drum which we had acquired and which his fingers could scarce ever be near but that they played on it.

"It is not the right drum," he said. "You should have an apinti for me to speak to the gods. But I will try it with this one. Tomorrow I will go up the river to Djamungo. I know a man who has an apinti. You will give me money, and I will buy it for you. But now I will speak on the tumao."

He began the irregular tapping which we had learned to identify as the drum language. With one hand he carried the message, while with the other he played irrelevant motifs which served to confound anyone not initiated and leave him, as it left us, who had worked out some of the general principles on which this drum language was based, utterly unable to interpret it or to tell which were the significant elements.

"The great gods will look after your machine now, if they will listen to the tumao."

The next day Bayo went upstream to get us the apinti we so desired. He was not successful, but the gods had listened to him, when he had invoked them on the tumao, for Bayo's ministrations ended all trouble with our recalcitrant phonograph. Bayo indeed had strong spirits!

As the days went on, and record after record was put on the turntable, and with its tracing of songs, or examples of Bush Negro speech, or fragments of the rhythms that called the various gods, was taken off and carefully put into its felt-lined box, Bayo visibly swelled with pride. This was his doing! With his strong spirits he had called the great gods! He was young, and he had not spoken on the proper drum, but they had listened to him! So his thoughts went, and so he would repeat them to us.

His interest in the phonograph was intensified the more he saw of it, and he sang and spoke and drummed, either

1:Herskovits & Herskovits E-5 (1928-1929) 1934
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8
Saramacca

126 alone or with some friend, into the wax cylinders that 782 spoke back in such mysterious fashion. When Apanto came 776 to visit us, Bayo smiled as he saw the obia man approaching 179 from the landing place.

"His obia is strong, but mine is strong, too. Let him sing into the machine."

Apanto was visibly surprised when he saw in operation the machine his spirit had wrecked. "The machine is not weak, Apanto," we assured him. "It has its own strength, and now it has the strength your gods have given it. For in the true, true Saramacca, a great obia man spoke his message to the Great God into it, and since then it has walked well with us."

Out of the corners of our eyes, we could see Bayo's pride.

126 "Sing for us, Apanto," we urged, for he had a beautiful
533 voice. "Sing us an Apuku song."

Now Apanto sang, not once, but many times. It is true that when we asked for Apuku he sang Vodu, and when we asked for Vodu he sang Toné, and when we asked for Toné he sang Kromanti songs, and when we asked for Kromanti he sang the sacred dirges called "Papa" songs. Yet this was not otherwise than might be expected, and it was not too difficult to play the records to interested men of other villages, whose startled comments would soon tell us the kind of song he had sung.

It was another day when Apanto again sang, and some of these who had witnessed his first victory were about. One such addressed himself to Bayo, who was sitting near.

"Apanto's spirit fought the machine, and stopped it.
[776] But the machine works and sings back to Apanto. Its strength has come back to it."

"Awa, Apanto's spirit is strong," we heard Bayo reply, "but there are other strong spirits on the Saramacca."

307 Bayo had spent the night at Gankwe, and had returned 115 resplendent with a new hairdressing. We joked with us, with its attendant bench and modeled snake, we had only heard the term. 575 346

In the dim light of our oil lantern, we listened and wrote in our book, while our informant told us about the Kromanti Mama. 126

"You must take it down carefully," he said, "or it might harm you."

The figure on the top of the bench was named Agbo. This was the watchman, and to this figure came news of all impending evil. About the neck of the figure was a Kromanti fighting obia. A stout iron ring, with red and blue cloth tied about one-half of it, it rested near the base of the watchman. 789 798 532

The eyes of this watchman were its most arresting feature. They were represented by deep sockets, and the effect was heightened by the beak-like character of the nose. Two ears completed the head, and on the body breasts were modeled. It was the only piece of Bush Negro modeling we had ever seen. This most secret of art forms was evidently little practiced.

"The watchman sees all," said our informant, "the Kromanti Mama knows when there is something about that will harm. She tells the snake."

Coiled about its base, this snake was treated in the same realistic style. The head of the snake and its tail almost met at the side of the clay figure which it encircled.

"His name is Bimbawai," we were told.

The bench itself was not unlike the obia stools we had seen in the shrines of the gods. Its rectangular top, curving toward the center, was fastened to the two boards which formed the legs. Like other obia stools, it was difficult to tell whether, under the thick coating of white clay, the wood was carved or not. In one respect it differed from all others we had seen—the bench wore, fringe-like, a grass skirt of the kind worn by the komfo, the priests. This was suspended from the top of the bench, the cord going outside [359]

PHONOGRAMS OF THE AUCANER BUSH NEGROES

These phonograms were collected for me by Mr. G. deBies, Dutch Government agent at Albina. They were set down by a Bush Negro named Aflakka, with the aid of an attendant Krutu or assembly. So far as is known, they are in use only among the Aucaners, and their use is limited to the older members, who employ them for purposes of sending messages over long distances. These characters are extremely difficult to collect, and Mr. deBies is to be congratulated on his efforts in this regard. The characters were redrawn for the purpose of publication by Ruth K. Kahn.

614 An example of scission in a kin group: the separation of Dipelu II
571 between Kormotibo and Asisi. (See Dip. II genealogical table.)
578 This scission resulted from a ridiculous incident: a falling-out which occurred between ○ Alawenchi † (E19) and ○ Bongo (E6) because of a hoe which the first claimed to have been stolen from her by Bongo.

Since neither one would yield, they became really angry and fought. /38/

△ Agosa, head of the lineage, taking the part of Alawenchi, decided to secede and settle in Asisi.

○ Pilè † (F35) and ○ Sésey † (F38) who, their mother being dead, had been raised by Alawenchi, joined them and founded families in Asisi.

[621] This explains the present scission of this group and the [184] bizarre division of its members between Kormotibo and Asisi. This scission had no result on the religious plane, unity being maintained by the pitiless tie of the kunu. Nowadays, Captain Poopu's authority is exerted normally on the fraction in Asisi. Relations between the two groups are rather good. /Figs. 5 and 6 appear here./

/39/ CHAPTER III

125 INVENTORY OF THE PEOPLING OF THE BONI VILLAGES

We have tried to take a complete census of the Boni of the Upper Maroni as of January 1, 1958, including for the women the statement of their successive unions and of their children living [126] and dead. This census is associated with detailed plans of the villages and a study of the territorial implantation of kin groups.

125 [123] In spite of the relations of trust developed between the Boni and ourselves in the course of the work carried out together during four long missions, we were able to take this census only progressively and indirectly, by using simultaneously the following procedures:

—Study of the genealogy of the groups, going up from woman to woman up to the founding ancestress, then going back down from her. These genealogical tables, some of which extend [166] over nine generations and include more than 160 persons, brought [736] to light a certain number of temporarily absent people and individuals who lived away from the villages, isolated in the middle of the Creole gold miners, but continuing to make up part of their group; they also brought to light a certain number of young people and orphan children taken in by distant relatives who would not have spoken about them directly. But on this point, gaps remain;

[126] —Detailed plan of the villages and interrogation of the village heads as to the persons living in each house;

—Interrogation of the women about their dead and surviving children;

—General verification with the help of perfectly trustworthy informants who possessed a thorough knowledge of the genealogy of the groups.

The census, stopped on January 1, 1958, covered 811 per- [162] sons of whom 667 /41/ were from the villages of the French bank and 144 from the Surinam bank (Kotika). As for the latter, we [765] questioned them individually when they came to the French bank, especially when they came to attend the end of mourning festivities in Boniville in October, 1957. The Kotika census is less [128] exact than that of the French villages, and in addition we were [126] not able to make a plan of the village. For this reason we have not reproduced it in the present work, where only the corresponding genealogical table appears.

601 So-and-so, and So-and-so, can be regarded as sure. On the other
128 hand, we have considered that there was a break in the genealogy when, going back in time, we arrived at this single datum: Ma X... was the sister of Ma Y..., for it could be a question of kinship in the classificatory sense.

No form of birthright existing among the Boni, there is some uncertainty about the order of birth of brothers and sisters for persons long dead. We have adopted the order kept by oral tradition without trying to rectify it.

613 In many African populations a special tradition is connected
814 with perpetuating the memory of the founder, at least his name,
829 the place of his grave. With the present-day Boni absolutely nothing like this is found; they are not concerned in any way with the true foundress of their lineage; no memory, no legend, not even a name has come down to them. It even seems as though these distant ancestors interest them little because they are less able to act in behalf of their present-day descendants. Indeed, with each new generation the memory of an ancient one dies out.
173 On our first trip in 1948 we called attention, unfortunately without [126] noting them down precisely, to /43/ very interesting oral traditions going back to the time of slavery, especially the names of the slave-owners who showed themselves to be the most cruel. In [814] 1952 the last old man who knew them had died; the very memory of what he had said was already effaced.

829 As a matter of fact, Boni thought, strictly practical and 602 utilitarian, is concerned principally with keeping the memory of the part of the genealogy indispensable to the living to know their kinship ties. Memory of women whose posterity has died out and of men who did nothing remarkable is dead from the second generation on.

114 Since none of the travelers of the 19th century understood
613 the importance of taking genealogies, it is probable that the names

[126] Several cases of wisi. We transcribe these affairs as they were related to us, placing ourselves in the perspective of the narrator, without making any judgment as to the nature of the facts and their probability.

N... affair. -- N..., of Kotika, was working gold with another Boni. After they had eaten /242/ together, the latter was taken with uncontrollable vomiting, then he died. His near relatives blamed N..., accusing him of wisi. In the night N... took refuge at Benzdorp and took passage on a Djuka [167] boat which was going down the river. He settled in Paramaribo. Since then his sister T... has gone to join him. They have left the Boni for good.

P... affair. -- Toko (Dipélu II), while boating on the lower river, wagered one morning with his friend Kwami (who told us the story) to stay in a dive for the time necessary to fill a five-liter demijohn; bet taken; Toko did not come back up, he had drowned. His body was found the next day. The family
[578] blamed one P..., of Kotika village, whose wife N... had left him to marry Toko and who at the time had made threats.
[683] They insulted him, they presented Toko's decomposed body to him: "Eat him, since thou hast killed him like game." P... stubbornly denied it. The grand man commanded that he be left alone, turning him over to Odun to punish if he were guilty. As a matter of fact, some time afterward, P... died and was declared wisimã.

[464] S... affair. -- About 1955, S..., of Kotika, about 60 years old, was working with Kwau weeding the clearings of a Benzdorp Creole who raised oxen. One morning this cattle-raiser saw one of his oxen covered with blood coming from wounds which bore tooth marks and could not have been made by bats. He followed the traces of blood which led him to S...'s hammock.

796 At seven o'clock, about ten men assemble at the fraga
769 tiki. They pour water first, then tafia, while uttering the 539 prayer whose whole text follows, taken from a tape recording:
[126] Fintiman (pouring the water):

"Ancestors, hail! We have come to you; it is for the new year that we have come to you! as you yourselves used to do when you were (alive). May God protect us until the new year comes back again; thus it is that you yourselves used to pour the water on behalf of the ancestors. We have come to our place of prayer to speak with you, to ask you to carry our words to God."

(The same formulas are repeated several times.)

Lébiman:

"It has arrived, God's day. As for the grand man himself, a slight hindrance has come to him, he could not come, but it is not that he is no longer interested in the village."

[765] audience and to create an atmosphere of participation in the rite.

This ritual character makes it so that the Anansi Toli cannot be recited any time and in any old way. The story-teller may speak only at night, in the presence of a respondent and of an audience of at least two or three persons. A ritual formula: "dirinti" -- the response of the audience: "ndaeti," [124] precedes each new story. It is only with extreme repugnance [126] that informants consent to listen to and comment in the day-[761] time on a tale recorded on tape, particularly if their parents are still living, for it is said among the Refugee Blacks as in Black Africa that telling stories in full daylight makes one's father and mother die.

[174] These tales belong to an authentically African [177] accumulated store, practically unchanged in spite of the borrowing from the Creole Blacks of Paramaribo of several themes concerning automobiles, steamboats, etc., inserted in droll fashion into the traditional themes.

The usual hero of these tales is Anansi, the crafty one. [825] Anansi is the name of the Mygale spider (1). It is noteworthy, however, that this spider does not appear to play any special role in the beliefs of the Refugee Blacks and that no divinatory power is attributed to it. In fact, in the tales of which he is the hero, Anansi is nearly always represented as a man.

[171] 1. The spider cycle is characteristic of the Akan (Agni-Baoulé-Abron) culture area. Anansi is the name of the Mygale spider among the Agni.

538 Doubtless for the same reason, nothing is found in most of these tales which brings to mind a moral inspired by a concept of good and evil. Now it is the thief and the swindler who triumph, now they find one cleverer than they. It is easy to see that for the storyteller all that is on the same plane; he simply guided his story on what seemed to him most amusing. [522] As for the audience, it always laughs at the loser. One single tale out of 14 (No. 1) expresses a practical moral: "That is why you must not deceive people, for there are people who are cleverer than you."

Most of the tales and proverbs have already been heard many a time by the Refugee Blacks without that lessening their pleasure. More than the story itself, they appreciate the verve of the storyteller, his mimicking talent, the always new variations he knows how to give of a hackneyed theme.

538 All these tales were recorded with the tape recorder and then were studied carefully with respect to vocabulary and syntax. We have stayed very close to the actual wording and as far as possible have kept the special Aluku turns of phrase, especially African interjections which reinforce the verbs. The tedious passages which had to be summarized are put in parentheses. Tales nos. ten to 14 are summarized.

occur among the Saramacca people. Nothing has been included either in descriptive detail, in the spoken or unspoken thoughts attributed to a Bush Negro, or in characterization, which has not been given us by our Bush Negro informants or has not been witnessed by ourselves. If the thoughts of Moana Yankuso or of any of the elders who figure in the book seem sophisticated when contrasted with the simplicity of the material life of the Bush Negroes, then it is because the stereotype of the childlike, carefree Negro has been so widely accepted. The subtlety and astuteness of a man like Moana Yankuso, or of Sedefo, our chief paddler and the right-hand man of Yankuso's strongest rival, or of Apanto, the sorcerer, cannot be too emphatically stated. 114 [12]

In view of the political factions on the river, and our concern lest these make capital of the fact that a village had been generous in the confidences given the whites, several villages do not appear under their own names. For Headman Moana Yankuso was an old man when we visited him, and alliances for the succession to his high office were at that time already being formed, alliances which, since his death some three years ago, have undoubtedly been consolidated and made effective for the time when his successor is to be named. Villages, therefore, are in some instances given the names of rapids in the river, and not necessarily the names of the rapids found nearest to the villages of which we are writing. In this manner we have sought to preserve the anonymity of the villages without violating the authenticity of place names. Men and women, as well, with the exception of the priestess Amasina, Moana Yankuso, his daughter Wilhelmina, the bassia of his village, Bibifo, and the Captains of Baikutu, S'ei, and Dahomey do not appear under their own names, but under other typical Saramacca Negro names. 114 128

Work of the type we have attempted cannot be accomplished without the cooperation of many persons, and we are privileged to acknowledge here our gratitude to those 000

GLOSSARY AND LINGUISTIC NOTES

THE language of the Saramacca Bush Negroes is called by them the Saramacca tongo—the Saramacca tongue. Though there are many African words in ritual and everyday speech, the Saramacca tongo is essentially Negro-Portuguese, with a sprinkling of English and Dutch words. In the city of Paramaribo the Negroes speak taki-taki, Negro-English, though Dutch and Portuguese words are also found. The structure of the language of both bush and coastal Negroes is essentially African, that is to say, in all the borrowings it was the word which was borrowed, while the African idiom was retained, so that it may be said that the Negroes speak African dialects translated into English or Portuguese or Dutch. Simple examples of this are such phrases as "carry come" for "bring"; "carry go" for "take away"; or "hunger kills me" for "I am hungry"; or "one time" for "immediately." 197 197

For the correspondences between the languages of the Suriname Negroes and of West Africa, we have relied on various dictionaries and grammars of West African languages, and on our own findings made during our field work on the West African coast. In writing the words of Suriname and West African languages in both the glossary and the body of this book, the vowels have the "continental" values, not those given in English. It is to be noted that diacritical marks which would be necessary to indicate the strong nasalization that characterizes Bush Negro speech have been omitted from both text and glossary, in order to simplify the writing of native terms. Finally, we must 122 128 [194]

Finally, we must

128 [193] explain that in rendering the plural of native words, we have not employed the terminal "-s" that makes the plural in English, for in this regard we have followed the usage of Saramacca tongo.

104 a, he, she.

Abina, an important female ancestor. The name may be a modification of Abena, a woman's Tuesday name (see under Afi). In one village on the Saramacca, a dance known only there, called the binia, is said to have been taught by a female ancestor during the "running away time." This fact may have bearing on its origin, as it may point to an ancestor who had come from the Benin (Nigerian) kingdom. The people of Benin are known as the Bini.

aboma, boa constrictor.

adiosi, goodbye. From the Portuguese.

adji-boto, a game of counters. This is played in Suriname as it is in the Caribbean, and in Africa. Adji is a Dahomean word. In Paramaribo, among the Awka Bush Negroes, and in the Caribbean, the Ashanti name for the game, wari, is employed.

Afi, "day name" for a girl born on Friday. The corresponding Friday name for a boy is Kofi. These day names are found in bush and town in Suriname. They are met with in Jamaica and names like Kofi (Cuffy), Kwaku (Quacoo), Kwasi (Quashi), are known in the United States. These day names exist among the peoples of the Gold Coast of West Africa, where they are definitely associated with the soul, in the same manner as they are in Suriname.

Af'ica, Africa. This is the Saramacca pronunciation of the word. While known on the river, it is less used than the expression neng's konde, literally, "Negro kingdom." The word konde is used interchangeably for kingdom and village. The word to, for example, in Dahomey, is used in the same way.

Afrekete, a Saramacca goddess, whose origin is Dahomean. In Dahomey her genealogy differs from the one given in Suriname. Dahomeans say she is the daughter of Agbe and Naete, gods of the sea.

agida, the great drum of the Saramacca trio of drum types. In Paramaribo, when the earth spirits are called, a spirit named Agida is invoked as one of the earth pantheon.

ago, ancestors. It is said in Dahomey that among the ancient inhabitants this Saramacca meaning was known.

agosu, name given a child born feet foremost. The same name is given such children in Dahomey and in Haiti.

Akantamasu, the god of the ant hill. A Gold Coast name.

akra, see kra.

ambe, an exclamation said to be a contraction of the phrase "by my mother's womb."

Amusi, name of Dahomean derivation.

Anansi, spider. Anansi is the trickster in the cycle of stories which bear his name. The Anansi stories on the Gold Coast and in the New World are like the Br'er Rabbit stories in the United States. In the New World, aside from

It is therefore worthwhile in various respects to explore what is 241 being cultivated. The following summary has been put together 114 from the data of my own observations and from information pro- [128] vided by various Bush Negroes. This list is not complete; what is lacking, however, is probably of minor importance.

A. Cultivated Crops That Are Grown on the Food Grounds

244 Bitter cassava (kasàba).

[262] This is the most important crop, from which the cassava bread and kwak are made. One plants the shoots in December, but also in March and April. After 12 months the harvest begins; in case of a food shortage they are dug after only seven months. Yellow and white varieties are distinguished according to the color of the contents of the tubers. To the yellow varieties belong: witti tiki, which is kept on the grounds up to two years, blaka tiki, which stands on the grounds only one year, and taja tiki, which provides produce for a long time and is especially good for the making of kwak. To the white varieties belong: amosiang, sanang kasaba, [252] and domberi. Cassava bread is made from this. In the making of kwak all the colors are mixed together in order to obtain the desired yellow color. Each variety separately provides a less tasty product.

252 On the Marowijne one makes more kwak (kwaka) than cassava [184] bread, while on the Surinam River and the Saramacca only cassava bread /a map and Figs. 1-14 appear here/ /145/ is baked with the flour. Kwak is prepared in the following manner: The tubers, after they are peeled, are put in water in a korjaal (1) for two 128 Fertility. We have classed the women, according to the year of 163 birth, into four categories, for fertility has varied considerably in the course of time. The study has been made by five-year age-blocks. The table below /see p. 16 / shows the cumulative fertility (total of figures obtained for the various age-blocks from 15 to 50 years of age). For the women of categories three and four, the number obtained is the result of an extrapolation.

842 Among the Boni there is no custom leading to a diminution of fertility, and the voluntary restriction of births is unknown.

163 The vertical fall of fertility between categories one and 164 two results from the invasion of venereal diseases, which seems [177] to have coincided with the period (1920) when the search for the balata brought into the interior a heavy traffic of adventurers
[831] accompanied by numerous prostitutes. The very free morals of the Boni favor the propagation of the illness, which, since that time, has not ceased its ravages, stemmed only, but not eliminated, by the medical effort of these last years.

163 8. In the evaluation of the net rate of reproduction (cf. p. 523), the 128 average age should be brought in; there is the danger, however, of this being overestimated as a result of errors in the ages; this is why we preferred to substitute for it the median age.

9. The calculation with regard to the women of category 4 could not, in view of their age, give precise results. We preferred to adopt the figure for the preceding category.

165 Mortality. The principal interest of this study is to establish the
● 128 curve of survival showing, for 100 children born alive, the number surviving at one year, five years, ten years, etc., until the extinction of the group. The life expectancy at birth is given by this curve.

For the Boni, we can make this study with the assumption that the lives of the individuals stopped on the first of January 1950, the date on which one may consider that the conditions which influence mortality have changed, above all as far as the children are concerned.

The study of the mortality of the children born since the first of January 1950, dealt with in part, will furnish useful elements of comparison.

Establishment of the mortality table. Taking up again the records of 193 women whose lives are completely known to us, and including the children who died in early infancy (10), we have marked down all their children, year by year, on a table.

165 Table of Mortality Referring to 1 January 1950 (10)

Year of birth	Deceased children			Surviving on 1-1-50	Surviving / Total children	Average age on 1-1-50	Deceased between 1-1-50 & 1-1-58
	0-1 year	0-5 years	More than 5 before 1-1-50			years

165 10. We were particularly careful in asking about chil-128 dren who died in early infancy, an important cause of [856] error in populations without civil records. The age of [862] the children at the time of death has been estimated according to the following guidelines based on the study

165
128
856
862

10. (cont.)
of the development of ten children born in 1956 and 1957: sitting up, 7 months; beginning to walk, 1 year (a remarkably clear guideline among the Boni); end of weaning, 14 to 18 months. Beyond that, the ages were estimated by comparison with children living at the time of the inquiry.

165

The survival curve results directly from these values. It shows the high mortality of children (30% during the first five years).

/522/

165 It is not possible to obtain directly a value for the survival
128 rate for ages beyond 55 years, but it is possible to obtain an approximate value from the age pyramid. Calculation (11) gives: proportion surviving at the age of 70: 30%.

11. The calculation consists of comparing the lengths of the segments of the average curve of the pyramid corresponding to the ages 55 and 70, having taken into account the increase in births between 1888 and 1903, deduced from the rate of reproduction.

Table of Mortality Referring to January 1958

/524/

161 Thus during the period 1895 to 1925, the Boni population ●[128] doubled with each generation. These results are confirmed by
(173) the study of the genealogies. The present-day Boni, with the [613] exception of about 5% of them who belong to recently founded lineages, are descended by known filiation from seven women who lived at the end of the eighteenth century.

It is possible that before the period to which this inquiry refers epidemics were produced and struck certain villages in particular, destroying entire lineages. In fact we cannot say anything certain about the evolution of the population before 1890. Let us only remember that this rate of reproduction of 200% per generation of 31 years represents the normal rate for the Refugee Blacks, in the absence of large epidemics and of venereal diseases and before any medical aid.

During the period 1925-1942, the Boni population did not vary (rate of reproduction $\frac{105}{100}$).

Since 1940, it has been increasing slightly, by 25% per 27 years, that is just under 1% per year.

163 Birth rate and mortality rate. Demographic balance. From 1
165 January 1956 to 31 December 1957, i.e., in two years, 39 children were born in the villages on the French bank (660 persons); and 21 persons died (including 5 children born during this period).

Rate of birth: 2.9% per year.

Rate of mortality: 1.6% per year.

161 Rate of increase: 1.3% per year.

The rate of increase of 1.3%, which corresponds incidentally to the theoretical calculation indicated above, is very much below that of the population of Cayenne and of the communes of [164] the coast. If one considers that before 1920 it reached the remarkable value of 3% per year, one realizes the extent of the disaster brought about by venereal diseases.

INTRODUCTION

114 101 [122] In the course of three missions of the Institut Géographique National in 1948, 1949, and 1952, we lived in close relationship with the tribe of the Boni, who supplied us with the bearers and boat crews indispensable for travel in the country. From the first contacts, we felt a deep interest in this worthy people, made up in the 18th century of rebel slaves escaped from the plantations of Surinam.

114 [121] Taking advantage of the rare moments of respite allowed us by our work, we tried to study the various aspects of their material, social, and religious life. The men who accompanied us were for the most part young men who had only a limited understanding of the tradition of their group: in addition, the geographic work compelling constant moves in the uninhabited forest, investigator and informants were more often than not prey to worry and fatigue.

[101] [121] At the end of the mission to fix the French Guiana-Brazil boundary in January, 1957, we were able to undertake a systematic investigation based on a detailed inventory of the population of the villages.

114 101 [122] A fifth mission made under the aegis of the Institut Français d'Amérique Tropicale (IFAT) from October, 1957 to February, 1958 permitted us to fill part of the gaps in our work. Some complementary data were collected in October-November, 1958 on the occasion of another trip devoted mainly to the study of the Indians of the Upper Maroni.

128 The present work is exclusively devoted to the social life of the Boni. The information we assembled on their material life and their art, as well as their demographic situation, will be the subject of separate publications. /blank page/

613 We have said that the recently founded lineages, being of 571 only very small size, cannot constitute a distinct social unit and are placed under the authority of one of the lo heads. That is not a condition imposed by force or any moral coercion whatever, but a practical social necessity. A lineage, reduced in numbers though it may be, keeps in the eyes of the Refugee Blacks imprescriptible collective rights; and if these members agree to group in a separate village and work separate soil, nobody will stand in their way.

128 Such are the elements which stand out after a first study of 613 the kin groups as it can be deduced from interrogating the heads
614 of these units. It leaves unresolved some important problems:
[115] The Boni have the idea that their kin groups are lineages
[829] in the real sense of the term. Nevertheless, questioning on genealogies does not permit all to /21/ go back to the founding ancestress. Three of them, the most important numerically, prove in this respect to be divided into several fractions. Can we be sure that these fractions are actually of the same origin and that the people concerned are not deceiving themselves in believing it? In the social structure of the Refugee Blacks are there no mechanisms leading toward assimilation, to fusion of groups of heterogeneous origin?

We cannot answer these questions directly. First of all it is indispensable to study the conception that the Boni have of kinship ties within the matrilineage. Then we shall examine the genealogical tables of the various lineages, and for those that the study of genealogies shows to be divided into several fractions, we shall study the interrelations of these fractions.

601 Kinship within the matrilineage: The kinship terms translate a 613 purely classificatory system. The principle of classificatory kinship

613 614 Not one of the members of the group could trace back to the common ancestress; yet these three fractions together behave as [601] [784] a single lineage. All its members know their mutual appellations "brother," "uncle," etc. All are subject to the same kunu.

The law of exogamy is respected within each fraction, but 613 614 there are seven cases of unions between members of different 582 183 fractions; these unions are disapproved of in principle, but they are tolerated.

Thus, on the subject of exogamy, we see the thought of the Refugee Blacks breaks away from the rigorous principle on which their social order is based. It is the actually known genealogy which counts in their eyes on this point.

613 614 In December, 1958 we were able to reconstitute the complete genealogy of the group (Fig. 4), thanks to the memories of 128 the doyenne of the group, Ma Imma, who had lived for a very [115] long time isolated in a village of the Maroni estuary. The data [601] thus reconstituted are in complete agreement with the kinship appellations among members of the various fractions. /24/

/Fig. 4 appears here. /

The case of the Kotika lineage is thus particularly interesting, for we find ourselves knowing its genealogy completely when its members know it no more than partially.

613 614 Study of this group shows that the forgetting of kinship ties [602] has no effect on the physical grouping of the lineage and its functioning as a social unit.

It has direct repercussions only on the observation of the principle of exogamy. Thus the way in which exogamy is understood and observed appears to us from now on as a secondary criterion having no certain value for the recognition of a common origin.

[621] Some Djuka and Saramaka have settled among the members of the Kotika lineage, but as individuals.

[621] The Lapé (La Paix) lineage, whose name alludes to one of the great plantations of the Cottica River in the 18th century, is

125 In spite of the relations of trust developed between the Boni
[123] and ourselves in the course of the work carried out together during four long missions, we were able to take this census only progressively and indirectly, by using simultaneously the following procedures:

—Study of the genealogy of the groups, going up from woman to woman up to the founding ancestress, then going back down from her. These genealogical tables, some of which extend [166] over nine generations and include more than 160 persons, brought
[136] to light a certain number of temporarily absent people and individuals who lived away from the villages, isolated in the middle of the Creole gold miners, but continuing to make up part of their group; they also brought to light a certain number of young people and orphan children taken in by distant relatives who would not have spoken about them directly. But on this point, gaps remain;

[126] —Detailed plan of the villages and interrogation of the village heads as to the persons living in each house;

—Interrogation of the women about their dead and surviving children;

—General verification with the help of perfectly trustworthy informants who possessed a thorough knowledge of the genealogy of the groups.

The census, stopped on January 1, 1958, covered 811 per-[162] sons of whom 667 /41/ were from the villages of the French bank and 144 from the Surinam bank (Kotika). As for the latter, we [165] questioned them individually when they came to the French bank, especially when they came to attend the end of mourning festivities in Boniville in October, 1957. The Kotika census is less
[128] exact than that of the French villages, and in addition we were [126] not able to make a plan of the village. For this reason we have not reproduced it in the present work, where only the corresponding genealogical table appears.

621 The principle behind the constitution of the Boni villages
613 is, as we have said, the localization of the matrilineage. Men
[591] and women live in the village of their maternal kin; the wife does not leave her village to join her husband, who comes to visit her from time to time without ceasing, himself, to live in the midst of his own lineage.

The composition of each village thus corresponds, at least in principle, to the group of living people on the genealogical table. But a certain number of exceptions are observed:

[167] -A certain number of men (about 20 out of 800 persons) have emigrated for good and can no longer be counted in the population of the villages;

[619] -On the other hand, a dozen Djuka and Saramaka married
[591] to Boni women have settled permanently in the villages and have been included in the census.

125 We have tried to estimate with as much precision as possible
128 the age of the people concerned, by means of events of known
[173] date which they remember, from the trip of the explorer Crevaux (1878) to the war 1939-45. We have established a local chronology, reproduced as an appendix at the end of the present chapter.

125 The demographic survey, which has been the subject of another publication (1), was conducted parallel with the sociological investigation.

[113] 1. "Etude démographique comparée des Noirs Réfugiés Boni et des Indiens Oayana du Haut-Maroni /Comparative Demographic Study of the Boni Refugee Blacks and the Oayana Indians of the Upper Maroni/," in Population, éditions de l'INED, 1959, No. 3. 2

2 [See 5: Hurault, This file-- Analyst.]

125 We estimate the gaps in the census at less than 3 per cent.
[128] These gaps involve essentially the adolescents and young people orphaned or raised by others than their parents.

The adults over 35 years old were practically all known [648] individually to us. Children under 10 years could be counted very exactly thanks to the distribution of milk carried out since 1956 by the Maripasoula medical center.

125 Classification. The classification of the population was made by 128 village of residence.
162 For each woman we have indicated her successive unions and the children who issued from them. The sign † means deceased, the sign ‡ divorce, the sign ‡† means that the husband is deceased but after the break-up of the union.

The listings for women preceded by an asterisk * indicate that they can be regarded as complete from the demographic point of view (children living and deceased).

A double asterisk  indicates that the listing can in addition be regarded as complete with regard to successive marriages and divorces (2).

2. We avoided asking directly these questions to which the women replied unwillingly. The information was obtained indirectly by questioning brothers and husbands. It could be obtained complete for only about 30 per cent of the women.

125 The name of each individual is printed in boldface type
128 once where he can be considered as habitually residing.
162 Children under 15 are considered as living with the persons responsible for their education. If it was not possible to obtain accurate information about this, they are considered as living with their mother.

Each listing bears a number, for example Dju D7, making it possible to find again the individual's place in the genealogical table. In the example noted, refer to the table of the Dju lineage, line D, no. 7.

601 Genealogical tables. These are of unequal value according to the 128 age and the memory of the old people consulted. In general
[115] they go back to three generations beyond the oldest of the old men now alive.

[165] Since the Boni show remarkable longevity, and the average difference in age between two generations can be estimated at 31 years, one can assume as probable that the most distant ancestress known of each lineage was born between the middle and the end of the 18th century. For example, if we assume that [613] Kuluba, the ancestress of the Awara Bakka, was about 100 years old in 1956, we can take for granted that she was born about 1856 and that her great-grandmother was born about 1760.

613 The most ancient ancestress known of each lineage is certainly not the foundress. It is infinitely probable that the founding of these groups goes back to the beginning of the 18th century and that they were born on the same plantations where the ancestors of the Refugee Blacks were slaves; this would explain the names borne by the lineages, names which nearly always allude to a plantation or to a slave-owner.

601 In a general way, the memory of the Boni is very sure,
128 and the information given in the form: Ma X... begot So-and-so,

601 So-and-so, and So-and-so, can be regarded as sure. On the other
128 hand, we have considered that there was a break in the genealogy when, going back in time, we arrived at this single datum: Ma X... was the sister of Ma Y..., for it could be a question of kinship in the classificatory sense.

No form of birthright existing among the Boni, there is some uncertainty about the order of birth of brothers and sisters for persons long dead. We have adopted the order kept by oral tradition without trying to rectify it.

613 In many African populations a special tradition is connected
814 with perpetuating the memory of the founder, at least his name,
829 the place of his grave. With the present-day Boni absolutely nothing like this is found; they are not concerned in any way with the true foundress of their lineage; no memory, no legend, not even a name has come down to them. It even seems as though these distant ancestors interest them little because they are less able to act in behalf of their present-day descendants. Indeed, with each new generation the memory of an ancient one dies out.

173 On our first trip in 1948 we called attention, unfortunately without [126] noting them down precisely, to /43/ very interesting oral traditions going back to the time of slavery, especially the names of the slave-owners who showed themselves to be the most cruel. In [814] 1952 the last old man who knew them had died; the very memory of what he had said was already effaced.

829 As a matter of fact, Boni thought, strictly practical and 602 utilitarian, is concerned principally with keeping the memory of the part of the genealogy indispensable to the living to know their kinship ties. Memory of women whose posterity has died out and of men who did nothing remarkable is dead from the second generation on.

114 Since none of the travelers of the 19th century understood
613 the importance of taking genealogies, it is probable that the names

114 of the true foundresses and the circumstances of the formation of 613 the lineages (invaluable information which must still have been present in the memory of the old men at the end of the last century) are lost forever.

128 In order to simplify the drawing up of the genealogical 601 tables, we have eliminated individuals deceased before adult age.

128 Names. To insure the necessary anonymity to our informants
551 without diminishing the accuracy of the statement, we have 601 changed a large part of the names. The fictitious names under 162 which individuals are designated in the genealogical tables as
[101] well as in the inventory of the population were mostly taken from the Djuka, who belong to the same cultural and linguistic group; in other cases, in order "to figure" the census we used a more complex process consisting in exchanging the names of two persons. Children younger than 15 are designated simply by an initial (1).

[648] 1. It is particularly disagreeable to the Refugee Blacks to have their children's names known by Europeans, with the exception of [123] the doctor. All systematic questioning on this subject runs into clear hostility.

114 Despite these precautions, we recommend that travelers
609 provided with this work make no allusion in front of the Boni to the facts related in it; the Refugee Blacks are very proud and cannot allow an outsider to penetrate forthwith into their family privacy. That would provoke lively hostility toward the indiscreet person and would hinder later work.

114 The table of correspondence between true and fictitious
128 names is held at the disposal of sociologists who may wish to conduct studies on the Boni.

Kormotibo and Asisi-Dipélu Villages

Dipélu II lo

[128] [361] We did not judge ~~it~~ useful to include the plan of the habitat of this group, consisting of two hamlets which are badly kept up and in decay.

[162] As of January 1, 1958: 62 persons, of whom 31 are children and adolescents of less than 16 years.

[591] Adult inhabitants whose residence in these villages is not normal:

△ Alémin 1880 (Afi lineage)	has always lived isolated
○ Magdaléna 1912 (Afi lineage) (raising 4 children under 16)	came to live with her husband Léon (Dip. II, † in 1954); remained there afterward.
△ Doïchiman 1934 (Afi l.)	raised by his mother Magdaléna, lives near her.
△ Dokwé 1938 (Afi l.)	idem
○ Gongolon 1937 (Afi l.) (raising a child)	idem
○ Mauda 1935 (Afi l.)	idem
○ Ninga 1899 (Papaïston 2)	separated from her group after a disagreement.
△ Bénu 1928	Ninga's son, followed his mother.

Total: 8 persons raising 4 children under 16 years.

/57 cont./

613 The descendants of O Monika † were scattered among these 621 three villages. Δ Kwau, the eldest, after living at Apatu until 591 the age of 70 years, moved in 1958 to Boniville; O Djalufu lived from childhood at L'Enfant Perdu, Cécilia was raised in Boniville where she has lived since.

Again, let us cite the example of the descendants of Wétiti (Papaïston 1). Out of her 12 adult children and grandchildren living in January, 1958, seven established themselves with her in the habitation she founded on the estuary of the Maroni several hundred kilometers from Boni country, two live in Boniville (where the Papaïston lineage delegated a few of its members to live close to the grand man), three came back to live in Papaïston. In spite of this dispersion, there is perfect understanding among these brothers and sisters who remain in regular relationship.

128 Emigration; immigration; founding of new lineages. It is not 167 possible to give rigorous figures on this subject because it is very difficult to make a clear distinction between temporary and permanent emigrants. It does happen that a man /58/ who left a long time before and on whom they no longer counted comes back to take up again his place in ordinary living. It also happens that a man who left for a short trip prolongs his absence indefinitely.

167 Nevertheless, it can be asserted that long lasting emigration affects only a very small percentage of the Boni, and men almost exclusively. Out of 810 persons in the census, in registering the names of their brothers, sisters, and children, we noted only some 20 emigrants considered as permanently lost to their group, including four women.

166 619 It is fitting to make an exception of the case of OWétiti (Papaïston) and OMa Imma (Kotika), who separated from their groups with their numerous descendants in order to found villages on the lower course of the river. These groups continue to consider themselves Boni; they are the nuclei of future villages.

For the same reasons it is difficult to get exact figures on [162] [621] immigration. About 100 Djuka and Saramaka have founded farming villages in Boni country but keep all their ties with their villages of origin; some 30 of them have married Boni women; one can estimate that some 15 have completely bound up their fate with the Boni and can be considered as integrated into the villages in which they have settled.

16 128 [562] All in all one can estimate that emigration and immigration of adult men, both very insignificant, compensate for each other; they have practically no importance on the social plane (since only the residence of the women has any influence upon the grouping of the lineages) or on the demographic plane; with the Boni the pyramid of ages constructed from the census of the villages represents very faithfully the demographic state of the population and lends itself to precise calculations of mortality (1).

1. It is not the same for the majority of African populations either because of emigration to the cities or polygamy. The presence of several average polygamists in a village is enough to render completely erroneous the counts of cross-sections by age.

166 571 591 613 The founding of new lineages results from the immigration of several Djuka women, some having come to settle permanently near their husbands, others brought up by their fathers in a Boni village. Half a dozen such cases occur in each generation, but

571 that he can protect himself only by submitting to the law of the 626 group. In this doubtless must be seen the deep reason for the im-156 portance attached to death and mourning, events around which is [18] centered the activity of the usual societies and which entail a [76] veritable mobilization.

626 It would be very difficult to condense the custom of the 971 Refugee Blacks into a rigorous code. If one wished to do it, one would have to write as Article 1: "The living will conform to the will of the gods and the ancestors as it is expressed through the mouths of those possessed and by the movements of the bearers of the dead."

613 Each one of the tribes of the Refugee Blacks is formed of a 619 certain number of matrilineages.

There is no limit on the number of these lineages, and it can be asserted that if any lineage whatever, detached from another tribe, asks to live in the midst of the Boni, it will be welcomed. From the first generation the children consider themselves as Boni.

In this regard one can cite the example of the Awara Bakka 3 lineage and that of the small lineage founded in Boniville by a Djuka woman, wife of Grand Man Ochi. All her descendants consider themselves Boni. /64/

[829] But only the great lineages which constituted the tribe at its [643] origin are social units recognized by the grand man, and only their heads are called to be members of the council.

● 128 We shall study first the interior functioning of the lineage, then the institutions going beyond the framework of the lineages.

Land held by right of use cannot be sold nor rented, but only loaned. Neither can it be transmitted by inheritance; this would be entirely contrary to the thinking and custom of the Refugee Blacks hostile to everything that would violate the legal joint possession of the lineage. Inheritance can affect only the harvest in process [425] from clearings. Once this harvest is made, the land can be occupied by any member of the lineage, man or woman, who wishes to cultivate it; and if there is any dispute, it is obligatorily settled within the lineage; the grand man would refuse to judge it. Kinship degree /78/ does not enter in, at least in principle, since they can say to each other "brother," "uncle," or "grandfather" in the classificatory sense.

423 428 The only attenuation of the rigor of this principle provided for by custom is that upon the death of a woman, her daughters have a right of priority to utilize her lands.

423 241 128 The Refugee Blacks have a clear tendency to remain faithful all their lives to the same clearings. The study we have made of the clearings in Boni country gives poor information on the history of each clearing, for it would have been necessary to be able to consult on the spot a large number of people, which we were not able to do; nevertheless it allows us to state that in the neighborhood of the residence villages, individuals keep their right of use of a clearing for the length of their lives.

42 241 Here is for example the transmission of rights over clearings 101 to 112 /sic/ (see genealogical table of the Dju lo) (1).

We were not able to carry this study out exhaustively because the great mass of lands cultivated by the Awara Bakka are situated on the Surinam bank. --Transmission of rights over land within the lineage fraction having the same residence constitutes an imprescriptible legal principle, to which one refers as the conclusive argument to settle every dispute;

/99/

182 161 241 423 613 That this system is perfectly workable has been sufficiently demonstrated by the regular expansion for two centuries of the tribes of Refugee Blacks and by the good functioning of their institutions.

182 Thus the basic instability of the Indians of Guiana cannot be attributed to the influence of the geographical environment alone. It comes essentially from social and psychological factors.

/100/ STUDY OF FARMING HABITATIONS

128 We are now going to study the functioning of the farming habitations under the same aspects:

--Structure (composition of each one, kinship ties);

--Territorial implantation: nature and extent of rights over the land;

--Functioning.

241 621 184 Not all Boni have a farming habitation; about two-thirds of them are satisfied with the lands they occupy near the residence villages.

241 621 361 162 613 The farming habitations we are going to study more especially and which are situated between the mouth of the Inini and Simayé Falls to the south, group about a hundred persons belonging to the Dju, Lapé, Awara Bakka, and Papaïston lineages. Another group of farming habitations situated a little south of Kormotibo, which we shall study briefly and only so far as their composition is concerned, bring together about 60 persons. Finally, other very dispersed farming habitations exist, belonging principally to the Kotika lineage, some in the Maripasoula region, others in the Abattis-Kotika Falls /region/.

241 184 621 [361] [162] On the whole, the Boni farming habitations cannot be compared either as to importance or stability with the Djuka farming villages which are placed at intervals on the middle course of the Maroni, grouping 3,000 to 3,500 persons: this is easy to understand: the Djuka, continually short of land, are obliged,

[553] and supplanting the others, but in numerous cases the names are used concurrently; in general an individual is designated among his maternal relatives by his pikin nɛm, while the people of other villages designate him by his gaã nɛm or by a cognomen. It has happened to us many a time in the course of the same conversation to hear the same individual designated by two or three different names.

[125] It goes without saying that this custom makes any census
[128] of the Refugee Blacks impracticable, for as long as one does not know individually the members of a lineage and their genealogy, it is impossible to understand anything.

Nevertheless, one must not see in this a defense reaction with respect to the European administration. The Refugee Blacks find it completely normal to have several names at a time, for they do not have the notion of the identity of a name with a person.

Thus one of our boatmen was Fintiman to his maternal relatives, Gobiyo to his father and part of his friends, Loamba to his paternal grandfather, and Nakiyu to his first wife.

55 Choice of names. Names are highly varied and their choice
553 does not follow any fixed rule; it is in the exclusive domain of fancy.

A large number are constituted of simple onomatopoeia: Tyutyu, Dada, Dodo, Dudu, etc. (which may be applied indiscriminately to man or woman). Dodo's mother explained to us the reason for her choice: dodo was the refrain of an air which often sang in her head while she was pregnant. /124/

55 Again are pointed out:
177 --More or less deformed European names: Afayèl (Rafaèl), Modèl, Pasensi (Patience), Félisi (Félix), Sophie, Toïna (Antonia). Certain names are deformed European proper names; for example: Sota for Chotard (name of an official in Saint-Laurent);

/134 cont./

429 Until very recent times the authority of the guardian had 561 remained very strong and was prolonged very late; he had the
[861] right to strike his ward to make him obey, and he exercised his [582] powers until the time when, judging the child's education finished, he authorized him to marry, which formerly seldom happened before 25-27 years.

Fintiman (of Boniville), about 50 years old in 1958, tells that his father, entrusted with his upbringing, did not authorize him to marry before he was completely established as a carpenter and boat-builder, at about the age of 27. Until that age he remained subject to the most tyrannical authority; his father intended especially to forbid him to go out in the evening, and in order to carry on a clandestine affair he had to use nocturnal fishing expeditions as a pretext!

429 When a boy's guardian judges his education finished, he 884 helps him to build his house and gives him tools, a trunk containing clothes, and a hammock. Henceforward the boy must make his own way in life.

429 All during his lifetime he will continue to show the greatest 576 respect to the person who raised him and often, speaking of that
601 person, he will say: "my father" or "my mother."

601 When a Refugee Black says in the course of a conversation, "My father used to do this," he often means the man who brought him up; if he wishes to speak of his true father, he will say, "My own father who made me." Likewise when he says "My [128] grandfather," he usually means a great-uncle. This confusion
[114] makes research on family life risky as long as one does not
[593] possess any census by names; apparently it has led several authors into error, making them believe that among the Refugee Blacks the father brings up his children himself, when this is on the contrary the exception.

586 [163] Likewise Pééchina, about 70 years old in 1957, separated from Nachinengé (Kotika) after having spent the greatest part of her life with him and having six children by him.

In order to be able to break thus a long standing union without undergoing moral collapse, it is certainly necessary for the affectivity of each one to be entirely centered on his maternal family.

586 124 Frequency of divorce. This essential aspect of the social life of the Refugee Blacks is not easy to lay hold on by direct interrogation. The women do not willingly talk about their past unions and let go in silence the ones which remained childless. However, we were able to reconstitute with rather great certainty the past life of about a hundred women (mothers, near relatives, or wives of our most reliable informants). These men /"women" -- printing error. -- Tr./ are marked with a double asterisk  in the population list of the villages.

[178] It is useful to classify them by age groups relating to the year of birth, for we shall see that the frequency of divorce seems to have increased with time. The groups chosen are the same as for the demographic investigation which we carried on parallel to the sociological study:

586 The estimate of the average number of divorces for women
[128] born before 1896 is probably lower than the actual number, their first divorces not being well known to our informants. It is probably in the neighborhood of two.

586 The increase in frequency of divorces among young women
593 is striking. It is related to the weakening of the authority, very 178 strong in former times, exercised by mothers over their daughters.

Here are two examples concerning two girls we have known since their childhood.

836 Lomé (L2, F74, Boniville) born in 1938, began to cause people to talk about her in 1954. She was deflowered by N..., who did not want to marry her. Then she had relations with Asadam (K, Boniville), who did not want to marry her either. She was beaten; she continued to see him. Now this is extreme-
[558] ly shameful for a girl because it is placing herself in a state of inferiority with respect to a man, when her self-respect consists in making a contract between equals.

582 Her brother Amèmbé beat her, and she ended up by marrying Pitipiti (Aw.B.2, Asisi village), who formally asked
586 for her in marriage in 1956. This marriage lasted less than a
587 year. In 1957 Lomé divorced him to marry Djoni (Kotika village).

584 Aguba (D.u, G14), girl of Asisi-Dju village, born in 1941, had been proposed to with the customary formalities in May, 1956 by Païtiki (L2, Loka village), a young man of 18. It was 584 agreed that the engaged couple would wait two years. But 585 Païtiki did not wait and consummated the marriage clandestine-
[429] ly at the end of a few months. Lènga, Aguba's aunt and guardian, became very angry and beat her. She did not give her the pangi until May, 1957. The marriage lasted only a few 586 months. /157/ By the end of 1957 Aguba was breaking off with Païtiki and beginning openly to look for adventures.

767 According to the moral law of the Refugee Blacks, all work must be paid for. The work of the ɔlɔmã and kisimã is no exception to the rule: the dead person must pay for what is done for him; to this end, his brothers appropriate pieces of cloth from his trunk (about 30 if the dead man was rich) and since that would not suffice, the relatives and friends of the dead man come to swell these assets by giving additional pieces of cloth.

If the dead man was very poor and no longer had cloth in good condition, the people of the lineage must give enough so that at least six may be given to the kisimã and about ten to the ɔlɔmã. If there are too few pieces of cloth for each one to be able to receive a whole one, they are cut up into small pieces, but it is absolutely indispensable for each one to be paid, even if symbolically.

764. Unfolding of the burial rites. These rites are complex, and the ceremonies in which they unfold are always very confused. Even if one is acquainted with the general idea and understands the language rather well, they are very difficult to follow. For [128] clearness in this account, we shall first give a résumé, which will be followed by observations collected in particular cases.

763 The day of the death is taken up by weeping and lamentations and the sending of messengers to the neighboring villages.

428 178 A tendency which has appeared during recent years in connection with men consists in bequeathing during their lifetime the essential part of their property to the children they have raised.

613 [787] Inheritance of functions and powers. Upon the death of a lineage head, the yɔrka of the dead man is asked whom it wishes to see named. Then the council assembles to proceed with the nomination; it remains free in its choice, the will of the dead man beyond the grave does not have the force of law; but actually, it seems to be most often followed.

As for the function of captain which is common to all the fractions of one lo, the inheritance may pass from one fraction to another.

Ex.: for the Awara Bakka lo, the succession:
Asèmbay (Aw.B.2);
Pèèyon (Aw.B.1);
Kondoku (Aw.B.1).

CHAPTER VII

BELIEFS

Origin of the Beliefs of the Refugee Blacks

771 128 The spiritual life of the Refugee Blacks of the Guianas is intimately bound up with their social life, and the division we are obliged to make for the sake of clearness of the account is very often arbitrary. So we shall try to point out these connections wherever they are essential.

/199 cont. /

581 The Refugee Blacks change their attitude immediately as soon as one speaks to them about marriage. Men and women are unanimous in considering marriage as an intolerable violation of individual freedom and as a tie without purpose; they talk about it with veritable indignation, even having the feeling of an offense against morality.

Cults of Possession

794

The phenomena of possession are extremely frequent
[171] among the Blacks of America (possession by saints or inspiration by the Holy Spirit among the Blacks of Brazil and the United [171] States, voodooism in Haiti). With the Refugee Blacks they make up the very base of religious life to the point of being the normal means of communication between the gods and men; they have profound effects on all social life.

The cults of possession practiced by the Refugee Blacks of Guiana differ from those of the Blacks of Brazil and Haiti and do not appear to be directly connected with the African cults which have been described.

[128] We shall give here only very concise information about the ritual of these cults and we shall mainly try to show their place in relation to the institutions of the Refugee Blacks, and their functioning.

787 Possession is believed to be the entrance into a man of a suprahuman entity (divinity, spirit of an ancestor) which, during a variable length of time generally rather short (a few minutes to several hours), uses the body of this man and expresses itself through his mouth. They say that the man has become the horse - hasi - of the divinity. They also say: "Such-and-such a divinity entered his head." The possessed person is called [114] gadu mã (gadu umã for a woman). This word has been translated improperly as "priest" in the first works treating of the Refugee Blacks.

828 Beliefs Concerning the Human Person and Its Development
Ancestor Worship

[171] The Refugee Blacks of the various tribes have precise and identical conceptions on this subject, which are found also, more or less mixed with Christian conceptions, among the West Indian populations of African origin. For them, man is formed of three elements: the body, the yɔrka which may be translated by personality, and a higher principle called akka.

[184] It goes without saying that among the Boni, who have not elaborated these conceptions and received them from the Djuka, nobody is capable of discoursing on them. But numerous con-
[128] ceptions having to do with magic and to the relationships with the ancestors permit of rather reliable cross-checking.

774 The akka. It is not possible to translate akka (1) by soul in the sense we understand it. The akka is an immortal divine element

538 Doubtless for the same reason, nothing is found in most of these tales which brings to mind a moral inspired by a concept of good and evil. Now it is the thief and the swindler who triumph, now they find one cleverer than they. It is easy to see that for the storyteller all that is on the same plane; he simply guided his story on what seemed to him most amusing. [522] As for the audience, it always laughs at the loser. One single tale out of 14 (No. 1) expresses a practical moral: "That is why you must not deceive people, for there are people who are cleverer than you."

Most of the tales and proverbs have already been heard many a time by the Refugee Blacks without that lessening their pleasure. More than the story itself, they appreciate the verve of the storyteller, his mimicking talent, the always new variations he knows how to give of a hackneyed theme.

538 All these tales were recorded with the tape recorder and [128] then were studied carefully with respect to vocabulary and syn- [126] tax. We have stayed very close to the actual wording and as far as possible have kept the special Aluku turns of phrase, especially African interjections which reinforce the verbs. The tedious passages which had to be summarized are put in parentheses. Tales nos. ten to 14 are summarized.

• 128

TABLE OF THE POPULATION OF THE BONI VILLAGES

as of January 1, 1958, arranged in alphabetical order

Classification. The classification of the population has been made by village of residence.

For each woman, we have indicated her successive unions and the children issuing from them. The sign † means deceased, the sign ≠, divorce. The sign ≠ † means that the husband is dead, but after the break-up of the union.

The women's listings preceded by an asterisk * indicate that the listing may be regarded as complete from the demographic point of view (children living and deceased).

A double asterisk  indicates that the listing can in addition be regarded as complete from the point of view of successive marriages and divorces.

The name of each individual is printed in boldface once only, where he may be considered as residing habitually. The total of the names in boldface gives immediately the population figure for the village.

Children under 15 years are considered to be living with the persons responsible for their education. If details about this could not be obtained, they are considered to be living with their mothers.

Each listing bears a number, for example Dju D7, permitting one to find the place of the individual in the genealogical table. In the example indicated, reference must be made to the table of the Dju lo, line D, no. 7.

Let us recall that part of the names have been replaced, by request of those concerned, by fictitious names.

241 825 particular suffers greatly from this type of ant, but maize, tajer, and bananas are also eaten. This plague is so serious that the clearing of a new ground is partially determined by the occurrence of the nests of these ants at the place. Normally these nests lie fairly far apart in the forest, but as soon as the crops of the grounds come within the domain of the ants, the nests grow rampantly. In addition, at just about planting time the ants produce numerous sexual forms, which, as a result of the cleared lands, have a favorable opportunity to swarm and found new colonies. The leaf-cutting ants are therefore "Kulturfolger" /followers of culture/.

As a result of this plague of ants, it is usually not possible for the Bush Negroes to cut extensions to the existing grounds for longer than two to three years. After all, the kapoeweri of the abandoned pieces of ground functions then as a hiding place for the younger ant-nests, and one drags, as it were, the ant plague along with one. There is no combating the ants, and through impotence the Bush Negro is forced to yield the field. This flight before the ants consists in the search for new grounds farther into the bush or, in case this is no longer possible for some reason, in the occupation of new lands elsewhere along the river.

137 136 /139/ Stahel (1) has pointed to the fact that among the Bush

[113] 1. Het Bosnegervraagstuk en het Coronieplan /The Bush Negro Question and the Coronie Plan/, Department Landbouwproefstation Surinam /Department of Agriculture Research Station, Surinam/, Report No. 9, October, 1944, 28 pp.

Negroes the older grounds change into a low second-growth, called by him "ant-kapoeweri" /ant-bush/. In effect, in many places where a dense Bush Negro population is found, such a strip of second growth occurs along the rivers. According to Stahel, this inferior bush comes 13 [114] about through the presence of the great nests of leaf-cutting ants. According to his calculation, at a density of six ant nests per hectare (a maximum which is confirmed in the vicinity of Paramaribo, but which, according to my own observations in the Bush Negro lands,

13 seems too high to me), the ants can bring into the soil each year two to three tons of leaf material per hectare. As a result the soil would be so enriched with humus and, in addition, through the construction of the numerous nest corridors, receive so much extra ventilation that the oxygen content and the microbiological condition of this soil would tend to differ from the mineral soils in which the virgin forest is rooted. As proof of this, it is stated "that even the oldest ant-kapoeweri directly behind the villages shows no tendency to grow into normal high forest" (p. 13).

114 It does not seem correct to me to ascribe this kapoeweri
137 phenomenon only to the presence and the activity of the leaf-
136 cutting ants. In my opinion the ants here constitute a troublesome contributing factor, for when the virgin-forest grounds are abandoned by the population and no new food material is available to the ants while the kapoeweri gradually grows into higher forest, then the balance in the ant population re-establishes itself. This process takes place at a slow rate, depending on the local circumstances, but it leads to the re-establishment of the original situation. There is, however, one condition connected with it, namely, that the forest be left in peace for a long enough stretch.
241 Now this last is not the case for the grounds area of the Bush Negroes.
134 They return too soon (within ten years) to clear grounds again, with the consequence that the soil becomes too exhausted and the recovery of the forest becomes impossible.

171 Proof for this viewpoint is already provided by Stahel (loc.
241 cit.) in his consideration of the agriculture of the upland Indians.
137 The absence of the ant-kopoeweri there is not a matter of a lesser
[136] ant infestation, as Stahel /140/ believes -- for in places this is equally serious -- but of a less intensive use of the forest lands.
[161] The Indians are present in small numbers (a few hundred, as against 423] thousands of Bush Negroes), while only communal plots are laid out for one village, and not different ones for each family. In 361] addition, the Indians move frequently in order to find new hunting and fishing grounds.

241 There is yet another factor which plays a role in the origin
134 of the grounds-kapoeweri. This is the use of fire in clearing the 137 ground. The burning of the cut forest is done at the expense of the humus on and in the soil. The fertilization with ashes that one obtains by it only partially covers this loss. Furthermore, under the influence of the fire there are great disturbances in the balance of the microflora and fauna of the soil, hindering the conversion of organic materials into inorganic compounds. Sun and rain bring changes in the structure of the scorched earth, which forms a cement-like crust and becomes sealed. Also the growing of cultivated crops, especially cassave, draws many mineral components from the soil.

● 13 It is clear that the soil needs time to recover after this disturbance of the balance. This period of time is estimated at 25-30 years. The leaf-cutting ants play a part in this; they again enrich the soil with humus by bringing great quantities of leaves into their ground nests. In addition, they ventilate the soil by digging numerous nest corridors. In this manner the ants contribute [242] to the recovery. It is well-known, moreover, that the soil on old leaf-cutting ant nests is fertile; one likes to plant bananas on it. If we assume with Stahel that in this kapoeweri six ant nests per hectare are found, then these nests together would only have a maximum surface of one-tenth of it. This would never be able to hinder the full growth of the forest.

136 That the leaf cutting ants occupy the secondary growth, or at 137 least are present there in greater numbers than is normally the case
241 in the forest, may be a consequence of the laying out of new grounds within their domain. Because of the lack of land, the Bush Negroes are constantly trying to lay out grounds again in this forest. The ants, moreover can maintain themselves because there are various forest trees that supply the ants with sufficient leaf material.

13 Thus, because of both the decreased capacity of the soil and 311 the presence of the leaf-cutting ants, the ant-kapoeweri forms a terrain that has become unusable for present-day primitive Bush Negro agriculture./141/ And from the standpoint of forestry too the ant-kapoeweri is worthless.

Social Structure and Way of Life

101 The Boni Refugee Blacks. The Boni are one of the above-mentioned
[175] tribes of the Refugee Blacks, reconstituted in the course of the eighteenth century by rebel African slaves who escaped from
B Surinam plantations (Dutch Guiana).

[131] These tribes (Saramaka, Djuka, Paramaka, Boni) live for the [161] most part along the rivers of the interior of Surinam. They group together a total of 25,000 persons.

161 With very rare exceptions, the Refugee Blacks are pure Africans.
[144] These populations, vigorous and well adapted to the country, have experienced in the course of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries a remarkable demographic increase, attested to by all the authors. Descended from small rebel groups which could not have contained more than a few hundred women, they are now estimated at more than 25,000 persons.

B
162 The Boni of the Upper Maroni, the subject of the present study,
103 number approximately 800, of whom 660 are on the French bank
[161] (the villages of Boniville, l'Enfant Perdu, Loka, Asisi, Papaïston, and Kormotibo) and 140 on the Surinam bank (the village of Kotika). These villages were established long ago.

B
613 Each of them groups together a matrilineage, i.e., the 621 descendants in the uterine line of one single founding ancestress;
769 certain villages know their genealogy in its entirety back to this ancestress, who must have lived at the end of the eighteenth century. The members of the lineage are united by the cult of the
B ancestors, which binds them firmly to their natal village and to [622] their land. The social system is based essentially on this cult,
[793] the chief of the village being above all the priest of the ancestors.

B Strictly speaking, there is no marriage, but only an acknowl-

161 The Oayana of the Upper Maroni in 1958 numbered about 240,
175 of whom 70 were on the Surinam side. About 250 others lived on the [162] Yari and the Parou in Brazil, altogether some 500 persons. They numbered about 3,000 at the time of Leblond (1788), and the explorer Coudreau around 1890 estimated them again at 1,500. All the authors of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries have noticed
R their further decline, but without understanding the cause.

361 The Oayana move their villages every ten years on the aver-
433 age. No cult of the ancestors binds them to their land; they are R only concerned about a favorable place for agriculture and fishing.

621 As far as can be judged, a village used to group together the 613 members of a matrilineage. There were two types of marriage,
582 one endogamous, between cross cousins in the classificatory sense,
591 the other exogamous; in this latter case, the man would leave his group to establish himself among the relatives of his wife;
R nowadays this principle of residence is breached by individualism.
621 Marriage and residence are entirely free. The composition of the 571 villages changes constantly; a simple dispute suffices to cause the
R departure of a faction which goes to join the neighboring village.
178 Nevertheless the social and political decadence have not had any catastrophic influence on the way of life. The Oayana remain
R firmly attached to their beliefs, their language, and their techniques.

241 The Oayana are above all agriculturalists; their very large 262 clearings are cultivated with great care and provide for them the essentials of their diet.

R
433 After agriculture, fishing is their principal resource. Hunting and gathering come next.

R
517 All this activity leaves plenty of free time for finery, dancing, and, above all, doing nothing in their hammocks.

R /512/

R Geographic environment; way of life; diet. The Upper Maroni pre-
132 sents the characteristics of the humid equatorial environment. Lo-
[131] cated at 3° 30' latitude, the country has an annual mean temperature of about 26°. The annual rainfall is about three meters, as against 3.5 meters at Cayenne.

/5/

CHAPTER I

MAN AND THE NATURAL ENVIRONMENT

The Country

133
[131] The Boni live along the middle course of the Lawa, principal tributary of the Maroni, above Abounasounga Falls. This region presents the same characteristics as the rest of Guiana: it is a very worn-down peneplain which, seen from the air, gives the impression of an immense plateau from which emerge every now and then isolated mountain massifs. When one travels across this peneplain, one perceives that in its detailed aspects it is very hilly everywhere; the terrain looks like an infinite covering of whitecaps of little hills as anonymous as the waves of the sea, whose always steep slopes end in swamps or pinotières drained by an infinitely complex maze of "criques" [creeks] (1); the shapes

1. In Guiana brooks and small rivers are called "criques."

and dimensions of these hills and valleys depend on the nature of the substratum, and their appearance on aerial photographs makes possible the drawing up of a concise geological map. The zones of "green rocks" are marked by much more important valleys and hills, reaching an altitude of 800 meters, with massive shapes and very steep slopes.

The other types of terrain most often lead to a very broken-up relief, the dimensions of the valleys and hills scarcely going over 300 meters, with local differences of altitude of from 50 to 100 meters.

133 This extreme fragmentation of the relief must be remembered
182 as one of the ecological factors influencing the human peopling most directly; it renders the transport of heavy loads impracticable, the establishing of roads practically impossible. Men are led to [361] settle along the rivers, which constitute the only routes of penetration toward the interior of the country.

133 All the important rivers flow into an alluvial valley whose 132 width varies from some tens of meters to a kilometer, dry during the greater part /6/ of the year, but flooded under several meters
134 of water during the great rains of May-June. This annual inunda-
241 tion makes the alluvial lands unfit for agriculture; the inhabitants of Guiana cultivate only sloping lands and even very steep slopes readily; for good drainage of the soil is indispensable for the raising of manioc whose tubers, which remain in the ground for more than a year, are threatened with rotting.

311 The cultivable zone is in fact closely limited around each village. Practically, it is limited to a strip of 1,500 to 2,000 meters along the banks of each watercourse accessible to pirogues.
[482] Transport of manioc tubers, carried on by the women several [462] times a month, becomes impracticable if the distance to be covered with loads is greater than two kilometers at the maximum (1).

[101]
[184]

1. The Djuka, very numerous on the Tapanahoni, cultivate as far as three or four kilometers from the river; but in general, the Refugee Blacks prefer to build farming habitations at a distance of several days' by boat from their village when this gives them the possibility of farming in the neighborhood of the banks.

experience of the American Indians, which seem the only utilizable ones in the interior of the country.

Thus these populations which are so varied have in large measure the same agriculture and the same food.

Basic crops are manioc, consumed in the form of couac (flour roasted and granulated) which is the base food, the Indian yam, and tubers analogous to taro (dachine, "Caribbean cabbage"). The Refugee Blacks plant mountain rice in addition. The Creoles do not plant rice but have on the other hand a greater variety of vegetables and fruits.

Men in Guiana live on the rivers; villages and cultivated lands are to be found on their banks; everywhere else one finds only the deserted forest; only Creole gold miners, constrained by their work, sometimes establish their villages far from watercourses. The Refugee Blacks, like the Indians, love the rivers where they find, along with water and light, the possibility of moving without hindrance; they are a people of canoeists; their traditions are widely influenced by life on the river, and their mode of living finds in this a deep originality.

In fact, setting aside the gold miners' villages, we can say that the populations of the Guianas living by exploitation of the natural resources of the country have a linear habitat: it can be estimated not in surface but in length, for it is limited to a band of one kilometer along each watercourse accessible to pirogues. These watercourses are limited in number, for one can take for granted that at a distance of some 20 kilometers from the source of each river, the congestion caused by fallen trees and parasitic vegetation prevents easy movement.

Actually, considering the very low density of the population, the small rivers are scarcely utilized except as fishing places.

All the rivers are interrupted by falls and rapids which render the use of large boats impossible. The pirogues of the Refugee

Since about ten years ago Creole exploiters without any outside aid have built up a herd of several hundred head, principally with an eye to the provisioning of the mining center of Benzdorp. F [508] The existence of an airodrome and regular air connections permits envisaging the export of meat to the coast. The success of animal F 233 raising in the Upper Maroni seems to be attributable to a rainfall [132] lower in total amount than on the coastal strip but better distributed, [311] as well as to the nature of the soil. It is principally on the floodable alluvial strip bordering the river to a width of 500 to 600 meters that cattle find the most favorable conditions, taking refuge on the neighboring hills during the three weeks of annual inundation.

F Winning pastures from the forest and defending them against [461] the encroachment of the bush represents continual work, but it [464] can be carried out on the Maroni far better than on the coast, thanks to the man power of the Refugee Blacks.

F One cannot yet come to a conclusion on the profitableness [433] of this animal raising. Like many other enterprises in Guiana it [435] is handicapped by its too high cost price which prevents effective competition with imported products.

B 101 2) The populations of the Maroni, descending from rebel slaves of the 18th century, who are often called Refugee Blacks, are divided into three tribes: the Djuka, the Paramaka, and the B 197 Boni, whose customs are practically identical and whose dialects are very close. These dialects are variations of Taki-taki, vehicular language derived mainly from English, whose use was widespread in the time of slavery and which has become the national language of Surinam.

B 162 The Paramaka, 700 to 800 in number, occupy the lower part of the course of the Maroni from the first waterfall (Hermina) 131 to the junction with Béiman Creek. They are not navigators but B 433 farmers and foresters, who furnish highly prized man power for the enterprises of the Saint-Laurent region. 464

/10 cont. /

162 The Boni, about 1,000 in number, occupy the course of the 131 Lawa between Abounasounga Falls to the north and the falls of the Litani to the south. Their "great villages," that is, their residential 36 villages, are: Agodé (Boniville), Kotika, Asisi, Loka, Papaïston, [103] Kormotibo, Lapé, and l'Enfant Perdu. Three small villages founded more recently are established on the lower course of the 563 Maroni. The territorial implantation of the Boni has been disturbed by the settlement of Creole gold miners on their territory 178 for three quarters of a century. Their demographic situation is mediocre and their tribal organization, compared to that of the [181] other tribes, has lost much of its strength. However, they still make up a human grouping full of strength and originality.

131 The Djuka, whose "great villages" are in Surinam territory
361 on the /11/ Tapanahoni, can be evaluated at 7,000 to 8,000 in [162] total. At the height of demographic expansion, their farming
[161] villages swarm on both banks of the Maroni and on the islands,
[648] penetrating more and more deeply into the interior of French [619] Guiana, where in places they form small temporary groupings living in symbiosis with the Creole gold miners; the Boni recognize their right to cross their territory but not that of establishing villages in it.

433 For a century the economy of the Refugee Blacks has been 648 founded on a symbiosis with the Europeans and Creoles; they furnish [464] specialized labor (construction, but above all, transport) in ex-
[465] change for relatively high wages. This economy finds itself [178] threatened by the gradual disappearance of gold mining; there is [166] developing a tendency toward temporary emigration to the Euro-[182] pean work yards of Saint-Laurent analogous to that of the Saramaka of Surinam to French Guiana. This is a serious threat to the interior cohesion of the tribes.

SOCIAL ORGANIZATION OF THE BONI

[3] [361] [133] Localization. The principal Boni villages have for 150 years been grouped on the Lawa (1) upstream from Abattis-Cottica Falls.

> 1. Let us remember that the Lawa and the Tapanahoni are the streams forming the Maroni. The Lawa constitutes the border between Surinam and French Guiana.

The limit of Boni country toward the south is vague. However, it is taken for granted that all the Abattis-Cottica belong [361] to the Boni. Boni farming villages and Djuka villages coexist downstream from the Abattis-Cottica as far as Abounasounga. Below Abounasounga begins Djuka country properly speaking (2).

> 2. In reality this is a zone of colonization, for the "great country" of the Djuka is the Tapanahoni. But the customary rights they possess on the Lawa lands are contested by no one.

423 643 [131] Traditionally, the Boni used to consider the whole of the upper basin of the Maroni as their domain or at the very least as territory under the authority of the grand man. Thus it was at around, give a strong thrust with the pole-stick, and the canoe was through—a bit of child's play. 502-484 n31

We were soon again to see Sedefo's kunu strike. This time it was almost at dusk. The men, it appeared, would not be able to make the village we had planned on for the night. In half an hour it would be dark, and here we were fully two hours' fast traveling from our intended destination. Overhead clouds were coming up from the east. The sky was rapidly becoming overcast. Rain—and everywhere the impenetrable wall of green, rising dark and forbidding. To make camp where we were would have taken at least two hours, and it was growing darker and darker. The men refused to clear the underbrush in the dark.

It seemed, however, that five minutes upstream on the opposite bank and only a little to the south of where we had stopped to talk things over was a village, the name of which when we heard it we recognized as one of the two we had been asked not to visit. There was nothing to do but to brave the displeasure of the Granman and stop there; so turning we headed our boats toward the opposite shore.

In midstream a great wind came up, a wind that in suddenness and force is only met in the tropics. The men shrieked and shouted and struggled until our boats reached shore. But Sedefo's boat, which was the second, seemed to be lifted bodily out of the water. We could see a black mass being heaved up . . . the black tarpaulin was overboard going downstream, and Sedefo after it. [132]

The wind subsided as quickly as it had sprung up, and when Sedefo came back sometime later, he carried the dripping tarpaulin on his head. He did not drink the rum we gave to warm him, but poured it over his hands and his boat as an offering. [187]

The next day we talked with Bayo about kunu. 502-484 n12

"Why is it, Bayo, that Sedefo lost his food in the still water? Was it because he felt safe and didn't take care in such small rapids?"

"No," he said promptly, "that's how kunu works. A man travels on the river all his life. He goes over small the uncleared bush, or the sight of a snake twined about a liana, no longer struck terror, and the flaying rains which came down so suddenly, and as suddenly were over, no longer even aroused uneasiness.

At the prow of our boat Bayo poled vigorously and continued his countless variants of the seketi song we had been hearing everywhere on the river, while Bibifo had made a refrain of our question, "How do you say this in your Saramacca language?" He would paddle in silence for a long time, only to begin muttering at the most unexpected moments, "Sa'macca tongo!" in the way of an old man who talks to himself. He would then repeat it over and over in ridicule of us, and sometimes in a singsong voice he would improvise lines about the white man who wanted to know how everything was called in the true, true Saramacca language, and how all that was told him he wrote down in a book.

"Great-grandfather," we would say to him, "why do you say this? Isn't it all right for us to want to learn how to talk to the G'aman?"

"Kere-kere—It's all right."

But having said this, he would engage Bayo in conversation, clipping his words, and using so much idiom and parable as utterly to confound us.

"Your language is difficult, great-grandfather."

"Ya-hai, it is meant for the people of the bush, white man," he would say with a pride we had not looked for from the mild Bibifo, who was now called Adrian. There was, it appeared, potency in the "word," and magic. The names for things, and the things themselves were one. The knowledge of Saramacca names belonged to the Saramacca people, and whether as Bibifo or Adrian, he was above all a Saramacca Negro, and a member of an important clan.

When we had been seven days on the river, our cook came to us and said he wanted to talk about something we had best know.

stopped to change their clothes, and make themselves fit for the reception by the Granman. 576

We had been warned that these preparations were not to be slighted. Those who had been to the village of the Granman told many stories of the impressiveness of the ceremonial life, and the dignity of those who were there. It was the seat of government, the home of a potentate. A visitor, whether a village chief or a man from the city, had to keep in mind that he was to appear at court. Etiquette demanded that the traveler, once arrived at the island which now hid us from the Granman and his assembled villagers, debark, remove the stains of hard traveling, and dress in a manner befitting the reception which awaited him. 576 609

But the gods had planned otherwise.

At this time of the year, though the heavy rains were over and the showers were becoming less and less frequent, it did sometimes happen that the clouds gathered at midafternoon and rain fell. To the northeast, behind us, we had seen the clouds massing, and now they hung low and glowering. 132

"It will rain," Sedefo called to us, just as we were making ready to see to a change of clothes, and an instant later the storm broke. With a kind of hurricane force which sent the branches toward the earth, and flares of lightning and crashes of thunder, the deluge was upon us. Not since our first days in the bush had we coped with a rain like this. The water poured down as though some giant hands were turning over endless vessels. Our tent seemed to have been taken as unaware as we were, for having sheltered us in many hard storms, it was now inadequate to keep out the downpour. We drew our raincoats tighter about us to keep off the water which came through the thatch.

Under the trees of the island the Bush Negroes were huddled. Their favorite top cloths were still in their baskets, safe out of the wet under the white man's tarpaulins. No chance now to put them on, or to use the oil which they had jealously saved for making their faces and 123 [302]

562 the river—the glinting light on the black skins, shining with sweat and spray, and the veined muscles that roll and subside as the dripping pole goes down, first one end and then the other, into the yellow water. Hour after hour they strain their bodies against the bending poles. Without warning a [132] heavy tropical downpour will blanket the river with sheets of rain, but the corials (canoes) go on. When the rain stops the hot sun quickly dries the black skins.

137 All along the river the foliage towers upward from the 502 water's edge. Great trees rear high their masses of limbs and verdure. Going upstream the boatmen stay close to the bank, for there the current, checked by myriads of roots, is not so swift. Often the men can reach out of the corial and touch the foliage. In sharp contrast with this green is the brown colour of the muddy stream. The sunlight glares on the surface, except where the overhanging wall of trees throws a shade upon the water. The black boatmen blend in with the yellow river, the green foliage, and the metallic sky.

136 Parrots scream overhead. A pair of scarlet macaws cackle at each other. Leaping fish shimmer in the sunlight, falling back into the river with a white splash. Bats from underneath logs, disturbed by human intrusion, disappear into the bank a hundred feet ahead. The corials are eyed intently by parakeets feeding high up in the air, perched on tree limbs along the bank. Little black and white swallow-like skimmers scurry over the water just forward of the bow, which keeps pushing on through the white riffles. Huge water-fowl flap their wide wings and sail gracefully away.

SUNDOWN on the Surinam. Women with breasts like 252 dried tobacco leaves stew hunks of red baboon over the 262 Djuka fires. The old dance gods will stir tonight. Mist is 132 drifting up from the river and blowing between the trees. Colours fade out as darkness falls. The atmosphere of the jungle closes in on us with the night.

As night falls a Bush Negro corial appears on the river. It 574 is followed by four others, all loaded with people from another village three miles downstream. The strangers have come to dance for the bahkra. We have promised them candy and high wine. The women tie bands of nuts about their 534 limbs; the dried nuts rattle.

They bring the drums, the soul of the jungle. The big tom-tom, elaborately carved on the outside, is the apenti, or signal drum. The smaller nanda and the baby baboula (an African 224 hardly more than shadows. We find the man unharmed,

648 excited and voluble. He encountered a puma, a large one. He fired at close range and wounded it. We see a track of blood, and instantly set out to follow it. It is too dark now; we are forced to retreat back to camp, blazing the trees along the route to find the trail in the morning.

[342] At camp the Djukas erect four uprights and a roof of palm frond, as a shield from the rain and heavy dew. Another is rigged for their own use, and the hammocks are slung underneath. Again they sit up around the campfire and tell loud stories, the same ones, probably.

000 Sitting by the campfire in the pathless interior, thinking of the hundreds of desperate and difficult miles of surrounding jungle, blue by day and black by night, in the company of a few Negroes without whom it would be impossible to return, it is difficult for anyone to escape a feeling of weakness and insignificance. One scoffs at the black man's superstitions, his amulets and guardian spirits, but in the bush at night one senses the overpowering magnitude of the fierce wilderness, one begins to understand his need for such things as a protection against the psychological powers of the darkness. We realize, of course, that there is little in the bush capable of hurting anyone, save some big cats and a few rare snakes. But, as a sceptic has said, it is not reason which governs men.

● 132 Late that night forked lightning lit up the eerie passages of the jungle. The corridors of trees were filled with wind. The branches, whipped furiously by the great volume of fast moving air, roared like an open steam valve. We are rudely 132 awakened by Daniels, who shakes our hammock violently. He shouts over the uproar; everyone must leave the huts at once. A giant tree close to the windward is about to fall and might crush the huts while we sleep.

We quickly abandon the hut and are immediately drenched. Imagine such disconsolate men, staring at the moving wilderness of leaves damning all trees and all weather that takes them out of their hammocks at two o'clock in the morning, and almost reconciled to the idea of being crushed in comfortable hammocks in preference to standing out in the open, expecting a tree to fall on them anyway. But in a short time the storm subsides sufficiently to allow us to return.

The next morning we break camp and trek another day 224 back into the interior. There are no camps now, no huts of 648 any kind, no men. Only the high bush. We make an early start to look for the puma that escaped the night before. There is a bloody bed of sheltered leaves where the puma rested, but the rest of the path is obliterated by the storm.

We turn and begin the trek back.

A curious custom widely prevalent among the Bush Ne- 224
groes is that called Dressy Dahgo, or dressing the dog, in 831 825

796 Then they call all the neighbors together to take part in the 273 festivities to be held, which consist of invoking their gods amidst continuous dancing and excessive drinking.

They begin the festivities only on a Friday and usually finish on a Sunday or Monday, depending on the larger or smaller [147] supply of drink, so, lacking this, the festival ends. After the conclusion they are usually extremely tired and listless and give themselves up entirely to rest for at least two or three days.

It is a definite requirement at these festivities to be very amply supplied with strong drink, because one must drink without [782] interruption in order to remain in a continuous narcosis. With each drink they first pour a little on the ground, -- so that it, too, on which they find themselves so gay, may participate in their enjoyment.

[262] The merrymakers then take care that they will by no means [577] be lacking in fish, wild game, bacon, rice, etc., since it is a matter of honor with them to display the most lavish hospitality on such occasions.

776 The gods that they worship are:

Loango Gado,
Papa Gado,
Cromantie Gado,

/13/ names certainly derived from the various African tribes of these names.

In the first two they glorify nature and everything created, from which it therefore appears that these are merely subordinate [787] gods of the unnamed, single great spirit. The last is above all regarded by them as the mediator who transmits their wishes to the great spirit; he is invoked especially at burial ceremonies and for consultation in connection with serious illnesses.

796 They do not have any other cult or religion, so far as I was [771] able to discover, but only the fixed habit of still celebrating to-
[132] gether and with their chief and captains on the first Friday of the new moon in the month of October or November, after the long [783] dry period has set in for good, a great feast that has as its goal a general atonement, to cleanse them of the misdeeds that they have committed.

121 The agriculture of the Bush Negroes, however, has become [241] a matter which urgently demands the attention of the administration as a result of the wasteful use of land. Until now little attention has been paid to this, but if one wants to develop the interior of Surinam, this problem will also have to be looked into.

101 The data provided here throw light upon the agriculture of 121 the Paramaccaners and the Aucaners on the Marowijne and the [103] Tapanahoni. They were gathered during the above-mentioned medical expedition and during a trip to the Tapanahoni in October, 1952. The facts thus refer primarily to the Marowijne, but in general they are certainly also valid for the other rivers along
121 which the Bush Negroes live. It is a typically Surinam problem,
648 connected with the circumstance that the Bush Negroes have worked in the deep interior in the same fashion for hundreds of years, independent of the life in the civilized coastal region and almost completely outside the sphere of interest of the government.

2. The Grounds System

241 For the planting of agricultural crops the Bush Negro lays out little so-called food grounds. One is to understand by this cleared pieces of ground in the virgin forest on which the crops
[311] are cultivated. The grounds lie along the rivers on higher flat lands, mostly terraces that are not submerged during high water or, in the absence of such terrain, on the slopes of hills. They are more or less circular and have a surface area of a half to one and a half hectares.

241 During the long dry season (October, November) the men
221 clear the grounds. Two to three weeks thereafter the forest that
● 132 has been felled is burned; the smaller branches are cleared away,
462 but the trunks are left lying. The ground is not worked. As soon as the rains of the short rainy season begin, they start to plant and sow. This planting time falls in December and January. The wives of the Bush Negroes (for only the women do the further work) now plant all kinds of crops at the same time on one and the same ground.

243 Rice (alésie).

Next to cassava rice is an important auxiliary crop. One sows the rice broadcast with the hand among the other crops and tjaps (6) the seed under lightly. The sowing time falls in December to February or March. In the fourth month the rice is mature. [132] The harvest time therefore falls in the long rainy season from May to July (somewhat later on the Surinam River). Only the ears are cut off, and these are dried in the sun on the grounds or in the villages. Only dry-land rice is cultivated but in many varieties, such as:

kasiwini, the best kind, with long white grains;
ajengena, with short fine grains, with pounding produces a beautiful white rice;
abalahede, with flat, round grain;
witti-alesie or paramakka-alesie, slightly colored in the ear;
lebi (redi) -- alesie, yellow as paddy, grows also in swampy places;
aloeloe or loeloe, sends out shoots quickly, has a good grain;
pindé-alesie, grain speckled on the outside;
asinkini, variety with long grain, is often planted.

/146/ Still other varieties are: rexora, saka, mabosoe, mooidà, sika-sirie, bakaté-saka, dendelei, mooimasra, wittifang, skati, blakatère, mesiti, pikienloeloe, trampoeloekoe.

[251] The Bush Negroes store the rice in the ears and thresh the paddy with the feet by treading on it after it has been dried on 252 zinc sheets or on sacks. The paddy is pounded in the matta whenever it is needed for a meal. Unpolished silver-pellicle rice /zilvervlies-rijst/ is thus eaten, and this is boiled in the usual
262 manner together with meat or fish. With a good harvest one has rice throughout the year until the following harvest, but frequently [439] the quantity is sufficient for only a few months. In case of a shortage milled rice is purchased from the shops along the Marowijne.

161 The Oayana of the Upper Maroni in 1958 numbered about 240,
175 of whom 70 were on the Surinam side. About 250 others lived on the [162] Yari and the Parou in Brazil, altogether some 500 persons. They numbered about 3,000 at the time of Leblond (1788), and the explorer Coudreau around 1890 estimated them again at 1,500. All the authors of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries have noticed
R their further decline, but without understanding the cause.
361 The Oayana move their villages every ten years on the aver-
433 age. No cult of the ancestors binds them to their land; they are
R only concerned about a favorable place for agriculture and fishing.
621 As far as can be judged, a village used to group together the 613 members of a matrilineage. There were two types of marriage,
582 one endogamous; between cross cousins in the classificatory sense, 591 the other exogamous; in this latter case, the man would leave his group to establish himself among the relatives of his wife;
R nowadays this principle of residence is breached by individualism.
621 Marriage and residence are entirely free. The composition of the 571 villages changes constantly; a simple dispute suffices to cause the
R departure of a faction which goes to join the neighboring village.
178 Nevertheless the social and political decadence have not had any catastrophic influence on the way of life. The Oayana remain
R firmly attached to their beliefs, their language, and their techniques.
241 The Oayana are above all agriculturalists; their very large 262 clearings are cultivated with great care and provide for them the essentials of their diet.
R After agriculture, fishing is their principal resource. Hunting 433 and gathering come next.
R All this activity leaves plenty of free time for finery, dancing, 517 and, above all, doing nothing in their hammocks.

B /512/
R Geographic environment; way of life; diet. The Upper Maroni pre-
● 132 sents the characteristics of the humid equatorial environment. Lo-[131] cated at 3° 30' latitude, the country has an annual mean temperature of about 26°. The annual rainfall is about three meters, as against 3.5 meters at Cayenne.

133 This extreme fragmentation of the relief must be remembered
182 as one of the ecological factors influencing the human peopling most directly; it renders the transport of heavy loads impracticable, the establishing of roads practically impossible. Men are led to [361] settle along the rivers, which constitute the only routes of penetration toward the interior of the country.

133 All the important rivers flow into an alluvial valley whose 132 width varies from some tens of meters to a kilometer, dry during the greater part /6/ of the year, but flooded under several meters
134 of water during the great rains of May-June. This annual inunda-
241 tion makes the alluvial lands unfit for agriculture; the inhabitants of Guiana cultivate only sloping lands and even very steep slopes readily; for good drainage of the soil is indispensable for the raising of manioc whose tubers, which remain in the ground for more than a year, are threatened with rotting.

311 The cultivable zone is in fact closely limited around each village. Practically, it is limited to a strip of 1,500 to 2,000 meters along the banks of each watercourse accessible to pirogues.
[482] Transport of manioc tubers, carried on by the women several [462] times a month, becomes impracticable if the distance to be covered with loads is greater than two kilometers at the maximum (1).

[101]
[184]

1. The Djuka, very numerous on the Tapanahoni, cultivate as far as three or four kilometers from the river; but in general, the Refugee Blacks prefer to build farming habitations at a distance of several days' by boat from their village when this gives them the possibility of farming in the neighborhood of the banks.

/7 cont. /

132 [513] The climate is relatively temperate and easy for the European to stand. In the forest the thermometer does not rise to more than 28° during the hot hours, to go back down to 20° at the end of the night: everyone sleeps with a blanket, Refugee Blacks and Creoles as well as Europeans. Humidity is very great during nearly all the year; precipitation averages three meters a year or about 50 centimeters less than at Cayenne. The year is divided into two seasons: "summer" from July to December, and the rainy season the rest of the year, with a maximum of precipitation in May and June. The water level varies considerably in the course of the year (several meters). The populations of the interior, spaced out along the rivers, suit the rhythm of their lives to the height of the water; the water rules transportation, fishing, and crops; moreover, a certain number of illnesses are in close relation to the rains, in particular those which have an insect for vector.

133 182 [361] [164]

241 [134] Almost everywhere the soil is very poor in organic matter and fundamental ingredients, very waterlogged necessitating the practice of an itinerant agriculture on burned-over areas; the period of fallow ground varies from two to ten years, the optimum seeming to be about six. [136] The inhabitants of Guiana cannot allow ground to lie fallow regularly because of the ravages of the manioc ant, /8/ which is active especially in habitually cultivated zones. [134] Vain and costly efforts made by Europeans notably at Saint-Jean du Maroni about 1950, have shown that the fertility of lands not burned over is practically nil. [242] The Indians and the Refugee Blacks consider that the fertility of the soil depends exclusively on the weight of cinders laid down during the burning.

When burned-over areas are cultivated, only one harvest is obtained; but this harvest is abundant, and the soil thus utilized can be regarded as relatively fertile. The knocking down and burning do not require great labor, so that primitive agricultural methods can be considered to give a good yield. As a matter of fact, the diverse populations of Guiana, Creoles and Refugee Blacks, have entirely adopted the methods of work resulting from the millennial is relatively small, and is localized in the interior of French Guiana, not far from the Dutch boundary. In any consideration of the Guiana Negroes, yet a fourth group must be kept in mind—that of the Negroes of the coastal region, who remained enslaved until their emancipation in 1865.

The country of the Saramacca people is reached from Paramaribo, the capital and port of the colony of Suriname (Dutch Guiana), by the weekly train which goes some ninety-five miles to Kabel, where the railway meets the river. From Kabel transportation into the far interior is by dugout canoe, owned and manned by Saramacca men. The country above Kabel, which the Saramacca people call the "big bush," is jungle. Over the watershed lie the Amazon basin and the forests of northern Brazil. Once in this region, the traveler has no contact with European civilization, though he is still under the protection of the Dutch Government.

The picture which we draw of the Saramacca people is based upon two field trips to Dutch Guiana, undertaken in the summers of 1928 and 1929. During our second trip we traversed the entire stretch of the Saramacca country from below Kabel, where the Awka villages are located, to the last native habitation on the Pikien Rio, beyond which are some fields, then uninhabitated miles of wilderness to the Brazilian border.

The ethnological work conducted among the Saramacca tribe of Bush Negroes and the Negroes of the coastal region of Suriname represents a portion of an investigation into the physical and cultural characteristics of the Negroes of the New World. This research, which is still in progress, has included field work in the United States, in Dutch Guiana, and in Africa, and some comparative study in the islands of the Caribbean. It began in 1923 with an inquiry into Negro-white crossing in the United States.[1] As the work progressed it became evident that the problem

ON THE SARAMACCA RIVER

I

ON THIS, the second morning after the burial of Sedefo's brother, Bayo started downstream from the village of Djamungo before daybreak. With all the vigor of his youth and the freshness of the morning, he pushed off from shore, and with sharp, short strokes ran his canoe into midstream and through the foaming rapids below the village. In and out, and in, went the paddle, until he was past the rough water which made a tumbling fortification for his village. His eyes wandered back for an instant as he sat there, taking in at a glance the dark outlines of the two silk-cotton trees which reared themselves above the line of matted jungle, and the gleam of natural clearing on the opposite, uninhabited bank, where trees stood singly here and there above the low underbrush. "Ai-yo!" he exclaimed half aloud, thinking how well it was with his village. It was good to have been born where twin silk-cotton trees stood and across the river from where the Apuku—the little people of the bush—held council at night. It was the Apuku, to be sure, who had seen to this pleasant open place, and no man, whatever his need, would put to use this land which the gods had accommodated to their own purposes. 484

Those rapids, too, were higher than any on the lower river, he thought, as he paddled vigorously in the still water. To have thought of the rapids at all, while going [133]

502 other bank, and now as we reached the opposite shore, we 484 saw the small opening of a minor channel which we were to take. With astonishing nicety the tip of the juncture of the main stream and this smaller channel was reached at the same instant. Loin cloths were adjusted, and once more the pole-men took up their pole-sticks and continued the slow passage against the current.

484 The boats were now again traveling close to the bank, so that the details of the forest which fringed the river could be clearly seen. Straight from the water rose the [133] wall of sheer green, all of a dark, almost dull purplish color—a wall of fifty, a hundred, a hundred and fifty feet and more, as the lianas dropped down from the upper branches of the great trees which gave these parasitic growths their support. Here and there we saw a brilliant wing of a bird, and a Bush Negro, ever ready to augment [411] his meager food supply, would unlimber an ancient shotgun, steady himself, and shoot. In Sedefo's canoe, Angita, his pole-man, saw a blue and golden macaw silhouetted as it sat on a slender branch. Out came the shotgun. The macaw, startled but unhit, flew to another branch farther upstream. We crept slowly, noiselessly ahead, and when we were close by Angita shot again, and missed again. The macaw now did not trouble to fly away, and when Angita made aim once more, Sedefo stopped him.

[825] "No, mati—Let him be, friend. The gods are protecting him. Put away your gun."

Again we cut across, as we regained the wide channel, this time so that the men might speak their errand to the spirit of their great ancestor, the god of the large creek. We did not go too close, however, and all we could see was an azang again, the spiritual guard of palm fronds, and beyond the whitened trunk of a tree and a slender stick with a bit of white cotton attached to its end.

Sedefo spoke conversationally. "Avo—ancestor—we are [182] going up the river. We are working for the American Bak'a. We are on our way to the G'ama's country. Grant was needful, and since then he had often made prayer to his boat, and the boat had carried him safely.

But this is what happened.

On our fourth day up the river we were on our way early, because the men said the falls ahead were difficult, and they wanted to be through them before they stopped to eat. It took us more than an hour to pass the rapids, for the land rose higher and higher, and the water cascaded from one ledge to the next, often in curving channels of swift water that were too deep to allow the use of pole-sticks, and too swift for the paddles to cope with.

There were also those stretches which were without the piled rocks to give the men a footing for pulling the boats over, so that a rope had to be used, and the going was slow and treacherous. Each of the dugouts had this long rope fastened to its prow, and ahead, on the first ledge, were two or more of the men, the other end of the rope in hand, waiting for the signal to start hauling, while holding on to the sides of the boat as they swam were as many men as could be spared, so that if the rope broke, the boat would not be swept downstream, to go crashing against the rocks. These men who faced the fast water of their river, worked as though at the sight of it their Kromanti fighting spirit had entered their bodies, as if not men were there, but an impersonal force pitting itself against the force of the river. Even where the water was not too deep, and they could haul the boat, care could not be slackened for an instant—a wrong turn, and the boat would be capsized, or, what would be as serious, the impact of a rock might cut a gash in its side or bottom, filling it with water faster than they could manage to bring it to a bank. But at last the sound of the falling water was behind us, and the men, once they were in the still water again, went on with the casualness that they fell into with their river when the danger was over, and cast about for a pleasant place to stop and eat.

All at once there was a shout from behind us. Each boat echoed it shrilly. What's that? Whose boat?

THE SHRINE TO THE RIVER GODS

I

ON THE narrow strip of land below the Mamadam, our hammocks were slung between trees whose trunks leaned well over the water, so that once we stretched out on the canvas, it was like swinging over an abyss to the rhythm of water wearing down rock.

133 At one time the shrine to the gods had stood on this clearing, but boats had gone aground in the falls, and rafts which needed but little urging when the spirits were friendly were swung about in the current and lost to their kingdom at the river bottom. Even now a great log lay wedged in between rocks in the middle of the stream. The water had worn grooves into its hard surface, yet there it was, held fast against the timeless flaying of the falls.

Nor was that all. One year when the time for the new rains came, the rain did not fall. In the villages the priests climbed the ladders within the sacred enclosures and from on high poured out libations to the ancestors, beseeching them to intercede in behalf of the living. Those who had river spirits went to the waterside when the moon was dead to dance to the gods. But the drums gave back a dull sound, and the dancing was listless. Those who plunged into the river to swim against the rapids while the drums intoned the exhortations did not remain under water long, and when they came up they uttered no oracles. Many who were known to be possessed by powerful spirits paced back her become pale again. This may happen to you when you get to the Mamadam." 538 776

As he spoke, he began to beat on the table the drum rhythm which calls the river god, and he sang, 776 533

> "Today, today, O Spirit,
> Hard times are upon us
> Ingi-o.
> Hard times are upon us. [539]
> Today, today, Boyo,
> Hard times are upon us
> Ingi-e."

And then he sang another song, which he said had been sung at the time when black people were running away from slavery, and is still heard at dances to the spirits of the river, the watra ingi, as the river gods are called in the city. In it, he called on the agida, the great drum upon which, in town as in the bush, the Negroes call the river gods, and on Kopsi, the name of one of the spirits of the water. This time he sang,

> "I will play the agida today,
> I will knock the agida today-o
> Kopsi will foil the magic
> Of the crowing cock.
> O, I will play the agida today, [539]
> I will knock the agida, today-o,
> Kopsi will foil the magic,
> Of the crowing cock.

As we gained the island where the shrine itself stood and looked about us from the high rocks of the sacred spot, there lay before us in the early morning light a scene of inexpressible beauty. At dusk the narrow strips of land which forced the river into three channels had been like dark machetes plunged into the body of the great stream. 133 [978]

REBEL DESTINY

133 But now a soft haze floated over stream and bush. To the right was the Ingi Sopi channel, dropping so sheer that not even an unloaded dugout could make its way up the rapids, not a single log of wood could be floated down. To the left was the Mamadam, a smoother, more rounded slope. It was up these falls that our boats would later be hauled.

501 484 Below us on the rocks our men were unloading the corials and carrying the provisions along the narrow trodden path to the topmost ledge of the falls, where the empty dugouts would be reloaded after they had been taken up through the streaming water.

133 Beyond lay the full stretch of the river. As far as the eye could see, there were none of the channels, none of the many islands which are met with everywhere on this river from its very headwaters to the reaches of the tidal belt near the coast. About us was a stillness which the very roar [136] of the water heightened. The parrots had long ago passed on in pairs. The butterflies would wait for the sun before they went winging from the east bank to the west. This was a moment of pure interlude. No sun, no breeze, no 000 sound, no glow. This was the moment before the fragmentary dawn would end, before the haze would lift, this the moment when night, having met day, as the Bush Negroes said, was disappearing from sight.

"It is fine here, ai!" Bayo called to us, as he walked on [482] with a large canister balanced on his head, making his way up the rocks with the sureness and ease of one who is strolling down a lane with the consciousness of a pleasant encounter at the next turning.

798 346 As soon as the mist had lifted, we walked up the rocks to the shrine. Facing us and the lower river, a tall, slender pole, weathered to a pale silver, stood higher than the roof of the shrine in front of which it was planted. At its top were the crude outlines of a head and, some three feet from its base, two side pieces were nailed to it and grounded at an angle to steady the image against the onrush of a sudden wind. A short distance from the pole was the shrine

A NIGHT AT S'EI

I

133 137 FROM day to day the mood of the river changed, and the mood of the bush changed with it. The dankness of the river bank gave way to the smell of red, sun-scorched earth. No longer was the farther shore the forbidding wall of a great canyon. The flowering lianas, as they climbed a hundred feet and more from the roots of the trees they had enveloped, were making of it a tapestry. The blooms which showed against the masses of green seemed at first of the palest yellow with threads of white, or yellow with glints of gold in them, or the faintest of orange and violet. Later when the flaming gold, the scarlet and purple clusters appeared, they still did not mar the somber weave of the timeless pattern, for the deep note of this bush in any season is green, and no pushing, garish colors, no conceits of turning leaves or fragrant flowers can sound an echo here. As well expect the brilliantly tinted butterflies cruising from one bank to the other to make a [136] whir in their passage, as to look for it to be otherwise.

The air, however, became steadily drier, the green more varied and pleasing, and the land rising and sloping gave an occasional glimpse of a horizon. If something in the shade of the river banks still spoke of the way of the constrictor, the sudden lashing out of the tail, there was now also the pleasant consciousness of its long lethargy. The swish of wings overhead, when we walked for short intervals through the uncleared bush, or the sight of a snake twined about a liana, no longer struck terror, and the flaying rains which came down so suddenly, and as suddenly were over, no longer even aroused uneasiness.

At the prow of our boat Bayo poled vigorously and continued his countless variants of the seketi song we had been hearing everywhere on the river, while Bibifo had made a refrain of our question, "How do you say this in your Saramacca language?" He would paddle in silence for a long time, only to begin muttering at the most unexpected moments, "Sa'macca tongo!" in the way of an old man who talks to himself. He would then repeat it over and over in ridicule of us, and sometimes in a singsong voice he would improvise lines about the white man who wanted to know how everything was called in the true, true Saramacca language, and how all that was told him he wrote down in a book.

"Great-grandfather," we would say to him, "why do you say this? Isn't it all right for us to want to learn how to talk to the G'aman?"

"Kere-kere—It's all right."

But having said this, he would engage Bayo in conversation, clipping his words, and using so much idiom and parable as utterly to confound us.

"Your language is difficult, great-grandfather."

"Ya-hai, it is meant for the people of the bush, white man," he would say with a pride we had not looked for from the mild Bibifo, who was now called Adrian. There was, it appeared, potency in the "word," and magic. The names for things, and the things themselves were one. The knowledge of Saramacca names belonged to the Saramacca people, and whether as Bibifo or Adrian, he was above all a Saramacca Negro, and a member of an important clan.

When we had been seven days on the river, our cook came to us and said he wanted to talk about something we had best know.

175 Now we were in the true, true Saramacca country, the land which the Bush Negro feels to be entirely his own. White men, it is true, had been here before, but only a handful, and the gods of the river, who were powerful, saw to it that of these not many got back to the white man's land. True, true Saramacca country! Every Bush Negro we met on the lower river spoke of it with the deepest feeling.

"It is all right here," one man after another had said, "but wait until you see the upper river, the true-true Saramacca!"

It was here that the first Bush Negro villages had been built, though this seemed fabulous to the strangers who, in strong boats, guided by men who were wise in the moods and courses of the river, had had nine days of hard travel on the way. The lower-river villages began to appear only after peace had been declared and had proved lasting. Eighty-six years ago men from the upper river who lived beyond the Granman's own village, in the Grand Rio, had come down and built the village of Gansee, which was some four hours' paddling upstream from the railhead.

We spoke of this to Bibifo, who himself was born in this country.

"You may well wonder, white man."

361 103 Here was no danger of having to wrest a camp from the bush at night, when the short tropical dusk came to overtake the traveler. Villages followed close, one upon the other. Here was Ma'lobbi, where the beauty of the wood [322] carver's art had made us linger beyond the time allotted to us for making the journey from S'ei to Asindopo Lantiwe. Here was Hei Kununu—High Mountain—which rose on a [133] steep slope above the river, and was pleasant to see after the long stretches of flat plain that lay below. Semoisi, noted for its riches, was there, and Pempeh, bearing a name well known in the Ashanti country in Africa. Here villages were so close to each other that they could announce our 203 approach on the talking drums.

"What is it we hear, Bayo?" we would ask.

"They are cutting down trees, Bak'a."

798 797 The other white man was the Catholic missionary who for years had been living in the Gran Rio. He was a friend of the Saramacca people, and they liked him. Now this white man wanted to see Dahomey. He said that he, too, had a strong God who protected him. He asked so many times that they at last promised to take him there. But when he got to Pempeh he fell asleep, and he slept till . . . till they reached the Granman's country. So his life was saved. The gods, knowing that he was a friend of the Saramacca people, did not want to kill him. They put him to sleep until Dahomey was well out of reach.

"And this is what happened to you, Bak'a. The gods did not want to hurt you, so you did not see."

• 133 Past these rapids and another stretch of rough water, and then before us lay the highest falls of the Saramacca. To the right, over a ledge of rock spreading in an unbroken sweep across its entire width poured the Gran Rio, the [361] river up which lay the villages of the Loango clan, and beyond, the untrodden jungle which barricaded the way to the country of the Indians, and the basin of the Amazon. To the left was the final bit of fast water that remained between us and the village where the Granman awaited us. We were at last in the Pikien Rio.

Here the stream narrowed, and we could see on both banks the people who were waiting to see us pass. The [574] gay colors of the women's cloths were brilliant against the background of green, and their hallooing reached our ears above the rush of the water. A canoe with several young men came alongside.

"We are here to help you with your boats. We have been sent by the Granman. Fire three shots to let him know you are in the Pikien Rio."

576 [201] We fired, and instantly there was an answering salute of three guns. With the reinforcement of paddlers, it did not take long to reach the island which separated us from the landing place of Asindopo Lantiwe. Here all strangers as they stood in their breech-cloths before the people, and 68 the purchasers walked up and felt of them to try their flesh 175 and soundness. The darkies were obliged to go through every sort of motion. It seemed at times as if their arms would be pulled out of joint or their jaws cracked by some of the Dutchmen. One dame was not satisfied until she forced a wench to screech by squeezing her breast cruelly. In two days the vendue was over. The grown men fetched as high as a thousand guilders and the boys and girls and women from seven to eight hundred, which were considered good prices."

The slaves were then put to work in the sugar fields. The overseers treated them cruelly and enjoyed it, with the callousness of their century; overseers in Virginia and Jamaica were doing the same with no less zeal. The planter's lash was often "incrusted with blood."

Inevitably some Negroes tried to run away. Near by was the jungle, a refuge from the white terror. From time to time runaway blacks succeeded in escaping into the bush. There they joined other fugitives, forming small bands.

The character of the country favoured them. The undergrowth is so thick that overland travel is impossibly laborious and slow. The rivers, save for a short distance near the ocean, [153] are unnavigable because of their torrential rapids. The Surinam, up which the slave ships sailed to Paramaribo, has seldom been explored to its extreme upper reaches; it is terra incognita to white men.

The fugitives were quite at home in the jungle. In this

EIGHT miles an hour the river moves, down long 133 stretches of rapids and fast water, over great rocks in the river-bed. Any sort of outboard motor would be torn to pieces. There is nothing to do but pole upstream in dugout canoes to the Djuka country.

Bush Negro boatmen, with glossy thighs and heaving 582 backs, stand at the bows. They plant their great ten-foot poles in the river-bed and pull against them. As the motion of the boat carries them past the planted poles, they walk back along the gunwales, pushing the poles to the extreme end. They are retrieved, wheeled in a great arc, and again planted in the river-bed. This makes a rare picture in the sunlight on 224 into the ground, becoming roots. The jungle vines, the lianas, 648 twine about the boles of palms, adding to the tangle of leaves.

137 The jungle is one immense struggle, none the less fierce because it is silent. The foliage is fighting for light and air.

224 We wade across a number of small creeks that bar our 648 path. Beautiful flat-winged butterflies hover in the hot air. The drone of other insects continues until our ears become accommodated to the sound and we no longer hear it. For five hours the trek continues.

At eleven o'clock a halt is called for lunch. The Djukas [132] drop their fifty-pound packs, under which they have trotted more easily than the white with only a gun and canteen. A little fire is started and we begin to eat. The creek beside the camp has no name; it is known only as a small tributary of the Lombe Creek. This is the occasion for a little ceremony. The stream is to be named after the first person to eat beside it, which in this case is a white man. A Bush Negro takes a mouthful of water from the creek and spits it back, motioning us to do the same. We comply. Then the Negro names the stream "Datra Cong Creekee"—"Doctor Kahn Creek." The others respond with solemnity, "Daso." We pass a few pleasantries and go on.

By two o'clock the fatigue is beginning to tell on the bahkra. A halt is called. The country gets higher as we leave [133] the neighbourhood of the river, but the bush does not thin out. The ground is rolling, with knolls fifty feet high. Up these the carriers scramble like goats, despite their load, but Daniels says they are going slow because of the bahkra. Be-175 pacified Bush Negroes. From then on they received from the 648 Netherlands Government annual presents consisting of guns, herbs, lead, tobacco, rice, salt, dram, and so forth.

648 In later times, however, these were gradually decreased
829 by the government and finally completely abolished, as a result of which the Negroes no longer so willingly and without remuneration want to be of service to the government; since they believe that with the conclusion of the peace they came to an agreement with the government that on their part the Whites would no longer be hindered in anything, while they would endeavor to assist the government whenever that should be necessary, in return for which the presents mentioned above would be handed out to them annually on the part of the government. At present they complain about their treatment by the government and refuse to believe that they can and may trust the Whites.

101 The Bush Negroes are divided into four tribes: /7/

103 1st. Aucaners, who have their dwelling place, Auca, on the 133 river Marowyne; and they have their working places on the river above Cottica, where they come from the Marowyne by way of the Wanakreek. Among themselves they are called Joeka /Djuka/ and by the Whites, Aucaners, after the plantation Auca, where on 19 October 1760 peace was concluded with them.

2nd. Saramaccaners, who live on the river above Surinam, principally near the waterfall Arasoebanja near Gjengjen and Prakieki, and have their working places along the same river and in the cove /kreek," creek, cove"/ Taaiboto Kouloegrou and Kassipora. They are called Saramaccaners by the Whites, after the river of that name (where they formerly lived), and among themselves Wousie or Moejére.

3rd. Mantoewari, who have their dwelling place on the river above Saramacca and their working places along the same river on Maripaston and in the cove Mindrinetie. They are names like the Saramaccaners, since they, too, although separate, live on the same river.

439 Thus it is known to me that they have gone to one or 501 another plantation in order to sell timber, which they tie to their 505 korjalen or canoes after having made it into rafts with bush ropes
[283] (tough liana stalks), and have misled the Europeans in a scandalous manner.

[284] They make their squared timber into rafts in the following manner. Four thick strong round timbers are laid crosswise and tied together, two above and two under the korjaal; the timber is pushed in between these and fastened, so that the whole thing forms a firm long rectangle with the korjaal in the middle /30/ with which they make long journeys from the upper to the lower [283] rivers. This timber that is made into rafts and carried along by the korjaal is called kokroko; they tie light and floating wood to long beams with bush rope (called boessitetei) (1); thus tied to the heavy wood they drag it along down the river.

Understanding among Themselves

114 Not long ago I found myself among them on the river
133 Upper Commewijne on the Tempati (a branch of the river named, on the left going upstream; this branch runs into the mountains, which are reported as ruddle mountains /roodenberg/.

114 Residing among them, I made many attempts to induce 648 them to track down those in hiding who did not belong to their tribes and fugitives of a later time, and to make known to them that by governmental decree in the course of the year 1863, before the emancipation, a general amnesty regarding them had been issued, so that they could return to their former dwelling places without fear of punishment. The reason that induced me to acquaint them with this was that I saw in the return of these persons

CHAPTER I

MAN AND THE NATURAL ENVIRONMENT

The Country

133
[131] The Boni live along the middle course of the Lawa, principal tributary of the Maroni, above Abounasounga Falls. This region presents the same characteristics as the rest of Guiana: it is a very worn-down peneplain which, seen from the air, gives the impression of an immense plateau from which emerge every now and then isolated mountain massifs. When one travels across this peneplain, one perceives that in its detailed aspects it is very hilly everywhere; the terrain looks like an infinite covering of whitecaps of little hills as anonymous as the waves of the sea, whose always steep slopes end in swamps or pinotières drained by an infinitely complex maze of "criques" [creeks] (1); the shapes

1. In Guiana brooks and small rivers are called "criques."

and dimensions of these hills and valleys depend on the nature of the substratum, and their appearance on aerial photographs makes possible the drawing up of a concise geological map. The zones of "green rocks" are marked by much more important valleys and hills, reaching an altitude of 800 meters, with massive shapes and very steep slopes.

The other types of terrain most often lead to a very broken-up relief, the dimensions of the valleys and hills scarcely going over 300 meters, with local differences of altitude of from 50 to 100 meters.

133 This extreme fragmentation of the relief must be remembered
182 as one of the ecological factors influencing the human peopling most directly; it renders the transport of heavy loads impracticable, the establishing of roads practically impossible. Men are led to [361] settle along the rivers, which constitute the only routes of penetration toward the interior of the country.

133 All the important rivers flow into an alluvial valley whose 132 width varies from some tens of meters to a kilometer, dry during the greater part /6/ of the year, but flooded under several meters
134 of water during the great rains of May-June. This annual inunda-
241 tion makes the alluvial lands unfit for agriculture; the inhabitants of Guiana cultivate only sloping lands and even very steep slopes readily; for good drainage of the soil is indispensable for the raising of manioc whose tubers, which remain in the ground for more than a year, are threatened with rotting.

311 The cultivable zone is in fact closely limited around each village. Practically, it is limited to a strip of 1,500 to 2,000 meters along the banks of each watercourse accessible to pirogues.
[482] Transport of manioc tubers, carried on by the women several [462] times a month, becomes impracticable if the distance to be covered with loads is greater than two kilometers at the maximum (1).

[184]

1. The Djuka, very numerous on the Tapanahoni, cultivate as far as three or four kilometers from the river; but in general, the Refugee Blacks prefer to build farming habitations at a distance of several days' by boat from their village when this gives them the possibility of farming in the neighborhood of the banks.

133 Flooding is very variable according to the configuration of the rivers and the nature of the terrain.

133 At the Creole village of Grigel, situated at the bottom of 361 a glove-finger loop of the Waki River, the June flooding reaches 171 a level of eight meters above the average level in the dry season; the Creole and Indian villages of the Waki are established on hills. On the contrary, along the Lawa whose course is rectilinear, the variation in level is seldom greater than four meters. The maximum water level is 50 centimeters to one meter /above/
[342] the soil of the alluvial terrace. Several of the Creole and Boni
[484] villages of the Lawa are even established at the very edge of the great river; the houses are built on piles and their occupants go home by boat during several weeks of the year. Nevertheless, most of the villages and farming habitations are outside the reach of flooding on terraces situated about five meters above the high-water mark, which are found from place to place at the edge of the river and which perhaps mark vestiges of an ancient terrace. This is notably the case with Boniville and Loka villages.

137 The whole of the territory is entirely covered by equatorial forest: a forest continuous and dense which extends over hundreds of kilometers without a village, without a clearing, without a trail.

The Guiana forest is less high than is ordinarily thought. It is an infinite succession of trees of all dimensions and of extremely varied species, among which true giants are rare; the average height of the cover is around 30 meters, and large trunks are rare.

824 The variety of species is very great; and the useful ones, few in number and dispersed, are difficult to exploit. The Refugee Blacks, who have a deep knowledge of the forest and its resources, utilize scarcely ten species out of the some 200 which they differentiate, judging the others unusable either because their

824 wood is too hard to be worked with ordinary instruments or, on the contrary, because it is too soft, too easily attacked by insects, or 311 has a tendency to rot. The zone exploitable by native procedures is limited (for the floodable zones /7/ do not allow fine woods) to the slope of the hills bordering the valley of the watercourses accessible to pirogues; beyond, the cartage of felled trunks becomes impracticable.

139 A very dense epiphytic vegetation connects the trees with 136 their upper parts; it is there that life blossoms out: flowers, birds, insects, and monkeys.

484 Progress through the forest is very arduous. The undergrowth,
480 shrubs, bushes, bound together by fine and elastic lianas, offers
[132] a constant obstacle, the machete /sabre/ must be wielded at each
[412] step. The nature of the terrain, a succession of bogs and hills
[133] with steep and slippery slopes, makes walking for heavily loaded men exhausting. On the trail one succeeds with difficulty in making more than 15 to 20 kilometers a day; in the uninhabited forest one can scarcely advance five to six kilometers a day by cutting the strict minimum as one does when hunting. The opening of a route permitting the passage of heavily laden men cannot progress more than three kilometers a day on the average.

139 The great forest offers few real dangers, but it is an environ-
182 ment profoundly hostile to man, which does not present spontaneously any food resource and allows establishment of villages and cultivated areas only at the price of great efforts.

136 One meets few animals in the interior of the forest, and the resources for hunting are very limited; on the other hand, there are few harmful animals; wild beasts are few and practically do not appear; snakes are much rarer than on the coast and represent 164 only a slight danger. The most real dangers of the forest come from the fall of branches and epiphytes, principally when it is cleared for cultivation; each year there are accidents of this kind in Boni country. Besides, work in the forest is the occasion for many wounds which tend to ulcerate.

132 [513] The climate is relatively temperate and easy for the European to stand. In the forest the thermometer does not rise to more than 28° during the hot hours, to go back down to 20° at the end of the night: everyone sleeps with a blanket, Refugee Blacks and Creoles as well as Europeans. Humidity is very great during nearly all the year; precipitation averages three meters a year or about 50 centimeters less than at Cayenne. The year is divided into two seasons: "summer" from July to December, and the rainy season the rest of the year, with a maximum of precipitation in May and June. The water level varies considerably in the course of the year (several meters). The populations of the interior, spaced out along the rivers, suit the rhythm of their lives to the height of the water; the water rules transportation, fishing, and crops; moreover, a certain number of illnesses are in close relation to the rains, in particular those which have an insect for vector.

133 182 [361] [164]

241 [134] Almost everywhere the soil is very poor in organic matter and fundamental ingredients, very waterlogged necessitating the practice of an itinerant agriculture on burned-over areas; the period of fallow ground varies from two to ten years, the optimum seeming to be about six. The inhabitants of Guiana cannot allow ground to lie fallow regularly because of the ravages of the manioc ant, /8/ which is active especially in habitually cultivated zones. [136] Vain and costly efforts made by Europeans notably at Saint-Jean du Maroni about 1950, have shown that the fertility of lands not burned over is practically nil. The Indians and the Refugee Blacks consider that the fertility of the soil depends exclusively on the weight of cinders laid down during the burning.

[134] [242]

When burned-over areas are cultivated, only one harvest is obtained; but this harvest is abundant, and the soil thus utilized can be regarded as relatively fertile. The knocking down and burning do not require great labor, so that primitive agricultural methods can be considered to give a good yield. As a matter of fact, the diverse populations of Guiana, Creoles and Refugee Blacks, have entirely adopted the methods of work resulting from the millennial

241 179

241 experience of the American Indians, which seem the only utilizable
179 ones in the interior of the country.

Thus these populations which are so varied have in large measure the same agriculture and the same food.

241 Basic crops are manioc, consumed in the form of couac
[262] (flour roasted and granulated) which is the base food, the Indian yam, and tubers analogous to taro (dachine, "Caribbean cabbage").
[171] The Refugee Blacks plant mountain rice in addition. The Creoles do not plant rice but have on the other hand a greater variety of vegetables and fruits.

311 Men in Guiana live on the rivers; villages and cultivated 36 lands are to be found on their banks; everywhere else one finds 182 only the deserted forest; only Creole gold miners, constrained by their work, sometimes establish their villages far from watercourses.
181 The Refugee Blacks, like the Indians, love the rivers where they 182 find, along with water and light, the possibility of moving with-171 out hindrance; they are a people of canoeists; their traditions are widely influenced by life on the river, and their mode of living finds in this a deep originality.

131 In fact, setting aside the gold miners' villages, we can say 133 that the populations of the Guianas living by exploitation of the 182 natural resources of the country have a linear habitat: it can be 171 estimated not in surface but in length, for it is limited to a band of one kilometer along each watercourse accessible to pirogues. These watercourses are limited in number, for one can take for granted that at a distance of some 20 kilometers from the source of each river, the congestion caused by fallen trees and parasitic vegetation prevents easy movement.

[161] Actually, considering the very low density of the population, [226] the small rivers are scarcely utilized except as fishing places.

487 All the rivers are interrupted by falls and rapids which render 501 the use of large boats impossible. The pirogues of the Refugee

> 1. Let us remember that the Lawa and the Tapanahoni are the streams forming the Maroni. The Lawa constitutes the border between Surinam and French Guiana.

The limit of Boni country toward the south is vague. However, it is taken for granted that all the Abattis-Cottica belong [361] to the Boni. Boni farming villages and Djuka villages coexist downstream from the Abattis-Cottica as far as Abounasounga. Below Abounasounga begins Djuka country properly speaking (2)

> 2. In reality this is a zone of colonization, for the "great country" of the Djuka is the Tapanahoni. But the customary rights they possess on the Lawa lands are contested by no one.

423 643 [131] Traditionally, the Boni used to consider the whole of the upper basin of the Maroni as their domain or at the very least as territory under the authority of the grand man. Thus it was at

241 Behind each village, a quarter of a mile to five miles dis-
313 tant, are its provision grounds, which the women work. They consist of tiny patches of half an acre or more, carved out of the heart of the jungle by means of terrific labour. It
[442] takes the men weeks of work with axes and bush-knives to clear the ground. The fallen trees, some of extremely hard wood, are cut up, burnt, or carried away. The brush is cleared with a machete, or bush-knife, which Negroes call a neefee; they swing this blade with amazing force by making the wrist the centre of its arc.

462 The women, as in most primitive societies, tend to the 241 planting and harvesting of the crops. They are helped by the men of the family on some occasions, such as when the harvest is threatened by voracious parasites. The arduous labour of cultivating the stubborn earth comes so naturally to a Bush Negro woman that she is incredulous when told that elsewhere the males alone till the soil.

136 A leaf-cutting ant, Ecodoma cephalotes, that carries small
241 bits of leaves into its nest, preys on the cassava fields. These ants march in two parallel columns, one going to the fields and the other returning, and systematically ruin the crop. The bit of green that each ant is carrying off looks like an umbrella; hence they are called umbrella ants. They live on a fungus which they grow on the cut leaves. Large numbers of them working together can denude an entire cassava field in a comparatively short time.

134 The jungle ground is not excessively fertile, for the in-
241 cessant downpours leach out the humus, and there is not

2:Kahn D-5 (1922-1930) 1931
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8

sufficient time for the nitrogenous substances to be reduced 134 to fertilizing material. Because of this poverty of the ground 241 and the constant foraging of insect and bird pests—the parrot is notorious among these—the cultivation of food is difficult and laborious for the Bush Negroes and the provision ground must often be moved to a fresh site.

Their main carbohydrate staple is the manioc or bitter 244 cassava. It is a tuber-like plant that grows some three to seven feet in height, the edible portion being the underground root. The root contains the poisonous prussic acid, which must be carefully removed. Bush Negroes have been known [762 to commit suicide by drinking the juice of the cassava. The 278] plant itself resembles the tobacco plant, but has a stalk covered with bark and large roots that look like sweet potatoes.

The roots are harvested, carefully peeled, and reduced to 252 a pulp by being rubbed on the roughened surface of an inclined board, the expelled free juices rolling down the incline into a bowl. The rest of the plant is thrown away. The pulp 252 is stuffed into a cylindrical squeezing contrivance made of 285 reed, known as the matapee. It resembles one of those toy finger grippers of straw that children play with. The reeds being flexible, elongating the tube by pulling at the ends reduces the diameter of it; this compresses the contents of the cylinder and squeezes out the deadly juice which then runs off into a bowl below. The matapee is a beautifully woven piece of basketry about five feet long and seven inches in diameter. The upper end is attached to the limb of a tree and a heavy stone is suspended from the lower end, the 13 seems too high to me), the ants can bring into the soil each year two to three tons of leaf material per hectare. As a result the soil would be so enriched with humus and, in addition, through the construction of the numerous nest corridors, receive so much extra ventilation that the oxygen content and the microbiological condition of this soil would tend to differ from the mineral soils in which the virgin forest is rooted. As proof of this, it is stated "that even the oldest ant-kapoeweri directly behind the villages shows no tendency to grow into normal high forest" (p. 13).

114 It does not seem correct to me to ascribe this kapoeweri
137 phenomenon only to the presence and the activity of the leaf-
136 cutting ants. In my opinion the ants here constitute a troublesome contributing factor, for when the virgin-forest grounds are abandoned by the population and no new food material is available to the ants while the kapoeweri gradually grows into higher forest, then the balance in the ant population re-establishes itself. This process takes place at a slow rate, depending on the local circumstances, but it leads to the re-establishment of the original situation. There is, however, one condition connected with it, namely, that the forest be left in peace for a long enough stretch.
241 Now this last is not the case for the grounds area of the Bush Negroes.
● 134 They return too soon (within ten years) to clear grounds again, with the consequence that the soil becomes too exhausted and the recovery of the forest becomes impossible.

171 Proof for this viewpoint is already provided by Stahel (loc.
241 cit.) in his consideration of the agriculture of the upland Indians.
137 The absence of the ant-kopoeweri there is not a matter of a lesser
[136] ant infestation, as Stahel /140/ believes -- for in places this is equally serious -- but of a less intensive use of the forest lands.
[161] The Indians are present in small numbers (a few hundred, as against 423] thousands of Bush Negroes), while only communal plots are laid out for one village, and not different ones for each family. In [361] addition, the Indians move frequently in order to find new hunting and fishing grounds.

241 There is yet another factor which plays a role in the origin
134 of the grounds-kapoeweri. This is the use of fire in clearing the 137 ground. The burning of the cut forest is done at the expense of the humus on and in the soil. The fertilization with ashes that one obtains by it only partially covers this loss. Furthermore, under the influence of the fire there are great disturbances in the balance of the microflora and fauna of the soil, hindering the conversion of organic materials into inorganic compounds. Sun and rain bring changes in the structure of the scorched earth, which forms a cement-like crust and becomes sealed. Also the growing of cultivated crops, especially cassave, draws many mineral components from the soil.

13 It is clear that the soil needs time to recover after this disturbance of the balance. This period of time is estimated at 25-30 years. The leaf-cutting ants play a part in this; they again enrich the soil with humus by bringing great quantities of leaves into their ground nests. In addition, they ventilate the soil by digging numerous nest corridors. In this manner the ants contribute [242] to the recovery. It is well-known, moreover, that the soil on old leaf-cutting ant nests is fertile; one likes to plant bananas on it. If we assume with Stahel that in this kapoeweri six ant nests per hectare are found, then these nests together would only have a maximum surface of one-tenth of it. This would never be able to hinder the full growth of the forest.

136 That the leaf cutting ants occupy the secondary growth, or at 137 least are present there in greater numbers than is normally the case
241 in the forest, may be a consequence of the laying out of new grounds within their domain. Because of the lack of land, the Bush Negroes are constantly trying to lay out grounds again in this forest. The ants, moreover can maintain themselves because there are various forest trees that supply the ants with sufficient leaf material.

13 Thus, because of both the decreased capacity of the soil and 311 the presence of the leaf-cutting ants, the ant-kapoeweri forms a terrain that has become unusable for present-day primitive Bush Negro agriculture./141/ And from the standpoint of forestry too the ant-kapoeweri is worthless.

241 of this predatory cultivation has been reached. The nearby
423 agricultural lands are kept in use with too brief a rest period, with [134] the result that the soil is overworked and the periodic recovery
[825] of the forest proceeds at an ever slower pace. In addition one struggles to an increasing degree with the problem /142/ of the leaf-cutting ants, which keep the easily accessible places occupied.

241 The consequence of this circumstance is that the Bush Negroes
311 are forced to make the grounds farther and farther from their vil-
[484] lages. One travels for hours up or down the river in order to [482] reach good land. When one cannot make good use of a forest creek in order to transport the produce from the field, one is forced to carry the harvest for one or two hours through the forest to the river. The Bush Negro does not go farther than a two hours' walk (about six kilometers from the river) (see the map /see p. 13 /).

241 On the Tapanahoni one spends even days in traveling to less 311 populated areas in order to plant and to harvest. One then estab-
361 lishes so-called work camps along the river, from which one [103] operates in the surrounding areas. This is the case, among others, between Godoholo and Granbori for people from Drietabbetje or 311 other centers. That one does not go even farther up river, all the 423 way past the last village, Granbori, has to do with a prohibition
643 by the granman of the Aucaners. That is, the latter wants to reserve the lands lying beyond this point as hunting lands and therefore will not make them available for agricultural purposes.

241 The inhabitants of the villages along the lower Tapanahoni,
311 such as Sajé, Clementi, and Malobbi, frequently lay out their food
423 grounds in the Lawa, where they can have at their disposal agri-
361 cultural lands as far as the Aboenasoengoe Falls. Farther upstream 103 on this river the Bonni or Aloekoe Negroes assert their rights.

5. Differences between Aucaners and Paramaccaners

101 The conditions given above apply in the main to the Aucaner
162 Bush Negroes of the Tapanahoni. They number today approximately [311] 6,500 persons. The Paramaccaner Bush Negroes of the Marowijne, approximately 1,700 in number, are in somewhat more favorable

133 This extreme fragmentation of the relief must be remembered
182 as one of the ecological factors influencing the human peopling most directly; it renders the transport of heavy loads impracticable, the establishing of roads practically impossible. Men are led to [361] settle along the rivers, which constitute the only routes of penetration toward the interior of the country.

133 All the important rivers flow into an alluvial valley whose 132 width varies from some tens of meters to a kilometer, dry during the greater part /6/ of the year, but flooded under several meters
● 134 of water during the great rains of May-June. This annual inunda-
241 tion makes the alluvial lands unfit for agriculture; the inhabitants of Guiana cultivate only sloping lands and even very steep slopes readily; for good drainage of the soil is indispensable for the raising of manioc whose tubers, which remain in the ground for more than a year, are threatened with rotting.

311 The cultivable zone is in fact closely limited around each village. Practically, it is limited to a strip of 1,500 to 2,000 meters along the banks of each watercourse accessible to pirogues.
[482] Transport of manioc tubers, carried on by the women several [462] times a month, becomes impracticable if the distance to be covered with loads is greater than two kilometers at the maximum (1).

[101]
[184]

1. The Djuka, very numerous on the Tapanahoni, cultivate as far as three or four kilometers from the river; but in general, the Refugee Blacks prefer to build farming habitations at a distance of several days' by boat from their village when this gives them the possibility of farming in the neighborhood of the banks.

132 The climate is relatively temperate and easy for the European [513] to stand. In the forest the thermometer does not rise to more than 28° during the hot hours, to go back down to 20° at the end of the night: everyone sleeps with a blanket, Refugee Blacks and Creoles as well as Europeans. Humidity is very great during nearly all the year; precipitation averages three meters a year or about 50 centimeters less than at Cayenne. The year is divided into two seasons: "summer" from July to December, and the rainy season the rest of the year, with a maximum of precipitation in 133 May and June. The water level varies considerably in the course 182 of the year (several meters). The populations of the interior, [361] spaced out along the rivers, suit the rhythm of their lives to the [164] height of the water; the water rules transportation, fishing, and crops; moreover, a certain number of illnesses are in close relation to the rains, in particular those which have an insect for vector.

241 Almost everywhere the soil is very poor in organic matter
[134] and fundamental ingredients, very waterlogged necessitating the practice of an itinerant agriculture on burned-over areas; the period of fallow ground varies from two to ten years, the optimum seem-[136] ing to be about six. The inhabitants of Guiana cannot allow ground to lie fallow regularly because of the ravages of the manioc ant, /8/ which is active especially in habitually cultivated zones.
[134] Vain and costly efforts made by Europeans notably at Saint-Jean du Maroni about 1950, have shown that the fertility of lands not burned over is practically nil. The Indians and the Refugee Blacks [242] consider that the fertility of the soil depends exclusively on the weight of cinders laid down during the burning.

When burned-over areas are cultivated, only one harvest is obtained; but this harvest is abundant, and the soil thus utilized can be regarded as relatively fertile. The knocking down and burning do not require great labor, so that primitive agricultural methods can be considered to give a good yield. As a matter of fact, the 241 diverse populations of Guiana, Creoles and Refugee Blacks, have 179 entirely adopted the methods of work resulting from the millennial

/60/

351 There are no gardens around the cabins because the con-
[134] ditions of the soil and climate render permanent cultivation
[241] impracticable. The nearest thing is a few persons planting some banana trees around the hut at the foot of which they spread the 361 hearth ashes. As a general rule villages are closely hemmed in 137 by secondary brushwood, and people plant far from one another
311 and sometimes very far from the village.

423 If it does not admit the appropriation of land to individuals,
824 custom does admit, on the other hand, the ownership of trees.
In the villages the useful trees (coconut trees, maripa palms /attalea excelsa/, mango trees, cashew-apple trees, etc.) all [428] have owners. The tree is considered as personal property and is transmitted by inheritance in the same way as a gun or a canoe.
428 The procedure employed by the Boni for the dispersion of the 824 inheritance among the members of the lineage of the dead man
613 sometimes has the effect of transmitting the ownership of a tree
[222] to a person who is not of the village. For example, in Boniville where a fraction of the Kotika lineage lives, two caumou palms were bequeathed a long time ago to members of the lineage living in Kotika, who come each year to gather the fruit.

Ownership of the land: Dipélu Il lo (Kormotibe village). Several habitations side by side:

WHILE THE RIVER WAS HIGH

The sun stood over the sacred silk-cotton tree toward the Gankwe side of the land. Across the path leading from somewhere in the back of our shelter the parasol ants, each with its strip of green many times its size, made their way toward an unknown spot where no shelter stood, and no one trod. Like a wave the wide ribbon of green rose and fell as it crossed the ridges of the pathway. In unending numbers they came, and the lizards darting in and out of the brush swerved in the direction of the shelter to avoid the marching line, so that at our feet things moved now up, now back again.

While the men were at the landing place, one of the women who was drying rice on the high flat rocks opposite our shelter paddled over in her boat, and, passing the men with a formal greeting, walked on and stopped to talk with us. She was not a young woman. Her time for childbearing was long over, her wrinkled breasts sagged almost to her waist. The cicatrized designs which once had stood out so clearly, and in her youth had been so valued, were but faintly penciled on her face and about her breasts. Had she cared, she might have reopened the cuts, might have had ashes rubbed into them to make the keloids stand out black and alive against the dark brown of her skin. But what need had a woman her age to care? What need to urge life into symbols of fertility on face and between breasts and about her navel, when her time for fruitfulness was over? Of what use to reanimate the incised scrolls between her thighs, when the legend they told in terms of reproduction was for her a dead legend?

She came toward us slowly, balancing a bottle on her head. A faded cloth covered her from waist to knee, and at her waist a bit of the kerchief necessary to the attire of the married woman, even at work, could be seen. She wore a few beads on a cord about her neck, but she had no other ornaments, for ornaments were for festive occasions, and the cloth tied about the neck and worn cape fashion was for women who had children to carry straddling their backs, and woven garters below the knee were conceits of the young.

but he did face about, and forgetting his seketi began to pole in earnest. 502 484

In a few moments his body glistened with the exertion, and over the circle and snake of kamemba in the small of his back the perspiration ran down in a trickle. When he had almost caught up he slackened his speed, and he and Bibifo talked about the river. Old Bibifo knew the river well. He was born beyond the Granman's country. A snake swam across the path of the boat, Bayo said. It was good luck. "See, look," he called. His eyes were sharp. The old man saw it, too, and then he called to us. There, close to the shore, a little ahead of us, a constrictor twined its tail about a liana, hanging head down, with a salamander slowly disappearing into its mouth. There was a slight jerk, the liana shook, the snake swallowed, and another bit of the salamander was out of sight. 484 [825] [777] [136]

Farther ahead we heard the report of a gun, and the crying of the mate of the wounded bird followed us for a long while. Bayo and Bibifo identified each cry, called by name the things that grew, planned about their timber rafts when they got back, until the next rapids were reached and passed and the conversation could be resumed, and then they talked about things which they did not care to have the Bakra know, and though they spoke none of the words of their ritual language, we could not understand anything they said. It was not until later that we learned to work out some of the elisions in their speech. [198]

A strip of sandy beach showed where a village stood, and as we passed it, we could see the azang, the spiritual guard of palm fronds, preventing evil spirits from entering the village. We saw also a strip of white hanging from the end of a stick which had been put up for the ancestors, and beyond, the low shelter for the roughly carved and weathered image holding an obia pot on its head. Under the azang the path stretched like a narrow ribbon which was soon lost as the walls of green converged. 778 789

"Is that another village?" we said, pointing at a pale stretch across the river. 361

smaller boats were to be brought up each by its own men. Each selected a place, and the shrill shouted directions could be heard above the falling water. Up, up, they came, the man at the stern holding with his stick, the man at the head up to his shoulders in water, tugging, pulling, hauling the boat over. Once Asikanu's pole slipped, and his boat swung toward a rock, but it caught again and he held it with the fierceness of a man defending himself against an enemy, and then he, too, cut across and found the firmness of the friendly sandy bottom. 502 484

But when the five boats were at last together above the falls, out came machetes to sharpen the ends of the pole-sticks, for an encounter such as they had had the moment before shredded the hard wood into fiber.

Ahead the water was still. The hard work of this day was over. The men straightened their loin cloths and again began to make their way along the banks of the river. The village where we would camp that night was somewhere before us. The sun was nearing the treetops, and the shrieking pairs of parrots were flying over us to the west, seeking their roosting places. [136]

The short dusk was upon us.

"It is not far," said Bayo, speaking of the village ahead.

"Will we get there before dark?"

"Massa Gadu sabi—God alone knows."

"No fe', Bak'a—Don't be afraid. We know the river."

The Bush Negro and his river! Seeing the prodigious strength of the men, their great knowledge of current and rocks and channels, one was not afraid. Softly the pole-sticks slid into the sand banks, softly the paddles dipped, and Bayo sang his seketi.

"N'an g'wa a Lamé
A s'ib' ko' de muye." [533] [539]

REBEL DESTINY

133 But now a soft haze floated over stream and bush. To the right was the Ingi Sopi channel, dropping so sheer that not even an unloaded dugout could make its way up the rapids, not a single log of wood could be floated down. To the left was the Mamadam, a smoother, more rounded slope. It was up these falls that our boats would later be hauled.

501 484 Below us on the rocks our men were unloading the corials and carrying the provisions along the narrow trodden path to the topmost ledge of the falls, where the empty dugouts would be reloaded after they had been taken up through the streaming water.

133 Beyond lay the full stretch of the river. As far as the eye could see, there were none of the channels, none of the many islands which are met with everywhere on this river from its very headwaters to the reaches of the tidal belt near the coast. About us was a stillness which the very roar [136] of the water heightened. The parrots had long ago passed on in pairs. The butterflies would wait for the sun before they went winging from the east bank to the west. This was a moment of pure interlude. No sun, no breeze, no 000 sound, no glow. This was the moment before the fragmentary dawn would end, before the haze would lift, this the moment when night, having met day, as the Bush Negroes said, was disappearing from sight.

"It is fine here, ai!" Bayo called to us, as he walked on [482] with a large canister balanced on his head, making his way up the rocks with the sureness and ease of one who is strolling down a lane with the consciousness of a pleasant encounter at the next turning.

798 346 As soon as the mist had lifted, we walked up the rocks to the shrine. Facing us and the lower river, a tall, slender pole, weathered to a pale silver, stood higher than the roof of the shrine in front of which it was planted. At its top were the crude outlines of a head and, some three feet from its base, two side pieces were nailed to it and grounded at an angle to steady the image against the onrush of a sudden wind. A short distance from the pole was the shrine

241 away from the river? When the big rains come, the river
361 goes up more and more. If our crops were too close to the water, then in the big rains the land would be flooded, and the crops long under water. . . . Yes, and we have to [136] think of the ants, too. Ants, once they find their way into a field, will destroy everything. They like especially the [137] green leaves of the young cassava plants. When the young leaves go, there is no cassava. So we move farther and farther away for our fields. Two, three years, and new fields must be cut, so that the yield might feed us all."

311 Once a field had been deserted, say, for five years, why
241 did they not reclaim it later? we enquired, for by that time the big bush would have made fertile again the soil that had been exhausted.

"In this bush we do it like that. Why, I don't know. Our ancestors found much land for us. When we want new fields, we cut farther and farther into the bush."

As Bayo and Angita set off for the dance at Pa'aba, Kasanya and Sedefo joined us, and we talked of crops and [521] planting, of woman's work and man's, of good harvests and bad, and this is what was told us.

[462] Finding a new field and clearing it is a man's task. If a man is about to be married, or if the field a man's wife works has become exhausted, then he goes into the forest, near to the planting ground of his mother and to the fields of his family, and casts about for a place to clear. A field 311 must not be in a hollow, or the crops will not grow, and 241 rice needs the sun of a hill slope to thrive. Once having 776 found a spot where the drainage is good, he looks about to see if the spirits will allow its use. Patiently, painstakingly, he goes from one clump of matted vines to the next, machete in hand, searching for signs of an ant hill, or an Akatasi tree that is sacred to the gods of the ant hill, or for snakes, or a natural clearing belonging to the Apuku gods of the bush. No silk-cotton tree must be there, no loko tree wherein dwells the god of the same name so near that it

PARENTS, CHILDREN, AND GRANDCHILDREN

512 WE WERE aroused early after our night of stories. The women were moving about, getting their morning meal before daybreak came to give them light for their harvesting. There was much they had to do. Late that afternoon they would be returning to their villages, for the next day was sacred to the Earth Mother, [527] and no work could be done in the fields. Today, added to the round of harvesting were the preparations for the return to their village. The rice that had been cut during the week would have to be carried there for drying and winnowing, and yams and peanuts and beans were to be brought in.

136 Not far off, in the bush, the "baboons" were crying. We had been told how these howling monkeys lived in bands, and how they had an "old man" for leader. Their strange cries, ringing through the forest, sounded like despair made articulate. A terribly moving reiteration of four or five wailing notes went on and on, rising slowly in volume, until their cries blotted out all other sounds, and then, like a wave receding, diminishing until quiet reigned again. But when we had given up listening for its distant echo, there it was again, filling the darkness of the clearing with despair, until, at its very height, we heard the low, penetrating grunts of their "G'aman—Chief" and instantly all was still. They were done for the night. With daylight, they would go deeper into the bush.

A NIGHT AT S'EI

133
137 FROM day to day the mood of the river changed, and the mood of the bush changed with it. The dankness of the river bank gave way to the smell of red, sun-scorched earth. No longer was the farther shore the forbidding wall of a great canyon. The flowering lianas, as they climbed a hundred feet and more from the roots of the trees they had enveloped, were making of it a tapestry. The blooms which showed against the masses of green seemed at first of the palest yellow with threads of white, or yellow with glints of gold in them, or the faintest of orange and violet. Later when the flaming gold, the scarlet and purple clusters appeared, they still did not mar the somber weave of the timeless pattern, for the deep note of this bush in any season is green, and no pushing, garish colors, no conceits of turning leaves or fragrant flowers can sound an echo here. As well expect the brilliantly tinted butterflies cruising from one bank to the other to make a whir in their passage, as to look for it to be otherwise. [136]

The air, however, became steadily drier, the green more varied and pleasing, and the land rising and sloping gave an occasional glimpse of a horizon. If something in the shade of the river banks still spoke of the way of the constrictor, the sudden lashing out of the tail, there was now also the pleasant consciousness of its long lethargy. The swish of wings overhead, when we walked for short intervals through 648 been packed in baskets and transported to a safe place. The 175 Dutch, tricked by the wily Bonny, found Cofaay bare.

Provisions being imperative, a small detachment was sent back to Paramaribo for them. The detachment was cut off by the rebels. European soldiers were spared, but every ranger was killed, since the rebels had sworn none of them should leave the bush alive.

After one or two other engagements, in which the Bush Negroes were defeated, with the help of Indian tribes, the expedition returned to Paramaribo. Both sides had fought each other to a standstill. The Europeans were weary of the hazards of the bush, of the vicious fire-ants and carnivorous [134] mosquitoes. Above all they knew that if the Bush Negro had possessed ammunition they would never have returned.

From this point on the warfare ceased by common consent. The Bush Negroes were left alone to duplicate in the American forest their former life in Africa. The slaves who never revolted were finally emancipated in the nineteenth century, and their descendants today, still living with the whites in Paramaribo, are known as Town Negroes. The bush tribes call them bahkra schlaff, or "white man's slave."

the river—the glinting light on the black skins, shining with sweat and spray, and the veined muscles that roll and subside as the dripping pole goes down, first one end and then the other, into the yellow water. Hour after hour they strain their bodies against the bending poles. Without warning a heavy tropical downpour will blanket the river with sheets of rain, but the corials (canoes) go on. When the rain stops the hot sun quickly dries the black skins.

All along the river the foliage towers upward from the water's edge. Great trees rear high their masses of limbs and verdure. Going upstream the boatmen stay close to the bank, for there the current, checked by myriads of roots, is not so swift. Often the men can reach out of the corial and touch the foliage. In sharp contrast with this green is the brown colour of the muddy stream. The sunlight glares on the surface, except where the overhanging wall of trees throws a shade upon the water. The black boatmen blend in with the yellow river, the green foliage, and the metallic sky.

Parrots scream overhead. A pair of scarlet macaws cackle at each other. Leaping fish shimmer in the sunlight, falling back into the river with a white splash. Bats from underneath logs, disturbed by human intrusion, disappear into the bank a hundred feet ahead. The corials are eyed intently by parakeets feeding high up in the air, perched on tree limbs along the bank. Little black and white swallow-like skimmers scurry over the water just forward of the bow, which keeps pushing on through the white riffles. Huge water-fowl flap their wide wings and sail gracefully away.

The forest is as impassable now as it was in the days of the rebellion. There is no way of penetrating the interior except by travelling up one of the great rivers of Surinam. The Bush Negroes spend much of their time on the rivers; their water-craft is exquisite. To make the laborious passage upstream the expedition is entirely dependent upon these black polers. They consent to accompany the white men—bahkras as they are called—with no great eagerness. The Djukas realize that 648 have a tribal language called odo, deepee-talkee, or Saramacca- [191 tongo known only among themselves; they are members of 198] the Saramaccaner tribe.

Before the other corial is out of earshot, the Djukas bid us good-bye with the familiar words: "Wakka bon na watra, bahkra!" "Gran danke, matio"—"Many thanks, my uncle," we respond, adding the o sound to the last word to make it carry over the waves, as they do. To them "uncle" is the most [576 respectful appellation that can be used, similar to our respect-
604] ful use of the word "father." For them a maternal uncle is more important than a father.

For a while now the poling continues in silence. Further on we pass a lone Djuka on the bank, skilfully setting a fish trap constructed of sticks and lianas. Far away upstream can be heard the muffled report of a shotgun; some black hunter is bringing in game. The angry currents slap constantly against the side of the corial. We round another bend and see ahead only more rapids, where rocks make innumerable white ripples in the muddy water.

A stop is made for lunch at one of the many islands. Bundle brings out canned food and the gipsy pot. The river looks enticing and cool. The bahkra begins taking off his clothes for a swim in the water near shore. The Negroes are abashed at his nakedness, and Bundle tactfully advises him to be more modest.

● 136 The waters in this part of the great South American rain forest are infested with the Brazilian piranha or piraya (Serrasalmo sp.), a species of carnivorous fish. They are small,

2:Kahn D-5 (1922-1930) 1931
SR8 Bush Negroes SR8

something like bass, but with undershot thick jaws and 136 heavy teeth. They run six to eight inches long and seldom weigh more than half a pound. But they travel in schools and attack simultaneously, so that any flesh in the water, human or otherwise, with a bloody surface exposed, is torn to pieces in a short time. If a bush-hog is killed and suspended in the water, the smell of blood attracts these fish; in an incredibly short space of time the carcass is wholly devoured.

The Djukas have learned to be wary of this fish. On one 136 occasion, when trading for a drum at an Aucaner village, 484
the blacks handed the drum out to the corial on a long pole, 648 502 rather than step a few feet into the water. Despite this fear, in poling upstream it is frequently necessary for the paddlers to get out of the canoe in water up to their armpits and forcibly drag it over the rocks. On such occasions their courage is immediate and unfailing. They enter the water, knowing that piraya may be present. There is no other way of getting the boats over rock-studded pieces of fast water, where paddles are useless and poles insufficient. They jump out into the river, taking the chance of having pieces of flesh excised from their limbs.

Fear of this fish prevents constant bathing in all parts of 136 the river. Now, however, after a long hot trip, the lure of a 484 648 cool bath in the fresh flowing water overcomes the bahkra's caution, but the Djukas, as soon as they have grasped the white man's intention, will not permit him to enter the water. They gesticulate violently, waving him back with rapid and excited words—no, no, he cannot go in—piraya, piraya! He is 136 484 648 almost forcibly prevented. But when the day's journey is over, and we have camped for the night in an upriver village, the paddlers will take the risk of bathing in the cool stream. Even though there are no piraya in the immediate vicinity, the bathers will not linger long.

484 648 All the long, heavy afternoon the Negroes toil slowly with the great poles. Troe stops to cut some herbs for medicine. Flagawai sharpens the end of his pole with a bush-knife to give it a better grip on the river-bed. We have never seen better paddling, not even in the Canadian woods, where the Indian guides retain the canoe-craft of the American aborigines, nor on the Mazaruni River in British Guiana, where the black diamond-seekers haul their great whaling boats over the rapids.

There is a low falls across the river. The corials have to be dragged up over the slanting slippery rocks into the higher water beyond. Everyone gets out. The boatmen quietly decide the best path; there is little hesitation and no debate. Brown hands catch hold of the gunwales and brown feet begin to strain willingly on the slick wet rocks. The lumbering boat slowly mounts the incline. Here again the white man's life is in the hands of the Negroes; if the corial were to upset, the food would be lost, and the trip would end disastrously.

437 The reply is short and spirited.

"Gimme."

Which does not have to be translated.

574 We sleep that night in the Bush Negro village. A dilapi-609 dated hut is assigned us, the hut of a dead man. There are 136 tarantulas on the cross-poles; we are not particular. The paddlers sleep elsewhere, being taken into friendly huts about the village. Except for the ghosts of the departed Bush Negroes, our hut is quite empty. The hammock is slung and the mosquito netting put in place. Mosquitoes and insect pests are not as bad in the jungle as commonly reported. They seldom caused us any discomfort. It is true that one of the boys contracted malaria during an expedition, but the parasites may have been dormant in his blood for some time previously. Our precaution against malaria was ten grains of quinine sulphate each night before retiring under the mosquito netting.

512 Far into the evening the Negroes will sit around the camp-
[521] fire and tell stories, their loud, musical Negro laughter carrying a long distance on the night air. Walking by each hut we see a tiny light flickering inside. Occasionally an infant cries. We sit before our doorway, amusing a group of chil-

SR8 Bush Negroes SR8

these animals. So the hunter is occasionally surprised to find 224 a big cat responding to his game call.

Far up the river, jaguars have been known to come near 224 a provision clearing and carry off an infant while the mother 136 was at work in the cassava field. The grown Djuka, however, is not afraid of these cats. The jaguar is a medium-sized feline, the third largest of the cat family, but it is essentially cowardly. If a lone Negro encounters one on a game trail, a duel commences that usually ends with the shooting of the jaguar. On one occasion we saw a hunter come back from the game trail, armed only with a machete, who had met and killed one of these cats.

There are several smaller cats in the South American jungle, ranging in size from the puma to the diminutive jaguarundi. The boa constrictor is not the menace that some travellers make it out to be. The Bush Negroes will not kill either a boa or an alligator, nor will they allow a white man to do so. If they see the white man aiming his gun at snakes, [825 they will knock up the muzzle. Such reptiles are sacred. 778
Some of the Indians of the district, on the other hand, are 262] fond of snake meat, and hunt it regularly. But the Bush [829]
Negroes look down on them.

In setting traps the Bush Negroes exhibit the typical cun- 224
ning of jungle dwellers. They have preserved the West African types of traps. Trails on which armadillos forage are set with a shotgun, in the middle of the path. By seizing the bait the animal shoots itself.

At night on the game trail the lone hunter builds a lean-

224 648 The next day the hunters rouse early and breakfast in the freshness of the warm morning. Two of the Djukas refuse absolutely to accompany the bahkra any further. The white man, they say, goes through the jungle like a thunderstorm and brings bad luck. The prospects of getting any game with him around are exceedingly small. They get out their hunting amulets, and rub on their gun-barrels a concoction prepared by the medicine man. Daniels laughs at this, but they refuse to be teased. [789]

"You'll see!" they assert doggedly, certain of their magic.

The party splits up to go in three directions. Two bearers remain with us, one posted out ahead as a tracker, and Daniels, who brings up the rear as gun-bearer. The other two Negroes go in different directions and are immediately out of sight. We continue ahead, cutting the way through the bush—there are no trails. For two hours we tramp along without sighting game, realizing that more things see us than ever we see. The jungle is not teeming with game, as popularly believed. [136] There is an occasional herd of bush hogs, but in general it is necessary to hunt long and hard to bag any amount of meat. It is doubtful if a man could subsist on the food his gun brings in, not because the game is lacking but because of the difficulty of seeing it.

224 The Djukas also hunt in other ways. One device is "still hunting"—sitting motionless in a tree beside a game trail, waiting for some animal to come along underneath. The Indians' curare and the blow-gun which shoots the poisoned dart are not employed by the Negroes. [411] The only co-operative

313 tant, are its provision grounds, which the women work. They consist of tiny patches of half an acre or more, carved out of the heart of the jungle by means of terrific labour. It
[442] takes the men weeks of work with axes and bush-knives to clear the ground. The fallen trees, some of extremely hard wood, are cut up, burnt, or carried away. The brush is cleared with a machete, or bush-knife, which Negroes call a neefee; they swing this blade with amazing force by making the wrist the centre of its arc.

462 The women, as in most primitive societies, tend to the 241 planting and harvesting of the crops. They are helped by the men of the family on some occasions, such as when the harvest is threatened by voracious parasites. The arduous labour of cultivating the stubborn earth comes so naturally to a Bush Negro woman that she is incredulous when told that elsewhere the males alone till the soil.

● 136 A leaf-cutting ant, Ecodoma cephalotes, that carries small
241 bits of leaves into its nest, preys on the cassava fields. These ants march in two parallel columns, one going to the fields and the other returning, and systematically ruin the crop. The bit of green that each ant is carrying off looks like an umbrella; hence they are called umbrella ants. They live on a fungus which they grow on the cut leaves. Large numbers of them working together can denude an entire cassava field in a comparatively short time.

134 The jungle ground is not excessively fertile, for the in-
241 cessant downpours leach out the humus, and there is not

Rice, especially when ripening, is attacked by birds, particularly the parakeets and parrots. These can destroy an entire field in one evening. Sometimes the Djukas are forced to sit up all night with shotguns to scare them off. Weevils and plant diseases are also common. 343 136

They have large sweet potatoes, known as yams, but no white potatoes. Corn, which they call koru; okra, or oko; and peanuts (pinda), form a minor part of the Djuka diet. There are occasional banana and cocoanut trees, and some pineapples and breadfruit. Some few additional nuts and fruits are furnished by the jungle. Palm oil, of which they are excessively fond, is another part of the commissary. No journey is undertaken without a liberal supply. It is obtained by squeezing the nut or fruit of a species of palm, called the mareepa. To the white man it tastes like olive oil. Sugar cane is seen in a number of villages, as are domestic fowl. No cattle or swine are to be found. 262 [231]

Thus the Bush Negroes carry on with courage and extreme hardihood under the implacable necessities of life in the enemy jungle, in which the white man has never been able to make his home successfully.

A common sight along the river is a Djuka black, poised on a slippery rock in statuesque immobility, his bow flexed and arrow drawn, shooting for fish. 226 516

241 825 particular suffers greatly from this type of ant, but maize, tajer, and bananas are also eaten. This plague is so serious that the clearing of a new ground is partially determined by the occurrence of the nests of these ants at the place. Normally these nests lie fairly far apart in the forest, but as soon as the crops of the grounds come within the domain of the ants, the nests grow rampantly. In addition, at just about planting time the ants produce numerous sexual forms, which, as a result of the cleared lands, have a favorable opportunity to swarm and found new colonies. The leaf-cutting ants are therefore "Kulturfolger" /followers of culture/.

As a result of this plague of ants, it is usually not possible for the Bush Negroes to cut extensions to the existing grounds for longer than two to three years. After all, the kapoeweri of the abandoned pieces of ground functions then as a hiding place for the younger ant-nests, and one drags, as it were, the ant plague along with one. There is no combating the ants, and through impotence the Bush Negro is forced to yield the field. This flight before the ants consists in the search for new grounds farther into the bush or, in case this is no longer possible for some reason, in the occupation of new lands elsewhere along the river.

137 136 /139/ Stahel (1) has pointed to the fact that among the Bush

[113] 1. Het Bosnegervraagstuk en het Coronieplan /The Bush Negro Question and the Coronie Plan/, Department Landbouwproefstation Surinam /Department of Agriculture Research Station, Surinam/, Report No. 9, October, 1944, 28 pp.

Negroes the older grounds change into a low second-growth, called by him "ant-kapoeweri" /ant-bush/. In effect, in many places where a dense Bush Negro population is found, such a strip of second growth occurs along the rivers. According to Stahel, this inferior bush comes 13 about through the presence of the great nests of leaf-cutting ants. Ac- [114] cording to his calculation, at a density of six ant nests per hectare (a maximum which is confirmed in the vicinity of Paramaribo, but which, according to my own observations in the Bush Negro lands, 13 seems too high to me), the ants can bring into the soil each year two to three tons of leaf material per hectare. As a result the soil would be so enriched with humus and, in addition, through the construction of the numerous nest corridors, receive so much extra ventilation that the oxygen content and the microbiological condition of this soil would tend to differ from the mineral soils in which the virgin forest is rooted. As proof of this, it is stated "that even the oldest ant-kapoeweri directly behind the villages shows no tendency to grow into normal high forest" (p. 13).

114 It does not seem correct to me to ascribe this kapoeweri
137 phenomenon only to the presence and the activity of the leaf-
● 136 cutting ants. In my opinion the ants here constitute a troublesome contributing factor, for when the virgin-forest grounds are abandoned by the population and no new food material is available to the ants while the kapoeweri gradually grows into higher forest, then the balance in the ant population re-establishes itself. This process takes place at a slow rate, depending on the local circumstances, but it leads to the re-establishment of the original situation. There is, however, one condition connected with it, namely, that the forest be left in peace for a long enough stretch.
241 Now this last is not the case for the grounds area of the Bush Negroes.
134 They return too soon (within ten years) to clear grounds again, with the consequence that the soil becomes too exhausted and the recovery of the forest becomes impossible.

171 Proof for this viewpoint is already provided by Stahel (loc.
241 cit.) in his consideration of the agriculture of the upland Indians.
137 The absence of the ant-kopoeweri there is not a matter of a lesser
[136] ant infestation, as Stahel /140/ believes -- for in places this is equally serious -- but of a less intensive use of the forest lands.
[161] The Indians are present in small numbers (a few hundred, as against 423] thousands of Bush Negroes), while only communal plots are laid [361] out for one village, and not different ones for each family. In addition, the Indians move frequently in order to find new hunting and fishing grounds.

241 There is yet another factor which plays a role in the origin
134 of the grounds-kapoeweri. This is the use of fire in clearing the 137 ground. The burning of the cut forest is done at the expense of the humus on and in the soil. The fertilization with ashes that one obtains by it only partially covers this loss. Furthermore, under the influence of the fire there are great disturbances in the balance of the microflora and fauna of the soil, hindering the conversion of organic materials into inorganic compounds. Sun and rain bring changes in the structure of the scorched earth, which forms a cement-like crust and becomes sealed. Also the growing of cultivated crops, especially cassave, draws many mineral components from the soil.

13 It is clear that the soil needs time to recover after this disturbance of the balance. This period of time is estimated at 25-30 years. The leaf-cutting ants play a part in this; they again enrich the soil with humus by bringing great quantities of leaves into their ground nests. In addition, they ventilate the soil by digging numerous nest corridors. In this manner the ants contribute [242] to the recovery. It is well-known, moreover, that the soil on old leaf-cutting ant nests is fertile; one likes to plant bananas on it. If we assume with Stahel that in this kapoeweri six ant nests per hectare are found, then these nests together would only have a maximum surface of one-tenth of it. This would never be able to hinder the full growth of the forest.

136 That the leaf cutting ants occupy the secondary growth, or at 137 least are present there in greater numbers than is normally the case
241 in the forest, may be a consequence of the laying out of new grounds within their domain. Because of the lack of land, the Bush Negroes are constantly trying to lay out grounds again in this forest. The ants, moreover can maintain themselves because there are various forest trees that supply the ants with sufficient leaf material.

13 Thus, because of both the decreased capacity of the soil and 311 the presence of the leaf-cutting ants, the ant-kapoeweri forms a terrain that has become unusable for present-day primitive Bush Negro agriculture./141/ And from the standpoint of forestry too the ant-kapoeweri is worthless.

245 Bacoven (bakóeba, bákba).

Planted like the bananas. The growing time varies from 10 to 15 months. The banana-bacove is grown the most. The varieties are indicated with the following names:

bigibakoeba or langa-finga, banana-bacove with long fruit (Gros Michel type); produces the bunch after 10 months and this ripens in five months;

watramama-bakoeba, a kind of congo-bacove originally from French Guiana, short variety, bunch matures in three months;

koboto-bakoeba or soeknoe-finga, small yellow, sweet variety of the size of the apple bacove or smaller (missie-finga); bunch ripens in three months;

indji-bakoeba, short, thick, red variety, sweet in taste, with yellow fruit-flesh; bunch ripens in three months.

[262] The bacoven are only eaten as fresh fruit and are very popu-[136] lar. /147/ The leaves of bananas and bacoven are sometimes severely eaten by leaf-cutting ants.

244 Tajer (tája).

One finds tajer on all grounds, standing in scattered groups. It is harvested after 8-10 months (August-October), but also continuously thereafter. There are various kinds in use:

agauw, large variety (pomtaja); tubers remain good for a long time; also found in the villages;

244 sjoe, smaller variety with yellowish tuber, tubers remain good for 262 a long time; the leaf is eaten as a vegetable;

dasini, larger variety with yellowish tubers, which is frequently planted because of its tastiness; the harvesting is done in small bits at a time, for the tubers rot quite quickly; the leaf of this too, is used as vegetable; a small variety of dasini is also called chinees taja; wititaja, smaller variety; tubers remain good for a long time; leaf is also eaten.

252 Tajer tubers are boiled, like potatoes, frequently with fish or meat and oil, into a soup.

244 Patatas (patáta).

Patatas are planted in patches; they creep with long tendrils in between everything as a weed. Even after the grounds have been abandoned, they continue to grow in the open patches. They are harvested in the long dry season, but there are also three-month varieties. There are white, red, and yellow varieties under the following names:

plata patata, white variety, frequently planted;
lebi (redi) patata, red variety, often runs wild;
abawini, yellow variety, frequently planted on grounds;
sakoela patata, yellow variety, idem.

[252] The tubers are eaten boiled, like potatoes, usually prepared with oil, or cut into little pieces and made into a soup. Rabbits [136] and pigs are likewise lovers of these tubers.

Napi (napi).

Napi is planted scattered next to sticks in order to allow the vines to climb. It is not missing on a single ground. The harvest time falls in the long dry season from September to November. There are red and white varieties, which are known by the following names:

kakaboeroe, red on the inside, with red peel;
gangasombo, white on the inside, with red peel;
witti napi, white on the inside, with yellow peel;
finga napi, purple-red variety with divided tubers;
waka waka-napi, purple-red variety, creeping, with large, long tubers.

[252] Napi is eaten boiled like a potato. Most of the varieties are used unpeeled; when they are prepared with meat, however, one removes the peel from the tubers.

/148/

Yams (yamesi).

The yam is found everywhere and is planted scattered. The harvest time is October or later. Two varieties are known:

maka yamesi, with thorns on stalk, planted with buds from the tubers; afakõh, planted with stalk shoots.

245 In more favorable places it grows fairly well. The production [262] is moderate. The nuts are eaten fresh or, as water nuts, are [136] emptied by drinking. Many trunks exhibit the traces of Castnia daedalus infection (Drietabbetje, Fisiti, Granbori).

Manja (majang).

[262] Grows in all villages into mighty trees and in February-March produces fruit which is especially favored for eating by the youth. Tetémanje and redbreast are the most common varieties. Abandoned villages along the rivers are frequently still typified by the manja trees.

Citrus.

Is represented by lemmetje (lemmeki), sour orange /zure oranje/ (alanja), /151/ orange /sinaasappel/ (pesina), and lemon /citroen/ (soetoen). This order roughly expresses the relative frequency. They are scattered and grow strikingly well in spite of neglect. With a little effort the planting of oranges could be ex-[252] tended. Lemmetjes and sour oranges are frequently used to wash meat and various articles.

Guava (gobai).

[262] Stands scattered and is never lacking; the fruit is eaten especially by the youth.

Soursop (atoekoe).

[262] Occurs here and there; the fruit is eaten fresh.

Breadfruit tree (belebong, brèdebong).

[252] Is found in many villages. It is usually the chestnut-breadfruit, of which only the pips are eaten, roasted or boiled. In Langatabbetje we also saw the ordinary breadfruit.

Koesoewé (koesoewé).

249 Stands in each village, but occurs less frequently than among the Indians. The large pink blossoms and the red fruit contribute

14 In the whole of the Amazonian forest these facts have been 16 observed since the seventeenth century and have led to the re-
182 placement of Indians by slave manpower imported from Africa.
114 The course taken in denying the biological realities and wishing to find at any cost a purely sociological explanation has inspired in recent years an ingenious explanation by several authors:

The success of African manpower was, according to them, due to the fact that the Blacks had a civilization closer to that
B of the Europeans, whereas the Amerindians were more hunters-
R fishermen than agriculturalists.

[105] For any observer of good faith, the Indians of Guiana and R the Blacks of the forests of the Congo and Gabon are largely [433] on the same technological and cultural level. The Indians are [361] certainly cultivators just as experienced as the Negroes; is one to forget that it was they who taught the rest of the world the greater part of the important tropical crops: manioc, maize, cotton, tobacco, and so many others? Hunting and fishing for them is only a secondary means of support; it is their instability,
R their lack of attachment to the soil, which may create an [136] illusion on this point. It can be explained to a certain extent
[361] by the small size of the kinship groups; an ecological factor which does not exist in Black Africa must also be taken into account, the manioc ant, which swarms in particular in the zones habitually cultivated, promoting a seminomadism (18).

B
[136] 18. This factor plays only a secondary role, since the Refugee Blacks despite the manioc [361] ant, maintain villages of permanent residence, only changing their crop plantings, but it is certain that it promotes the dispersion of the groups and seminomadism.

R

14 These considerations do not pretend to give a complete ex-
16 planation of the social behavior of the Indians of the Amazonian 182 forest. The biological characteristics of the group are only one of the factors of this behavior, parallel to many others, notably

824 wood is too hard to be worked with ordinary instruments or, on the contrary, because it is too soft, too easily attacked by insects, or 311 has a tendency to rot. The zone exploitable by native procedures is limited (for the floodable zones /7/ do not allow fine woods) to the slope of the hills bordering the valley of the watercourses accessible to pirogues; beyond, the cartage of felled trunks becomes impracticable.

137 A very dense epiphytic vegetation connects the trees with 136 their upper parts; it is there that life blossoms out: flowers, birds, insects, and monkeys.

484 Progress through the forest is very arduous. The undergrowth,
480 shrubs, bushes, bound together by fine and elastic lianas, offers
[132] a constant obstacle, the machete /sabre/ must be wielded at each
[412] step. The nature of the terrain, a succession of bogs and hills
[133] with steep and slippery slopes, makes walking for heavily loaded men exhausting. On the trail one succeeds with difficulty in making more than 15 to 20 kilometers a day; in the uninhabited forest one can scarcely advance five to six kilometers a day by cutting the strict minimum as one does when hunting. The opening of a route permitting the passage of heavily laden men cannot progress more than three kilometers a day on the average.

137 The great forest offers few real dangers, but it is an environ-
182 ment profoundly hostile to man, which does not present spontaneously any food resource and allows establishment of villages and cultivated areas only at the price of great efforts.

136 One meets few animals in the interior of the forest, and the resources for hunting are very limited; on the other hand, there are few harmful animals; wild beasts are few and practically do not appear; snakes are much rarer than on the coast and represent 164 only a slight danger. The most real dangers of the forest come from the fall of branches and epiphytes, principally when it is cleared for cultivation; each year there are accidents of this kind in Boni country. Besides, work in the forest is the occasion for many wounds which tend to ulcerate.

132 [513] The climate is relatively temperate and easy for the European to stand. In the forest the thermometer does not rise to more than 28° during the hot hours, to go back down to 20° at the end of the night: everyone sleeps with a blanket, Refugee Blacks and Creoles as well as Europeans. Humidity is very great during nearly all the year; precipitation averages three meters a year or about 50 centimeters less than at Cayenne. The year is divided into two seasons: "summer" from July to December, and the rainy season the rest of the year, with a maximum of precipitation in May and June. The water level varies considerably in the course of the year (several meters). The populations of the interior, spaced out along the rivers, suit the rhythm of their lives to the height of the water; the water rules transportation, fishing, and crops; moreover, a certain number of illnesses are in close relation to the rains, in particular those which have an insect for vector.

133 182 [361] [164]

241 [134] Almost everywhere the soil is very poor in organic matter and fundamental ingredients, very waterlogged, necessitating the practice of an itinerant agriculture on burned-over areas; the period of fallow ground varies from two to ten years, the optimum seeming to be about six. The inhabitants of Guiana cannot allow ground to lie fallow regularly because of the ravages of the manioc ant, /8/ which is active especially in habitually cultivated zones. Vain and costly efforts made by Europeans notably at Saint-Jean du Maroni about 1950, have shown that the fertility of lands not burned over is practically nil. The Indians and the Refugee Blacks consider that the fertility of the soil depends exclusively on the weight of cinders laid down during the burning.

[136] [134] [242]

When burned-over areas are cultivated, only one harvest is obtained; but this harvest is abundant, and the soil thus utilized can be regarded as relatively fertile. The knocking down and burning do not require great labor, so that primitive agricultural methods can be considered to give a good yield. As a matter of fact, the diverse populations of Guiana, Creoles and Refugee Blacks, have entirely adopted the methods of work resulting from the millennial

241 177

423 311 This fact is easily observable in the neighborhood of recently created farming habitations. In the figure "Distribution of lands ... in the neighborhood of the confluence with the Inini" (see at the end of the present chapter), the lands of the Antonu habitation are clearly seen distributed along two paths, one on each bank of the river.

241 423 In the sectors near Boni residence villages, cultivated in days gone by, the main lines of these boundaries are known everywhere. Still, they are far from being as precise as in the African countries with dense population, where the absence of manioc ants allows a regular rotation of lands. In Boni country this rotation is most variable, the duration of fallow ground going from two to 20 years [136 311] and more. Vast sectors where the activity of the manioc ants suddenly becomes greater are abandoned for many years. When they are cultivated again, people no longer remember the exact boundaries of the former clearings and the new holders cut their clearings in their own way, taking care only that they remain on the lands of their lineage.

000 /83/ STUDY OF THE DISTRIBUTION OF LANDS
IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF RESIDENCE VILLAGES

Inventory of Part of the Cultivated or Fallow Plots in January, 1957

621 [241] Study of the clearings of Agodé (Boniville). The lands adjacent to Boniville are worked in a very unsystematic fashion because of the composite character of the village population.

[613] Let us call to mind that Agodé includes fractions of six lineages:

361 241 166 exhaustion of the lands does not seem to play any part: considering the sparseness of the population, one can either make new clearings out of primary forest or carry out any system of letting land lie fallow one wishes.

Most changes of location can be attributed to two causes of equal importance:

[136] [613] --The activity of the manioc ants; we have said that since about 15 years ago the principal soil of the Lapé lo, situated near Loka village, has had to be totally abandoned as a consequence of exceptional activity of manioc ants. From this resulted the creation of several farming habitations on the soil of the Lapé lo studied here;

361 241 166 578 --Personal motives, among which comes first of all disagreement among the members of a group. For example ○ Kulina and ○ Bakamaman (Boniville, Dju) made their clearings until 1950 with their mother Béniti in her farming village in Kuyaku locality (to the south of Kormotibo).

In 1950 there was a quarrel. Kulina and Baïkom have made their clearings since that time at the habitation of their father Malobi (Lapé).

[768] It happens especially that upon the death of its founder a farming habitation disappears or changes composition entirely because disagreements arise.

361 241 166 Another cause of change of location of farming habitations is change of activity of their occupants. For example, a man grows old, he no longer finds paid work, he creates a habitation in order to take up fishing (Akwadé's case). When he reaches extreme old age, he abandons his habitation to move close to his relatives (case of Samalobi, first occupant of the lands cultivated nowadays by Antonu village). /Page 120 blank/

WHILE THE RIVER WAS HIGH

The sun stood over the sacred silk-cotton tree toward the Gankwe side of the land. Across the path leading from somewhere in the back of our shelter the parasol ants, each with its strip of green many times its size, made their way toward an unknown spot where no shelter stood, and no one trod. Like a wave the wide ribbon of green rose and fell as it crossed the ridges of the pathway. In unending numbers they came, and the lizards darting in and out of the brush swerved in the direction of the shelter to avoid the marching line, so that at our feet things moved now up, now back again. 136 [137]

While the men were at the landing place, one of the women who was drying rice on the high flat rocks opposite our shelter paddled over in her boat, and, passing the men with a formal greeting, walked on and stopped to talk with us. She was not a young woman. Her time for childbearing was long over, her wrinkled breasts sagged almost to her waist. The cicatrized designs which once had stood out so clearly, and in her youth had been so valued, were but faintly penciled on her face and about her breasts. Had she cared, she might have reopened the cuts, might have had ashes rubbed into them to make the keloids stand out black and alive against the dark brown of her skin. But what need had a woman her age to care? What need to urge life into symbols of fertility on face and between breasts and about her navel, when her time for fruitfulness was over? Of what use to reanimate the incised scrolls between her thighs, when the legend they told in terms of reproduction was for her a dead legend? 888 [351] [304]
